"For 10 years a camp was operated without a public school, the nearest one being $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles, or a 9-mile walk each day. Families with children moved away in order to find school privileges. A girl 13 years old lived in this camp who had not been to school."

I am glad to say the company adopted our recommendation, and at their own expense they established a school there. They could not get help from the district, and they equipped the school and are paying the teacher out there, and not only have a day school, but a night school of foreigners learning English. It was said before one of the investigating committees [reading]:

"The school facilities in our camps are the very best." This testimony was given before the congressional committee. At Old Town, "where, prior to the strike, nearly every man in the village worked for the company, an old, leaky roof, adobe building was used for a school for several years. The use of this property gave rent to a former camp marshal, Bob Lee. It is situated at Old Town, between the coke-oven washer and a stable; it is overcrowded with children and at times is filled with smoke from the company plant."

Chairman WALSH. I noticed that the school at the closed camp of Primero was a nice looking building; and they had a social center development upstairs, with moving pictures, etc.

Dr. GADDIS. I am not mentioning that part of the work.

Chairman WALSH. I am going to ask something particular about that.

Dr. GADDIS. Some of the company's school buildings are as good as are to be found in the State.

Chairman WALSH. At that place the saloon keeper stated to us that he was the school director, and that he had charge of the school building; is that true?

Dr. GADDIS. I did not know that he had.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know the saloon keeper there?

Dr. GADDIS. I do. The superintendent has been the director of that local camp since I have been connected with it, and I do all my business with him.

Chairman WALSH. You mean the school director?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How many school directors are there?

Dr. GADDIS. They have one at Primero, and he takes charge of the school there, and they have one at Segundo and one at Frederick.

Chairman WALSH. So that the statement of the saloon keeper at Primero that he was the school director is incorrect?

Dr. GADDIS. Unless there has been a very recent election.

Chairman WALSH. That was at the time of the hearing of the commission at Denver.

Dr. GADDIS. I was told when I was there that the superintendent was director; I do not understand that another man has been elected since. [Reading:]

"Up to last fall a building in a closed camp at Floresta had been utilized for school purposes, located on the second floor of a hotel building owned by the company; to reach it a dark stairway must be ascended; the small windows in the room were on a level with the floor, and in dark days the children had to take their books to the windows to read.

"In another community the windows and doors of the schoolhouse had become so loose that on windy days, of which there were many, one was reminded of a ride on a motorcycle. A teacher in this building said that sessions of her school were interfered with because the room could not be warmed on cold days. For making this statement to me she was informed by the superintendent that her appointment as teacher for the coming year would not have been approved had he known of her course a little earlier.

"A State statute at least 20 years old requires fireproof fire escapes on all two-story school buildings. The company has at least six such buildings, and not one of them was protected according to law at the beginning of 1914. The threat of a penitentiary sentence, which the law imposes, caused activity in some quarters, but was ineffectual with other."

Chairman WALSH: When was that done, when was that effort made?

Dr. GADDIS: I made this effort, and sent them the law, and submitted it to them personally, and Mr. Welborn backed me up, but I could not get some of them to act.

Chairman WALSH. As far as you know, that is not directly chargeable to the company there?

Dr. GADDIS. They are employed, and are the company hirelings, and employed by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

Chairman WALSH. And also act as school directors?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir. [Reading:]

"A young married man was suddenly deprived of his position as principal and a local official's daughter given the place. A store manager school director wished to remove a lady teacher because she did not trade with him."

There are teachers to-day in the Colorado Fuel & Iron schools who can not speak correct English. Employees with children or relatives count the camp as a private crib. [Reading:]

"A principal was not reappointed last fall on the ground that he was a red neck."

He took his appeal to Mr. Bowers from Mr. Welborn.

Chairman WALSH. You had better explain what a red neck is.

Dr. GADDIS. A red neck is a phrase in Colorado for a striker or strike sympathizer.

I asked the assistant general manager of the fuel department for his reason, and he was supported in his position by the manager of the fuel department, the camp superintendent, the county superintendent of schools, and the store manager what they had against the teacher. Mr. Welborn and I kept in connection with him in the matter, and demanded proof or good cause as to why the man should be removed. When I asked the assistant manager of the fuel department for his proof, he replied to me [reading]:

"So-and-so is a G. D. red neck; when I dismiss a man working for me, that settles it. If the Denver office wishes to make the appointment of school-teachers I have nothing to say."

"Later the man, who had appealed to both Bowers and Welborn, was taken care of in another camp."

We helped to place him. I was instrumental in having him located at a near-by camp, at a little less salary, but he was taken care of.

Chairman WALSH. Had he been a striker or sympathizer?

Dr. GADDIS. He absolutely denied the charge that he had shown such an attitude.

Chairman WALSH. Have they power enough to remove a school director on the ground that he sympathizes with the men on strike?

Dr. GADDIS. There was a good deal of power there. The manager of the fuel department, the assistant manager, and the county superintendent, and it leaked out that this principal that was removed was a Republican, the county superintendent's opponent for his place, and I asked the principal if he believed it was a political move, and he said that it was. This county superintendent was invited at that time to come to the local school-board meeting and help to oust this man. [Reading:]

"For being instrumental in having an inefficient niece removed from a position that was paying her $80 per month we were threatened with physical violence by the camp super."

"A young man that insisted his lady teachers conduct themselves properly and that dances in the schoolhouse close at 12 o'clock Saturday night instead of 4 a. m. Sunday, was called 'too religious,' and informed that had he conducted himself as other men in the camp, he would not have lost his position."

"A store manager's daughter"—at Morley—"below legal age, and without any teacher's certificate, was made a teacher against the protest of the county superintendent and the people of the camp."

We took up the case by correspondence, and they claimed that she was teaching there without salary, but nevertheless it was improper. [Continues reading:]

"Whenever there is danger that the company clique may lose control of the school-board directorship, the indefensible right of the electors is denied them, and an obsequious county superintendent makes a favorable appointment."

This occurred in Morley and Pictou last year. The women of the Morley camp raised their voice against this young girl teaching in school. They went to the county superintendent, but he could not discharge her. Then they made up their mind that they would get a director that would help to get her out. In order to defeat their purpose the election was not called, and a company man was appointed by the county superintendent. I called Mr. Weltzel's attention to this, the manager of the fuel department, and he excused it on the ground that it was quite common practice. In the Pictou case I referred it to Mr. Welborn, and he did nothing. [Reading:]

"In many camps a large portion of all of the school tax is levied on company property. This, together with the school directors being hirelings, has led to surprising liberties with this public fund. A $6,000 building was erected, the company carpenters doing all the work. With the building still unpaid for, no indebtedness was recorded in the county treasurer's office against the district. The mine clerk was receiving notices from company headquarters as to the amount of the debt still due the company. The president of one of the boards stated his district had paid the company enough interest on their debt to pay for the school building. The company advances money for the proposed improvements and seems to collect the principal on the terms to suit themselves."

"In order to put some additional equipment in one of the schools, inquiry was made as to the amount of money the district would have to use for the current year. The clerk of the board gave it as less than $3,000, while county treasurer said warrants to the extent of $9,000 would be honored from that district."

A camp doctor told me that whoever held warrants for their new school building were in no hurry for payment. [Reading:]

"The law of the State permits the schools of the camp grade to fix the salary of the clerk of the board. It would be an interesting item to know the exact amount of money this scribe receives."

Public school improvements are all provided for by the State law, but a private conference of the manager of the fuel department and superintendent, and the State law goes hang.

Chairman WALSH. Is there any objection on the part of the people that are not connected with the coal and iron company, that are not employees, to the school funds of the State being handled in this manner, and that part of the State's duty being handled in this way, as you have described it, by the company?

Dr. GADDIS. This is done principally in closed camps, and people are helpless, and it is not known. [Reading:]

"SANITATION."

"The insanitary plight of large portions of company property is due very largely to the fact that the hands of the camp physician are tied by the superintendent. For a man who has made hygienic science a special study, to have his recommendations thwarted by a blockheaded super., makes the general boss of the coal regions supreme in his realm, but it is little less than a crime against the camp population. For a super. to tell a doctor who has made a request for the protection of the health of a neighborhood, 'Now, you are knocking me'—that is a quotation one of the doctors told me—"all but makes one feel they would like to have a virile pugilist handy to place some genuine knocks."

The physician asked the super. to have the camp cleaned up, and no time should have been lost in ridding the place of its malady-breeding spots. The super. replied, "I have no men for that work; let the people clean up their own yards; if you want the camp cleaned, do it yourself," and the doctor told me rather than to have those conditions exist, that he did with his own hands remove most of this scavenger alley-surface refuse.

Here is the way another doctor last summer writes concerning the situation of a doctor being tied or under the super. concerning sanitation: "I suggest therefore, that the superintendent be plainly instructed to acquiesce in any reasonable and courteous request issuing from the physician's office and pertaining to camp sanitation and welfare. I do not mean to imply dissatisfaction with the present superintendent, but I would provide against future contingencies. On some former occasion, when I have made such request, I have been impressed with the idea that the awful, omnipotent, czarlike authority of the local power that be, rendered them capable to run this camp without any of my suggestions. [Reading:]

"As a fruit of such folly, the medical report for all camps and plants for 1912 and 1913, gave 151 cases of typhoid, or nearly three a week for the entire year. For more than a year a cesspool, within a few feet of the company's store, was allowed to relieve itself by overflowing at the top and running down across the principal thoroughfare of the camp. Both the store manager and his wife had been down with typhoid. This Stygian situation and others almost as offensive were reported to the head of the medical work, and was passed over by a reply to the 'kicker'—'better be careful or you will step on some one's toes.'"

Chairman WALSH. Was that situation cleaned up where those people had the typhoid fever?

Dr. GADDIS. Subsequently it was, but by a new superintendent.

Chairman WALSH. Is this just an isolated instance, or do they allow the hygienic situation to go unattended in that way generally?

Dr. GADDIS. In some of the camps it could not be worse, and in some it is very good, indeed.

Chairman WALSH. Have these places been called—these bad places—called to their attention?

Dr. GADDIS. The doctor's report, which I am submitting to you, speaks in stronger language than I could.

Chairman WALSH. Among the intelligent workers, is it considered an insidious and criminal violence to let it go until they take typhoid and die?

Dr. GADDIS. It is among some considered criminal negligence, but among the ignorant class they don't pay any attention to it. [Reading:]

"The mountainous situation of many camps fairly well takes care of the otherwise miserable drainage. The surface debris was allowed to collect so heavily in one camp as to appear as if the place had never been properly cleaned. The closets and public washhouses are permitted to be in degrees of unhealthiness that, were it not for the pure mountain air and its unequalled aridity in great abundance, sickness and death would run riot."

We do not believe more repulsive looking human rat holes can be found in America than those of Berwind Canyon before the strike. [Continues reading:]

"The water in most of the camps is very good, but there are some notable exceptions. The intake of a water supply at Ideal, from a so-called mountain stream, was the favorite standing ground for cattle."

I told the superintendent of this camp about such a situation, and on one Sabbath morning, when we were holding religious services, he got a gang of men and threw a barb-wire fence around the place where the cattle had been standing.

I referred to that selling of water at Lester. [Reading:]

"Seepage water from a large mine at Walsen, with a distinctively dead-rat-essence flavor, was supplied to three camps, because it was cheaper than to tap the main pipe line, of one of the best water sources in the State, even though this water main ran directly through one of the camps.

"By the payment of $1 per month, deducted from the employee's pay check, he is entitled to free medical service for himself and family at the camp; free hospital treatment for himself and one-half rate for any member of his family.

"The physicians are paid a salary, generally including house rent and coal free. They are to give gratuitous services for all cases except those of confinement, venereal diseases, and fight bruises. A monthly allowance for drugs of 3 cents per capita is also furnished.

"The apportionment for medicine, which they must freely dispense, is entirely inadequate to meet their needs. In one camp the doctor's monthly bill for drugs was $25 or more, and he was receiving about $12 for such expense from the company. That would put him nearly $150 in the hole at the end of the year. This arrearage must either be paid from the doctor's pocket, or from the extra money he receives in cases above noted, or from neighborhood practice, or extortion, which is sometimes indulged.

"By a special order from the head of the medical department at Pueblo, the doctor's charges, whether reasonable or extortionate, may be deducted from the employee's pay check."

There is not a camp hotel or boarding house in a C. F. & I. camp where the bedrooms are heated; men suffer with mountain winters. [Reading:]

"Presumably for an object lesson for the whole camp, a bill for services was collected through the mine office by the company physician when the family had been so bold as to call in a doctor of their own choice, and the father was discharged for being unwilling to pay it. This case was reported to the Denver headquarters, and no redress was ever made.

"THE COLORADO SUPPLY CO.

"A chain of 22 retail and 2 wholesale stores extending from southern Colorado to northern Wyoming represents the mercantile side of Rockefeller's work in the Rockies.

"The development of the bulk of this business from two or three small stores to its present huge dimensions was largely through the genius of one man. A few weeks ago, after having served the company for more than 25 years, he was asked to resign; having previously been compelled to surrender all his stock holdings.

"The word had gone out from one who stood second only to Rockefeller himself that retrenchment was necessary; and the head of one who had whitened with many winters of arduous service was not to be spared.

"Prior to 1910 all but 19 per cent of the stock of the company stores was held by employees. Men who had reached their salary limit, but whom the company wished to show favor, were given the privilege of profit sharing in a business that paid 20 per cent per annum. Bowers called in every scrap of paper that represented stock certificates of the store company. No action that this man performed during this Colorado career was more impolitic. Only blinded selfishness could reason that store managers and clerks who were drawing good dividends on the work they were advancing would be more zealous if the source of such money was cut off by a ukase from the Boston Building.

"One manager had paid $125 for $100 shares and borrowed money at 18 per cent to make his purchase.

"Here is one of the store manager's plans of not missing the dividends. He draws a salary of $150 per month, the average amount paid for that position. His work really pays him $7 a day—i. e., $60 extra in rake-offs. Chickens are worth 20 cents a pound in the camps; and when his chickens go into the butcher shop 20 cents per pound comes back to him. Cattle can be bought from ranchmen cheaper than dressed beef from Swift or Armour. The ranchman is paid one price and the store company is charged another, and so forth."

The deliverance of the 25 editors for the pro-operators pronouncement in speaking of the right to trade at any store, the editors make this pronouncement:

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You said the deliverance of the 25 editors?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In what sense do you use the word "deliverance"?

Dr. GADDIS. It was a formal document adopted by those men in conference in Denver, and printed in all the papers.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. A statement by 25 editors?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir. The editors say: "This sixth demand also may not have been accorded the miners by the mine owners. It should also be guaranteed to the miners."

A former store manager at Tercio, now with the Victor-American Co., put up such thieving costs on groceries in that camp that the company had to let him go for such robbery. His successor told me what reduction he had made on sugar and flour when he took charge. The exact amount I can not recall; it was very heavy subtraction, amounting to something like 75 cents a pound, I think.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. 75 cents a pound on sugar?

Dr. GADDIS. On flour, I think it was—no, on 100 pounds, I meant it. I have it 100 pounds here.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You mean he raised the cost on his inventory and put in a fictitious value?

Dr. GADDIS. I don't know what he did in his inventory, but he was charging that to the miners when this new man reduced the price.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In other words, he was overcharging his customers?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir. [Reading:]

"That the business methods of the Colorado Supply Co. in the past few years have been little less arduous than the famous West Virginia mining-camp stores let the following facts attest: One physician who had served the company for 17 or 18 years declared if a strike is called the Colorado Supply Co. will be responsible. A man filling one of the highest positions in a local camp received a letter of inquiry as to why he did not trade at the company store. His reply contained his resignation (not accepted) but that he would trade where he thought best. A local doctor estimated he could only afford to buy 50 per cent of his groceries in camp. Lessees of company hotel buildings did not feel free to buy staple groceries except at 'the store.'"

Chairman WALSH. Was that one of the grievances that these men gave that went on strike?

Dr. GADDIS. It was one of their specific grievances, to trade where they pleased. The manager of the fuel department instructed the superintendent, and he so informed me about three months ago, to use his influence to have employees trade at the store. [Reading:]

"A few months ago a young manager asked the wife of a laborer if her husband wished to continue working in that place, and if so, their grocery business had better come his way.

"A mail-order catalogue from one of the Chicago houses was deposited in an arroyo instead of the hands of the addressee, who was a man well known in the community.

"Store managers are the postmasters in most places. For years it has been the custom of the Rockefeller stores to give a company draft when a postal order was solicited and charge the United States postal rates. The amount of money the Government has lost by this trickery would take expert accountants many days to foot up.

"Since the close of the great strike many 'gabfests' have been held; in which the managers have been told a 'square deal' must be given in the future.

"Prices in some stores have dropped 10 per cent, and 10 per cent more would still leave a handsome profit for Rockefeller in the mining-camp groceries.

"THE CAMP SALOON.

"Only a few years ago the saloon was run in connection with the company store. Bowers divorced such an unholy alliance. Now, some of the most prominent and best structures in the camps are used as saloons. In 1908 there were 82 saloons in 25 camps of the Rockefeller mines. Twelve of these saloons operated under lease from the company. In 1913 within a circle of 4 miles diameter, including four camp villages, there were 28 saloons. One of these was on company property and was bringing $1,500 rent to the credit side of coal production for that camp.

"The policy of the company has been to farm out their privilege for these joints to human ghouls, who operate them, by the camp marshal's consent, without any regard to the restrictive statutes of the State that would interfere with their business.

"At Delagua, not a C. F. & I. camp, an officer of the National Guard noticing a saloon open on the Sabbath said to the proprietor: 'Do you know of a State law which prohibits keeping saloons open on Sunday?'—same policy was pursued on C. F. & I. property—'Oh, that's all right,' replied the liquor vender. 'I am justice of peace in this town and we don't pay much attention to such things as State laws.'

"Sabbath opening is condoned by local officials; selling to minors and drunkards is an offense that is allowed to pass without protest.

"A saloon and lodging house known as the Metropolitan Hotel, in Trinidad, was used as an employment bureau. The manager was an employee of the company, and the stock of liquors on hand was regularly invoiced by their traveling auditor.

"The former general office building in Pueblo, afterwards known as the Southern Hotel, was rented as a second-rate lodging house, and a tenth rate barroom annexed.

"A lessee of a camp saloon"—at Morley—"on company property was being credited $200 a month for advancing cash to erect the building. Terms of the lease required the company to pay him any balance due on the building, when the partnership ceased. Some years ago when times were very hard this saloon proprietor came forward with cash to assist the company to meet its pay roll."

It was President Kebler's avowed and practical policy to establish saloons for the different nationalities in the camps. [Reading:]

"The 'chamber of horrors' which a camp saloon presents after pay day is so pathetic and shameful that it must be seen in order to be fully comprehended.

"Men earning $25 or $40 a week go home penniless after a gambling and drinking bout in one of these places.

"Twice a month the coal production is seriously weakened, while the men squander their hard-earned wages, rob their families of needed clothing and food, and fill the coffers of outlaws, who carry on their traffic with a tacit approval of Rockefeller's officials.

"One of the largest saloons on company grounds is run by an Italian, and the sheriff of Huerfano County is his silent partner. In former years this official had financial interests in more than a dozen camp saloons."

Commissioner LENNON. Who was Jeff Farr?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir. [Reading:]

"That camps can be run better without saloons than with them, experience in the strike zone and more than 10 years' trial in one of their large iron mines has fully proven.

"In the face of a vote of over 12,000 majority placing the State ban on the liquor business, several camp saloons were allowed to reopen for one more year of devastation."

Mr. Bowers told me that he would not allow a camp saloon to open after the vote was taken if Mr. Weitzel would concur. Mr. Weitzel would not concur. [Reading:]

"The old saw that 'every man is entitled to the fruit of his own labor' is severely dealt with by the camp saloon keeper.

"The argument that the company must conduct a high-grade saloon in order to prevent dives from starting up just outside the property line has no weight with those familiar with the conduct of the so-called company-protected saloons.

"One super. justified gambling on the same basis, and all other evils may be so exculpated.

"The one strongest inciting factor that precipitated the bloody struggle of last year was the camp saloon. Here men met and, irrationally inflamed, they planned deeds that no sober or well-balanced mind could entertain.

"The saloon managers of the Colorado collieries are well referred to by Kipling in the nineties:

"That bids him flout the law he makes;
 "That bids him make the law he flouts;
 "Till, dazed by many doubts, he wakes
 "The drumming guns that have no doubts."

That is my statement, Mr. Walsh.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I have a letter here from Mr. L. M. Bowers. Mr. Bowers, as I understand it, until he retired from this company, after this strike, was the chairman of the executive board of the company, and generally understood to be the personal representative of Mr. Rockefeller in that community; is that correct?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir; that is my understanding.

Chairman WALSH. And was he so looked upon and understood by the people generally in Colorado?

Dr. GADDIS. He certainly was.

Chairman WALSH. I want to read what he says in this letter of May 13, addressed to Mr. Heydt, private secretary of John D. Rockefeller, jr., and ask you a question after I read this portion to you [reading]:

"DEAR MR. HEYDT: Yours of the 10th, inclosing a letter of Mr. Frank S. Hoag, of the Pueblo Star-Journal, is at hand.

"While I know nothing about the paper referred to as a business proposition, I think it would be undesirable for the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. to have Mr. Rockefeller interested in a newspaper at this time in a financial or any other way.

"The Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. for many years was accused of being the political dictator of southern Colorado, and, in fact, were a mighty power in the entire State. When I came here it was said that the C. F. & I. Co. voted every man and woman in their employ, without any regard to their being naturalized or not; and even their mules, it used to be remarked, were registered, if they were fortunate enough to possess names. Anyhow, a political department was maintained at a heavy expense. I had before me the contributions of the C. F. & I. Co. for the campaign of 1904, amounting to $80,605, paid out personally by President Hearne. All the vouchers and checks I have examined personally, all of which were payable to Albert A. Miller, upon which he drew the currency, and, it is said, handed the money over to Mr. Hearne, who paid it out. So far as I can discover, not one particle of good was accomplished for the company, but Mr. Hearne was an aspirant for the position of United States Senator and devoted a vast amount of time and money with this end in view, I have no doubt.

"The company became notorious in many sections for their support of the liquor interests. They established saloons everywhere they possible could. This department was managed by a brother of the one-time president of the company, who died; about the time I came here, a victim of his own intemperate habits."

I leave out the name of the man, he being dead.

"A sheriff, elected by the votes of the C. F. & I. Co. employees, and who had been kept in office a great many years, established himself or became a partner in 16 liquor stores in our coal mines. To clean up the saloons, and with them the gambling hells and houses of prostitution, has been one of the things that Mr. Welborn and I have devoted an enormous amount of time to during the past five years. The decent newspapers everlastingly lampooned the C. F. & I. Co. at every election; and I am forced to say the company merited, from a moral standpoint, every shot that was fired into their camp.

"Since I came here not a nickel has been paid to any politician or political party. We have fought the saloons with all the power we possess. We have forbidden any politician from going into our camps, and every subordinate official connected with the company has been forbidden to influence our men to vote for any particular candidate. We have not lobbied in the legislature, but have gone directly to the governor and other able men and have demanded fair treatment."

Now, I am going to ask you, considering what you have stated here, whether or not it is a fact that the C. F. & I. are still controlling the political destinies of southern Colorado through the means stated by Mr. Northcutt in his speech at Lamar, and the means that you have testified to here?

Dr. GADDIS. I don't think they are controlling them to that extent now, that they were when that letter was written; but I think they are certainly doing it as far as they dare.

Chairman WALSH. Well, this letter was written May 13, 1913, immediately before the strike?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Were they controlling them in that way at that time?

Dr. GADDIS. They certainly were, that was the general topic of conversation.

Chairman WALSH. It says here, "The company became notorious in many sections for their support of the liquor interests. They established saloons everywhere they possibly could." Now, at that time—that is, in the older times—they did not have this method, as, for instance, at Primero, where they rent a building which cost $3,000 for $1,500 a year, and where in that way they are still at that place directly connected with the profits of the saloon business?

Dr. GADDIS. They are through the rent only.

Chairman WALSH. Through the rent only?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Nevertheless, they get the rent?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Just a way of covering up in a smooth way their being in the saloon business at that place?

Dr. GADDIS. Fifty dollars a month would be splendid rent for the building, or $75.

Chairman WALSH. That is in a closed camp, and nobody patronizes that saloon at that particular place, except the men that work in the mines, would you say?

Dr. GADDIS. Well, I don't believe they would stop a rancher going in there.

Chairman WALSH. Well, do ranchers go in there—these closed camps?

Dr. GADDIS. Oh, they come in there now. The ban has been lifted. During the time of the strike, at that time they were not allowed to come in; but now, and I suppose can get a drink there, too.

Chairman WALSH. And in that way the C. F. & I. has established its partnership in the saloon business. And that is only one of the saloons that is run by the sheriff out there, Jeff Farr?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And he is still there in office?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Still kept there by the influence of the C. F. & I.?

Dr. GADDIS. I believe he is.

Chairman WALSH. It is generally believed in your country that he is?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Is he the man that before anything was said—that is, before any vote was taken for a strike, in August of 1913—armed 326 men, paid by the C. F. & I., about whom he testified that so far as he knew they might have been red-handed murderers fresh from the scenes of their crimes.

Dr. GADDIS. Same man.

Chairman WALSH. The same man?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And he is still there?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes; right on the job.

Chairman WALSH. And held in there by the same influence, and still in the saloon business?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And controls saloons around in the mining camps in southern Colorado?

Dr. GADDIS. The saloon in the Rouse camp that I referred to as being allowed to open by the manager of the fuel department a few months ago. That saloon Mr. Farr is a partner in. About 1 mile away there is another saloon at Lester. There was no cause for opening that saloon whatever. It is one of the most notorious places in Colorado to degrade and debase men; and I think that Jeff Farr's influence opened that saloon.

Chairman WALSH. Is he interested in it?

Dr. GADDIS. He is; yes.

Chairman WALSH. Has Jeff Farr a home in Trinidad; is it?

Dr. GADDIS. He lives at Walsenburg, Huerfano County.

Chairman WALSH. Does he have a wholesale liquor store at some place out of which he works these mining camps?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes; I think he has.

Chairman WALSH. Where is his wholesale liquor store?

Dr. GADDIS. At Walsenburg. I am sure he is interested in a wholesale store there.

Chairman WALSH. Now, where did you say you saw these delegates to a political convention going into a room?

Dr. GADDIS. Into the Trinidad office of the division superintendent, Mr. Thomas. I sat there and watched them.

Chairman WALSH. And what sort of a convention was taking place?

Dr. GADDIS. It was the election of the delegates to what is called the primary convention, I believe.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you say in certain places the officers of the mining company are the judges and clerks of election?

Dr. GADDIS. They were at Tercio.

Chairman WALSH. And that was in direct violation of the State law?

Dr. GADDIS. It is.

Chairman WALSH. And the judges and clerks, as in other places, totaled up the returns and submitted them to the authorities?

Dr. GADDIS. Well, I would not say that they did not do it honestly.

Chairman WALSH. I understand that; but they have that authority?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. They are elected judges and clerks, and to that extent they controlled the making of the election returns?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I notice this letter of Mr. Bowers says that they go directly to the governor and other able men and demand fair treatment nowadays. Now, when was it that Mr. Northcutt, Judge Northcutt, made that speech in which he states that they received their instructions to State conventions from the superintendent of the mines?

Dr. GADDIS. That was in 1912.

Chairman WALSH. Just one year before that was written?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And Northcutt is known there as and he is now an attorney for the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Dr. GADDIS. He is; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And represents them in the courts?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. He took part in a case against a man named Zancanelli, who has just been convicted and sentenced for life for complicity in what is known as the Oakdale trouble?

Dr. GADDIS. Oakdale murder; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Oakdale murder?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes; Mr. Northcutt is one of the leading attorneys in that—in what they call the La Veta murder.

Chairman WALSH. So far as your information goes, what he stated about the absolute political control, was true?

Dr. GADDIS. I do believe it; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. In 1912?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And that extended generally to the time this letter was written to Mr. Heydt by Mr. Bowers?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And that was the conduct in 1910 and 1911?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir; in referring to Mr. Rockefeller purchasing a newspaper, I think there were some actions in regard to that—in regard to purchasing the Denver News—and Mr. Welborn said he did not think it would be wise he believed to do it. It was heavily bonded. Right after the strike, or a few months ago, there was a change in the editor of the Pueblo Chieftain, which is known as a strong Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. paper. There was a notorious exposure of the padding of the pay rolls of the Pueblo Steel Works, one of the most gigantic steals I ever heard of in America, that had gone on for 10 years, I think, and millions of dollars were lost. The whole matter was covered up as quickly as possible, and a few nominal sentences imposed on some men of that office, and they were discharged—quite a number of men in inferior positions were discharged. The new editor of this paper, in an editorial, said that he did not think the decapitation should have stopped until it reached the higher parties and for this deliverance he was threatened with expulsion from the Elite—a Monday literary club out there. Dr. Corwin was a member of that, and he was threatened to be turned out of it. A few weeks after he had made this statement I was accidentally at the casa vivienda. The editor was publicly bawled out by the assistant manager of the steel works as a misrepresentative of true journalism.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you state—

Dr. GADDIS (interrupting). Just let me add there, from the smell of brimstone around the steel works for a few weeks after this exposure, I think the editor had hit the right trail.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. May I ask who were the sufferers in that steal?

Dr. GADDIS. The company—the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The officials had robbed the company?

Dr. GADDIS. They were men that—yes, officials and men in their employ. I don't suppose you would call them officials. I suppose you would call them employees, unless you go higher to the heads of the departments there.

Chairman WALSH. Have you paid any attention to the trials that are going on in Colorado at the present time against the men who took part in this strike as executive officers of the union?

Dr. GADDIS. I have read all I could get hold of, Mr. Walsh.

Chairman WALSH. Have you any personal knowledge with reference to the make-up of the juries that are trying those men—any contribution that you could make of that sort?

Dr. GADDIS. Personally I knew a juror that voted to convict Mr.—what is his name there?

Chairman WALSH. John R. Lawson.

Dr. GADDIS. John R. Lawson, at Trinidad—Mr. W. W. Wilson; I know him.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Lawson was the man who was vice president of the United Mine Workers of America, or a member of the national executive board of the United Mine Workers of America, and he has just been convicted of murder in the first degree, at Trinidad?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, what were you going to say about your personal information about the jurors?

Dr. GADDIS. Just a few weeks before leaving Colorado I met Mr. Wilson on the train—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Who was Mr. Wilson?

Dr. GADDIS. Mr. Wilson was one of the jurors—W. W. Wilson—and so reported in the paper, and he is a traveling salesman in that territory of the National Biscuit Co. And he told me that he had all the camps of the C. F. & I. stores. The general manager of the Victor-American Fuel Co. was sitting in the seat, and he says, "I can't get into his camps; he won't let me. I hope that he will, but I have the business of the C. F. & I. Co." And he gave me to understand that he did not have to go there and use any genuflections of a salesman; just let the store manager know who he was and the sales were made. Now, that means thousands of dollars of business to pass through Mr. Wilson's hands. And personally I would not want such a man to vote on my verdict, if my life was at stake and the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. prosecuting.

Chairman WALSH. A gentleman has just handed me a note, and I did not hear whether or not you stated that the privilege Mr. Wilson had was an exclusive privilege.

Dr. GADDIS. It is; yes. It is exclusive for that line of goods, and it was given to him by the officers of the C. F. & I. Co.—I mean, of the Colorado Supply Co., which is—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). You say that the papers stated that one of the jurors in the trial that convicted Mr. Lawson was Mr. Wilson?

Dr. GADDIS. It did; it did not state—don't misunderstand me. I inferred that W. W. Wilson, who is a traveling salesman, was this man. It did not state in the paper that he was the man, but he is known as "Bill Wilson," and he is the only man in Trinidad—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). That can be ascertained by checking that up.

Dr. GADDIS. Yes; certainly it can be very easily ascertained.

Chairman WALSH. Now, when was this conference you had with President Welborn and the doctor with reference to making a report to the Bureau of Mines and Mining of the Government?

Dr. GADDIS. That was last summer.

Chairman WALSH. That was the summer of 1914?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you say you would have made that report to the Government had the matter not been taken out of your hands by Mr. Welborn?

Dr. GADDIS. I certainly would.

Chairman WALSH. And you would have told the truth as you have told it here upon the witness stand?

Dr. GADDIS. As I believe what is the truth; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you were subsequently discharged from the employ of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Dr. GADDIS. I was. That occurred in this way, of you will allow me to explain it.

Chairman WALSH. Well, briefly, because we are not much—I am not much interested in it, except that—

Dr. GADDIS (interrupting). Well, it won't take but a minute, and it will be a satisfaction to me, as you have made public reference to it.

I dealt with Mr. Bowers largely when I went to Denver, as to the sociological work, and I tried to see him whenever I could. Mr. Bowers wrote me a letter when he was going to Binghamton, stating that all future communications from my department should be addressed to Mr. Welborn. Mr. Welborn gave me to understand that he would not bother with them; that I must take up everything with Mr. Weitzel.

Chairman WALSH. Would not bother with the sociological work?

Dr. GADDIS. With the sociological work pertaining to the fuel department. And I was so told by Mr. Weitzel. As I said, I do not consider Mr. Weitzel at all qualified to speak the first and last word on matters of sociological import, and we did not get along. We did the first year, but he certainly turned on me, and nothing that I did could please him. The fact of it was my report made statements that I knew would offend him. I did not care. They were outrageous conditions and ought to have been reported, and for that reason he was determined to get me out of the way.

Chairman WALSH. What were the statements that were outrageous that you put in there?

Dr. GADDIS. Why, in regard to sanitation.

Chairman WALSH. Did you tell him these people were getting typhus and were dying?

Dr. GADDIS. I did. Yes; I put it into my reports. I wrote a letter to the New York office, telling them what Mr. Weitzel was trying to do to dislodge me.

Chairman WALSH. Whom did you write to?

Dr. GADDIS. I addressed Mr. Rockefeller, and the reply to it was by Mr. Mackenzie King. I think he is their attorney. He said he could not interfere in the matter. I stated in that letter that Mr. Weitzel wanted to get me out of the way, and he put an assistant mine clerk in my position, who, according to his own statement, has not the qualifications for the position. The only qualifications for it he had was that he would assume an obsequious attitude to Mr. Weitzel. That is what he wanted.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you submitted some of these letters you have read here to the secretary of this commission, did you not—Mr. Lewis K. Brown?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And Mr. Brown showed you the correspondence he had with Mr. Welborn, did he, with reference to that?

Dr. GADDIS. He referred to it; didn't show it to me.

Chairman WALSH. If you have no objection, I would like to read that letter into the record at this point?

Dr. GADDIS. I have none whatever.

Chairman WALSH (reading):

"Mr. LEWIS K. BROWN,

"Secretary United States Commission on Industrial Relations, Chicago, Ill.

"DEAR SIR: I have yours of the 7th instant regarding the resignation of the Rev. E. S. Gaddis from the service of this company. Mr. Gaddis entered the employ of the company as a minister, conducting church services at our coal camps in southern Colorado. Some time later, after our old superintendent of the sociological department had resigned, the work of that department was in part placed under the direction of Mr. Gaddis.

"He was an earnest, faithful worker and undoubtedly is a Christian gentleman. He is, however, strongly sectarian and, for that reason, we felt handicapped in securing the best results at coal camps made up of many nationalities and sects. * * * I trust this will give you the information desired.

"Yours, very truly,

"J. F. WELBORN."

I have omitted certain parts that did not directly refer to this.

Dr. GADDIS. Mr. Chairman, there are just two items here I would like to have come out that I omitted, if you will give me the privilege.

Chairman WALSH. Very good, Mr. Gaddis.

Dr. GADDIS. Here is a quotation from Mr. Bowers's article in Frank Leslie's Weekly of February 5, 1914; it is his opening sentence [reading]:

"Corporations, however scrupulously they may comply with the laws of the State and Nation, as well as the higher laws that govern the actions of individuals and business men employing labor, do not escape the assaults of muckraking magazines," and so forth.

Then Mr. Bowers says [reading]:

"They will lend their voices and pens to the work of slandering corporations with reckless disregard for truth."

In view of the following facts—here they are [referring to the paper before the witness]—Mr. Bowers's statement is as reckless a disregard for truth as those whom he denounces:

"First. The notorious disregard for the laws affecting saloon control.

"Second. The high-handed and lawless method used in governing camp-school affairs.

"Third. The constant breach of the State law which protects the men from working on the Sabbath day.

"Fourth. Undue influence of the camp officials in civil elections.

"Fifth. For more than 15 years the State law granted miners a check-weighman, and only one was found in the C. F. & I. mines at the time of the strike.

"Sixth. The bimonthly pay day was not granted by the C. F. & I. until the law was 12 years old.

"Seventh. Compulsory trade at the company's store is a violation of the individual rights granted by the State decree.

"Eighth. The check off of the pay roll of the men's dues for the company's school rates is a violation of the constitution and laws of the State.

"Ninth. The eight-hour underground law for workmen was not given effect until 1913."

Now, there is just one other matter I wish to refer to, which to me is one of the most serious things I have to present.

Bulletin No. 8, which came out under the general head of "Facts Concerning the Struggle in Colorado," issued July 25, 1914. It was from the Denver Women's Law and Order League, and they state in this pamphlet—these are their exact words:

"No machine gun was at any time directed against the colony."

That is the Ludlow colony, during this famous battle, or massacre, as it is called. When we first read this false statement it was in the office of the president of the Colorado Supply Co., Mr. Schenck, at Denver. We told him then that nothing could be gained by such a misstatement. He questioned our authority for denying it, and here is our authority:

The Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.'s camp physician at Berwind told us that the gun was used upon the colony on that day. A man who lives in Berwind informs us that he acted as one of the supports of the gun when it was in action. We passed through Ludlow on the Colorado & Southern Railroad on the night of this famous day. We saw the tent colony in flames. Several persons—quite a number of persons boarded the train and one man who came in spoke of the raking fire of the machine gun that had been played on the camp. The operator of the gun was pointed out as a hero in Berwind Canyon.

This is a flagrant prevarication of the truth which can not be challenged—the use of the machine gun on Ludlow colony so far as we know has never been contradicted by the operators. The women who signed this we doubt if they knew anything first-handed of the actual conditions in southern Colorado.

I just want to make a reference, Mr. Chairman, and then I am through, to the condition of enforced Sabbath labor.

Colorado is the only mining State in the Union that habitually compels colliers to work on the Sabbath day. All sorts of needless and unnecessary labor is encouraged and enforced in the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.'s camps. For months before the great strike hundreds and thousands of men did not know what a day of rest was. We have read orders signed by the superintendents in several of the mines which threatened loss of good places or actual discharge for the failure of those who would fail to report for work on the Sabbath day. After reading such orders we communicated this fact both to Mr. Welborn and to Mr. Weltzel; and, so far as we know, nothing was ever done to correct the grievance.

One young man at Primero told us that he had worked so many consecutive Sabbaths that he needed a day of rest and he refused to run a motor car, and he was summarily discharged. We took the case to Mr. Weltzel, and that was the last we ever heard of it.

Some of the foreigners driven to work on the Sabbath failed to report on Monday. The master mechanic in one of the camps told us it was not at all necessary for him to work on the Sabbath to keep abreast of his job; but the superintendent forced him to do it because the day shift was all at it and no exceptions would be made.

Special trains were run on Sunday to baseball on the company roads, all of which tended to break down respect for the holy Sabbath day and to neglect of religious opportunities; and not infrequently the men returned home in a furor of drunken revelry, caused by the liquor obtained by them from the half respectable company saloon.

Commissioner LENNON. Mr. Gaddis, we have had testimony to the effect that in so far as the rent of the saloons is concerned, that in many instances it is based on the number of employees of the company, not necessarily at this particular camp—that is, that in some cases they paid, or the rent was assessed at 50 cents per employee, and in some places 25 cents. Do you know whether that is true or not?

Dr. GADDIS. I don't believe it is true, Mr. Lennon, in the Colorado Fuel & Iron.

Commissioner LENNON. It was the Victor-American Co., perhaps.

Chairman WALSH. The Victor-American Co.

Dr. GADDIS. I have tried to get all the information I could concerning the solution of the situation, and I do not believe the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. have ever stooped so low as that.

Commissioner LENNON. Did you hear of any of the other companies assessing the rent in that way, at so much per person?

Dr. GADDIS. I have heard of a per capita charge, regarding the number of men or people in the camp for the saloon privileges, but I am sure not in the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.'s camps.

Commissioner LENNON. Mr. Osgood, I think, was the man who testified to that fact, together with some others.

Have the company's stores in the camps that are not immediately adjacent to considerable towns or cities, have they a monopoly in the camps?

Dr. GADDIS. In the closed camps they certainly have, unless people go to town. It is a monopoly in this way: There are a great many people feel, and the more ignorant people and foreigners feel, that they should deal there; and I do not doubt but that they get all the trade of the majority of the people in the camp, or at least a heavy percentage of it.

Commissioner LENNON. If you desired to start a store in one of those camps, could you go there and start a store?

Dr. GADDIS. Not in a closed camp.

Commissioner LENNON. What would prevent it?

Dr. GADDIS. Why the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., that is their property.

Commissioner LENNON. And they own all the land?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner LENNON. Now, what effect upon the home life of people do you believe is exerted by the fact that they can not own their own homes in these closed camps; that they must live in apartments that are provided by the company; and that so far as establishing a home for themselves, it is out of the question? What effect does that likely have upon the home life of the people?

Dr. GADDIS. In the first place it makes the camp population, a very large percentage of it, entirely transient. That is, I have—that is, they will be there, say, a year; or if you see a person who has been in the camp three or four years, why they are pioneers. It keeps the people on the move, and not having their own homes they are dissatisfied. They are there simply enduring the situation as they are.

Commissioner LENNON. Well, what apparent effect does it have on the dwellings themselves? Do they take care of them as they would if they were their own, or do they let them take care of themselves?

Dr. GADDIS. Some of the people, if they own their property, would take better care of it; and a good many of the people in the camps there are very shiftless, and would not care whether it was their own or not.

When the strike was called, the Santa Fe Railway, to use a common phrase, simply did "a land-office business" selling tickets to New York to people who were going back to Europe. A great many of these foreigners of southern Europe don't give a snap of the finger concerning the contention between the operators and the mine workers. Just so they are able to make a stake and get a job with the mine operators, and are sure to be protected, they will stay there, not simply because they are loyal, because of their loyalty to the company, but because they wanted to make some money. And the statement was made in Mr. Welborn's report, I think the twenty-second annual report, published by the company, referring to the enormous increase of business that they had had, and I have a memorandum of it here, at the company stores; and he refers to it as an evidence of the favorable light in which the people evidently regarded the company's stores. The statement, as it stands, does not prove what it stated there. The company stores did—I have that here, if you would like to have it. It is worth reading.

The company stores during the strike did an enormous business taking care of the guards. The furnishing in some instances of food for the militiamen and their supplies, and the strike breakers and their families coming in, made a volume of business that was very large indeed. It was not in regard to the loyalty to the company stores at all. I wanted to refer to it because I do not think that is a fair statement to go out to the public. [Reading:]

"It is a significant fact which bears evidence of the favor in which our mine stores are held by the workmen, retail sales in the center of the strike trouble were $47,067.52 greater than they were during the last preceding year."

Now, here is my answer to that. The company hotels and boarding houses were packed with guards who were being fed and furnished much new material for lodgings. At one period during the strike all huckster wagons were shut out of the camp—excluded. The arrival of hundreds of families as strike breakers made "the store business" boom in furnishing their houses. For months during the strike old employees who would have come to Trinidad or Walsenburg to trade occasionally were afraid to leave the camps; this extra trade went to the store. The feeding of the State militia was in itself a very large source of income to the operators.

The people who were given work and were being protected by the operators during the strike felt a new impulsion to buy only at "the store"—

Commissioner LENNON. Wasn't it a fact that during the strike the people in the camps were a little bit afraid to come out and get their stuff at other places?

Dr. GADDIS. Absolutely afraid to come out.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Afraid of what?

Dr. GADDIS. They were afraid of violence.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. On whose part?

Dr. GADDIS. On the part of those who were carrying on the strike.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The strikers?

Dr. GADDIS. Certainly.

Commissioner LENNON. What opportunities are there in these camps for what is generally termed legitimate amusement, picture shows or entertainments of any kind, something that would take the people's attention rather than go to the saloon?

Dr. GADDIS. The motion-picture show was started during the strikes to give the people some diversion who were in these camps and who could not get out or did not want to get out. We extended that into almost every camp of the C. F. & I. system. The company was quite liberal. They bought—we got two operators, one in Walsenburg and one in Trinidad, and in the more recent camps they purchased an entire outfit and presented it to the camp to be used there.

Commissioner LENNON. Were you in that district during the strike?

Dr. GADDIS. I was; yes, sir; all the time.

Commissioner LENNON. Did you know, either by actual personal acquaintance or by sight, a number of the officials of the mine workers who were in charge of the miners who were on strike?

Dr. GADDIS. I knew them by sight. When the strike first broke out I had my room in the Toltec Hotel, at Trinidad, and that became the strikers' headquarters. I was there and had a very nice room there and did not care about moving, but I was told several times—I was told by one of the local officials that he did not think any decent man would stay there, and I was told by Mr. Weitzel that—he just as good as told me that he did not want me to stay there. I became familiar with these people, although they did not know me, I don't think.

Commissioner LENNON. What evidence was there of a character that men usually observe as to the conduct of these men during the strike? Were they a drunken lot of bums, or did they keep sober? What kind of fellows were they?

Dr. GADDIS. You mean the strike leaders?

Commissioner LENNON. Yes.

Dr. GADDIS. Why, I saw nothing of a disorderly manner whatever, so far as I could observe. I knew Mr. Hays by sight and knew Mr. Lawson and knew

Mr. McLennan. I don't know as they knew me. I never went up and told them who I was.

Commissioner LENNON. Their open conduct, so far as you know, was not seriously objectionable?

Dr. GADDIS. I never heard a charge made that it was in any respect at all. Your suggestion is the first I have ever heard of it.

Commissioner LENNON. I think that is all.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Weinstock has some questions he wants to ask you.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If, as you say, the strikers were orderly and well behaved, what need was there for the strike breakers or scabs, or whatever they have been called, to fear to go beyond the limits of the camps?

Dr. GADDIS. Well, I think you misunderstood me, Mr. Weinstock. I understood the question to be the conduct of the leaders of the strike. Now, you ask me a question—if the strikers conducted themselves in a manner that was—could not be regarded as a violent attitude to the strike breakers. I say that they did so conduct themselves, and I know they did.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I think you have gotten the questions confused. I did not ask that question. I believe Mr. Lennon asked that question. Didn't you, Mr. Lennon?

Commissioner LENNON. Yes.

Dr. GADDIS. Well, then, I did not understand your question.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The point I want to get at is this: If the strikers and their representatives were law-abiding and peaceful and orderly, what need then was there for the men who took their places to fear going beyond the limits of the camps?

Dr. GADDIS. I do not take the position, my dear sir, that the strikers were or conducted themselves as Sunday-school children during the strike. I had one of the most intelligent foreigners tell me that I ever met, "What are we to do? What can we do?" They seemed to feel that, from the governor down, and Gen. Chase and his men, in constantly using the office of the company and telephone communication and the company stores carrying all kinds of bills for the militiamen and paying them and advancing money—the general impression was, as far as the militia was concerned, that the State of Colorado was dead set against them.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Were you there during the strike, Dr. Gaddis?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes; I was there during the whole of it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. From start to finish?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. So that you can speak from personal knowledge and not from hearsay?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes; that is exactly so.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What justification then was there, so far as you were able to ascertain, for the strikers to resort to violence to gain their ends?

Dr. GADDIS. I believe, my dear sir, that they considered that that was the only possible means of procedure for them; I do not justify it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You do not justify it?

Dr. GADDIS. I do not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you condemn it?

Dr. GADDIS. I do not know whether I would do the same way if I was a striker or not. I do not believe in shooting or the destruction of property to gain ends. I think it ought to be accomplished in lines different from that.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, if you had been a strike leader, what advice would you have given to the strikers?

Dr. GADDIS. Well, my education and all of my views are on a different channel from that, and it is a very important question, and I would not care to answer it offhand.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You would not care to answer it offhand?

Dr. GADDIS. No, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then you would not have advised them to refrain from resorting to violence?

Dr. GADDIS. I do not know whether I would under the same circumstances or not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you think that there is any time when, with the ballot at the command of the wage earners, and, in addition to that, in a State like Colorado, with the initiative, referendum, and recall at the command of the voters, and in view of the further fact that the majority of the voters of the State of Colorado are wage earners and doubtless would be in sympathy with their fellow wage earners if their fellow wage earners had grievances, do you think that under those circumstances there is any time when wage earners are justified in taking the law into their own hands and resisting the constituted authorities?

Dr. GADDIS. I do not believe that there is ever a time that that would be justified unless it becomes apparent that the constituted authorities are unwilling to give an unbiased attitude toward all sides.

Chairman WALSH. At this point we will stand adjourned until 2 o'clock. (Whereupon, at 12.30 o'clock the commission adjourned until 2 o'clock.)

AFTERNOON SESSION—2 P. M.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Gaddis, will you please take the chair?

Mr. Gaddis, before luncheon in your testimony you made some reference to Mr. Mackenzie King, and I don't exactly recall what it was, but Mr. King understood you to say that he had some communication of some sort with you personally, or that he had written to you or that you had written to him, and I do not recall just what it was. Will you kindly restate it so that I may ask you some questions about it if necessary?

Dr. GADDIS. I wrote to Mr. Rockefeller, stating that Mr. Weitzel informed me that my services were no longer to be desired after the first week in February. I had worked hard, and everything that I had done had succeeded in the work, and I was not ready to give it up; I wanted to stay on further and help in the work, and I stated the fact to Mr. Rockefeller, thinking he might intercede, but the letter was answered by Mr. Mackenzie King.

Chairman WALSH. Signed by Mr. Mackenzie King?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir; I have the letter here in Washington.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would turn it over so that I can inspect it, or allow Mr. King to inspect it before he goes on the stand.

Dr. GADDIS. I would like to be permitted to correct myself. I have used the name of Mackenzie King, I have been accustomed to associate his name with that of Starr J. Murphy, but my letter was from Starr J. Murphy, and not from Mackenzie King.

Chairman WALSH. So you were mistaken?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir; and I beg Mr. King's pardon.

Chairman WALSH. Has this statement that you made here, has it ever been made public before?

Dr. GADDIS. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Have you testified in any of the other hearings?

Dr. GADDIS. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. This is the first time that you give what you claim to be the facts in connection with the Colorado situation?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir; it is the first time.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Let me repeat the last question that I put to you and your last answer so we can take it up where we dropped it. My question is this: Do you think that there is any time when, with the ballot at the command of the wage earners, and, in addition to that, in a State like Colorado, with the initiative, referendum, and recall at the command of the voters, and in view of the further fact that the majority of the voters of the State of Colorado are wage earners and doubtless would be in sympathy with their fellow wage earners if their fellow wage earners had grievances, do you think that under those circumstances there is any time when wage earners are justified in taking the law into their own hands and resisting the constituted authorities, to which you replied as follows: I do not believe that there is ever a time that that would be justified unless it becomes apparent that the constituted authorities are unwilling to give an unbiased attitude toward all sides.

Now, let me ask you, Mr. Gaddis, how far then you are in accord with the opinion expressed on the witness stand a few days ago by Dr. Goodnow, the president of Johns Hopkins University. Let me read to you his statement and invite your judgment thereon [reads]:

"Taking a concrete case, Doctor, taking the case for example of the Colorado situation and analyzing it, let us see what your counsel in the matter would lead to. The governor ordered out the militia in connection with some coal strike that took place in Colorado. There was a conflict of testimony there as to the cause and effect. The National Guardsmen maintain that they fought in self-defense, that they were first attacked by the strikers. The strikers deny that, and claim that the initiative was taken on the part of the National Guardsmen, which led to riot. Let us assume for the purpose of our illustration, and for the purpose of our analysis, that the workers are correct in their statement, and that the militia did take the initiative, and did abuse their power, and did harass and fire upon innocent people. Your advice and counsel under such circumstances to the worker is, take the result, yield for the time being, do not attempt to take the short cut and get immediate redress, but recognize the existing authorities and abide by their demand? Let your remedy come by use of the ballot; see to it that the commander in chief that is responsible for this is either recalled, under your recall law, or is condemned by public sentiment, and not reelected? Do I follow you?

"Dr. GOODNOW. Yes, sir; it seems to me that any other advice is going to lead to anarchy. It seems to me that the fundamental proposition you have to start with is that we must have peace, and we shall not recognize any such thing legally as right to restrain the constituted authorities. The right of revolution or violence or anything of that sort. We must, as civilized men, adopt that idea or else there is no peace for our Government.

"Question. In other words, the short cut to the remedy must be condemned?

"Dr. GOODNOW. Yes, sir; as I look at it.

"Question. And that it is better for a group of men to suffer from real or fancied injuries temporarily than to have chaos prevail?

"Dr. GOODNOW. Certainly. One of the many troubles seems to be the workers in the country never will gain anything by any such thing as organized violence. The people as a whole condemn it, and they can do very much better by presenting their case as forcibly as it can be to the courts, where that is possible, or to the public as a whole."

Now, let me ask you, how far are you in accord with the sentiment expressed by Dr. Goodnow?

Dr. GADDIS. That is from the president of Johns Hopkins University?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes, sir.

Dr. GADDIS. I would say that if the reasoning of Dr. Goodnow could have prevailed we would not have had an American Nation if we had followed out his logic.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Will you point out why?

Dr. GADDIS. We resisted with armed force the oppression of England, and I would like to say in that connection—I would like to ask you if a man enters your home with a fast repeating revolver and begins to shoot up your family, are you justified in shooting him?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I am not here to be questioned, Mr. Gaddis.

Chairman WALSH. We must not have any audible expression of feeling, please, ladies and gentlemen.

Dr. GADDIS. Excuse me.

Chairman WALSH. It is all right for you to answer any way that you see fit and to ask any questions—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In my own way I will touch on the point that you have raised.

Chairman WALSH. I will say this, for fear there might be some misunderstanding: That it has not been permissible to address questions to the commissioners.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you regard the condition that prevails, say, in Colorado as being parallel to the conditions that prevailed in the American colonies at the time of the Revolution?

Dr. GADDIS. To a certain extent I do.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. As a reader of American history and one who I am sure is thoroughly well informed in American history, I take it you realize the fact that the colonists rebelled against Great Britain because they were taxed without having a voice in the Government?

Dr. GADDIS. That is certainly correct.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That while there may have been other causes which led to revolution, the prime cause taxation without representation?

Dr. GADDIS. That is the principal one.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, is it your opinion, then, that you and I as American citizens are taxed without the right of representation?

Dr. GADDIS. Now, Mr. Weinstock, you referred to the State of Colorado having the initiative, referendum, and recall, and Dr. Goodnow says that is the way to get it there. There is a judge in Trinidad, Jurge McKendrie—he was delivering opinions for some time that the people, the strikers and their sympathizers, believed were biased and in violation of their constitutional rights, and in favor of the operators. There were two men started a recall petition—Mr. John Murray and John Merlonis, I think his name is—those men were summarily arrested and thrown into jail for contempt of court and are out now on bond waiting to appear before his august majesty, Judge McKendrie.

Now, those people have tried in that instance just what you say and what Dr. Goodnow says we should never go beyond. I do not agree with the gentleman at all. I believe there are times when we are justified in going beyond it, and I believe the strike in Colorado was one of those times, and the public sentiment aroused in this community by the attitude of the strikers in open rebellion, which I do not condone under ordinary circumstances, has done a great good, and I—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, will the reporter please read my question, and I would like to have a direct answer.

(Question read by reporter.)

Dr. GADDIS. Now, in the concrete case that I have represented the men tried the civil courts and could not have their case properly represented. They tried the civil statutes of the State of Colorado—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. May I again ask you to answer my question. I will have it read again.

(Question reread by reporter.)

Dr. GADDIS. Well, if you ask that question aside from our connection with the strike trouble, or with the disputes and manners that are being contested here and disputed, I would say certainly not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is, that while we are taxed on the one hand, that we have the right of representation on the other?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, isn't it a fact that in the State of Colorado you have woman suffrage—universal suffrage?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. So that even women, if they are taxed on the one hand, they have representation on the other?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That being the case, where comes the parallel with conditions which prevailed at the time of the American Revolution?

Dr. GADDIS. Why, the parallel is very easy, to my mind. There was a situation there that obtained from the governor down. It was a conviction that had settled itself, not only in the minds of the strikers but of many citizens, that justice under the then present condition there was impossible to the strikers' cause.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you a believer in democracy, Dr. Gaddis?

Dr. GADDIS. I am, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you believe that a remedy for most of the evils, political ills, and civic ills of labor is not less democracy, but more democracy?

Dr. GADDIS. I believe we want more democracy; yes, sir; not demagogism.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know any spot on the face of the globe, then, Mr. Gaddis, where the laws have made a higher and broader democracy possible than right in the State of Colorado, not only with its vote, not only its universal suffrage, but also with its initiative, with its referendum, and with its recall? Can you add anything to those conditions that would make for a still broader democracy?

Dr. GADDIS. The laws in themselves per se are almost ideal; but, as you know, as a man of affairs, what the law is and what the execution of that law is are entirely different matters.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, if you and I and the rest of us as citizens of the Commonwealth have at our command the initiative, referendum, and recall; if it is made possible for a majority of us to initiate legislation, even though the legislature itself may be opposed to it; if we have the right through the medium of the referendum to nullify any laws passed by the legislature that we do not approve of; if it is within our power to recall unfit officials or those who have been derelict in their duties and would fail to do it, on whom rests the blame?

Dr. GADDIS. The instance I have cited would not make the men very zealous to attempt another effort of that kind, in the Trinidad district, at least. And there I say there certainly must be something wrong with the law or its interpretation by that judge.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, then, are we to infer from your statement that, briefly, this is your attitude: If the law goes your way, observe it; if it does not go your way, rebel against it?

Dr. GADDIS. I believe there are some things and some conditions in which I would be justified—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (interrupting). Now, will you name the conditions?

Dr. GADDIS. Well, if I could not get my constitutional rights.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You would be justified in rebelling against the constituted authorities?

Dr. GADDIS. I believe I would.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, if you would be justified in doing that, I presume you would allow me the same privilege?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes; and a million men.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And all the rest of us the same privilege?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes; a million men.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then, what would be the situation if all of us, laboring as we might under a real or fancied grievance, saw fit to take the law in our own hands? What would become of the Republic?

Dr. GADDIS. It would break down; and I think it ought to break down.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You think it ought to break down?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then if you and I have a difference and go into court, and it is decided your way, and not my way, you think I ought to do all I could to break down the Republic on that account?

Dr. GADDIS. Not in a single instance, that way, as you have stated it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, I could only gather that inference, because you stated very frankly and very candidly that if we think the law is not being administered as we think it ought to be administered we ought to rebel.

Dr. GADDIS. I lived in Cincinnati, or near Cincinnati, at the time of the great riots there. The courts of Cincinnati were turning out murderers scot free almost by the dozen. There was one colored man there committed a brutal murder in a livery stable, and there was scarcely a shadow of a doubt that he was a murderer, and the citizens of Cincinnati went to the music hall in a mass, and that city was in the hands of a mob for days. I believe that riot did good.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then you are a believer in riots, Dr. Gaddis?

Dr. GADDIS. I am in such instances; yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is, you justify rioting?

Dr. GADDIS. I justify clarifying the atmosphere that has become so polluted and fetid that a man is asphyxiated in it when he holds his head up.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, who is to be the judge of when a riot is justifiable?

Dr. GADDIS. Well, the consensus of opinion settles the riot.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, have you ever known of a riot in any city or in any State since the Civil War where the majority of the people of a community or the Commonwealth were in favor of a riot?

Dr. GADDIS. Well, there was enough of them to do some good, whether it was a majority or not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Would you call that a consensus of opinion?

Dr. GADDIS. I call it a consensus of opinion; certainly I do.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You take a handful of people who get together and engage in that sort of thing, and you call that a consensus of opinion?

Dr. GADDIS. Well, I don't know of a handful of people ever starting a riot any place.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know of a handful of people starting a riot anywhere?

Dr. GADDIS. I don't recall them; I am not an encyclopedia on riots.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, can you tell us any instance, Mr. Gaddis, within your knowledge, where a majority of the people started a riot?

Dr. GADDIS. Well, I would have to study up on that, Mr. Weinstock.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You don't know of any—

Dr. GADDIS (interrupting). I could not recall; no, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Summing up, then, despite the fact that you are a clergyman, a Christian clergyman, who stands for peace and for law and for order, you would justify resistance to the constituted authorities if, in the judgment of a group or an individual they felt they were not getting a square deal at the hands of the constituted authorities?

Dr. GADDIS. In very rare instances I would. Crime is crime; whether it is committed with the ermine of a judge, or a jury, or anybody else, it is crime.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Would you punish such crime?

Dr. GADDIS. I would certainly try to get them out of power.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, if a body of strikers, in their mistaken notion of how to get at their rights, ill advised and ill guided and misdirected, should take the short cut and resist the authorities and resort to violence, would you punish them for having done so?

Dr. GADDIS. If a body of strikers should do that?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes.

Dr. GADDIS. Well, that would depend on all the circumstances leading up to that expression.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, you are thoroughly familiar with the circumstances in Colorado, of course. You told us you were there from start to finish. Would you punish the strikers who resorted to violence in the State of Colorado?

Dr. GADDIS. I would not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You would not?

Dr. GADDIS. No, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You would let them go scot free?

Dr. GADDIS. Well, I am inclined to think I would.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And just give them a blanket policy of freedom despite whatever they may have done?

Dr. GADDIS. The attitude or the situation there in Colorado to my—I have never seen a situation to my mind more despicable and damnable, as I believe it, to the best interests of the American Commonwealth. It is an oligarchy that is controlling everything.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And you believe the way to remedy that is by violation of law, by bloodshed, and by force, and not through the ballot?

Dr. GADDIS. I don't think that, because things are on the statute books that makes them right.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And regardless of whether or not you have statute books you would resort to force?

Dr. GADDIS. I say, in a few rare instances I believe it is justified. Self-defense itself is the principle that God has placed in a man's heart.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, now, let's assume that the Colorado strikers, in their own hearts, believed in the justice of their cause—

Dr. GADDIS (interrupting). I—yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And believed they were doing that which is right and proper for them to do. Suppose the group of I. W. W.'s did exactly the same thing, believing they were right in doing it; supposing the group of Socialists believed in their own heart that they were right in doing it and resorted to the same methods; assume that the group of anarchists believed in their own hearts that they were justified in doing that, and should also resort to those methods; then what?

Dr. GADDIS. Well, that is the pathetic situation of the whole commercial and industrial situation, I take it, to-day.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Would you condone it and approve it?

Dr. GADDIS. I don't say that I would.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then you would differentiate between a group of Socialists, or a group of I. W. W.'s, or a group of anarchists, and a group of unionists?

Dr. GADDIS. Not at all, sir. I would let every case stand upon its own merits.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Suppose these I. W. W.'s came to you and convinced you, or these anarchists, or Socialists, convinced you that they really and sincerely believed they were doing the proper thing, and that it was their only recourse. Would you condone their acts and permit them to go unpunished?

Dr. GADDIS. It would depend entirely on what the constituted authorities and the executive officers of the State—the attitude that they would assume to them in every particular instance. I said this morning that I did not believe in the destruction of property or life, and I do not—to gain an end.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Very well. Here are a crowd—were you here the other day, Mr. Gaddis, when Mr. Haywood testified?

Dr. GADDIS. No, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. He is the representative of the I. W. W.'s.

Dr. GADDIS. No, sir; I was not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. He gave it as their doctrine—this is for your information—that he believed that all the machinery for production belonged to the workers. He believed that it was a great wrong that a manufacturer should be permitted to run his factory; that the right of it was for the workers of that factory to take possession of that factory and operate it for their own pocket and their own good and to turn the employer out and, in the language of Mr. Haywood, permit him an opportunity to earn an honest living by working by their side as a manual worker. Now, suppose a group of I. W. W.'s, sincere in that belief, should take possession of a factory, turn the employer out of his property without compensation, would you, because they were sincere in their motives, permit them to go unpunished?

Dr. GADDIS. Why, I would not approve of such a course.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You would not?

Dr. GADDIS. No, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And yet these men would be sincere in their purpose, just as sincere, doubtless, as the Colorado strikers were in their purpose. Where would you draw the line—

Dr. GADDIS. Why, I draw the line—I believe the employer has rights. I believe in the holding of personal property. I don't believe in confiscating personal property without remuneration.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You do believe the employer has rights?

Dr. GADDIS. Have I said anything that would indicate anything to the contrary?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Very well. Now, if the employer has rights has he a right to employ anybody he pleases, or to refrain from employing anybody he pleases, for any reason, or for no reason?

Dr. GADDIS. He has.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. He has?

Dr. GADDIS. Certainly he has.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then if I had an employer who saw fit for any reason to retire me from his service, do you think I would have any right to prevent you from taking that job, if you wanted it, and would accept it from my employer, and he wanted to accept you?

Dr. GADDIS. Now, that touches upon a question of labor. I believe labor has the right to organize.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No; that is not the issue at all.

Dr. GADDIS. I think it is getting very close to it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No; I am simply touching a vital principle that can be easily answered by yes or no. Here is the question: I have lost my position or my job, and the job has been tendered to you, or you have made an application for it, and an understanding has been arrived at between you and my former employer; have I any right to prevent your taking that job if you want to take it, and the employer wants to employ you?

Dr. GADDIS. Well, I am not a specialist on industrial disputes, and I will have to ask you to excuse me from answering technical questions of that kind.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. This is not a technical question, but a plain everyday common-sense question, Mr. Gaddis. I am surprised that you would call it a technical question. It is a very simple question. You can either say, in your opinion, that I have a right to interfere with your accepting your job, or I have no right to interfere with your accepting that job.

Dr. GADDIS. I think there would be circumstances, Mr. Weinstock, where that man that is turned out would have the right to interfere to a certain extent.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, you were telling us a little while ago, Mr. Gaddis, that you were in the service of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And that you retired from the service. Now, do you feel that you would have a right to prevent another man from taking that job?

Dr. GADDIS. Well, if you mean the man they did put in, I would like to prevent it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Any man? Do you feel that you would have a reasonable right to prevent that man from taking that job, no matter who he was?

Dr. GADDIS. I believe, and I wrote Mr. Rockefeller, that there was a great injustice being done in depriving me of a position that every month I was in it increased in advancement.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You have not answered my question, Mr. Gaddis. You have side-stepped it, if you pardon the criticism. My question was plain and simple, and one that there ought to be no difficulty in answering. Do you believe you had a right to prevent some other man from taking the job from which you retired?

Dr. GADDIS. If I was a man that had a family depending upon me and had nothing laid up whatever, and I knew that the loss of my job would mean their starvation and put them onto charity—why, you are asking me questions that I am unprepared for at all; haven't given it a moment's thought. But I think that under such circumstances that I might be justified in using at least legitimate means of preventing that man from taking my position.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Will you please tell us what you regard as "legitimate means"?

Dr. GADDIS. Well, I would try moral suasion first.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Suppose that failed?

Dr. GADDIS. Well, when I was a boy I was into trouble a good deal in school. I don't know whether I might try anything else along any more vigorous line or not, just to settle the dispute between us.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, are we to infer from that that if you endeavored to use moral suasion and that failed, that you would resort to force?

Dr. GADDIS. I think the fellow might be—there are circumstances where a good drubbing would be just the thing.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What about the treatment of the fellow toward you whose job you took?

Dr. GADDIS. I would consider it, if I would take it under the circumstances I mentioned, that he would do his best.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In other words, are we to understand then that if an employer, for any reason or for no reason, according to what suited his ideas, was to dismiss a man, and invite you to take that position, and you accepted it, that the other one ought to drive you out?

Dr. GADDIS. I have answered that question with modification, Mr. Weinstock, and I said I did think so, under certain modifications.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That he would be justified in driving you out and preventing you from taking that position in spite of the fact that you yourself had a wife and babies to take care of?

Dr. GADDIS. You are reading into my answer what I did not say.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, assuming that you had a wife and babies to take care of?

Dr. GADDIS. Then I would have to answer it in the light of that assumption.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Will you please answer it with that modification?

Dr. GADDIS. I do not concede the right to the employer to discharge a man simply at the caprice of his own will; I do not concede that right to him.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you concede the right to the worker to quit his job at the caprice of the worker?

Dr. GADDIS. I do.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then the law does not work both ways?

Dr. GADDIS. The situations are not parallel at all.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is, the worker has a right to quit his job whenever he pleases, for any reason, or for no reason, but the employer has not the equal right on his side to retire the worker?

Dr. GADDIS. That is my position.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I think it is well for us to know your position.

Dr. GADDIS. I don't think the situations between the employer and the employee are parallel at all.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. It is interesting to find a case where the rule does not work both ways. You mentioned a few moments ago that you felt a great injustice had been done you in retiring you from the service of the coal and fuel company.

Dr. GADDIS. I did at the time, but I am glad of it now.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. At that time you thought it was a great injustice?

Dr. GADDIS. I did.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You wrote to Mr. Rockefeller, did you not?

Dr. GADDIS. I did.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That you valued the position and wanted to retain it?

Dr. GADDIS. For the good I could do in it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How long had you been employed by the company?

Dr. GADDIS. Nearly two years.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And these conditions that you have been telling us about this morning, I presume, existed all during that time?

Dr. GADDIS. They did.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. From my memory of the reading of your statement it seemed to me that the company had complied with quite a number of the recommendations and suggestions you had made to the company in the way of betterments?

Dr. GADDIS. They did; yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Will you please point out wherein the company failed to carry out your suggestions and recommendations?

Dr. GADDIS. They failed to carry them out just a week or two before I ceased service with them. I received a letter from one of their largest camps that the saloon keeper was selling liquor to minors—boys under age. I wrote to Mr. Weltzel and said that a word from him would stop that, and he replied to me and said, "If you will furnish me proof of the statement you made I will put the matter in the hands of the district attorney, and he will take it up." The letter absolutely made me laugh.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Did you furnish the proof?

Chairman WALSH. The witness had not finished his answer.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Had you finished?

Dr. GADDIS. All Mr. Weltzel needed to do, as manager of the fuel department, was to take up his telephone, and he would have gotten more evidence than he would have known what to do with. If I had furnished the proof and given the names, which I would have to have done, it would probably have led to those men being discharged.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. May I ask when you retired from the service of the company?

Dr. GADDIS. The first week in February.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Were you in the employ of the company last December when this commission held its hearing in Denver?

Dr. GADDIS. I was.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then may I ask why, in view of the fact you had all of this information at your command, you did not present it to this commission at its hearing in Colorado?

Dr. GADDIS. Mr. McCrosky called on me, and I presumed he was representing Mr. Walsh and this commission, and he talked with me for a couple of hours and then he left me, and I inferred he did not consider what I had to offer—he did not send in my name, and I was not going to send my name to Mr. Walsh.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Will you tell just what information you gave to our representative while you were talking with him for those two hours?

Dr. GADDIS. He asked me all sorts of leading questions in regard to my work. One of the first questions he asked me was, "I want to find out whether you are running this office or it is being run for you," and I said that I was amenable to the officer over me, and I said I did not know how a business could be conducted without being amenable to some one that way. He asked me if I would permit a man to go into a camp if I did not know what he was going to say, or if I knew what he was going to say would stir up trouble, and I said I would not if I could prevent it. Then he asked me about the library books, and tried to make out I was controlling what they should be, and the literature the men should read. I said they could buy anything they wanted to; and he asked me all sorts of leading questions.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Did you tell him the things that you have told this commission here?

Dr. GADDIS. No, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You describe the conditions as being very horrible?

Dr. GADDIS. I believe they are to-day.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then tell us why, as a Christian minister, you remained in the employ of the company?

Dr. GADDIS. Because I could do good, and I was doing good.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yet you say that the case was apparently hopeless and you could not accomplish results and the superintendent turned you down?

Dr. GADDIS. I was accomplishing results every month.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Don't you think you could have accomplished greater results if in protest you had resigned and given your reasons as to why you resigned?

Dr. GADDIS. No; and I think the natural course of events has made my course much better.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Did you write direct to Mr. Rockefeller and apprise him of the conditions that existed in the camps?

Dr. GADDIS. Not in detail. I referred to the fact of my opinion of Mr. Weitzel in this letter, and that should have been enough, it seems to me, for the company to take up the matter, but they did not care to.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Did you recite the things you have pictured to this commission at this time?

Dr. GADDIS. Not in detail.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Why did you wait until you were dismissed from the company to make all these charges?

Dr. GADDIS. Well, you do not really mean that as a serious question?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I certainly do; I think it is a legitimate question to ask. If evils existed and wrongs were committed and you remained silent until you were dismissed from the company, there must be some explanation of it.

Dr. GADDIS. How long do you think I would retain my position with the company if I had made such an exposition of affairs as I have made here?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are we to understand that your prime purpose was to retain your position with the company regardless of results to the workers?

Dr. GADDIS. I was hopeful, sir, of bettering things, and I did. I found camps in which there was no sociological work whatever, not the merest semblance of it, and they backed me up with the money and their support until this matter was placed in the hands of Mr. Weitzel, and then it came to a quick end.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You made the statement in your testimony this morning that the shopkeepers in these various camps had a monopoly on the business; is that correct?

Dr. GADDIS. In the closed camps they have an absolute monopoly. I will modify that; they allow huckster wagons to come in to sell green groceries.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do they permit outside shopkeepers to make deliveries of purchases within the camp?

Dr. GADDIS. They do.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is, if I, as a miner living within the closed camp, should go to a neighboring community and make my purchases there, the shopkeepers could come into the camp and make deliveries of those goods and there is no objection to that?

Dr. GADDIS. I think it is done right along.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then, how have they a monopoly?

Dr. GADDIS. I think that should be modified, except during the strike trouble; I had a party call me up on the telephone during the strike and ask me to intercede for him to come into the Segundo camp, and I told him that was not my province at all, that was a matter of the superintendent's.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are we to understand, then, that you modify your statement made this morning that they had established a monopoly of shopkeeping?

Dr. GADDIS. If I made that statement without saying that hucksters were allowed there, I modify it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You say, however, that during the strike the miners did confine their purchases to the company stores?

Dr. GADDIS. In some of the camps I think that is true, without doubt.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And I suppose you repeat your statement of this morning that they were afraid to go beyond the camp for fear of personal violence from the strikers?

Dr. GADDIS. The company did not want the hucksters' wagons to come into the camp, into the Segundo camp after the strike, and the men that went in there were strike sympathizers and they stirred up trouble.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. Mrs. Harriman wishes to ask some questions.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What effect, if any, do you think the fact that Mr. Lawson was sentenced to life imprisonment will have on the labor question throughout the country, as far as you have knowledge of the situation?

Dr. GADDIS. I do not believe, Mrs. Harriman, that that sentence will stand at all; I think it will be reversed. It may have a temporary depression on labor trouble, but I can not see—I can not believe that there is an American jury that will make such finding when the case is properly presented. Trinidad is the headquarters—it is one of the hottest corporation towns in Colorado. The Episcopalian minister told me on the street during the strike trouble that any man in Trinidad could be arrested on the word of the chief clerk of the C. F. & I.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Lennon wishes to ask a question.

Commissioner LENNON. Mr. Gaddis, have the officials, or the militia, or gunmen, any greater right to violate the law than a citizen?

Dr. GADDIS. Most assuredly not, sir.

Commissioner LENNON. Prior to this strike taking place, had the laws of Colorado as regards the eight-hour working day, the checkweighmen and inspection and other laws pertaining to mining—had they been violated and set aside, or had they been complied with?

Mr. GADDIS. The eight-hour law, after it was a law for several years, was respected to a considerable extent. Other laws for the protection of the miners were scarcely considered. I do not think there is a power-house man, a steam or electric power-house man in Colorado, working for the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. but works 12 hours a day, seven days in the week. One man told me, at Primero, it was simply killing him, not the hard work, but the long work, with no vacation whatever, unless he took it out of his own pocket.

Commissioner LENNON. Regarding the matter of the law, and giving the people of Colorado the power of recall, did the authorities set that law aside and deny it in the case to which you referred, in Trinidad?

Dr. GADDIS. I presume, Mr. Lennon, they had legal reasons for doing it, but they certainly set it aside. I do not know the judge's reason for doing it, but I presume he was satisfied he was right; that will be settled, I presume, when the trial come up.

Commissioner LENNON. Are not the citizens, as such, entitled to their construction of their rights as some petty judge, as to the fundamental law of the State?

Dr. GADDIS. I think, with the material the judges are made of, that they are; yes. Common sense can decide that law and equity without being legal specialists.

Commissioner LENNON. Commissioner Weinstock asked you several questions regarding the inherent right of men, under certain circumstances, to commit violence. I can not quote the Declaration of Independence exactly, but it goes on to say that governments are instituted among men for certain purposes, and when they fail to serve those purposes, the people have the right to take into their own hands such remedies as may be essential to amend or change the governments. Do you recognize that as a fundamental right?

Dr. GADDIS. Certainly I do; I stated that. I think, very clearly.

Commissioner LENNON. I think that is all.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner O'Connell wishes to ask a few questions.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Doctor, I want to discuss with you a little, the political situation in Colorado, as it was discussed by Commissioner Weinstock. He asked you if the people of Colorado did not have the referendum and recall and the ballot.

Dr. GADDIS. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. By which remedies they could enact into law anything that they desired, and if an officer was elected they might, under the law, recall him; and he read from the record of a witness who appeared before us, the statement that it would be better, or at least the witness agreed that even though the workmen had serious complaints, it would be better for them to take their chances in the matter of legislation—take advantage of the referendum and the recall and not take the short cut, the short cut meaning the strike, and the so-called riot and even bloodshed, if you will. That seemed to be the opinion of a number of learned men who appeared before us. Now, you have been in Colorado for a number of years and you have made some study of this problem, and of the laws that have been enacted in Colorado, and the effect these laws have had, whether they have been effective or put into effect at all. The people of Colorado, by and through their prerogative, the legislature, enacted a law saying that eight hours should be the working day under ground.

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir; that is the law.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, the men, before they struck, or before they rioted, or before there was any shooting on the part of anybody, or any boycott or blacklisting, went to the legislature, or to the people, and enacted a law saying that eight hours should constitute a day's work for all men under ground. Now, so far as that goes, they began what Commissioner Weinstock suggested they ought to do instead of taking the short cut, and they put that law on the statute books, but no one paid any attention to it, did they?

Dr. GADDIS. Not for some years.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then the men decided—they have taken this roundabout way to get on the statute books a law saying the employer shall not permit men, even though they want to, to work more than eight hours under ground, and yet the employers for 10 years, you say, paid absolutely no attention to the law?

Dr. GADDIS. Well, whatever I read.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Well, now, regardless of that, so far as you know, have they paid any attention to the hours regarding certain limitations in the working day?

Dr. GADDIS. They did not for some time, as I understand it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The workmen of Colorado went to the legislature and had a bill enacted into a law saying that the companies in Colorado shall not carry on a so-called company store—that that would be a violation of law to do it.

Dr. GADDIS. To compel people to trade there only.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, instead of going on strike against it, or rioting, or boycotting or having murder or anything of that character to put that into effect, they went the roundabout way that Commissioner Weinstock suggests, and did not take the short cut, and put it on the statute book, and yet the mine owners paid no attention to that law, and have not for years.

Dr. GADDIS. And do not to-day.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. They are not obeying the law to-day?

Dr. GADDIS. I do not believe they are; no, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The workmen went to the legislature, the miners in particular, and wanted a law enacted that would permit use of—

Dr. GADDIS. Checkweighman?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Checkweighman on the scale house, or tippie, as it is commonly called, so that we will get the actual production of coal that we produce here, and the legislature enacted that into law.

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The men again did not take the short cut; they took the roundabout way to get it.

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And they put that on the statute books.

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And for years the mine operators have paid no attention to that law.

Dr. GADDIS. That is certainly the case.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. So that the workmen finally decided, we have taken this roundabout way, of which we were advised by professors and doctors and business men and all law-abiding citizens and all God-fearing men; we have taken this roundabout way they have talked about, and gone to the people and asked them to make laws to help us.

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The people have made them?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And the boss says, in the language of the street man, "To hell with your law," and does not pay any attention to them?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And the men say if that is the case there is but one thing left to do—strike to enforce those laws?

Dr. GADDIS. And I believe in it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And when they struck to enforce those laws the employers had so infringed on their political positions in Colorado, as they have been, and the people in the counties in which those mines are located have absolutely no political freedom, and they have been dominated in every way, and the politics in that portion of the State, at least some parts of it, have been carried on illegally?

Dr. GADDIS. Mr. Bowers's language in that letter speaks stronger than I could.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And finally, to protect their homes and families against the invasion of thugs and their helpers from all parts of the United States that were brought in here, and gunmen, and even the militia that is supposed to enforce the laws that the State of Colorado has put upon its statute books, and which the employers absolutely refuse to put into force—is that the situation?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then the suggestion offered by Commissioner Weinstock in which he tried to have you say that you were not in favor of men taking the short cut to get there—

Dr. GADDIS. I am in favor of it when they can get it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But there was a political field for them to go and get it, there was a sheriff and local police to do things with?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And the machinery in Colorado, which those men had put into effect, had put the laws on the statute book, and then to enforce the laws they were compelled to go on strike; they were compelled to face these thugs and detectives and gunmen that were brought into the State, and in addition the State militia that were brought in there to enforce the State laws, not their wishes, but laws that were on the statute books of the State of Colorado, put there by the Legislature of Colorado and the people of Colorado, which the employers of Colorado refused to carry out?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That is the situation that we find that resulted in that strike?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The eight-hour law, of course, when it went on the statute book in Colorado was appealed to the courts and was declared unconstitutional?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But later on it was appealed to the people and the people said—

Dr. GADDIS. We want it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. We want the eight-hour day, and the people outside of the Legislature of Colorado and outside of the courts have declared it constitutional, the people said it is constitutional and we want it, and yet the mine owners of Colorado say, "We won't carry out the law," and they have not up to this date?

Dr. GADDIS. I think they have carried out the eight-hour law underground.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. In regard to the company store, and the right to have a man on the tippie to weigh the coal for them?

Dr. GADDIS. The eight-hour law for the last year or two is quite well observed underground.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But what about the company stores?

Dr. GADDIS. It is a very flagrant condition, indeed.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And what about their right to have a man to see that their coal is weighed properly?

Dr. GADDIS. They had one man in Starkville when the strike was called; that was a checkweighman for any length of time. When the man asked for a checkweighman, in the language of the super., he was getting too smart.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And he got what?

Dr. GADDIS. He got it in the neck, generally.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, what was there left for the miners of Colorado to do, when they had gone this roundabout way and got the laws put on the statute book for eight hours, and the right to have their checkweighman to see that they got the coal they produced, and for the abolition of the company stores, for the freedom of the citizens of the State of Colorado, and the laws were not obeyed, what was there left for the men to do?

Dr. GADDIS. I think nothing but to make a demonstration.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And that demonstration was to strike against disobedience of the law, not on their part, but on the part of the coal operators of Colorado?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir; that is my position.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, you were asked if it was right for a man to quit his job at will and was it not also right for the employer to discharge at will, and I think your answer was that the cases are not the same. Dr. GADDIS. I don't think it is. I think the advantage is with the employer 100 to 1 over the employee.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Absolutely. Now, the employee quits his job; he has a right; we concede the right to quit his job; and under general conditions, under reasonably fair conditions, we concede the employer has the right to dismiss.

Dr. GADDIS. Certainly.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But when it comes to a question of equity—the equity between the two propositions, between the two opportunities—there is no equality?

Dr. GADDIS. No, sir; not at all; they are not parallel.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The employee can quit his job, and the employee of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., employing between six and seven thousand men, one man quitting his job does not affect the operations of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. at all?

Dr. GADDIS. Let me give you an illustration.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. If you will allow me to continue.

Dr. GADDIS. Excuse me.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. He did not interfere with the operation of the affairs of that company in any way?

Dr. GADDIS. Not at all.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. He is hardly a cog in the wheel, as it were. If, on the other hand, if the company dismisses a man that was living in one of their company houses and the company ground, when they discharge him they deport him; he must leave that community?

Dr. GADDIS. In a hurry, too.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And he must take his children and his wife and his household goods and put them on his back, because I suppose they could carry on their back all that they have and leave that community, so what equity of the situation is there? There is no equity in the situation at all.

Dr. GADDIS. No equity at all.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. He is driven from the community in which he probably has worked for years and built up associations with his coworkers, and he must lose all that and go to some other community and commence living anew, and there is a slight possibility when he reaches this new community that those employers in that community have heard of him and his record and that he finds it impossible to secure employment there.

Dr. GADDIS. That is admitted by the officers of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. So that equity in a man having a right to quit and the employer having the right to discharge is equity in name only?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir; sound of words. The illustration of the equality between the employer and employee comes to me in regard to the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. After this disastrous 15 months' strike, the twenty-second annual report of the C. F. & I. Co. shows a net balance of $4,000,000. They are not bankrupt by any means after this disastrous strike, which cost them $1,000,000 or more. In one instance there was a man told me in Trinidad before he left there that there were persons crying for something to eat; that they had gone out in support of what they considered their rights. There is not much equality there.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you believe that the miners—and they are the large citizens of these mining communities, in these southern and northern counties of Colorado—have had the free ballot?

Dr. GADDIS. I beg your pardon.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Have they had the free ballot—the right to ballot—the free right to vote as their conscience dictates?

Dr. GADDIS. I know that there is indirectly, and I don't know but what direct, influence brought to bear upon the political—the civil right of the miners, for instance—the manager of the fuel department of the C. F. & I. was going around during the strike and saying when he was asked about conditions, were they going to be relieved, and his reply was, and he had it stereotyped and got it off a good many times, "There will be no permanent relief until there is a change of government in Washington. When God wants to chastise the American people he gives us a Democratic administration." How can that be interpreted by men working in the camps as laborers to get what they want unless they go to work and help put out the Democratic administration?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you suppose there are some of the people in these northern and southern counties in Colorado that fear that God will never reach that part of the country, or bring some wonderful influence there that will give them a change?

Dr. GADDIS. That is one reason, candidly, that I wanted to stay there, to bring God to those people.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The coal company and their officers there in those counties, I suppose, are not politically interested in that phase of it, in bringing God to the miners or the miners close to God?

Dr. GADDIS. You mean the officers there?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Yes, sir.

Dr. GADDIS. I don't think they are interested. There was one super. that attended pretty regularly on religious services, but when I spoke in regard to the conditions in the camp to Mr. Bowers, and also to Dr. Corwin, of the unfitness of those men to hold such prominent positions, Mr. Bower said to me, "Those men are there for a certain purpose," and that purpose was to get coal, no matter what else they did; and Dr. Corwin said to me, or substantially said, "Those men are there to get coal and not religion."

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Are you familiar with the situation in Huerfano County, in which Jeff Farr is sheriff, or "King" Farr?

Dr. GADDIS. He is known as the big boss and is worth considerable money in that community, and he has a great influence there, and, in one instance, he tried to work it on me.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Yes, sir; I will ask you about that in a moment. He had been sheriff for a great many years?

Dr. GADDIS. I think 15 years.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And he is looked upon—I think it was used before our hearing in Denver; I think it was "king," or some such title, that was used in connection with his name—that he dominated everything, practically, politically, industrially, and commercially, in that county.

Dr. GADDIS. I think, as far as he can, he does.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That in elections he has used every influence, honorably and dishonorably, to influence elections in that county; that he was a party in the distribution of funds to buy votes, as was evidenced by a witness that came before our commission that was the distributor of the money; that their influence was being used upon the citizens of that county to vote all citizens—I think it has been used several times, the statement that even the sheep in that county were voted if they had names?

Dr. GADDIS. Mules.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. One instance of a witness in Denver, who said they were driving a number of sheep through the streets on election day—or through the street; I don't know whether they have more than one street there—and when the ballots were counted, the sheep were also counted.

Dr. GADDIS. I never heard that before.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Yes, sir; that was in evidence before us, also. It was also testified to that Jeff Farr, or Sheriff Farr, was the president of a realty company of the town?

Dr. GADDIS. He is. He owns, I think, 50 per cent.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That the realty company controls the real estate and also the wholesale liquor business in the town.

Dr. GADDIS. And a good deal of the property to rent.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And they own property in the town or county—it is an incorporation?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That no one could get a license in that community to sell liquor unless they bought their liquor from this wholesale house, of which Mr. Farr was president?

Dr. GADDIS. I think he pretty nearly dominates everything.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. So that in practically every walk of life in that one county, in which Mr. Farr is said to be the king, that when he speaks the people generally believe that he is representing the thought and wishes of the mining company?

Dr. GADDIS. There could not scarcely be a closer relation right now, and has been for years, between the C. F. & I. Co. and Mr. Farr and his clique.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, that being the situation in that part of Colorado, do you wonder that the citizens, the men and women that have a right to vote, feel that they can get no results, no justice, from the mere matter of casting a ballot in that county on any question that they are interested in, either morally, industrially, financially, or otherwise?

Dr. GADDIS. I think it has been very thoroughly driven home to them.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. So the matter of voting for them, if they vote, is a matter of form?

Dr. GADDIS. It is a waste of time.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. It was a custom that has grown up, so that Jeff Farr could see them go to the ballot box, and if they did not they would lose their jobs the next day? Is that the condition?

Dr. GADDIS. Very likely.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, all that situation existing, and with the picture of taking this roundabout way that Commissioner Weinstock has spoken to you about, preferably to taking this short cut, can you conceive of the coal miners of Colorado and their families securing any justice at the hands of the ballot box by allowing the imposition of unfair industrial conditions to prevail year in and year out?

Dr. GADDIS. In some localities it is impossible.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And to wait and wait and wait for probably this thought that you have given, for God to change the political situation of our country and then only may they hope for a change?

Dr. GADDIS. That is the only hope, I believe. God Almighty; it is beyond the human.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, do you believe that a man has the right to work under any condition, for whom he pleases, regardless of the rights of others? I say moral condition, I am not speaking about the law. Do you think he has a moral right to take another man's position or to work for an employer under any condition, under any wages, under any hours of labor, under any conditions of fair or unfair treatment, under any insanitary conditions, under any dangerous conditions, merely because the law says, or at least the interpretation of the law by those that interpret it, says that he has a right to work?

Dr. GADDIS. Absolutely and unequivocally and eternally no. There was somebody said—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Not to what?

Dr. GADDIS. That he has not the moral right to take a man's place under any condition. There has a good deal been said in regard to documents published by the company in regard to the loyalty of people that remained in the mine, the workmen. There were a great many people that remained in the mines that were not loyal to the coal company at all, they sympathized with the unions, they stayed there, and they were undoubtedly getting information that the unions wanted, some of them. Now, in regard to the railroad, that is quite a considerable investment of these large subsidiary companies of the C. F. & I. Co., they have a very large number of men, and everyone of those men, so far as I know, were union men. I was in Segundo one evening during the strike and the word was given out that the place was going to be shot up by the strikers at Old Town. The railroad men and their families were fully one-third of that camp, if not one-half. They communicated with the superintendent of the C. & W. road, which is the company's road, asking them if they could take out a special train with their families; that they didn't want to take part in this defense of the camp and be shot or shoot, and he said, "No; you can not take a train out." They didn't cut the wires, but hung up the telephone and when the time came they fixed up their train, in direct contravention of this man's orders, and everyone, I think, except one man's wife that I heard of, left the camp in two carloads. They telephoned to Old Town before they left saying, "Don't shoot at this train, we are union people"; and before they left that camp, in order that no special train for the help of the people that were there could be used or engines could be used, they filled the fire boxes of the engines that remained there with water. Now, if that is loyalty, I don't know just exactly what disloyalty is. Quite a number of those men lost their places afterwards.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Weinstock has some more questions to ask you.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I take it, Doctor, that you, in common with myself, are sufficiently familiar with aims and purposes and objects of organized labor to understand that its objective was in part to secure a higher wage for the workers and shorter working days, better working conditions, and legislation?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That will tend to the betterment of the workers and the enforcement of such legislation?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I think you will agree with me that is the general aim and object of organized labor?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Not only the securing of a higher wage and shorter workday and better working conditions and desirable legislation but also the enforcement of that legislation?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, organized labor is represented in Colorado, is it?

Dr. GADDIS. I think it is.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. They have the State federation there?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir; I attended one of their meetings that met in Trinidad.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know they have the State federation?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And the United Mine Workers of America have also an organization in Colorado, have they not?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Very strong. Of course, you also know, in common with myself, I take it, that one of the policies, and I think a very wise policy on the part of organized labor, is that in order not to jeopardize the jobs of the workers that when they have grievances they shall not be called upon to submit their grievances to their employers, for fear that it may lead to the loss of their position. Therefore, their organizations have officers—

Dr. GADDIS. Grievance committees.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Grievance committees, and who are absolutely independent of the employers?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And who go to the employers with any grievance of the individual worker, and demand what they believe is redress of those grievances?

Dr. GADDIS. That is the case as I understand it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, I think that you probably also realize, as you have been here and heard the testimony, that there is no association in America that is in a position to raise money more effectually or more abundantly, when the occasion arises, than the American Federation of Labor. It was pointed out by a witness on the stand the other day that the American Federation of Labor claims a membership of 2,000,000; that an assessment of 1 cent per capita would mean $20,000; that an assessment of $1 would mean $2,000,000, so evidently there is ample opportunity for raising the necessary money to carry out the aim and object of the organization.

Dr. GADDIS. I am glad of it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know of any instance, Doctor, where organized labor of Colorado, through the State federation or the United Mine Workers of America, exercised their power and their influence to see that these laws were obeyed and respected and enforced on the part of the mine owners or operators?

Dr. GADDIS. Do I know of any instance?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes, sir.

Dr. GADDIS. Why, I can not say that I do. I was not in touch with the work there in Denver; I don't know what they tried.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You know, having lived in Colorado as long as you have—

Dr. GADDIS. I lived in Colorado about two years.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You lived in these mining towns where you say the laws were not being enforced, and if there had been any effort made on the part of organized labor to see that these laws were enforced, you would have known of it? It would have been brought to your attention very quickly?

Dr. GADDIS. I likely would have known it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then, if those laws were not enforced, did not the burden rest—we will admit that theoretically it rested with the officers, that it is their duty to enforce every law on the statute book, but we know that laws are so numerous, and the average officer so indifferent, that he does not exercise himself to see that the law is enforced, unless there is an effort made, or a complaint made, and brought to his attention. Now, if there was no effort made on the part of organized labor, which could have been done without a single prejudice to the workers in the mine, if there was no effort made in that direction, who is to blame?

Dr. GADDIS. I will not admit that there are not; I could not admit that.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, if there was, you would be likely to know of it, would you not? It would become a matter of common talk in the camp; it would be a matter of public notice?

Dr. GADDIS. I could not admit there was not a desperate effort made.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then you do not know of any effort that was made?

Dr. GADDIS. I do not recall any now; no, sir. I will take that back; the instance I quoted of the men being thrown in jail to get the right to recall certainly was an exercise of—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (interrupting). Will you be good enough to recite that circumstance again?

Dr. GADDIS. There were several decisions rendered by a district judge, McKendry, that had an unmistakable coloring in favor of the operators, and there was a petition started, signed by some 2,000 citizens; it had nearly 2,000 names. This judge that had this thing coming at him, to get him on the hip, as the slang phrase is—he turned around and had these men arrested for contempt of court, and they were put in jail and are out on bail to-day.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Did organized labor come to the defense of those men?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If organized labor came to the aid of those men, why could organized labor not also have exercised its power and influence to see that the laws established for the protection of the workers, and perhaps not in the interest of the owners, why could they not exercise whatever influence was at their command to see that those laws were enforced?

Dr. GADDIS. I believe they did so exercise that influence.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. They went on strike to enforce the laws?

Dr. GADDIS. Certainly they did; they went on the strike against the non-enforcement of the law, which is equivalent to trying to enforce the law.

Chairman WALSH. Let Commissioner Weinstock finish his questioning, please.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The point I want to make, and make clearly, Mr. Gaddis, is to find out whether organized labor carried out one of the chief purposes of its existence, and that is in the interest and for the protection of the workers to see that the laws created in the interests of the workers are enforced.

Dr. GADDIS. If you will grant me the privilege of asking any representative of organized labor here in this audience and who is familiar with the affairs of that labor organization in Colorado to answer that question—I say it is a matter of ignorance with me, but I think men are here who can answer it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is not admissible at this stage of the proceedings; I want to get your knowledge, and not that of others.

Dr. GADDIS. It would be a matter of fact and not of opinion.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know of any instance where organized labor ever did exercise its power to have the laws enforced in the interest of the workers?

Dr. GADDIS. The labor convention—the State labor convention which I attended at Trinidad—some of its sessions were quite interesting to me, because they had up to this coming strike of a year hence, and I know that I heard or remember of a Mr. Doyle, I think it was, constantly referring to the recall and referendum that they were starting or going to start, and I inferred from my several attendances upon the session there that they were trying to enforce the laws of Colorado.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you sure that it was actually done?

Dr. GADDIS. I am sure it was.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know of any instance where organized labor went to the district attorney of the county, or to the sheriff of the county, or to any of the officers whose duty it was to enforce those laws, and demanded that they should be enforced?

Dr. GADDIS. If they had gone to Jeff Farr I think they would have gotten the laugh.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know whether they went to Jeff Farr or not?

Dr. GADDIS. I doubt it very much.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I take it, Doctor, that you also in common with myself highly value your citizenship and your right to vote, do you not?

Dr. GADDIS. I do, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And if you were to be robbed of your right to vote you would feel as strong a spirit of rebellion as a man could feel under such circumstances; am I right in that?

Dr. GADDIS. I would resent that with all of the strength of my being.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Exactly. Now, as an American citizen who, I take it, keeps himself reasonably well informed, you are aware of the fact that for decades, especially in our larger cities, all over the country, like San Francisco, Chicago, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Pittsburgh, the great body of the citizenry in those cities were absolutely robbed of their vote by gangsters and by political bosses and by ward heelers?

Dr. GADDIS. I helped to defeat George B. Cox in Cincinnati; I lived there as a pastor.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Because of that very thing, I take it; is that right?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes; that is right.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. All right, Doctor. Now, if the right of citizenship is highly prized and valued by yourself, and I think it is also by our fellows, and they rob us of the right to vote, they rob us of our greatest privilege?

Dr. GADDIS. They did in Camp Morley, and in Pictou, in the school question.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then, if men are robbed and resort to violence and bloodshed simply because they lose their jobs, how much more justified are they in resorting to bloodshed and violence when they lose their right of citizenship; and if so, the citizens of these cities would have been justified in taking their guns and shooting down the gangsters and ward heelers, would they not?

Dr. GADDIS. It was close to that in many cities.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Did they do it?

Dr. GADDIS. No, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Have there been remedies along that direction?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How was it obtained?

Dr. GADDIS. It has been, I think, through public enlightenment and awakening and uplifting of the standard of public conscience until these men could not get by with it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. So, in industrial matters, you say you justify violence and breaking of the law, but when it comes to political matters you do not justify it?

Dr. GADDIS. I said, Mr. Weinstock, in extreme cases; only in extreme cases would I justify an act of violence.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What more extreme circumstance can you think of than to be robbed of your vote year after year? I know I have been robbed of my right to vote in California, with others of my fellows. I can not conceive of a more extreme case than that, when it comes to civil and political rights.

Dr. GADDIS. What are you driving at?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I am driving at this, that if violence is justified under the circumstances you think it is, would it not have been equally justifiable in our large cities when men were robbed of their votes?

Dr. GADDIS. As I said, in regard to violence in industrial matters, each case would have to rest on its own merits. The fact there was no outbreak justifies the idea that there was no cause for it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. There was cause for it, because you said you helped to correct the condition.

Dr. GADDIS. There was some cause, but it did not reach revolution.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The city was being pillaged and looted of thousands and millions of dollars, and you say, under those circumstances, men were not justified in resorting to violence?

Dr. GADDIS. It did not come to that pitch.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Would they have been justified in resorting to violence, if they had?

Dr. GADDIS. I do not say so, because they could have gotten a remedy without that. I should say violence should be used as an extreme and last possible resort when everything else has been tried and failed.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Very well, your contention is that in Colorado everything had been tried, and failed?

Dr. GADDIS. That would be the inference, would it not?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes. Let us see if everything had been tried and failed. You admit the recall was not resorted to?

Dr. GADDIS. I would say so, as I view that matter; but as you may explain it, it may not so appear.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, what was tried and failed, beyond the men making the demands and striking because their demands were not granted; what had been tried beyond that?

Dr. GADDIS. I think they tried a great many things.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If they tried a great many things, you ought to be able to name a few.

Dr. GADDIS. I think they tried to have the laws enforced.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How?

Dr. GADDIS. By the recall.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. When did they exercise the recall? Name an instance.

Dr. GADDIS. As I said to you, I am absolutely ignorant of any concrete or specific case; but I do not doubt many could be cited.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If you are ignorant of a concrete or specific case, how can you say that they were tried and failed?

Dr. GADDIS. I would say, in my view, violence was justified there. I may be wrong, but that is my view of it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In one breath you tell us that everything had been tried and failed, and therefore they were justified in resorting to violence, and in the next breath you say you can not tell us anything that was tried and failed, except the strike?

Dr. GADDIS. We are talking pretty rapidly, and perhaps you are not giving me time to cogitate.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Take all the time you want, Mr. Gaddis; we are here to get information and get facts, and we can not devote our time to better advantage than to get those facts; and if it requires more time on your part, collect your thought, and if you require more time, we will give you more time.

Dr. GADDIS. I do not want you to make out that I am contradicting myself.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I am not trying to make out you are contradicting yourself; if you are contradicting yourself, it is not because I made you.

Dr. GADDIS. In one breath you are saying you are not trying to make me contradict myself, and in another you are.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The record shows it.

Dr. GADDIS. It is your talk that shows it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No; it is your talk that shows it. You said a moment ago that the situation in Colorado, in your opinion, was extreme; that the limit had been reached?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And you were asked if any effort had been made to avoid that extreme limit by seeing that the laws were enforced and to cite an instance in which it was done.

Dr. GADDIS. You won't allow men who can give concrete evidence of it to give it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How?

Dr. GADDIS. You said they could not, a moment ago.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Mr. Reporter, will you read the record?

Dr. GADDIS. I asked to have men conversant with the situation in Colorado stand up and give an illustration.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I said that could not be done at this time, that what we wanted was your testimony.

Dr. GADDIS. I understood you to say you did not allow that.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. We can not have chaos; we take one witness at a time.

Dr. GADDIS. I have professed ignorance of the matter, and you won't allow witnesses to come in and verify my statements.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I think you are jumping at a hasty conclusion when you say I won't allow any testimony to come in.

Dr. GADDIS. The only way you can convince me that you are right in that statement is by allowing a man to stand up and state the instances who has knowledge of them.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Who purposes to run this commission, the witness or the commission?

Dr. GADDIS. I am simply defending myself; you take care of the commission.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. When we put a witness on the stand we want the opinion of the witness, and the views of that witness, and in due course we get the opinions and the judgments and the statements of all of the witnesses who are valuable and who can throw light on the subject. That has been the method of procedure of this commission, and I am sure it will continue to be the method of procedure of this commission.

Dr. GADDIS. Will you permit—will Mr. Walsh permit someone to come here after I leave the chair and testify as to how the law was obeyed, from the standpoint of labor?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is the privilege of the chairman.

Dr. GADDIS. Very well, I am satisfied.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner O'Connell has some questions.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Are you a member of organized labor?

Dr. GADDIS. I am not.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And therefore you could not be expected to know what organized labor has or has not done in the matter of making efforts to see that legislation was carried out, that the laws of the State were carried out, or what they have done in any way at all, as Commissioner Weinstock has been trying to make you answer?

Dr. GADDIS. I have only a cursory knowledge of affairs of that kind; my work was sociological, and was very close to the industrial side of the work, and I was quite busy.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You were not a member of organized labor, and therefore were not permitted to enter the chambers of organized labor as a member?

Dr. GADDIS. Not at all.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And therefore could not get information as to what they had or had not done?

Dr. GADDIS. No.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And you may have ideas from reading about those matters or discussing them with union men or nonunion men that thought they knew about it, but as you were not a member of organized labor you could not speak as to the exact conditions?

Dr. GADDIS. I have confessed ignorance that I could not, but there are others here who can.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Commissioner Weinstock, in his examination of you, pointed out the wonderful influence the American Federation of Labor had, particularly its ability to raise money; he said they could assess their 2,000,000 members 1 cent each and raise $20,000, assess them $1 each and raise $2,000,000, and that both he and you agreed that was so?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The fact is that is not so. The American Federation of Labor can not do any such thing, and I state this for the information of both you and Mr. Weinstock.

Dr. GADDIS. I said I was glad if that was so.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The American Federation of Labor has a law which prohibits the assessing of its members over 10 cents each in any one year, so that if there were all kinds of strikes and troubles in the country, the American Federation of Labor could not assess its members over 10 cents each in any one year.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That would make a maximum of $200,000?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Yes; but never in the history of the American Federation of Labor has that assessment been levied, or that number of assessments. They can not be levied at one time in the year, but a period must elapse between the assessments; there must be two or three months between the assessments. The American Federation of Labor has great influence, and it does not become necessary to levy assessments; it simply asks for voluntary donations to carry on certain things, and the organizations contribute liberally.

Dr. GADDIS. I understood Mr. Weinstock to say that a witness here, who is supposed to know, testified they could raise any amount they wanted.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. No; I think he quoted from what he thought was in his knowledge.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No; I quoted from a witness here a day or two ago.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then, I take it that witness was not as well informed on the subject as Mr. Weinstock expects you to be on the affairs of the unions in Colorado, of which you are not a member.

Commissioner LENNON. I want to ask one question on the effort made by the unions to straighten this matter out before they resorted to strike. You may or may not have any knowledge in regard to the question I am going to ask. Do you know whether or not the union, through its proper officials, made an effort through the Government, through prominent citizens of Denver and Colorado, through the legislature and other ways, to secure a conference with employers regarding this enforcement of the law in order that a strike might be avoided?

Dr. GADDIS. I certainly do. And I know that the operators pursued the most high-handed tactics I ever heard of in my life. They did not even condescend to reply to some of their correspondence, and in one case when one of the representatives of the Colorado union was sitting in the room they refused to speak or be in the man's presence.

Commissioner LENNON. Do you know that they refused to meet and confer with the representatives of the miners?

Dr. GADDIS. They did, as representatives of the union. They said: "We will meet you as individuals." I would like to say, and then I am through, that technically the strike was lost. It was a terrible struggle, one of the worst the American unions have ever known, but in reality I believe it is one of the greatest victories ever achieved in the United States. The operators out there to-day, I tell you, have their ears to the ground, and they will be more careful indeed in regard to things in the near future, if not permanently.

Chairman WALSH. That is all, thank you, Doctor. You may be excused.

Dr. McCorkle.

TESTIMONY OF DR. DANIEL SPENCER McCORKLE.

Chairman WALSH. Will you please state your name?

Dr. McCORKLE. Daniel Spencer McCorkle.

Chairman WALSH. Where do you live?

Dr. McCORKLE. I live now in Sunrise, Wyo. I was born in central Missouri and reared there.

Chairman WALSH. What is your calling?

Dr. McCORKLE. I am an ordained minister in the Presbyterian Church.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you followed the calling of a minister?

Dr. McCORKLE. I enrolled for the work of the ministry—put myself under the care of the presbytery as a candidate for the ministry in the year 1900 at my home town in Missouri. I did not immediately take up the active work of the ministry. I was then 20 years of age and had to put myself through the academy, the college, the seminary, and the university. I began my work as a minister by occasional visits to supply other pulpits; in 1906 was the first time I had charge of a church, giving it my full time, in Carlyle, Kans. Since that time, with the exception of one or two years spent in other work, all the time outside of my school work has been devoted to work of the ministry and mission work of our church. I have preached in Montana two different summers; I have worked a part of my time during the three years I was in the seminary at the Labor Temple, under Mr. Charles Stetzel, and later under Mr. J. C. Day, in New York City, on the East Side. I also, during the middle year of my seminary work, was employed by the Children's Aid Society, and worked at the Forty-fourth Street Boys' Home, and did some work at the Union Seminary, also some work in the Episcopal Church, teaching Sunday school.

I have spent two summers and some months in addition as field investigator under the home mission board of our church, studying rural church conditions in the State of Ohio. I took up my work as minister in Sunrise on the 14th of February, 1914, and was ordained in April, 1914.

Chairman WALSH. Have you had any experience with the properties of what are known as the Rockefeller interests in Wyoming?

Dr. McCORKLE. I am—those located in Sunrise, Wyo.

Chairman WALSH. Just state what there is there, if anything, of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

Dr. McCORKLE. It is an iron-mining village where everything is owned by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.; no one is allowed to own any land at all in the camp or allowed to put up any public building or develop any permanent claim whatever. The only buildings that have been allowed, I believe, at all to be erected by private persons are some barns—small barns, possibly there is something else like that—a few little shacks were built one year in view of the fact that the company houses were not sufficient to accommodate all of the men.

Chairman WALSH. What is the population of Sunrise, Dr. McCorkle?

Dr. McCORKLE. It is approximately 500 at the present time. There are something like 800 men working there. At one time they had more than 700 men, I understand, at work.

Chairman WALSH. What is the character of the work that is done there by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Dr. McCORKLE. The mining of iron ore for use in Pueblo.

Chairman WALSH. Is anything else done in connection with it or is the ore all shipped out? Is there any smelting done there or anything of that sort?

Dr. McCORKLE. That is the only industry. They have the company store and the railroad.

Chairman WALSH. Have they stores with outside ownership at all?

Dr. McCORKLE. They are not allowed. I mention that in my paper.

Chairman WALSH. Have you written out an outline of conditions as you found them there, and as you still find them?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir; I have rather a complete outline.

Chairman WALSH. Are you still a minister at Sunrise, Wyo.?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir; I am.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would, if it is convenient for you to do so, to read your outline now and then perhaps I may ask you some questions, and the other commissioners may want to ask more.

Dr. McCORKLE. Perhaps I ought to preface the reading of this article with the mention of the fact that in undertaking the work of the ministry I found myself, several years ago, required to choose between mission work in China, which appealed to me very much, and my feeling that in industrial communities in this country the foreigners were getting a very false notion of Christianity as represented by the American people. And finally I decided to give my life to religious work in industrial communities, particularly among foreign-born people. To that end I have put myself through academy and college and took my B. D. from the Union Theological Seminary in New York City and my degree of A. M.—in sociology and economics—in Columbia University.

Chairman WALSH. Columbia University, New York?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What degree did you take?

Dr. McCORKLE. A. M. I took my major in sociology and my minor in economics.

Chairman WALSH. Go ahead.

Dr. McCORKLE. I wrote my M. A. thesis as a study of the conditions prevailing in the rural community near Billings, Mont., an irrigated district. I believe that thesis is referred to frequently in the work of the sociological department in Columbia University now.

Chairman WALSH. How old a man are you now, Mr. McCorkle?

Dr. McCORKLE. Well, I don't know; I am a little more than 35 years old. I was 20 years old and past before I had an opportunity to go to school at all. When I was a boy on the farm I had to work and study when I could; but after I was 20 I started in the academy.

Chairman WALSH. You began life on a farm? You were raised on a farm?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Go ahead; I interrupted you.

Dr. McCORKLE. I was going to say that I undertook to get a practical acquaintance with working conditions and so, to that end, beginning in 1904, I worked in an automobile shop in St. Louis at mechanical work. I went to the harvest fields in 1905 in Oklahoma; also in 1906 I made the harvest fields from Kansas to North Dakota—Kansas, Nebraska, and South and North Dakota. I made the harvest fields again in 1907 in Kansas, in Colorado, and the broom corn locality in Oklahoma, coming in that way to meet with a great number of the drifting, unorganized workers. I went back to the harvest fields in Kansas the year after I had graduated from college. Finishing my work there I passed on down through Oklahoma and Nebraska and worked a while on a ranch and spent three months in roundhouse work at Raton, N. Mex., and from there I went to Billings, Mont., and worked some six weeks on concrete work on the street, and perhaps I might say—might begin my paper here, because it was in connection with these travels that I first gained information concerning conditions in the coal fields of southern Colorado.

My first acquaintance with industrial unrest in southeastern Colorado, other than what I had read in newspapers, came in connection with my work as a mechanic's assistant in the roundhouse at Raton, N. Mex. I worked there for three winter months of 1909 and 1910. Men who were working with me told me that life in the coal camps was not safe for any union sympathizer. One man told me that he knew personally of two men who had been killed in a New Mexico coal-mining camp not far from Colorado. Others told me that they knew men who had been driven out of Colorado camps near by armed employees of the coal companies. Also that it was common for armed agents of the coal camps to enter the houses of the workingmen and search them whenever they wished. That this was done without warrant or legal authorization. When leaving Raton, I planned to make a trip through some of the coal-mining camps in southeastern Colorado. Several friends urged me not to do this, telling me they believed my life would be in danger. I did, however, cross from Raton to Trinidad, visiting two camps on my way. I met in conversation with the miners en route, as well as in the stories of men at Raton, numerous charges of unjust treatment. Men were said to be compelled to trade at the company stores. Wages were said to be as low as $1.50 per day with men with families, and practical miners complained bitterly of the great danger they must face continually because of windy shots; that is, powder charges set by inexperienced workingmen in such a way as to ignite gas in the mining passages, which in turn raised clouds of dust, causing the deadly explosions of dust so common in southeastern Colorado.

One year after leaving Raton I took charge of a church near Billings, Mont., and in that connection spent one week of each month with two congregations in the mining camps of Bear Creek and Washoe, located near Red Lodge, Mont.

In June, 1911, while on my way to Bear Creek, I fell in company with an intelligent young Serb. We spoke of the situation as it appeared to the workingman of the coal fields of southeastern Colorado. He had worked, he said in the mine at Starkville, Colo., just prior to the fatal explosion a few months previous. In this connection he told me a surprising story. I had him repeat it, and he gave it unchanged. I then put the chief items of his story on paper, and he vouched for them, item by item, as correct. He said:

"I was a mining foreman at Starkville, near Trinidad. I found gas in the mine."

He told me he found so much gas he tried to fan it out and couldn't do so.

"I found gas in the mine. I was fire boss"—

These are items that I wrote down at the time and kept in my notebook—

"I was fire boss and sent six men back home to keep them from working in the room where the gas was. The mine boss got angry. He said he was running the mine and discharged me for sending the men away. The superintendent met me and the mine boss and concurred in my discharge. This was at about 9.30 in the morning. At 10 o'clock that night the mine blew up and about 75 men were killed."

Those were his figures, or his estimate, I presume. Fifty-six, in fact, were known to have been killed.

"There was gas in three or four rooms—gas for 100 or more feet. I did not report it to the officers for fear the company would blacklist me"—

This was in answer to a question of mine—

"I did not report it to the officers for fear the company would blacklist me."

This young man gave his name, George Voydich, but begged that, if possible, his name should not be made public, because he might sometime want to get work with the company, and he could not if they found he had told.

That story was so remarkable, gentlemen, that I made a note of it in my notebook, and I have preserved it ever since.

A few months later I met John A. Fitch, who first gained distinction for his work in the Pittsburgh survey. I had, in the meantime, gone to New York City and entered Union Seminary, or the university. When relating my experience and this remarkable story of the young Serb, he told me of his own recent visit.

to investigate the iron industry in southeastern Colorado and showed me notes taken in his investigation, which were similar to the things I have heard charged.

My next opportunity to gather information with regard to the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. and its employees began unexpectedly a year and a half ago. I had under consideration a request to superintend the Presbyterian Neighborhood House, at Gary, Ind., but was persuaded to accept, instead, charge of a church in the iron-mining village of Sunrise, Wyo. Not until after I had accepted the church did I learn that the camp was in the possession of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. Even then I hoped a personal touch with life in the mining camp would show things less offensive to the workers than my earlier sources of information seemed to indicate. It is my conviction—I add this for your understanding—it is my conviction that capital must be accumulated in large sums in order to carry on modern industry, nor do I bear any ill will toward those who accumulate money and use it in legitimate channels for the welfare of both themselves and their employees. This must be done until the people become intelligent enough to save the capital they need in order to carry on industry for themselves.

Arrangements for me to take charge of the Sunrise, Wyo., Presbyterian Church were made through Rev. L. Harold Forde, of Cheyenne, Wyo. He was, and is, pastor evangelist of that presbytery.

A paragraph in a letter of December 12, 1913, from Rev. Forde occasioned some surprise. It is given herewith:

"There is a fine little church—at Sunrise—costing the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. about $3,000, heated and lighted free for our work. But we do not tell anyone this. It must not be let out."

A little later in the same letter this quotation appears:

"The location of the house I will have to wait on until I know what to do since getting these letters. I will make a trip to Denver as soon as I know, to see the manager and John D. Rockefeller's personal representative. He is very loyal to us and always listens to me kindly. He is a strong Presbyterian and a supporter of a number of missionaries."

I replied to these quotations in my letter three or four days later, saying:

"Frankness in regard to the source of our income would be a great asset. Workmen in most parts of the West where I have worked managed to find out where the churches get their support. If we treat it like a thing to be ashamed of, will we not give cause to suspicion our motives? Misgivings and manifestations of error are fewer, I am sure, when everything is open and aboveboard. I think you will agree that here is a question that is at least debatable.

"It is encouraging to find men who have ample means ready to promote the welfare of these foreigners. I am eager to begin and I believe God will prosper our undertaking. I feel that His hand has been manifest already in enlisting me for the Wyoming field."

On February 14, 1914, I arrived in Sunrise, Wyo., and took charge of the Presbyterian Church in that village. I found certain advantages possessed by the people who live in Sunrise. The climate is healthful; the company houses, in nearly every case, are comfortable. I will refer just a little farther on to some where objections are raised. Most of the English-speaking families live in four-room houses. Part of those who do not speak English are similarly housed, while others live in two-room company houses. A few live in small shacks which they themselves have built. These are perhaps better protected against cold than are the company houses, but otherwise they are not as good or as roomy. The average company house has four rooms about 12 by 14 feet, with a small closet 2 feet wide built in between the walls of two of the rooms. There is also a small pantry room about 4 by 6 feet built onto one end of each house. Frequently also there is a double closet. The houses are supplied with electric light in abundance and many families are allowed to use their electrical connection for a small toaster, flatiron, and so forth, paying a flat rate. Adjacent to the house a privy and a coal shed have been erected in most cases. Some of the foreign-born people, however, have not been given so many as were needed. The men in the compo-board houses object. I believe there was reference to that a little earlier. At Iron-ton, a little division of the camp more or less under separate management, there were compo-board houses, and, as I understand from some of the people, they created more or less bad feeling, just as I found among the foreigners, some of whom had lived in Sunrise. The superintendent said he made the men leave their log cabins and move into the company's compo-board houses. Some of these cabins were far better for comfort than the company houses and had been neatly built. Most of them, I admit, were not very decent, but some of them were very decently built and represented an investment of two or three hundred dollars; but they all had to get out and live in the company houses, except two or three families who were so quarrelsome that they could not live in town.

Before passing this I must mention the fact that there is a difference in the repairs furnished to the people. The English-speaking people get repairs when the foreign-speaking people are, in a good many cases, refused them. One case I know of where the people had occupied the house for eight years and it was in very bad repair and scarcely fit to live in in the winter, and nothing had been done to the house, and it was not fit really for people to live in. Of course that discrimination, with all paying the same rentals, provokes friction.

The water which the company supplies is good. It is hauled 6 miles by rail from a large spring in the river and has been found quite wholesome.

I will say that the company has put in a cement tank with a pumping plant attached, and the water is emptied from the tank cars into this tank and then pumped to tanks on the hill. Since that has been done I believe there has been no case of typhoid in Sunrize that could be traced to this company water—a great improvement over the condition that prevailed before, and is a very commendable thing for the company to do.

Repairs and painting are furnished free once in every three years for all of the English-speaking people, except some of the single men, who live in company's so-called bunk houses. Among the non-English-speaking people repairs are seldom furnished free. Some houses are very much in need of renovation, and have been for years. A few houses have hydrants inside, but in most cases the water has to be carried from out of doors from a hydrant which is used by several families. However, considering the rental, which is $10.50 per month for a house of four rooms, with electric light and water in addition, there are few who do not speak with approval of their relations with the company in regard to housing accommodations.

I will say that in the last two years or three the company has changed its rules in regard to water, and now allows the men free water to water a small garden. Before that they had to pay something extra for water to water their small gardens. By that I mean they are very small—very few of the men have a larger garden than this platform here on which we are sitting—but it means something in the way of green food and some comfort and relief from the barrenness of the hills and the yards.

Another advantage possessed by workmen of Sunrize is comparative safety when at work. Few are injured seriously. Men are not driven into dangerous places, but are allowed to use their personal discretion when the work involves peril. I think that the company should be commended for this. I have worked in places where life was not safe, because the men were urged to go into a dangerous situation and not allowed to use their judgment. Whether the company is responsible for it or the superintendent, I don't know, but I feel sure that the superintendent is heartily in accord in having the men to be sure they are safe before they work, and many think that the superintendent rather than the company should be commended for that protection. I hope they are both to be commended for it. Moreover, the speed at which they are required to work is not exhausting, and with a few exceptions, as in the case of pump men, the steam-shovel men, and the men in charge of the electric lighting system at night, men do not work for more than 10 hours regularly.

I will say, also, that the bookkeeper at the store is required frequently to work all day Sunday. He is required now, that business has fallen off so much in the last year at the company store, to act as clerk in addition to his duties of keeping the accounts, and he is compelled to work on Sunday. I know he told me the Sunday before I left that he had started to work at 7.30 in the morning and did not get through until a quarter of 9 at night. He seldom gets a Sunday off. There are a few men that do not get their Sunday rest. One is the pump man in the power house. Last summer the pump man in the power house said that he had had one Sunday or holiday in five years.

Chairman WALSH. Is he a churchman, or a man ordinarily who would go to church?

Dr. McCORKLE. Not a great deal; but whether he wanted to go to church or not, he has a right to rest. The men in the power plant and the pump man complain very bitterly of being kept there such long hours. The man that works at night in the electric lighting—he has not much to do, but he has to be on 13 hours without change or relief, and do it regularly, and it is trying to a man. It seems to be one of the great injustices. I know this, that it has been the cause of producing a great unrest among them, and if you will look at the men and notice how weary they appear from those monotonous things you will realize that they have a just cause for complaint.

Sunday work is frequently required and it is particularly irksome to some. There was a thing that came up last Christmas time. As you know, the Greek calendar differs from ours about 13 days, and they don't celebrate Christmas at the same time, and it was a slack season and the men were only working part of the time, and yet they wanted to be off Christmas time, but they were served with notice if they did not come back to work they would be suspended for several days. They had some short-time work anyway and several went back. The thing provoked so much adverse comment that it was revoked a couple of days later and all were put back to work that had been suspended. There is not much injustice of that kind. I do not believe that the superintendent wanted to be unjust to the men at that time. I will say, however, I did not carry industrial unrest to Sunrize. I found it there, and I believe I can say in all my experience with working people I never have seen a situation where any agitator could go in in a week or two and stir up serious trouble unless the people were already galled and embittered by things that they believe to be unjust. I don't want to promote a spirit of unrest and bitterness.

Shortly after my arrival there I found that a strike had been threatened during the preceding year—the same year that the strike was called in Colorado—I believe the men told me it was the latter part of the spring of 1913. Several of the foremen called their men together, and a vote was taken, at which a majority declared themselves in favor of a strike for higher wages, shorter hours, and relief from certain treatment at the hands of the company considered by the workmen unjust. The strike was abandoned, however, on account of the unwillingness of a few men to join.

Just a mere handful, a dozen men, caused them to abandon the proposition. The vote, even if not acted upon, registered a state of mind far from restful.

Shortly after this strike vote was taken the company advanced the wages of the men, but did not grant any of the other points at issue. It is believed by the workmen in Sunrize that the strike vote was reported to company headquarters by secretly paid agents of the company, and that it was directly the occasion of the increase in wages granted to them. Everybody in Sunrize knows there are men there reporting; they know who some of them are, but not all, and they know that it was directly the occasion of the increase in the wages granted them.

When I first arrived and took charge of Sunrize Presbyterian Church I was surprised to find that the workmen, almost without exception, seemed to mistrust my motives and work. Repeatedly I was called a "company man." Some said: "We know, of course, you have to stand in with the company." Gradually, however, they seemed to manifest confidence and confided some of the things to me which they held as grievances against the company. That some should be dissatisfied was to be expected. I looked to find a portion of the community class conscious—

Commissioner O'CONNELL. What do you have in mind when you say class conscious?

Dr. McCORKLE. I looked to find a body of men more or less imbued with socialistic ideas, believing that the industry ought to be in the hands of the working people.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Did you have any other thought of class consciousness?

Dr. McCORKLE. I don't believe I did. I think it is economic. I did not look in Sunrize to find much class consciousness of any other kind, except it was class consciousness of a racial order, as between Japanese and colored people and Italians and Greeks and Americans. That part of class consciousness prevails in all parts of our country to some extent. I looked here to find some feeling on the part of working people that there ought not to be anybody but workmen. I was going to say, however, the most surprising feature of our unrest to me was its extension to every class in the community—every station of people. A few days after my arrival one of the highest salaried men in the company's employ, a college graduate and expert, together with the principal of the public school, spoke with great feeling of the lack of provisions for social and educational welfare within the camp. The people were compelled, they said, to go to the saloons of Hartville, a mile distant, for almost everything of a social nature. A hall had been petitioned for more than a year, I believe. It was two years ago last December, I think, when they sent the petition about for the hall.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you know how the saloons were managed and who ran them?

Dr. McCORKLE. The saloon at Hartville was not under the company's control.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Are they under their control in Sunrise?

Dr. McCORKLE. There are no saloons in Sunrise.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. How far is Hartville from Sunrise?

Dr. McCORKLE. One mile. There is a hall at Sunrise about 40 feet square, and it has a good dancing floor, with a raised platform at one end, but there is no place for the lodges to meet except over the stables of the Colorado Supply Co., where they rent a loft, but the hall is scarcely fit for any sort of social activity.

Chairman WALSH. At this point we will stand adjourned until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

(Thereupon, at 4.30 o'clock p. m. of this Wednesday, May 19, 1915, the commission adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 20, 1915, at 10 o'clock a. m.)

WASHINGTON, D. C.,

Thursday, May 20, 1915—10 a. m.

Present: Chairman Walsh, Commissioners Harriman, O'Connell, Lennon, and Weinstock.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. McCorkle, will you please resume the stand.

TESTIMONY OF DR. DANIEL SPENCER McCORKLE—Continued.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. McCorkle, if you would be good enough, please resume the reading of your statement.

Dr. McCORKLE. In my testimony yesterday I had just reached the point where I was saying that the entire community, almost without exception, felt that it had grievances against the company, that the people had spoken in very strong terms of conditions there.

I will read about three sentences:

"The most surprising feature of the unrest was its extension to every class in the community. A few days after my arrival one of the highest salaried men in the company's employ, a college graduate and expert, together with the principal of the public school, spoke with great feeling of the lack of provisions for social and educational welfare within the camp. The people were compelled, they said, to go to the saloons of Hartville, a mile distant, for almost everything of a social nature. A hall had been petitioned for more than a year"—a new hall. They have only one small plain room, practically a dancing room, that is all there is now.

A hall had been petitioned for more than a year, I believe, but no word had come to show that the petition ever went further than the hands of the company's local superintendent. There was a plain dance hall, about 40 feet square, with a small raised platform built on one side, suitable for almost nothing save dances, and several citizens stated that was the sole provision the company had made for the social life of the people. Years before there had been a reading room with newspapers and magazines, but it has been abandoned. The fraternal, the various fraternal organizations—the Odd Fellows, Woodmen of the World, the Rebeccas, the Royal Neighbors, and the like—were compelled to rent a loft over a stable and the company's store.

Even the public schools had received little attention. They were poorly lighted, so poorly lighted indeed that reading was impossible shortly after 3 o'clock in the afternoon on cloudy days in the winter. The people wanted a school building, just as they wanted a hall, but the company would not give them.

This condition caused the college man to exclaim, "The superintendent is against everything that is for the good of humanity."

The school principal, however, felt that the failure to provide for the welfare of the people rested with officials higher up rather than with the local superintendent, and later information seems to show that that is true. I have found that consideration of the erection of a hall was going on before the higher officials. It is my personal opinion that the superintendent does all for the people that higher officials allow.

In most of the communities failure to provide public buildings might be charged to lack of public spirit on the part of the people themselves, but in Sunrise, Wyo., all of the land is owned by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. This company will not sell or rent land to anyone for any public building for public use. The Sunrise church is no exception, as I shall indicate later.

The grievances found by these men, whose education fitted them to speak without prejudice, were repeated by almost everyone living in Sunrise, and other and more serious charges were made.

When I suggested steps to set anything right, however, I met constantly the statement that nobody could remain in the camp who voiced any open criticism of the company. Friends warned me personally that I would be summarily removed unless I was very careful to say nothing that would reflect upon the company or the management of its affairs in Sunrise. The school election on the first Monday in May—the annual school election—was close at hand. I urged qualified voters to be present and work for improvement, but everywhere the appeal was turned down with the statement that I did not understand how such things were controlled at Sunrise.

Some of the better educated young English-speaking workingmen, men of families, told me plainly that they would be discharged if they went to the school meeting and had any improvements that the company was not willing to allow. I will say here that the superintendent is always one of the three members of the school board. Perhaps the condition was not so bad as they believed. I doubted personally whether they would have been discharged for such manifestation of interest in the school their children were attending, but the fact remains they believed this action would be taken against them, and believed it so strongly that very few attended the school meeting.

In this respect it was not very unlike other years, since at almost every election the superintendent has to send out after enough voters to make a quorum. The same lack of quorum existed on May 3, 1915. Several of the women planned to attend this school meeting, but a report was spread on the day that the meeting was to be held that there was to be no meeting, that the company was going to appoint the director, and there would be no use to go down to the hall, and as a result very few went, and the superintendent had to send out to get enough to make a quorum.

In connection with the school election discussion the allegation was made that one Greek who had taken out full naturalization papers was refused a vote in the general election because his political party was disapproved. He was a Democrat, they told me. Some of the Greek men claimed to have known this to be true, and after the experience he was so disgusted he returned to Greece and renounced his citizenship in this country. This one instance is all I have heard of where there has been any interference except with school elections.

Another grievance that was weighing upon Sunrise people was the interference of the company in church affairs. Not interference through Rev. Gaddis. He had the respect, the confidence, and perfect fellowship of the people of all denominations at Sunrise; he was never sectarian; no one in Sunrise ever brought that charge against him.

The officers of the church particularly thought they had a right to be consulted or advised with at least. "Our official title is a farce," one of the board of trustees remarked to me. "The company really keeps everything in its own hands. We trustees are figureheads, and can do nothing."

I began to understand why people at first shunned me for a "company man." I recalled how the Rev. L. Harold Forde cautioned me against speaking of the fact that the company had furnished the $3,000 which went into the building originally and to the fact that the fuel and lights were furnished regularly. The people at Sunrise knew that the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. had done this despite Mr. Forde's secretive action. They knew even more than Mr. Forde had disclosed to me. The company, they said, had not made a gift of the church building, but held a contract wherein the people had agreed to pay a yearly charge of $180, or 6 per cent upon the cost of the erection. Several other clauses prohibitive of freedom of action on the part of the church officers were contained in the contract, but the interest clauses particularly were vital. A small, struggling congregation made up, as it was, of working people almost entirely, it had scarcely been able to pay its ministers; and the interest charge of $180 per year had been left unpaid. There was a clause in the contract which said that if the people failed to live up to any part of their agreement the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. was to be at liberty to take the building over and transfer it to any other denomination that the company wished.

At about the same time that this revelation came to me from the members of my own Presbyterian Church I took occasion to call upon the Catholic priest who makes a Sabbath visit once a month to his congregation in Sunrise. Since he had only the poorly equipped Sunrise hall for his service I extended an invitation to use our church building at any time when it would not interfere with our own work. His reply was prompt and decisive. Thanking me for the courtesy, he refused. "This company," he said, "offered us a building on the same terms that you got yours. But we will not accept a church building upon such terms."

The month of April, 1914, had scarcely begun when I began to receive friendly warnings that I was too active and in danger of being removed by the company. My interest in the school election for the sake of better facilities and the revelation that my people felt it unsafe to vote or agitate for improvements came in this month. And then, suddenly, reports poured in of the unexpected massacre of women and children at Ludlow, Colo. The sympathy of the people of Sunrise, with few exceptions, was with the striking miners of Colorado. They themselves had come so near a strike. They felt that the union miners of Colorado were fighting for better conditions in the mine at Sunrise as well as in Colorado's coal fields. Some had friends and relatives among the Colorado strikers.

Had Ludlow been all, the tension would have been hard enough for the people of Sunrise to bear. To make matters worse there was a persistent rumor that the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. was planning to send its hiring detectives, so called, to Sunrise armed and in sufficient numbers to overawe the people and "preserve order."

The people of Sunrise are habitually peaceable. They are accustomed to work daily for a livelihood. They respect property rights much more than in an average community which is in touch with a drifting, idle class. My own home stands open or unlocked day and night, without molestation. Yet these people had to endure the fear of an invasion by a private army recruited from among ex-convicts, marauders, and murderers schooled by their crimes in the Mexican revolution, and all other sources of moral derelicts. And if this private army came, it would come as it had come to southeastern Colorado, with its hands filled with the deadliest of weapons furnished by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. To make trouble would be its business, since violence would mean a longer job and more pay. Those who think honest workingmen should submit quietly to such intimidation ought to be where it would be real for themselves and families. I am glad to say that Sunrise was not quiet.

I took advantage of the situation in private and semipublic conversation and in a public sermon to discuss our Government in its relation to conditions like those prevailing at Sunrise.

In reference to the school election and the discharge of those who might vote for improvements which the company did not approve I said that no such intimidation was permissible. That the war of the American Revolution had been fought to establish the right of a community's affairs to be managed by the people residing within the community rather than by absentee owners.

Respecting the Ludlow massacre and the threat or rumor of armed company detectives at Sunrise, I urged peace and the sort of action necessary to secure peace. I mentioned the horrors of war, its wasteful destruction of property, the poverty and ignorance which follow it, the injustice it leads to for both rich and poor, the destruction it threatens for men of wealth indiscriminately without regard for those who are in fact useful producers and friends of the workingmen, and, finally, the certainty that the workingmen will lose by a war, whether the struggle ends for or against them. Peaceable progress is more rapid and thorough than progress through war.

I recounted the peril to our Nation from war, and our patriotic duty to maintain peace.

I then referred to the hiring of private armies of so-called detectives by corporations for use in labor disputes. I pointed out how men with records of violence, the convicts of our penitentiaries, the marauders of the Mexican revolution, all sorts of moral degenerates produced by the injustice of our modern social and industrial wrongs, are hired by these corporations. I mentioned the deadly weapons put into the hands of such men, who are then sent into communities where peaceable working people are seeking justice, better homes and schools for their children, and respectful consideration at the hands of their employers.

Corporations who hire such men, arm them, and send them into communities of peaceful, law-abiding people are, I say, guilty of levying war. It is an act of treason that threatens the very existence of our Nation. It will, if continued, plunge our entire country into war.

Our place, I said, is to work for peace, and seek laws that will prevent any corporation or body of men from hiring a private army and threatening our Nation's future. Let us be found always on the side of peace.

But it is our duty, I said, to mark well every man who has a part in the hiring of such a private army. We shall do all that lies in our power for peace, but if war is forced upon us every man who has helped to hire such an army, to bring it into a peaceful community, or to maintain it after brought in, must be executed for treason. It is time for us to know who these men are. And the war they create, if they succeed in creating it, must arouse working people to the necessity of executing every man guilty of such treason as quickly as they are apprehended and are found guilty. Protection against men who are willing to plunge our Nation into war can be secured, once a state of war is created, only by execution of the men responsible.

Let us remember, however, I said, not to turn upon every employer, not to attack every man of wealth, even in warfare that has been forced upon us by some men of wealth. A fair trial must be given every person accused. Only those who have violated our laws by treason should suffer. Nor do we want even these men to suffer. If we can maintain peace, restrain their violence without war, and teach their children better things, their children may turn the talents their fathers are abusing to the service rather than the injury of humanity.

If Mr. Rockefeller, Mr. Welborn, or any other official of the C. F. & I. Co., high or low, is guilty of levying war and their acts end in war, they must die for their treason. But let us hate no one merely because he is rich. And let us condemn no one without a fair trial.

The outline I have just given is, I believe, a fair résumé of my remarks and sermon. In all that I have said there was nothing of any revenge. Were Mr. Rockefeller in the miserable position that many of the employees of the Colorado Fuel & Iron have been, I would try to save him from it as quickly as to save them. But Mr. Rockefeller is not in that position. Mr. Rockefeller and his associates are not in that position. They enjoy every comfort that money can provide.

They enjoy the fuller knowledge of human life and public affairs which education alone can bring. They enjoy a liberal culture. And yet, knowing as they do the great advantages of peace, they have allowed somebody among the higher officials of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. to employ a private army, arm it with the machine guns and high-power weapons, and sent it into the communities of their employees, where labor disputes have arisen. In so doing private ends have been put above the peace and security of our Nation. Some day, if they and other employers persist in using such private armies, the peace and security of the Nation is certain to be overthrown. And in that time, which we pray and work to prevent from ever coming, there will be but one way open to restore peace. The Nation will demand the lives of the men who now regard their treasonable armies of private hirelings so lightly, and it will take them not in revenge, but for the sake of safety and peace.

It would be better by far that some property should be destroyed by violent strikers until an aroused public sentiment intervenes to stop them with the lawful forces of the State. Without the armed detectives in the private employ of the coal companies to provoke to violence, I venture the assertion that the destruction of property in southern Colorado during the recent strike would have been ten times less.

I am reasonably sure—I say this, gentlemen, from my knowledge of the conditions at Sunrise, Wyo.—I am reasonably sure that such a private army sent into Sunrise, even without the calling of a strike, would have resulted in bloodshed and the destruction of property to an appalling extent. And the men who sent it would be guilty above all others. But such private armies, of course, were never intended to protect property. They are sent merely to intimidate workingmen in order to get them to accept unfair, unjust terms in labor disputes. Safety for property is the last thing thought of. We are in the midst of great adjustments. We can pass through them peaceably only through justice and kindness. Employers who hire private armies of thugs are seeking to prevent justice by the harshest sort of crime. I take the position of the president of Johns Hopkins University, mentioned here yesterday, in so far as to demand peace as the first requisite, but my remarks were and are against the primary violator of peace in the person of the men that employ the private armies and equip them.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Please read that again.

Dr. McCORKLE. I take the position of the president of Johns Hopkins University, mentioned here yesterday—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You take the position?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir; I think my position is identical. I am in so far as to demand peace as the first requisite, but my remarks are against the primary violators of peace in the person of men who employ a private army, and equip it for acts of deadliest violence.

So much for my violent remarks, as Mr. Welborn has called them in his letter. Please observe that I made them deliberately and directed them against an act of treason that threatens, above all other dangers, the life of our Nation and the safety of its people.

Perhaps there is a trifling advantage for the large corporation which refuses to treat with its employees, hiring a private army to intimidate them instead. Perhaps there is a small advantage in the immediate present—I doubt it, but perhaps there is. But the future holds a day when that intimidation will not work. It will be better for the Nation, better for both rich and poor, if the employment of the private army is ended quickly and forever.

Following my sermon, there came vigorous efforts on the part of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. to remove me. Rev. Forde wrote a thousand-word letter, which began thus:

"My Dear McCorkle"—this is dated May 2—"I have the following statement sent to me"—

Chairman WALSH. May 2; what year?

Dr. McCORKLE. May 2, 1914; a year ago the 2d of May.

"I have the following statement sent me: 'Rev. Mr. McCorkle is sure a hot Socialist—he missed his calling; he ought to be a labor leader.'"

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Who wrote that?

Dr. McCORKLE. Mr. Forde.

Chairman WALSH. Who is Mr. Forde?

Dr. McCORKLE. Pastor evangelist of the presbytery. He has no authority over the church, but he has authority to visit us and has tried to exercise other authority.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. This was an anonymous letter sent to Mr. Forde?

Dr. McCORKLE. It was signed, but he did not disclose the name of the person that signed it.

"After our frank conversation and correspondence on this subject, I hardly can believe that you are talking, much less preaching socialism. You remember my position was, we have no right to dictate to you your personal beliefs. But we do have the right to say that you or any other minister working with us shall not preach or propagate socialist doctrines or teachings. We maintain that ground. If you are even talking socialism, while drawing money from the board of home mission, you are not fair nor dealing honestly with the board—for it employs men to preach the Gospel and nothing else. We sent you to Sunrise to preach the Gospel and not socialism."

I can read the entire letter—

Chairman WALSH. What is the substance of it?

Dr. McCORKLE. You have heard the substance of it; it goes on in a continued attack on socialism, and repeats again the statement that I am not allowed—

Chairman WALSH. Had you said anything except what you have read us, the substance of it, from that sermon?

Dr. McCORKLE. No, sir; the men did not know that I was a Socialist. I took this letter, when I got it, and went to all of the officers of the church and to some of the most regular attendants besides, and told them plainly that I was a Socialist, and asked them if I had ever touched on any such thing, and they said no; they had never heard me mention it in the pulpit. I did mention it in private conversation with two or three of the congregation, but it was the sermon that I preached that was considered socialism.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. O'Connell would like to look at that letter.

Dr. McCORKLE. I have some more quotations from it.

And Rev. Forde's letter was approved; it was marked approved on the letter by the chairman of the board of home mission, and two of the members resident in Cheyenne. Before I had time to answer it another matter came up. A young Italian workman had been struck on the head by a falling fragment of iron ore while working near the hoist at the mine shaft. I visited him, found that he was not receiving careful nursing, and suggested a trained nurse. The next day five of the Italian men came to my home and asked me to telephone and secure a trained nurse for him. I did so, with money furnished by them. The nurse came, cared for him, and was paid in full.

The company physician, as soon as he heard that the nurse had been called, telegraphed Rev. Forde to come to Sunrise immediately. He came, called at my home, and invited me to come with him to the doctor's office. A somewhat spirited controversy ensued, polite but definite.

The doctor asserted that the Italians had no right to employ a nurse without his permission, ordered me to stay away from all of his patients unless I first got permission from him to visit them, and told me that "the company wants you in Sunrise to help keep the Greek and Italian people down, not to stir them up. If you do not help the company keep them down," he added, "it does not want you here at all."

I replied that I deemed it my duty to visit any who were sick, and that, looking at the matter as I did, I would continue to do so. Also, that I regarded my place in the community as a friend and helper for all, and would not undertake to keep anybody down.

After a few minutes' conversation the feeling of tension which characterized our meeting at first disappeared, and we parted pleasantly enough. Rev. Forde, though, took occasion to speak with me again before leaving Sunrise and gave strict orders that I should not involve the company to the slightest degree in criticism that I might make of things I believed wrong. He also repeated the doctor's demand that I should help the company keep the Greeks and Italians down. We came to no agreement as to the manner of carrying on the work. I specified the raffle run in the company's store as a form of gambling.

Chairman WALSH. Of what?

Dr. McCORKLE. The raffles; the raffle bills were charged against the men's pay checks.

Chairman WALSH. I don't understand that.

Dr. McCORKLE. The men who were engaged in these raffles, as an accountant of the company store said to me the other day, when I was asking about it—they can spend 20 cents and perhaps win $20 worth of stuff.

Chairman WALSH. Who put up the prizes?

Dr. McCORKLE. The company store put up the prizes.

Chairman WALSH. And it was left to chance or gambling?

Dr. McCORKLE. It was a chance game. You could spend 20 cents and win $20, or spend $20 and not get anything.

Chairman WALSH. What kind of a game was it; was it roulette or some kind of machinery?

Dr. McCORKLE. A kind of a card game; I have seen it, but never studied it out.

Chairman WALSH. Was it of common practice?

Dr. McCORKLE. Oh, yes; it must have added very considerable revenue to the store. I will say in this connection that when one of the widows of Sunrise heard Rev. Gaddis had been removed, she said he was the only friend that the people of Sunrise ever had, and she was afraid that it would be a long time before they would get another. She said that raffling game had cost her boys some money; they had spent $7 on that raffle. And I knew that she needed all that they earned. There were three boys.

Chairman WALSH. Are there gambling laws in Montana that make it a felony or misdemeanor?

Dr. McCORKLE. There are no gambling laws, it seems, at all. We have brought it up a number of times, and nothing has ever been done.

Chairman WALSH. Go ahead.

Dr. McCORKLE. This game is an evasion of the gambling laws.

I specified the raffle run in the company's store as a form of gambling where I would have to involve the company in criticism until it was removed, and Rev. Forde declared that such criticism must not under any consideration be made. Rev. Forde urged me to give him the names of the men who had complained to me against the company. He said he would have them discharged; I refused.

Chairman WALSH. That is, the men who complained about the gambling?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes; who complained about the gambling and about other matters. I mentioned many other grievances that they had complained of, and he tried to get me to give him their names, and he said he would see that they were discharged at once.

Returning home, Rev. Forde sent a letter couched in friendly terms, expressing a hope for my success on the Sunrise field and advising me with many platitudes to be more quiet. I replied May 11 as follows:

"SUNRISE, WYO., May 11, 1914.

"Rev. L. HAROLD FORDE,

"2022 Pebrican Street, Cheyenne, Wyo.

"DEAR BROTHER FORDE: Many thanks for your favor of May 7, received Saturday. I am sorry that you have been so much worried about the situation here. However, if the misrepresentations of the letter you received were all of a kind with the sentence quoted to me, I suppose you could not do otherwise than wonder what would happen next.

"It has been my endeavor at all times to speak in a kindly manner. I realize that time is required for a man to see that he is in the wrong, especially if he be an ignorant man. But I do think that the men at the head of such companies, with their education and profession of Christianity, should do a little more to cultivate the self-respect and good will of the men working under them. Ministers are peacemakers when they lead their people to be just and kind.

"An important article on the Colorado situation appears in the Survey of May 2, 1914, pages 108-110. The terrible murder of those women and children at Ludlow is one of the worst crimes ever committed in our country, and the fact that it was threatened by militiamen in the pay of the coal companies before it occurred tends to the conviction that it was deliberate. I have never heard of anything quite so bad in the East. While a discussion of the thing is hardly profitable, you will further peace by using your influence to prevent a repetition of the crime.

"For my own part, I shall try to refrain from saying harsh things. Yet I know that if such things as that massacre are repeated our country will soon be plunged into war. It was such a conviction that led me to make the remarks that perhaps were misinterpreted."

On the same day, May 11, 1914, and before receiving my letter, Rev. Forde wrote to a minister in the State of New York as follows:

"DEAR MR. WICKS: Mr. Ralph A. Felton writes me that you are not employed, but would consider work in home-mission fields. We are making a change in a field that Mr. Felton writes you about—the only thing that he is mistaken about in that statement about Sunrise is that there is no manse. All property is owned by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.—the Rockefeller company that is so criticized and abused by the I Won't Work people and Upton Sinclair. The man"—

That is referring to me, the minister at Sunrise—

"can not remain much longer; he is simply tolerated just a little bit to give me time to secure a man for his place and to try and tone him down. He is ultraradical in socialism; unsound in other matters, too. I would like to replace him as soon as possible, for we can not permit him to remain where he is.

"Kindly let me hear from you.

"Sincerely,

"L. HAROLD FORDE."

This letter indicates that it was written in following-up correspondence, looking to his plan to put me out of the Sunrise church. Afterwards, through Rev. E. S. Gaddis, sociological superintendent of the company, I learned that the company brought pressure to bear upon Mr. Forde to have me removed. The letter of Mr. Forde just given had its source in this action by the company.

It happened that the minister who received Mr. Forde's proposal for removing me communicated with me directly. In their correspondence Mr. Forde had asked him to come to Sunrise and take charge of the church.

I took his communication at once and laid it before the officers of Sunrise church. They had heard nothing whatever of the proposal to remove me and put some other person in my place. Under Presbyterian law a minister can be removed from his field only through action by the church council, called the presbytery, and presbytery always take the local congregation and its officers into consideration. The effort to remove me secretly, therefore, provoked strong disapproval among Sunrise people. They saw in it, without the verification secured later, the work of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. Assurance began to come in that I would not lack for support financially if I would remain. Even the Italians, though Catholic, assured me that they themselves would support me if no one else would. I considered the matter carefully, and finally, believing that God, if He had a work for me to do at Sunrise, could be depended upon to open up the way for me to remain, I wrote Rev. Forde of my definite intention to remain in charge at Sunrise.

The letter was as follows:

"SUNRISE, WYO., June 3, 1914.

"Rev. HAROLD FORDE,

"2022 Pebrican Street, Cheyenne, Wyo.

"DEAR BROTHER FORDE: A prayerful study of the situation convinces me that I ought to remain in charge of our Presbyterian Church here at Sunrise, Wyo. My personal feelings in the matter I have put to one side. But it seems to be the desire of the people of our church that I do so, and God seems to lead so plainly that I would not think of contending against the appeal.

"The future promises some good things. There are probably many ways in which the work can be built up during the coming year. My wife and I are getting very encouraging results already.

"We shall feel a great interest in the new work you are opening in Hanna and hope the man with whom you have been corresponding may decide to develop it.

"Felton has not written me for several days. I should like to send you some report concerning his plans, but think it better to communicate at once our decision to remain here. When I do hear from him I will write you again. I hope his coming may prove a great help."

I heard nothing further, except this—no; I have not got the letter here, but Rev. Gaddis stopped at Cheyenne and visited—here is the reference; Rev. Gaddis, sociological superintendent of the company, had visited Sunrise meantime, on May 31, 1914. He inquired and found that the complaints of the people to which I was giving voice had a basis in fact and undertook to have the wrongs abated. Unknown to me he returned by way Cheyenne, visited Rev. Forde, and told him that I ought to remain at Sunrise. I had the letter from Mr. Forde, but I have not brought it with me.

Chairman WALSH. Just give the substance of the letter.

Dr. McCORKLE. The substance of the letter was this: That Mr. Gaddis had requested that I be allowed to remain at Sunrise; and they had a meeting of the home mission committee and were going to let me stay there for a while at least, but they would not tolerate any interference from Mr. Gaddis on the subject; they said that should be fairly understood, that it was their concession, and that it was not the work of Mr. Gaddis; that Gaddis had no authority in the matter.

I heard nothing further of interference in church matters from the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. for some time. In October, after attending the church council known as Synod, in Port Morgan, Colo. I made a short visit to Denver. Rev. H. W. Balnton, Sunday school missionary of our presbytery, entertained me at his home there, and suggested giving me an introduction to Mr. L. M. Bowers, Mr. Rockefeller's personal representative, and I consented, hoping something might come of it for the good of the Sunrise people. I spent some 30 minutes with Mr. Bowers. I noticed at the time, so I know definitely that it was 30 minutes. Save for a few sentences that I forced in, he took the whole 30 minutes for a monologue of denunciation of all kinds of social service.

Chairman WALSH. Who did?

Dr. McCORKLE. Mr. Bowers. To quote a sentence which he repeated four or five times, "All this uplift and reform work is satanic." He denounced the Methodist Church for its social-service activities, and said that such work as its social service secretary was doing was "The work of the devil."

All the churches, he said, were dabbling the socialistic devices of satan. He had not given anything to the Salvation Army for several years, because it was going in too much for social uplift and reform; whereas, formerly, he had frequently dropped them a $2 bill when passing. The work of Charles Stelzle, of the Presbyterian Church, he denounced as satanic and socialistic.

When the interview was ended, he had not given one word for the welfare of Sunrise people. It was evident that he did not want to consider anything relating to their comfort, much less to hear any complaint they might desire to express. I felt that the man was to be pitied.

I will say here that Mr. Bowers, like the rest of us, had his nerve wrought upon when the great struggle was going on, and he felt like expressing himself vigorously; I think he is about as vigorous as Mother Jones, and his language was as vigorous; and if I did not express myself as vigorously, I felt like it. But for one with his views of church work to endeavor to dictate to and control all of the ministers in camps of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. seemed to me to threaten the very thing for which Jesus died. Trying to get a roof over the home of that poor woman whom you heard mentioned in the testimony yesterday, that the doctor had to move to another home to keep dry during confinement, is social service work; under Mr. Bowers's definition, an effort in her behalf is "satanic."

Such dictation explains the dying out of the churches that heretofore have existed in the coal camps of Colorado, as complained of by many denominations. Through my interview with Mr. Bowers, I had learned why the miners shunned a minister whom they took to be a company man.

In January, 1915, another case of company interference in church matters arose. The rector of the Episcopal Church at Hartville requested the privilege of using the Sunrise church for services for his people, residents in Sunrise. I presented his request to the officers of the Sunrise church, and they and I alike were disposed to grant it. But the question of a forbidding clause in the contract with the company for the church building arose. We referred the matter to Rev. Gaddis by letter, as follows:

"SUNRISE, WYO., January 2, 1915.

"Rev. E. S. GADDIS,

"Trinidad, Colo.

"DEAR BROTHER: * * * Rev. Frank Chipp, the Episcopal minister who supplies Hartville church, wrote us a letter some time ago and asked to be permitted to use the church building here on Sundays at some hour that would not interfere with our services. I took the matter up with our session, who seemed disposed to grant the request. But the point was raised that the company, in its contract, forbade the use of the church to any other denomination. And that halted the matter. I could scarcely believe that any such stipulation was in the contract, and must ask you.

"However, the immediate question is no longer a pressing one. Rev. Chipp came to see me about the matter, and after we had talked it over, he prepared a petition to you, in which the Episcopalians of Sunrise would make a request for permission to so use the church. Then, when he took the matter up with them, they decided that it would be better to help him build up the Hartville charge. I am glad they so decided, for Hartville certainly needs such work.

"But I think we ought to allow them an occasional service here, on special occasions, at least. For instance, Bishop Thomas is to be in Hartville tomorrow morning; if he came to Sunrise for a service to-morrow afternoon, I am sure we would enjoy it.

"Will you please tell us whether the company has any restrictions against such fraternal relations?

* * * * *

"DANIEL S. McCORKLE."

Rev. Gaddis replied:

"I have written Mr. Bowers about other denominations using the Sunrise church. I am not prepared to answer your question.

"Personally, I certainly favor opening the church to any one of the Christian denominations, if such service would not interfere with your work."

Mr. Bowers, however, in his reply, denied the use of the building to Episcopalians. His reply is not fair, in that he seeks to lay part of the responsibility for the refusal upon the officers of Sunrise church, as if they had anticipated his refusal by themselves objecting, whereas the inquiry plainly states that they are favorably inclined to granting it.

I got this letter with Mr. Bowers's signature to it, or a copy of it. I got the letter and then made the copy myself and turned the letter over to the superintendent at Sunrise.

"JANUARY 9, 1915.

"DEAR MR. GADDIS: Your favor of the 8th is at hand. In regard to other than the Presbyterian denomination using the church at Sunrise, allow me to say that before the church was built the Methodists had an organization and occupied the hall on Sundays. They failed completely at Sunrise and gave it up, although I undertook to arrange with them to hold the location.

"The Presbyterians applied for the privilege of reopening the services and starting a Sunday school in the hall, which was granted, and they made a success of the enterprise to the extent that we built the church for them, which is a Presbyterian Church, and one-half of the pastor's salary has been paid by the board in New York City, with the understanding that we should not build or permit to be built another church at Sunrise unless the town became very much larger and two denominations were needed."

The board in New York City there referred to was called the home mission board of the Presbyterian Church and not the company.

"I believe the elders are right in their refusal to allow any other denomination to occupy the church as long as the home mission board in New York is backing the undertaking.

"You see, it is different than if the church was self-supporting, in which case it would be a matter for the church officials to pass upon.

"The hall, which used to be used for church services, and is now, I think, used by the Catholics, could be secured, I presume, by any other denomination wishing to hold services there, but I would not be inclined to encourage such a move.

* * * * *

"Yours, very truly,

"L. M. BOWERS."

My experience during the 15 months that I have been in charge of Sunrise church has convinced me that the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. endeavors to control the minister and his church absolutely—

Commissioner O'CONNELL (interrupting). Before you go any further are you still at Sunrise?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes; I am still at Sunrise. I explain that later on.

That by so doing it expects to cut out all opportunity for criticism of its relations with its employees and prevent everything in the way of welfare work. Why they do this is perhaps because of the fact the minister in the community, just as I am at Sunrise, alone of all the people who live in one of those closed camps, gets his salary independently of the company's will. They have not been able to keep the Sunrise people from giving me enough to live on.

At Sunrise the result of the company's policy has been to fuse together all religious denominations in a common resistance to its aggression. In fact, not only did the congregation at its annual meeting in January, 1915, call me to serve another year by a vote of 41 to 4, but the men of the various denominations laid down all differences in order to support me on the field. In the list of monthly subscribers to my salary for the present year, besides the churches, whose members may usually be found represented on such a list, the Catholic, Greek Catholic, Mormon, and Christian Science Churches are represented. It simply means that the whole community are standing together to hold me, irrespective of religious denominations.

As if, however, the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. will never learn to abandon its feudal efforts to control the churches situated in its camps, I find the following sentence in a letter from my wife, written May 13, just about a week ago:

"Mr. Bainton"—

Mr. Bainton is the Sunday school missionary who introduced me to Mr. Bowers at Denver—

"Mr. Bainton made me very angry by warning you, through me, to be careful of what you say for fear that further criticism of the company might cost you your position."

I do not know, gentlemen, where the money is to come from, but I am not much afraid of not being able to stay; and if I do not, I will go somewhere else and take the work up in behalf of the people. But that is the warning that has come to me through my wife from a man in touch with the company.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Read that again.

Dr. McCORKLE. This is in a letter from my wife, written May 13:

"Mr. Bainton made me very angry by warning you, through me, to be careful of what you say for fear that further criticism of the company might cost you your position."

The next grievance I take up with some reluctance, lest it appear that I am seeking personal revenge, for it is true, as already mentioned in this report, that a sharp controversy arose very early between me and the company physician when he demanded that I should help the company keep the Greeks and Italians down. Many of the wrongs which the Sunrise people allege they have suffered at his hands were given in a letter written by my wife eight months ago and passed by mutual friends to Mr. Starr J. Murphy. In so far as I know, he is not continuing the offenses which provoked the complaints, and I have no desire to pursue him vindictively.

But the fundamental source of almost the entire matter remains unremedied; that is, the company is allowing him still to go to the pay checks of the men and take out whatever fees he wishes to collect without the consent of the men themselves.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Allows who?

Dr. McCORKLE. The company's physician.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Is there not a stipulated monthly payment?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes; a stipulated monthly payment of $1 taken out of every man's pay check, and then fees in addition. This $1, as I will show later, is said to be for hospital.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Doesn't that $1 cover all of his medical expense?

Dr. McCORKLE. No; in case of confinement the charge is $25, and if instruments are used it is $50.

Chairman WALSH. That much in confinement cases?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes. I will mention some of the cases here; $25 is for the simplest case.

Chairman WALSH. Don't the men have a right to refuse to pay it?

Dr. McCORKLE. They do not have any choice; it is taken out, and if they ask about it, they say, "The doctor has taken it out."

Chairman WALSH. Is there a protest against that generally on the part of the men?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes; a very strong protest.

Chairman WALSH. Go ahead.

Dr. McCORKLE. Some of these men that were protesting, the Rev. Forde wanted to get their names so as to have them discharged. I don't know that the doctor is continuing some of the worst offenses charged against him, but I know he continues to take the money he wants out of the pay checks of the men. By the way, I will say that the Rev. Gaddis told me that that was made through orders coming directly from Dr. Corwin. Dr. Corwin gave orders to the local superintendent to let the doctor take his money out of the men's pay checks.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. A question at this point. A workman's wife is confined and instruments had to be used.

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You say the fee is $50?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And is that $50 taken in a lump sum out of the pay check?

Dr. McCORKLE. If the pay check was not big enough to get it, he would wait.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. But if it is big enough?

Dr. McCORKLE. He takes it out. He will leave a family with practically nothing to live on. I mention instances of that later on.

The fundamental source of almost the entire matter remains unremedied; that is, the company is allowing him still to go to the pay checks of the men and take out whatever fee he wishes to collect without the consent of the men themselves. In a case of a disagreement there is no opportunity to test the merits of the case in court. Dr. Gaddis informs me that this permission is granted through the instrumentality of Dr. Corwin. Originate as it may, it means a temptation that few men can resist year after year successfully. In my opinion, the company, when it allows any man to take what he pleases out of the pay checks of its employees without their consent, is tempting such man to be dishonest and extort what is not his due. Offenses charged against him are, therefore, recounted. They will give the members of your commission an insight into much dissatisfaction with the company physician—

Commissioner LENNON. You use the word there "against" the doctor?

Dr. McCORKLE. Offenses charged against the doctor, offenses which he is alleged to have been guilty of.

They will give the members of your commission an insight into much dissatisfaction with the company physicians in all cases where such a practice prevails. Perhaps they may lead the company to rectify the evils at their source. If the company officials and Mr. Rockefeller really want to deal justly with their employees, they will require their company physicians to quit taking what they please out of the employees' pay checks. Company physicians will have to collect their fees like any other physician in free communities.

The company physician at Sunrise, Wyo., Dr. W. C. Foster, is the object of much bitter feeling among the workmen who live there. Personally I have no grievance against the man. He attended my wife during a serious illness last March and rendered good service. Also he absolutely refused to accept his professional fee for the care given. It must be placed to the man's credit that he sought no revenge in my case when, in the absence of any other physician, it became necessary to call him. For the complaints against him had already been given publicity both by myself and wife.

Independently of personal relations, however, I am compelled to mention his relation to the people of Sunrise. Nothing equals it as a source of unrest, fear, and indignation. Serious labor troubles might occur in Sunrise at any time if offenses he is alleged to have committed are ever repeated. He is the only representative of the Colorado Fuel & Iron in so far as I know against whom the people of Sunrise have ever threatened personal violence. I have never heard personal violence threatened against any other man.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Why do they do so in his case?

Dr. McCORKLE. Through fear of harm at his hands. In fact, at the time of my wife's illness there were men that feared he would injure her, and I learned after she had recovered that a number of men had agreed together to remove him from the community by force if he harmed her. I didn't know any such thing until later, but I learned that the men had agreed among themselves if any harm came to her that they would see that the doctor went out of the community. I will say that it is a terrible situation, because a doctor might sometimes be—the doctor might have treated her as well as he could and the men might have thought he had injured her, when it was something entirely beyond his power, and he might have become a victim of personal retaliation, but they would not have done it if they had not feared him.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Would they give him the credit of making mistakes occasionally?

Dr. McCORKLE. They are afraid he makes them purposely. There are these men that have taken graft from the people there. There are some that are afraid of the foreigners, and I know why they are afraid—because they have made these foreigners pay them for jobs and gave them graft.

Chairman WALSH. What class are they?

Dr. McCORKLE. Some are foremen.

Chairman WALSH. Are they still there?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir; but have quit that practice. I have never heard threats or suggestions of violence against men that are grafting. That is what makes me think, then, in the case of the doctor, it is not the graft that he is alleged to have taken, but the fear that he will do them a personal injury.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What has he done to make them fear him?

Dr. McCORKLE. I will read it here.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Please read it through without comment.

Dr. McCORKLE. About three years ago some of the Italian employees of the company at Sunrise started a petition for his removal, but the petition won them nothing save his ill will. Ever since that time they say he has been vindictive toward them. How they feel is best expressed in the words of an Italian with a family, who said: "It is terrible the way he treats us, but what can I do? If my family gets sick, I can get no other doctor. If I say anything about what he does maybe he will kill my wife, kill my babies."

Similar fear was expressed by a native-born American, educated, industrious, and sober, one of the ablest of the company's skilled workmen. "The things this doctor does to the foreigners," he said, "are awful. But I do not dare speak out against him. He is treating my family all right, but if I object to what he does to them, and he ever 'gets me on the hip,' I believe he is a man who will get even."

This same American workman told of a case that happened, he alleged, directly under his observation: "An Italian, whose eye had been blacked a trifle, was walking past the doctor's office in company with myself and others. The doctor came out, laid hold of him, and in spite of his unwillingness pulled him into the office, where he put some water in his eye. At the end of the month $8 were taken out of the Italian's pay check for the treatment given his eye."

Another skilled workman, native-born American, a man of highest standing in the community, alleges that the doctor charged him a bill of $6 unjustly. He says he took the matter up with the superintendent, who said, "You are right; it is unjust; do not pay it." Two months later $6 was missing from his pay check, and when he protested the shortage he was told that the doctor had taken it out. He at once went to the superintendent, and indignantly demanded that a protest be carried up to the higher officials of the company. But the superintendent urged him, he says, to pass the matter over and make no fuss or complaint, inasmuch as "The doctor is in the habit of doing this way."

The usual fee for the company physician at Sunrise in confinement cases is $25; or where instruments are used $50. One Italian woman alleges that he could not be found when her child was born, and did not arrive till four hours later. He made in all three visits, merely casual, not being needed. But at the end of the month he took $25 from the pay check of her husband. His fee and the rental deducted, they had but $5 for living expenses that month. And then, when her baby was sick, and he prescribed castor oil, he refused to give her so much as a dose, although she had no money left with which to purchase it.

The harshest feeling against the company physician, however, grows out of the conviction of many people in Sunrise that he has been guilty of still greater injustice.

In the case of two native-born American families, well known and respected citizens, it is alleged that they could not find the company physician and sent elsewhere to call an outside physician, whereupon the company physician took a bill out of their pay checks for himself in addition to what they paid the other physician. And this, it is alleged, when the company physician had never been near at any time or rendered any service of any sort.

In two instances that have come to our attention, foreign-born workmen allege that they were compelled to pay bribes to the company physician in order to get injured fellow workmen sent to the company hospital. And this in spite of the fact that $1 is taken from the pay check of every man who works for the company, every month that he has any work at all, with the express agreement that he is to receive hospital treatment free if injured.

Such serious charges would be very hard to believe, save for the fact that those who make them are people of established reputation, and that they offer to give testimony before any representative the company wishes to send to investigate and learn the truth. Some offer to produce witnesses—they did so at the time of the visit of Rev. Mr. Gaddis to Sunrise in November, 1914, promising to give conclusive evidence. The only prerequisite demanded is a promise from the company that those testifying will not be discharged or discriminated against. Mr. Gaddis reported that he had put the matter up to President Welborn, but thereafter nothing has been done to carry the inquiry further, insofar as the people of Sunrise know.

Mr. Pierson came down and made a casual visit at my home, and never mentioned the thing at all. So far as I know, and the people of Sunrise know, nothing has ever been done in the way of inquiry. Certainly those people that offered to testify have not been called.

Perhaps a score of persons have lesser complaints, alleging excessive charges, harshness, neglect, and broken bone left to knit crooked. In my judgment, if the question of continuing Dr. Foster as company physician at Sunrise were put to a vote of the entire adult population, from two-thirds to three-fourths of the votes would be cast asking that he be removed. Yet some are his friends, believing that in spite of his faults, his talents as a physician make it desirable for him to remain. There is no doubt that he is efficient in some kinds of surgical work. The source of most of the trouble lies, as I see it, in the permission granted him by the company to go to the pay checks of the men and deduct from them such fees as he desires. Such collections leave no opportunity for remonstrance, and no redress in case they are unjust. Another physician, given such unjust privileges, might commit the same offenses. There are many men, who, if given such a privilege to take what is not theirs, would do so in time. And there are some, at least, who would seek revenge when objection was made to their wrongful appropriations or an effort made to remove them. When the company gives the company doctor irresponsible access to the pay checks of the men it becomes in fact a party to his acts.

The people of Sunrise have good reason for their demand of a promise from the company that they will not be discharged or discriminated against for testifying concerning the wrongs they allege they have suffered at the hands of this company physician. A little more than three years ago extortion of money from workmen by some of the company foremen became so extreme that some of those suffering protested and presented unquestionable evidence of the vicious practice. The company had to discharge some of the worst offenders because the evidence against them was unassailable, but it also discharged all of those who gave the information against them. "Fired the whole bunch" was the expression of a company official.

Chairman WALSH. What was that particular form of graft involved in that proceeding?

Dr. McCORKLE. They fired all our men that testified against them. It was making the men pay for jobs. In one case they say that two men paid $35 apiece for jobs, and they didn't get what they wanted and actually made them return the money, and those men were making them pay for jobs and making them buy raffle tickets. One instance that I don't mention in my paper, one foreman raffled a horse off four different times for $100. He would raffle it off to some of the foreigners, who had no place to keep the horse, and they would sell it back to him for $30 or $40, and then he would raffle it again. He raffled the same horse four different times.

Chairman WALSH. Go ahead.

Dr. McCORKLE. Since that experience the workingmen feel that to object means certain discharge and perhaps a heavy expense before another job is found.

The officials of my church and practically all of the American-speaking population told me it would mean the same thing to them. If they mentioned that they had actually seen money pass from hand to hand, in grafting or raffling or anything, that they would be discharged if they told it, and have to get out of the camp.

To mention the grievance of raffling as carried on at Sunrise when I arrived there is not pleasant. For, in so far as I am able to ascertain, it has been entirely banished from the camp, thanks to the cooperation of Rev. Gaddis with my own objections and the complaints of the people. I refer to it here not as anything now interposing difficulty, but in order to explain in part the unrest that prevailed in Sunrise.

Chairman WALSH. When was that abolished?

Dr. McCORKLE. About the 1st of June, 1914, I think it ceased. On the 1st day of May I think was the last time.

Chairman WALSH. Was that reform brought about by Rev. Gaddis?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir; I know it. I was protesting against it and could not get it stopped, but he took it up and said that he would have it stopped. He went to the men in the company store and told them that they would have to take those games out, and they were taken out; and he went to the superintendent and told him that they must stop the matter of foremen compelling the men working under him to buy raffle tickets, and that stopped.

When I came to Sunrise I heard the complaint repeatedly that one of the company foremen was compelling his men to purchase raffle tickets from him every month. A prize, worth perhaps $12, would, it was alleged, be raffled for $50 or more. Such men as refused to purchase the tickets would be given the hardest work and could get no advancement to any job that was more remunerative. The whole thing was a matter of common knowledge and strongly condemned, but nobody dared make a move against the wrong. All remembered how when the practice was common to a number of the foremen some three years ago, everyone who testified in objection to it was discharged from the company's employ.

In the company store at Sunrise, as well as in other camps, a raffle was run, with boxes of candy, etc., offered as prizes. Young men and boys were not only permitted to spend their spare cash in this raffling, but were allowed to run bills and charge them up against their pay checks for the next pay day. It was in effect plain gambling, since a few cents might win a prize worth several dollars, while dollars were spent frequently with no prize. Often, money much needed for family support was spent thus. One poor widow, with three boys under 21 at work, and scarcely a living when the whole of their wage was turned over, would see her boys spending several dollars every month on the raffle, and had no recourse. Worst of all, the young men of the town were acquiring a taste for gambling. Gambling in secret permitted; even openly in barber shop.

Rev. Forde had demanded that I should make no mention of this store raffle, because to do so would reflect against the company. Rev. Gaddis, however, demanded successfully that it, together with the foremen's raffling, be stopped.

The people of Sunrise are very much dissatisfied with their relation to the company store. They allege many grievances. One man, a railroad employee, tells me that he has been reported by the store managers to the railway offices in Denver three times, the last time some two years ago, for discipline, because he prefers to purchase elsewhere. The railroad official, however, who told him that he had been reported, told him also that his wages were his own and that he had a right to spend them wherever he pleased.

Many of the non-English speaking employees feel that they are compelled to trade at the company store, under penalty of losing their places. And even among the American-born citizens there are many who so much fear the store's power that they order goods from outside in secret, through friends living in the country, and never let it be known except among those who will not give them away. I and wife have at times ordered for others who were afraid to order under their own names. Just what the coercion amounts to I can not say. It is known that the store manager, who has also been postmaster until this month, inspects all money orders and keeps track of where they go. This in spite of the fact that all are written by the assistant postmistress. Yet, of late years, one of the Guernsey stores has been permitted to send its wagon to Sunrise, where it has built up a very considerable trade. I myself can not help feeling that the fear of being reported far outruns the injury it involves. Unquestionably, such fear serves to hold some trade for the store which would be transferred otherwise to some other trading point. But I am convinced that the store loses a greater amount of trade through the ill will the fear engenders than anything it gains. I have never been able to understand why the company does not tell its employees plainly that they are welcome to trade where they like, and get their trade through good will and on the merits of the goods sold.

I will say in mentioning the company's store, it is also a place where money is deposited by men working there. I wanted to get some money, borrow some money from a young fellow here a while back and he said, "I have got the money deposited in the store, but if I go down there they will ask me questions, want to know where it is going." He says, "They always question us exactly to know what we are doing with the money." And he said that he was afraid to do that, and he went and got the money from another source and brought it to me, and never let it be known. He said that one of the young boys had a deposit in the postal savings bank, and he wanted to use $50, and he had to wait six days before he could get it to use it out of the postal savings bank.

Chairman WALSH. That was the fault of the Government, then?

Dr. McCORKLE. But the store manager is postmaster. There is no show of getting it out while he is postmaster.

Prices charged in the company store are not uniform, even on the same day. Flour, for instance, was reported as sold to different persons on the same day at $2.75, $2.85, and $3, so a clerk claims. I myself last winter purchased a box of the best apples in stock at $1.75, and was very much surprised when a non-English speaking family reported to have paid $2.75 for a box at the same time. Just a dollar's difference in the boxes.

People whose word I find it very hard to doubt allege short weight, and even in some cases false entry. Though everyone, I think, believes the man who is bookkeeper keeps his books honestly and well. In the store, as elsewhere, the difficulty seems to lie in a system which tempts the heads of each department to be dishonest. These men have to get a part of their salary in the form of a commission on the profits of their department.

That rule is probably responsible for the irregularities. I had one man, a member of my church, an old man that is not there now, that was very indignant, who told me several dollars were put on a foreigner's bill that he did not owe, and he said that he had tried to have it taken off and could not, because, as he expressed it, they want everything a fellow gets, and if he doesn't trade it out, they take it anyhow. I don't know just what his experience had been; he had been working in the company store at the head of one of the departments, and he felt very strongly that the people were being wronged. I don't know the merits of the case of why they made that man pay that money, for he said the fellow did not owe it, but they made him pay it.

Other things at Sunrise caused unpleasant feelings. For instance, sidewalks so muddy, frequently, that rubbers and overshoes are pulled off in trying to wade it, yet the company sends good cinders to the dump heap, it is claimed. Were it not the climate is so dry that the streets are seldom muddy this grievance would be far more serious.

One instance that has been charged that is very serious if true, there was a man that had taken a homestead near the village of Sunrise, a man that had had trouble with his employer for quite a while, and it was reported to me by a person who said one of the company foremen alleged that this fellow was discharged because he would not turn over a part of his homestead to the company at its own price. He had his homestead there, and it seems that this homestead, or part of it, offered an opening for some other company to get in and mine property that was owned by some outside interest, independent of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., and the company wanted this man just to relinquish his homestead holdings, or a portion of it, to them, so that they could cut out the possibility of somebody else coming in. When he would not grant that to them they simply discharged him. That is the report that is current in Sunrise, and I got it fairly straight. I hope it is not true, but I know he was discharged. He came to work one morning, and they told him they didn't want him, and I know they wanted his homestead and could not get it, or part of it and could not get it. That occurred just a few months ago, last fall I believe it was.

There is a feeling in Sunrise, I am glad to say, that things are growing better in almost every respect. With the help of Rev. Gaddis I succeeded in getting the company to install a motion-picture machine. That was installed in July, 1914. A five-reel program is now given on Saturday night and another on Monday night; and the admission, 5 cents, is barely enough to cover the company's expenses in supplying the films, electricity, etc.

We run the machine and pictures in the church building. Rev. Gaddis also aided my wife in getting a kindergarten established last January, and this has since been made a part of the public-school system for the coming year. I have brought with me a request for a new hall for Sunrise, signed by the different lodges in Sunrise, officially. This was prepared last January, under the direction of Rev. Gaddis. The people of Sunrise are hoping that the company will care sufficiently for their need for a hall to provide it, even though Rev. Gaddis is no longer with the company to plead for their welfare.

I have the petition here, but will not read it unless necessary.

Chairman WALSH. I just want to ask you a question or two and then Commissioner Weinstock, I believe, has some questions.

Did your wife write a letter to Mr. Starr J. Murphy in October, 1914, calling attention to this matter that you detailed here about the doctor, and also abuses by certain foremen there?

Dr. McCORKLE. I have a carbon copy of that letter made at the same time the letter was written, and if you will permit I will read the letter. It was written August 31, 1914. It went to Miss Marlam L. Woodberry, home mission secretary of the Congregational Church, who travels throughout the country and who frequently stops at the home of Mr. John Gilmore, in Montclair, N. J. Mr. John Gilmore is a personal friend of Mr. Murphy. When Mr. Gilmore heard of some of the things we had told Miss Woodberry, he says, "My friend, Starr J. Murphy, won't let those things go on, I am sure. You send and get a definite statement, and I will give it to Mr. Murphy, and I will see if we can not get something done."

Chairman WALSH. All right. Read it.

Dr. McCORKLE [reading]:

"MY DEAR MISS WOODBERRY: There is an hour ahead of me in which I am likely to have no interruption. So I shall try to get this letter written—"

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). That is being written by your wife to Miss Woodberry for transmission?

Dr. McCORKLE. To Mr. Murphy, through Mr. Gilmore to Mr. Murphy, as a response to the request from Mr. Gilmore that something definite be put before Mr. Murphy in order that he might act.

"This camp is very prettily situated. I am sending some summer views as you requested. (One of the Japanese boys wants to become a photographer, and this is his practice work.)"

"I wish the individual houses were a little clearer, so you could easily understand what I am going to write to you. The houses in picture 1 are of a uniform plan and construction, and are occupied by English-speaking tenants. Some of the buildings (their location is indicated by a circle drawn in picture 2) are built on a different plan. Foreigners occupy them."

"The company charges the same price per room in all cases. In order that you may understand more fully what a different return different persons get for the same money I will describe further. Houses for the English-speaking people, such as you have seen in picture 1, are weatherboarded outside and fairly comfortable, with the exception of cold floors. They are well plastered inside, and are kept painted inside as well as outside. The company gives free repairs for the houses of English-speaking tenants every two years, and furnishes paint free to them at any time that they wish to paint for themselves.

"Many of the foreigners are treated quite differently. No repairing or painting is done for them free. One who wants repairs or painting must himself pay for the materials and for the time of the workmen; and for such material a very high retail price is charged. Some of the buildings for the foreigners are not weatherboarded outside, but are constructed of boards stood vertically, with narrow strips nailed over the cracks to keep out the weather. And inside the walls are made of paper board instead of plaster.

"I have been in a house that has not had a stroke of repairing put on by the company for eight years. Last winter, when the door was groken and snow was coming in, the men had to shift for themselves in getting it fixed. Repairs were promised, but they never showed up. Yet these people pay exactly the same rent as do the more favored tenants."

Chairman WALSH. Say—on account of the fact that we have to hasten a little, on account of waiting witnesses, it has been suggested here, I think rather wisely by the commission, that you epitomize. Just tell us the substance of what that letter contained which your wife wrote to this lady.

Dr. McCORKLE. Well, she speaks of some people having water in the houses—

Chairman WALSH. Well, does she set forth that there was discrimination?

Dr. McCORKLE. Discrimination.

Chairman WALSH. Exhibited toward these workmen to the detriment of the foreigners?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. I gather that—did she set forth to Mr. Murphy about the alleged practices of this physician?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Did she set forth about the alleged mistreatment and alleged unjust treatment of the foremen to employees?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And did it in detail? I notice there are four or five pages?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes; and mentioned, too, the condition in the schoolhouse—that they needed a better schoolhouse.

Chairman WALSH. Did she say anything about the efforts to exercise any influence over you as a minister, or any interference in religion?

Dr. McCORKLE. She did not mention that, I believe, at all.

Chairman WALSH. Well, have I covered all the things that she did mention?

Dr. McCORKLE. I think you have covered practically the whole thing.

Chairman WALSH. Tell me now, did you receive any reply to that?

Dr. McCORKLE. No reply whatever.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know what became of the letter, Mr. McCorkle?

Dr. McCORKLE. I have no idea—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Now, I would like to read you a letter—

Dr. McCORKLE (interrupting). Except I saw some printed letters showing Mr. Murphy had received it; and I got word from Mr. Gilmore that it had gone to Mr. Murphy.

Chairman WALSH. That he had given it to Mr. Murphy?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

(The unread portion of said letter was as follows:)

"English-speaking tenants are complaining of lesser discriminations among themselves. Some time ago each tenant who wished was permitted to buy and install a kitchen sink and put a faucet in for running water. (Some of the higher-salaried officials even have bathtubs.) But this privilege to put in a faucet and sink is no longer allowed. Many women have to carry all the water they use from a hydrant outside, hydrants being allowed outside, one to every four houses. Since all the village lies on sloping lands, this means much carrying up and down hill.

"The company has built, in the English-speaking part of town, a privy for each house. But among some of the foreigners it has built only one privy for 10 houses. This is not so bad now that some of the houses are not occupied. (On account of the Colorado coal strike fewer men are now employed than at any time since the village was built up.) But it was very bad when the mine was working full time, and every house had four to eight occupants or even more. Since there have never been any more privies in that part of the village you can imagine the unwholesome conditions under which the men were forced to live.

"I will say, however, for Supt. Weed and his assistant, Mr. Tucker, that they are considerate in directing the men at their work. The men appreciate this.

"Most of the men here work 10 hours per day, 6 days per week. Their wages range from $1.10 per day to a little over $3 per day. In other metal mines of the West it is largely true that the men work 8 hours per day and get from $2 to $5 per day.

"I can think of 6 to 10 men in the camp who work from 11 to 13 hours per day, 7 days a week regularly. Until work was cut down 3 months ago many men had to work on Sundays, and several now work a part of every Sunday. There is one man who, up to July 4, 1914, had not had a Sunday or a holiday off for 5 years. Frequently during that time he worked 36 hours at a stretch, except for meals. He got to take the last fourth only by exchanging work with the night man; he paid for the holiday by doing 22 consecutive hours of work.

"Unreasonably long hours of work do anything but create a cordial feeling for the company. Yet we are told that this camp, with perhaps one exception, is the best that the company has.

"Since we began our work here some changes for the better have been made. I told you, did I not, that Mr. Gaddis had the raffle removed from the company store?

"The schoolhouse has been somewhat remodeled this summer. Another room has been made by dividing an old one, and more windows have been added. Last winter the first and second grades met in a small, one-room building. All the other grades met in two poorly-lighted rooms of a different building, in the shadow of a big hill. Sometimes classes had to close at a few minutes after 3 o'clock for want of light. There was almost nothing in the way of equipment. Boys and girls here are much behind children of the same age elsewhere. After we saw the school facilities we understood why.

"An additional teacher is to be put in this winter, I am glad to say. Last winter there were 40 children in the primary teacher's one room. Some playground apparatus is also to be added to the school equipment.

"Mr. Gaddis got motion pictures for us the 1st of last July. We now have pictures two nights a week. Prior to this no recreation had been provided, although the camp had been running 10 or 12 years. There is a hall which can be rented for lodge meetings, weddings, and dances. There is the church building, with auditorium and one small anteroom. The company has made no other provision for community life whatever.

"The company owns everything, and the townspeople are allowed no liberty in providing anything for themselves. For instance, when Mr. Bowers, of Denver, wanted the church built as it is, where it is, his wish was final. Life here is very dull for those who do not have homes of their own. During much of the year the saloons at Hartville, 1 mile distant, offer the sole place for friendly, informal visiting, the only escape from solitude in ill-furnished rooms. A need for some decent place for men to gather of evenings has long been felt by many of the people here, and found expression some time before our arrival; that is, there were a large number who put their names to a respectful petition or request for such a building. The petition was completely ignored, they tell us, no answer whatever being returned.

"Permitted to own nothing, permitted to confer about nothing, the people have grown to feel that the company cares very little about them or their wishes.

"A year or so ago men had to pay $35 and $50 to get some of the most dangerous jobs; they even had to pay for promotions. It grew so burdensome that some of the foreigners made a fuss about it. Those who reported it were discharged. But the shake-up has resulted in a stop being put to the worst of it.

"However, there were other forms of graft that continued to flourish.

"There is one foreman, F. W. Knable, whom we found running a little business of his own. An American of good standing first told us what he was doing; now the men who work under him are verifying it. However, they do not wish us to make their names public, thus causing them to be discharged.

"Four months ago this foreman forced the men working under him to buy raffle tickets on a watch worth probably $12, perhaps less. Since he sold more than $50 of the tickets, he had a clear gain of about $40. Nor was this an unusual proceeding on his part. He was known as chief among those who ran raffles; and raffles had been running about twice a month; that is, every pay day.

"Men who wanted to keep their jobs felt that they must buy his raffle tickets. Those who did not buy were liable to be discharged on the least of pretexts. Those who bought heavily were rewarded by freedom to loaf on their jobs.

"When Mr. Gaddis was here in the latter part of May we protested emphatically in behalf of the men. Since then he has not sold any more raffle tickets, in so far as we have heard. We do not know how soon he may begin it again, but hope it has ceased permanently.

"Another scheme he works, which causes much ill feeling among the men, is insurance. He is agent for the Continental Casualty Co., of Chicago, and also treasurer of division 9018 of this company. Every man who works under Mr. Knable must become insured in his company. If one does not, either he is discharged or he is forced to work at the lowest wage in that department, no matter what his merits may be. Most of the foreigners belong to mutual-benefit societies of their own, so this compulsory insurance means actual hardship for them.

"Several of the other foremen are agents of other companies, but no one else seems to abuse the business so much as Mr. Knable.

"When it comes to graft, however, the company doctor is chief. An American woman who has been here several years has described him as 'the most brazen grafter of them all.'

"Every man working for the company pays a dollar a month for medical treatment. This money is taken out of every man's check. Out of this money the doctor gets $100. He also gets house rent, from this source or some other. (Houses such as his are rented by the company at $22 per month.)

"Anyone who gets hurt in the mine the doctor treats free of charge. But suppose a man has never been hurt in the mine, but has paid his dollar regularly, if some day he happens to break a leg while not at work or gets hurt in some other way, he must, in most cases, pay the doctor a fee to get treatment. And the doctor gets his money from the man's check, regardless of the patient's financial circumstances.

"The doctor's usual price for setting broken limbs is $25—$15 for setting and $10 for one subsequent visit. I know of two such cases; also of two instances where he has charged $15 for lancing a boil or for performing a similar operation.

"He charges $25 for ordinary confinement and $50 for any confinement case where he uses instruments. And he charges whether he attends or not. Three reliable Americans tell us of one man who was discharged from the camp because he refused to pay a fee to Dr. Foster, the company doctor. He had been obliged on account of Dr. Foster's absence to call in another physician. Some say that Dr. Foster's bill was $10, others say that it was $30.

"In one case Dr. Foster arrived at a house several hours after the child was born. Twice afterwards he walked a few rods to the house for simple visits. But at the end of the month he stopped the man's check and took out $25. There had been short work in the mine that month for the woman's husband. When the $25 was taken from the check in addition to house rent just $5 was left to buy coal, food, and other things necessary for a living.

"The C. F. & I. Co. runs a hospital in Pueblo for the benefit of its employees. No one may go there, however, unless sent by the camp physician. And this camp physician chooses to be bribed for such service. I have talked with men in this camp who have paid him certain sums of money to get their friends sent to the hospital.

"Some years ago the Italians sent in a petition to the company against this doctor. Either because Dr. Foster is a stockholder in the company or because he is closely related to the head surgeon of the company (perhaps for both reasons) the petition has not been heard from, except that the Italians are now the special objects of the doctor's wrath.

"Dr. Foster is so sure of his position and of his salary that he has become careless. One man, whose foot had been crushed, waited 20 days for attendance. When his foot began to gangrene, the doctor came around. But the man is now lame. The friends of another man are sure he died needlessly. The doctor would promise to come at 8 o'clock in the morning, would be hindered by such serious business as playing tennis, and appear at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The doctors at Pueblo told the sick man's friend that if he had been sent to the hospital three days earlier he could have been saved.

"Dr. Foster makes a practice of being out of almost every kind of medicine, and of charging extremely high prices for such as he has. One man, who has been paying a dollar a month for eight years, and who in all that time has never received any free treatment, was charged 50 cents for four headache pills.

"Both Americans and foreigners have told us that they are afraid to say anything against this doctor for fear he will take revenge.

"I think I have told you enough to indicate the kind of abuses that provoke most resentment among the people here.

"It is interesting to note that the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. is going to fight the Colorado State campaign under the caption of "Law and order." Why does the company not send some one to find out what is going on in their own camps? I have given you well-established facts, which any careful investigator could have discovered as easily as we. It is within the company's power not only to find out, but to correct abuses.

"We have heard remarks coming from two official sources here, charging that the company owns and operates the railroad in violation of law, and that in the mine many of the State laws in regard to mining are violated. There are also charges of interference with voters. We have not investigated these charges. Would it not be well for the company to clear itself before claiming to stand for law and order?

"Yours, as ever,"

Chairman WALSH. Now, I will read you a letter dated October 31, 1914, that this commission required Mr. Welborn, the president of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. to produce [reading]:

"[The Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., Denver, Colo. J. F. Welborn, president.]

"OCTOBER 31, 1914."

That was August 31, I believe that you said, 1914?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH (reading):

"MY DEAR MR. MURPHY: I have yours of the 29th instant regarding charges made against certain of our employees at Sunrise, Wyo., by a lady living at that place. The name of the person signed to the paper which you sent me is the same as that of the minister at Sunrise, and I assume that she is the minister's wife."

That was correct?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH (reading):

"At the time of the Ludlow affair the minister was very outspoken in his criticism of the coal companies, but seemed to regret his action when informed of the facts concerning that disturbance."

Is that correct?

Dr. McCORKLE. I don't think I regretted it. I regretted that the company should misunderstand what I had said, and should state that I had asked for an indiscriminate slaughter of people. I said nothing of that kind nor urged that anything should be done, except through legal acts, punishing men for treason.

Chairman WALSH. Well, that was the sermon you have already given?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. This letter goes on as follows:

"He has socialistic tendencies, however, and I have been informed that his wife is a Greek, yet they may be both perfectly honest, and it is possible the charges made by the lady are true. At the same time it is rather hard to understand that such practices as the doctor is charged with could have been indulged in without our hearing complaints from other quarters, unless the mine superintendent and others in authority are in the conspiracy with him.

"The matter is of such grave importance that I will have it investigated thoroughly at once, and, of course, will advise you of the results."

Now, has that investigation been had?

Dr. McCORKLE. No hearing has been given to the people who make the allegations. I will say that Mr. Gaddis came in the first part of November and said the company was going to take the matter up, and he wanted to know if the people would testify, and they promised to testify to us; and said if the company would give them this guarantee that because of testifying that it would not cause their discharge, or they would not discriminate against them, let some impartial man come that they could depend upon not disclosing their names, they would come before him; and nothing was done.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you say that some time you were informed there was a disposition on the part of the company to have you removed. Now, when was that, with reference to this complaint made by your wife?

Dr. McCORKLE. It was prior to that complaint. But I had a letter from Mr. Gaddis, along in the summer, mentioning the company, and saying that the company had brought pressure upon Mr. Forde to have me removed.

Chairman WALSH. Do you and did you challenge the authority of this company to interfere with your ministry out there?

Dr. McCORKLE. I said if they wanted to put me out they would have to evict me. I knew they could do that, but would not like to, because they would not want the publicity.

Chairman WALSH. To evict you from your home and this church?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. I will read further from this letter of Mr. Welborn's [reading]:

"We have thought some of changing the minister at Sunrise, but have refrained from taking a course that would be unfair to him, or would indicate a prejudice against him because of what may have been simply indiscreet statements in connection with the Ludlow outbreak.

"The charges against the doctor rather overshadow those made against the foreman referred to, yet I shall investigate the latter quite as thoroughly as the former, and if I find that the charges against the foremen are correct, I shall not only put a stop to the practices, but dispense with the services of the men who have been guilty.

"Yours, very truly,

"J. F. WELBORN."

Dr. McCORKLE. I will say that I think the offenses have had a stop put to them. There has been no inquiry of the people who have been wronged to get their testimony; but the men who were guilty, of course, were not removed. I have no disposition to want to be vindictive against the men, to force them to be removed, but I think the company should remove the very thing that caused the trouble.

Chairman WALSH. That is, the taking of money out of the pay checks?

Dr. McCORKLE. Giving them access to the pay checks.

Chairman WALSH. Now, as to this correspondence you had through your wife and this lady and Mr. Gilmore and Mr. Murphy—was Mr. Gilmore connected with this company in any way?

Dr. McCORKLE. I don't know; but I think no.

Chairman WALSH. Well, after that, then, the net result might be said to have been that the complaints in regard to this doctor discontinued, did they?

Dr. McCORKLE. I have heard none since that time.

Chairman WALSH. You have heard none since?

Dr. McCORKLE. Excepting this: There are complaints that he speaks to them very harshly. The foreign people are afraid of him, because of his harsh speaking, and, as they say, they don't think they are getting the treatment they ought to get. I can not say whether that is his fault or whether it is not.

Chairman WALSH. Now it might be fair to say as a result of this, that conditions have been improved?

Dr. McCORKLE. I think so; and what is more, when I was getting ready to come here a number of people told me that they felt conditions had been greatly improved, and, as some of them put it, they were mighty glad somebody was going to have a chance to come back here and tell how conditions actually were.

Chairman WALSH. Did you know that Mr. Welborn assumed the authority to change ministers at your charge? He says, "We have thought some of changing ministers."

Dr. McCORKLE. I never knew it, until I read the quotation from that letter published in the paper.

Chairman WALSH. And you are not leaving your charge? You expect to stay?

Dr. McCORKLE. Well, I don't know whether I should say "expect." We expect things we are certain of. But after that letter I got warning me that further criticism of the company was likely to cause me to lose my position, I do not know who is going to come out ahead, but I am going to stay until they find out they are able to get me out.

Chairman WALSH. You are not going unless you are evicted by process of law?

Dr. McCORKLE. That is it.

Chairman WALSH. Unless your own church authority—

Dr. McCORKLE. Unless the church authority or the people there want to change, or unless the company comes and throws me out of the house.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Weinstock would like to ask you some questions.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Let me ask you, Mr. McCorkle, by whom is your church supported?

Dr. McCORKLE. My church is supported, one-half by the board of home missions—half of my salary has been coming from the board of home missions of New York City, of the Presbyterian Church; the other half from contributions of the people. The people, however, subscribed so much this year that we reduced the application for aid $5 a month, and they give $5 a month more than half of my salary—the congregation does. I get $1,200 a year.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And $600 is paid by the board of home missions?

Dr. McCORKLE. Last year $600 was paid by the board of home missions. This coming year, $540 will be paid by the board of home missions.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How large a congregation have you?

Dr. McCORKLE. Well, they count everybody who contributes to the church as a member of the congregation, in the annual voting. They have 85 members, though, of the church properly speaking.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then the company does not contribute anything to the support of your church?

Dr. McCORKLE. The only thing that is contributed is $2.50 from the company store. The company store gives $2.50 to the trustees every month. I was—well, I got very angry along in the summer. I got a letter from a brother minister who wrote me to keep quiet, saying that the company would probably give me my house rent and fuel free pretty soon; and I thought it was an offer from the company, and I sent back some pretty warm remarks. But I came to find out, according to his statement, that no suggestion of that kind had come from any company official, so I do not blame that upon the company now.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, does the company own the church building and ground?

Dr. McCORKLE. It owns everything, the church building, the grounds, the hall, the homes, the roads—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (interrupting). Does the company exact a rental for the use of the church from the congregation?

Dr. McCORKLE. It exacts—it has a contract calling for, as I mentioned in my report, 6 per cent interest on the price of the building.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In lieu of rent?

Dr. McCORKLE. That is practically a rental contract, because they are not allowed ownership. That is $180 a year, and that has not been paid, as I mentioned.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you pay rent for your home?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. To the company?

Dr. McCORKLE. To the company.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What rent do you pay?

Dr. McCORKLE. The same as the other men—$10.50 a month.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How large a house have you?

Dr. McCORKLE. I have a four-room house, the same as the other English-speaking people.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How large a family have you?

Dr. McCORKLE. Just myself and wife. I was married only a little over a year ago.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How many miners are there in Sunrise?

Dr. McCORKLE. Well, some of the company men told me just before more men were put on at work that there were a little over 250 on the pay roll. I suppose about 300 are on the pay roll now—and perhaps a few over 300.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What proportion of those are foreigners, and what proportion are English-speaking people?

Dr. McCORKLE. Well, a large majority are foreign people, though a number of foreign-born people are Cornishmen from England, and they live with the English-speaking people, and there are really no lines of distinction between them and the American-born people.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, I take it the body of the foreigners who do not speak English are Catholics, are they not?

Dr. McCORKLE. About two-thirds of the community, I should say, are non-English speaking. They do speak English, but I say they come from non-English-speaking countries. Most of them speak English now.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What is the proportion of those who are members of your church, and what is the proportion who are members of the Catholic Church?

Dr. McCORKLE. There are none of them members of my church. Virtually all of them are members of the Greek and Roman Catholic Churches; but several of them are contributors to the trustees of my church, and are counted as members of the congregation.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I see. So, just in what way would you come into personal touch with the Greeks and Italians?

Dr. McCORKLE. I go to their homes and visit them in a friendly way.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Just as a pastor would?

Dr. McCORKLE. Just as a pastor would. I tell them plainly that I don't want to get them to leave their church. I think it is a very foolish thing to try to get the people in the Catholic Church to come over and be poor Protestants, or in the Greek Catholic Church to come over; but I like to be acquainted with them, and do everything I can to help them.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then you do not preach to them in any way except as they voluntarily come to your church?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes; that is all.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then, what does Mr. Bowers mean when he said you should keep the Greeks and Italians down?

Dr. McCORKLE. It was not Mr. Bowers, but the company physician, who said I should help them keep the Greeks and Italians down. Why that was mentioned—as I mentioned in my report, I made a visit to an Italian, who had been injured, and suggested that they get a nurse; and when five of the Italian men, men of families, mostly substantial men, came to me and asked that I telephone for a nurse, I thought nothing of going and phoning down to Cheyenne and getting a nurse for them. And he said that was stirring them up.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I see. Well, would you hold the company responsible for his sentiments and strictures?

Dr. McCORKLE. I think, undoubtedly, everybody in Sunrise understands that he is more powerful than the superintendent; that he can take money out of pay checks against the superintendent's orders.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, has he power to dictate the policy of the company?

Dr. McCORKLE. In how far—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (Interrupting). Outside of medical matters?

Dr. McCORKLE. He is able to dictate the policy of the company in regard to financial matters, and in regard to where getting his pay is concerned; and people are not able to tell how much further he dictates the policy of the company; but I believe he does.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That he is the dominating power?

Dr. McCORKLE. That he is the dominating power of the company in Sunrise.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That he exercises more power than the superintendent does?

Dr. McCORKLE. I think undoubtedly he does. I think the company owes it to its superintendent at Sunrise—that it is due to his general kindness and consideration for the men that there was no strike at Sunrise.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are the men at Sunrise organized?

Dr. McCORKLE. The men in the railroad work are organized.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are the miners organized?

Dr. McCORKLE. It is a closed shop against union miners.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How do the wages, so far as you know, compare in that mine with wages in other mines in Wyoming?

Dr. McCORKLE. Well, they are decidedly less than the wages of the metal miners throughout the West.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Can you give us the percentage—any estimate?

Dr. McCORKLE. My estimate is that they are about two-thirds less.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. About two-thirds?

Mr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, what is the average wage of the miner in Wyoming, outside of this company?

Dr. McCORKLE. Do you mean coal miners?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Coal miners.

Dr. McCORKLE. These are iron miners. I have reference now to metal mining.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Take the metal miners in Wyoming, so far as you know.

Dr. McCORKLE. So far as I know, there are almost no metal mines in Wyoming; but in Colorado and Arizona and Montana, I should say the wages are about $3.50 to $4 a day for the kind of work you would get at Sunrise for say, for $2.65.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. So that in reference to figures, it is about one-third less?

Dr. McCORKLE. That is what I said; yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Were you present yesterday when—

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (continuing). And heard the testimony of Mr. Gaddis?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You heard me quote from Dr. Goodnow?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You are familiar with Dr. Goodnow's attitude in the matter of strikes?

Dr. McCORKLE. Not very familiar; no, sir; I am not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then let me read it, to refresh your memory—a question put to the doctor when he was on the witness stand. Dr. Goodnow, as you know, is president of the Johns Hopkins University.

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (reading):

"Question. Taking a concrete case, Doctor, taking the case for example, of the Colorado situation, and analyzing it, let us see what your counsel in the matter would lead to. The governor ordered out the militia in connection with some coal strike that took place in Colorado. There was a conflict of testimony there as to the cause and effect. The national guardsmen maintain that they fought in self-defense, that they were first attacked by the strikers. The strikers deny that, and claim that the initiative was taken on the part of the national guardsmen, which led to riot. Let us assume for the purpose of our illustration, and for the purpose of our analysis, that the workers are correct in their statement, and that the militia did take the initiative, and did abuse their power, and did harass and fire upon innocent people. Your advice and counsel under those circumstances to the worker is, take the result? Yield for the time being, do not attempt to take the short cut and get immediate redress, but recognize the existing authorities and abide by their demand? Let your remedy come by use of the ballot; see to it that the commander in chief that is responsible for this is either recalled under your recall law or is condemned by public sentiment and not reelected? Do I follow you?

"Dr. Goodnow. Yes, sir; it seems to me that any other advice is going to lead to anarchy. It seems to me that the fundamental proposition you have to start with is that we must have peace, and we shall not recognize any such thing legally as right to restrain the constituted authorities. The right of revolution or violence or anything of that sort. We must as civilized men adopt that idea or else there is no peace for our Government.

"Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In other words, the short cut to the remedy must be condemned?

"Dr. Goodnow. Yes, sir; as I look at it.

"Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And that it is better for a group of men to suffer from real or fancied injuries temporarily than to have chaos prevail?

"Dr. GOODNOW. Certainly. One of the many troubles seems to be the workers in the country will never gain anything by any such thing as organized violence. The people as a whole condemn it, and they can do very much better by presenting their case as forcibly as it can be to the courts, where that is possible, or to the public as a whole."

That question was put to Mr. Gaddis, as you will recall, and this was Mr. Gaddis's reply:

"I lived in Cincinnati, or near Cincinnati, at the time of the great riots there. The courts of Cincinnati were turning out murderers scot-free almost by the dozen. There was one colored man there committed a brutal murder in a livery stable, and there was scarcely a shadow of a doubt that he was a murderer; and the citizens of Cincinnati went to the music hall in a mass, and that city was in the hands of a mob for days. I believe that riot did good."

"Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then you are a believer in riots, Dr. Gaddis?"

"Dr. GADDIS. I am in such instances; yes, sir."

"Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is, you justify rioting?"

"Dr. GADDIS. I justify clarifying the atmosphere that has become so polluted and fetid that a man is asphyxiated in it when he holds his head up."

Then there are some intervening questions, and the testimony continues as follows:

"Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Summing up, then, despite the fact that you are a clergyman, a Christian clergyman, who stands for peace and for law, and for order, you would justify resistance to the constituted authorities if, in the judgment of a group or an individual, they felt they were not getting a square deal at the hands of the constituted authorities?"

"Dr. GADDIS. In very rare instances I would. Crime is crime, whether it is committed with the ermine of a judge or a jury, or anybody else—it is crime."

"Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Would you punish such crime?"

"Dr. GADDIS. I would certainly try to get them out of power."

"Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, if a body of strikers, in their mistaken notion of how to get at their rights—ill advised and ill guided and misdirected—should take the short cut and resist the authorities and resort to violence, would you punish them for having done so?"

"Dr. GADDIS. If a body of strikers should do that?"

"Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes."

"Dr. GADDIS. Well, that would depend on all of the circumstances leading up to that expression."

"Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, you are thoroughly familiar with the circumstances in Colorado, of course. You told us you were there from start to finish. Would you punish the strikers who resorted to violence in the State of Colorado?"

"Dr. GADDIS. I would not."

"Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You would not?"

"Dr. GADDIS. No, sir."

"Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You would let them go scot free?"

"Dr. GADDIS. Well, I am inclined to think I would."

Now, here you have the two extremes; you have the attitude of Dr. Goodnow, who believes in law and order, and he tells us that any remedy for industrial ills is through the ballot; and here you have the sentiment of Dr. Gaddis, whom I think is equally honest in his opinion, who takes the opposite view and justifies resort to violence—in other words, justifies the short cut where men feel they are not getting what they are entitled to at the hands of the constituted authorities. Now, kindly tell us with which of the two gentlemen you agree?

Dr. McCORKLE. I must answer that question at some length, and I hope you will bear with me patiently.

This world, and the various nations of this world, from the earliest history we have, has been struggling, so far as most of the inhabitants are concerned, toward the establishment of law, has been struggling toward the establishment of certain principles, a summary of which is given in the Ten Commandments. Law is an expression of those principles, and the great effort that humanity is engaged in—one of the greatest efforts it is engaged in is to establish the authority of the law and to secure submission to the legally constituted authorities.

For a long time in the state of savagery a man thought, if he was put up in a place of authority, that he was under no law, but was outside of the law. After a while they found out it would not work. If you put a man up in the position of a king or judge, and he went raving crazy, you would not keep him; you would not have him as a constituted legal authority. Some of the nations left insane people like that go on in their madness and it worked great harm, and they found they would have to change that. The idea began to dawn on the people that the officer himself is subject to the law.

You remember the old story of King Ahab and Naboth's vineyard; he wanted it, and he was King, and the laws of the land did not restrain him. And King Ahab, through the work of Jezebel, went over and, independently of the law, took Naboth's vineyard. And you remember that the prophet said that Ahab and his house should be destroyed; and they brought about the destruction of the house of Ahab, applying the idea that even a king ought to be subject to the law.

"And the King, O Lemuel, shall drink no wine." That is an expression of the same idea. If you are in a position of authority you should be subject to the law, the principles laid down in the Ten Commandments.

We have the same thing with respect to the judiciary. I suppose there is no country in the world where the judges are respected so much as they are in England. You know how Bacon, as great as he was, allowed some one to give him gifts in a case he was judging, and how all England condemned Bacon, and he felt it grievously; and the judges are respected in England to-day on account of that.

As to the judges in this country, the condition is different. We have Judge Phillips in Kansas City going out on a railroad train furnished by the railroad whose case he was judging and Judge Grosscup getting rich while he was a judge. The judges are not respected as much in this country as they are in England, and they do not have the force and authority with the people, because the people say, "You, as judges, are not subject to the principles and the laws like you ought to be."

In southeastern Colorado you have the coal companies selecting officials, not for the purpose of having those officials submissive to the law, not for the purpose of having those officials give expression to the law or to enforce it, but to prevent its enforcement. In other words, you are putting anarchists in the positions of officials; men who do not submit to the law but try to prevent the laws from being enforced; and you have the companies employing bodies of armed men and those men being enlisted in the militia.

You have anarchists in authority, men who recognize no law and no principle, but who are there and serving the company who is paying them rather than enforcing the laws of their State.

Now, place yourself in that situation; suppose you are a miner down there in Colorado. Here are some anarchists over you, and you try to reach them through the laws of your State, as they did in the case of that effort to recall that judge at Trinidad, and they stepped in and threw you in jail in violation of your rights to act under the law. They are merely anarchists and men who are subject to the law no more than a crazy man would be. They come to your homes with those men, armed with deadly weapons, and they aim a gun at your wife. You say, "My hands are tied; this man represents the legally constituted authorities." These anarchists the company has put in to violate the law are legally constituted authorities, but they are not observing the law; they are violating it; they have begun the violation of the law themselves; and you say, "I can not raise my hands to protect my wife and children; I can not do anything to save my home from ruin; I am perfectly helpless, because these anarchists who have been put here by the companies to violate the law have got the names officials"; and you sit down and let your family be killed. If you did, I do not think you would do what is right. I think you should oppose the anarchists who are put in by these companies to violate the laws of the country. I think it is just as bad for the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. to undertake to destroy the lives of the people, in violation of the laws of the country, by men called officials, as it was for King Ahab, who was an officer, to destroy the life of Naboth in violation of his country's laws. And I think that any minister who has a sense of justice will say that when the law is being violated by the men who pretend to be its exponents, when you have the anarchist in the position of an official, and he is there ready to kill your family, and you have no other recourse, then it is not only your right but your duty to defend yourself by force.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are we to understand from that, Mr. McCorkle, that you are in perfect accord with the opinion expressed by Dr. Gaddis?

Dr. McCORKLE. I think I am in perfect accord with the opinion expressed by Dr. Goodnow when he said we should work for peace. What I said in my report was that we should execute these men and kill off those persons working against our Government in employing this armed force to create that condition. I am in sympathy with Dr. Gaddis's statement that if you were in Colorado where you had anarchists set in positions of authority above you and preventing your actions which under the laws of the State were guaranteed to you, you had a perfect right to stand up against them and defend your family; and if I had been there I should have done everything in my power to defend the lives of myself and family and those people being oppressed by the anarchists this company was hiring.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In other words, you indorse the action of the strikers; you think that they were justified in resisting and resorting to force?

Dr. McCORKLE. I think they certainly were.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And your reason for thinking so is that they were being robbed of their rights?

Dr. McCORKLE. My reason for thinking so is that anarchists were in the positions of officers, and the laws of the State could not be enforced to protect them and save their lives from destruction.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And you think the way pursued by the strikers of Colorado, which we will have to call the "short cut," is the most effective way of bringing about the change in conditions?

Dr. McCORKLE. I think the only cut is most effective.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is the only cut, you say?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes; that is the only cut. I think, when there can be legal action taken, that should be done, but when they come into your homes and undertake to destroy the lives of your wife and children, then you have no alternative, you have no opportunity to do otherwise. The company officials who deliberately put men there to violate the law that created a state of anarchy, they were the instigators of the men who began the violence.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then if the strikers were justified in resorting to violence, as you have said, I suppose all of the citizens of this country who find themselves in the same position would be equally justified?

Dr. McCORKLE. It becomes a man's duty to stand up for the laws of the country and their administration against the men who, by violence, are undertaking to overthrow them.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. A little while ago you asked me to imagine myself a coal miner living under those conditions and being robbed of my civil and political rights. I have not been a coal miner, but have lived under relatively like conditions. If you are at all familiar with the political conditions of the State of California, of which State I happen to be a citizen, you are doubtless aware of the fact that for 40 long years we had political anarchy in that State. The government of the whole Commonwealth was in the palm of the hand of the railroad companies, and I, in common with the rest of my fellows, was robbed of my political rights. This will illustrate it. I remember on one occasion, living in Sacramento, when coming down to the polls to vote one morning overhearing a political boss of that community say to one of his henchmen, pointing to a friend of mine: "Say, Bill, there is one of those purity chaps. He thinks he is going to vote for his candidate, but whether he casts his ballot for the Republican candidate or for the Democratic candidate, damn him, he will be voting for my candidate, because I own them both." That was the condition in the State of California for 40 years, and we all knew it.

Dr. McCORKLE. Just like Colorado.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, from your point of view, you would be justified in organizing a vigilante committee and using guns to wipe out the political bosses, henchmen, and ward heelers?

Dr. McCORKLE. Did they come into your house with guns and threaten the lives of your people?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No.

Dr. McCORKLE. He could, but he didn't?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That was the case; the railroads absolutely controlled that thing, the judges and the legislature, and no man would even think of being elected to the position of dog poundmaster without getting the railroad companies to recommend him.

Dr. McCORKLE. I would have done in that case as I did at Sunrise and gone to work and got people enough behind me to bring about a change without violence. You say they did not come into your house with guns?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No.

Dr. McCORKLE. If they had done that, they would not have left me anything but force. So long as they withhold force, I withhold force. The trouble in Colorado was the company was the first to use force and violence.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In Colorado?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You are familiar, are you, with the facts in Colorado?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you aware of the fact that the strike was called—do you remember, Mr. Walsh? I think it was about the 15th of September, if I remember right.

Chairman WALSH. A little over a week after that—September 23.

Dr. McCORKLE. I think it was September 23.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. My recollection of the dates is defective, but I remember this: That the strike was declared on the 23d, and we have testimony in our record, which I think has not been contradicted, that on the 12th of September, 10 or 11 days before the strike was declared, the coal miners went into the neighboring communities and bought up all the arms and ammunition, anticipating there was going to be a scrap and preparing themselves for the scrap.

Dr. McCORKLE. They were doing nothing more than the coal companies were doing in buying machine guns and ammunition, were they?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Admitting that the coal companies were doing that, it takes two to make a scrap, doesn't it?

Dr. McCORKLE. Certainly.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Have you read the testimony in the case carefully?

Dr. McCORKLE. Before the commission?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes; and other commissions.

Dr. McCORKLE. No, sir; only a part of it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you aware of the fact that at least to my mind—I do not know how my fellow commissioners feel in the matter because we have not discussed it among ourselves and have reached no conclusion—I have yet to be convinced that the representatives of the authorities took the initiative and were the first to fire on the strikers.

Dr. McCORKLE. I do not think it was the representatives of the authorities, but the representatives of the coal companies, more or less independently.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No; I think the testimony shows that those who took an active part—

Dr. McCORKLE (interrupting). Who was the first man killed?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I do not remember.

Dr. McCORKLE. Gerald Lipplatt; he was murdered by hired gunmen in the employ of the company. Bear in mind, when I said I would not use force until they first used force, I did not mean to say I would not keep a gun in the house if I knew they are getting guns.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Let me ask you this question: You are a Christian minister, are you not?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You said a little while ago that you were earning $1,200 a year?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I do not say this to flatter you, but because I believe it; I am sure a man with your mentality and character and ability could, in some other walk of life, earn more than $1,200 a year, and I take it the difference between what you are earning and what you could earn in other walks of life is your contribution to the cause of religion.

Dr. McCORKLE. I want to say that I was offered the superintendency of the Neighborhood House at Gary, Ind., paying about $1,300 a year, with the use of a house, etc., which amounted to $1,500 or $1,600 a year as compared with what I am getting now. I could have gotten a $2,000 position with the Government, but I am working for the good of the working people.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You are working in a cause?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And that cause is religion?

Dr. McCORKLE. Well, there is a difference in what is called religion. Mr. Bowers and I had a controversy about what religion means. I am working for the religion of Christ.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I take it you are a Christian clergyman?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And you are preaching Christianity because you believe that to be true generally?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And you believe what Jesus taught, that those things are the things that human kind ought to do?

Dr. McCORKLE. I certainly do.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And your aim is to have your fellow workers to follow in the footsteps of it?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And observe His injunctions; is that right?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you believe the injunctions that were offered by Jesus are practical injunctions and should be observed?

Dr. McCORKLE. I do.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You do?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You would consider yourself derelict in your duty, then, if you violated those injunctions, would you not?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And that you could not be a consistent Christian teacher unless you followed in the footsteps of Jesus and followed out the injunctions laid down by the great Master?

Dr. McCORKLE. That is correct.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then how do you reconcile your statement that you would resort to force under circumstances—under such conditions, with this statement of the Master, who said, speaking of the law, "Whosoever shall break one of the least of the Commandments and shall teach men so, shall be called the least in the Kingdom of Heaven; but whosoever shall do and teach them shall be called great in the Kingdom of Heaven"; and further, "Resist not him that is evil, but when thine enemy smite thee on one cheek, turn the other also"; and furthermore, "A disciple is not above his teacher nor a servant above his master."

Dr. McCORKLE. It is easy to take a part of what Jesus said and leave the rest out. "Resist not him that is evil," you say; but how are you going to interpret the act of Jesus in taking the lash and whipping the fellows who were changing money in the Temple and overturning the seats of those who were selling doves?

Another thing Jesus tells His disciples is to let him that hath no money sell his cloak and buy a sword; you will find that in the Gospel of Luke. Now, as I look at it, it is this way: Jesus was trying to teach His disciples to work for the good of mankind. I have no doubt that Jesus would have used strong measures if He could have gotten His disciples to have the right spirit. But you know that on the way to Jerusalem, just before He was crucified, the disciples quarreled among themselves as to who should have the biggest place. It does not do any good to turn out one body of men and put in another when that is their viewpoint. Jesus was in favor of force when it took force to secure justice, but He wanted His disciples to seek for peace.

Half of the quarrels in the world arise from the fact that the first time you are hit you are ready for a scrap. Jesus said, when your enemies smite you on one cheek you should turn the other, but I do not think He meant that you should make a windmill of yourself and go around—

(Witness here interrupted by applause and laughter.)

Chairman WALSH. Let us have order, please.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are we to understand, then, that Jesus was self-contradictory; that His own utterances can be used against Him; that He preached one thing and did another; that when He said you must obey the law and respect it that He did not mean it, and when He said you should preach nonresistance He did not mean it?

Dr. McCORKLE. I do not think Jesus was self-contradictory; I do not think I am self-contradictory in trying to do anything I could. I think I would help Mr. Rockefeller or any official of the Coal & Iron Co. if they were suffering and needed it as quickly as I would anybody else; but when they are guilty of treason and when their action is costing the lives of thousands or millions of people and there is no other way of restraining them, and they provoke violence that destroys practically every possible relief, then I would say I would prosecute them, not because I am angry with them or want to punish them, but because I want to protect the lives of the people, because there is no safety.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Who would be the executioner?

Dr. McCORKLE. The men who were in control, power, and authority.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Let me see if I understand you right; you say, that if a mining company should practice anarchy and control those things; that is, put their own officials into certain places, not with the intention of observing the law, but with the intention of violating the law; that would be a case of treason in your opinion?

Dr. McCORKLE. I said hiring a private army is treason; the other is treason, but not as bad as hiring a private army.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And those who commit that kind of treason ought to be punished?

Dr. McCORKLE. I did not say I thought they ought to be punished; I do not think they ought to be punished.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What would you do?

Dr. McCORKLE. I think that we can have peace without it going that far, by trying to get people who want peace and justice to stand together and restrain them peaceably and get them to turn their talents in the right direction. They have great talents and ability, and I would not execute them as long as peace and safety could be secured without it; but my statement was that if their action ends in war, then you have come to the point where you can no longer deal with them on peaceable terms. They know exactly what the outcome of their acts will be; if they plunge the country into war then they must be executed.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Who should execute them?

Dr. McCORKLE. Well, if there ever comes war in this country, it would be well for the people on the other side to remember that the first struggle will be won by the workingmen, and then their officers, after a fair trial, should execute every one of these men before they get to quarreling among themselves, because as you know, and every student of history knows, if the workmen get control it will not be long before they will quarrel among themselves as to who should have the biggest places. And so I say that the first thing and the big thing we want to work for is peace without any war and execute no one; but if war comes, I am confident that the workingmen will be on top at the end of the first struggle, and every man who is guilty of hiring those private armies must be executed, for it is treason; so they will have no chance to come back after the working people.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Evidently I have not been able to make myself clear. Let us take this concrete case and assume that what you have said is true. Let us assume that some mining company in Colorado did unlawfully hire gunmen.

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And let us assume that those gunmen; that the actions of those gunmen did lead to riot, and that it was a treasonable act; how would you go about punishing those who had committed the treason, the conditions as they are to-day?

Dr. McCORKLE. With the conditions as they are to-day, I would put them in some sort of a hospital where they would not have a chance to get out again.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Who would have the power to do that?

Dr. McCORKLE. I would get possession of the State government in Colorado.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How would you get possession of the State government in Colorado?

Dr. McCORKLE. By going down there and working among the people.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Would you do it by force or educational methods?

Dr. McCORKLE. By telling the truth, instead of sending out bulletins like Mr. Lee has.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Would you do that through the ballot or bullet?

Dr. McCORKLE. Through the ballot, every time; I would never use force until the other fellow used it first.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You are starting out, of course, on the theory that in this case the force was used first on the side of the operators.

Dr. McCORKLE. It was.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And your foundation for making that statement is what?

Dr. McCORKLE. My foundation for making that statement is their employment of these armed—of these so-called detectives—and arming them with deadly weapons. It is a very different proposition for me to arm myself to protect my family and for another man, or me, to hire some stranger who may be ready to commit murder—to hire him and put a deadly weapon in his hands. When I have the weapon in my hands I am going to use judgment and not shoot until it is necessary, but when he has the weapon in his hands he is going to shoot or raise some kind of trouble in order to keep himself in a job.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Summing up, I want to be sure that I get your position right. Taking this very case in Colorado, your statement in brief is as follows: There was trouble between the miners and the mine operators.

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Relating to wages or working hours or working conditions in the closed shop.

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That that difference led to a strike.

Dr. McCORKLE. It did.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That the men refused to work under the conditions named by the company, and the company refused to meet the conditions named by the workers.

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And there was a hung jury.

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And the men exercised their rights and privilege and withdrew from the employment of the company.

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And the company then went out and employed gunmen.

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Exactly. And that these men, either before or after the company employed gunmen, went out and armed themselves.

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And it led to a conflict.

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In which blood was shed and lives were lost and property ruined.

Dr. McCORKLE. That is it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And that under those circumstances you would justify the strikers in having resorted to force.

Dr. McCORKLE. Under the circumstances when the other men came as aggressors into their homes in violation of the law, with anarchists holding those positions instead of law-abiding citizens, then I justify force if it was necessary to save their families from violence, when that was the last thing and only thing left.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You not only do that, I take it, but when you say that, I assume that you assume that the operators took the initiative and were the aggressors when it came to real action.

Dr. McCORKLE. I believe it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I further take it that your attitude is that when the strikers saw that the company were employing gunmen, or strike breakers, that they were justified in going out and providing themselves with arms and ammunition.

Dr. McCORKLE. They certainly were.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. They had a right to anticipate that these gunmen would use their arms and ammunition against them, armed or unarmed.

Dr. McCORKLE. That was the very thing that they were buying them for; they didn't want the gunmen to catch them unawares.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If the Colorado strikers were warranted in doing that, I take it that you do not regard them as any specially privileged class.

Dr. McCORKLE. Not at all.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And you would not give them any privilege that you would not other groups of men?

Dr. McCORKLE. Not at all.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You know that there are groups of men that have grievances all over the country?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The I. W. W.'s tell us that they have them.

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir; I have worked enough to know there are all kinds of grievances.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The Socialists and anarchists have their grievances?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And if they did exactly what the strikers did in Colorado, you would have condoned it?

Dr. McCORKLE. If they were situated as the strikers were in Colorado, with men that were not subject to the law any more than a crazy man is, setting in the seat of authority, with men with deadly weapons, men with no principle, men that were out for murder standing over them and threatening their lives, and the lives of their families, they would be justified, and you, Mr. Wein-stock, I would commend, if you defended your family in the same way.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You think that the methods pursued by the Colorado strikers in gaining what they believed to be their rights was a method, and a more acceptable method, than the people pursued in California in getting their right? There was plenty of bloodshed in the history of California; if you or I as a voter went to the primary election and attempted to assert our right, and attempted to cast our ballot as we wanted to have it, and should wait until the ballots were counted, we would go away with a broken head. Now, we labored under these disabilities; we had political anarchy for 40 years, but by doing the very things that you have suggested, by education, by agitation, we eliminated the sinners, we eliminated the anarchy, so that to-day the State of California, for example, is the brightest and truest political democracy. The government is in the hands of the people that operate it wisely and intelligently and economically. You think from your line of reasoning, if I am to apply it, that the people of California made a mistake, that 10 or 20 or 30 years ago they ought to have used the bullet and driven out the anarchists?

Dr. McCORKLE. I don't see that your case presents a parallel at all. In the first place, a man can take a bump on his head or a few bruises, it is not threatening his life or the lives of his family in most cases, but here is another thing. You could have gotten enough men together to have gone to the election in a body so that the other fellow could not have beaten you probably.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No; they had the machinery.

Dr. McCORKLE. And what you say there has been going on in Colorado right along and has been for years and years, but if they had come to your home or place of business, and every other place, and had threatened your life and the lives of your family, then I think you would have had to do something. The strikers of Colorado had borne peaceably the violence that you are speaking of for years and years, but when it got outside of the matter of election day and had become a matter of life and death, they defended themselves.

Chairman WALSH. At this point we will stand adjourned until 2 o'clock; you will please resume the stand then.

(Whereupon, at 12.30 o'clock, the commission took an adjournment until 2 o'clock p. m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION—2 P. M.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. McCorkle, please?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The substance of your answers to the questions I put this morning, Mr. McCorkle, as I gather it, is that in the case of the Colorado strikers you justify their resistance and their resorting to violence because, in your opinion, it was the last resort?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That they had no alternative?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That politically the State was in the hands of political anarchists, and that no hope and no redress could be looked for from that channel? Did I understand you right?

Dr. McCORKLE. I was endeavoring, just before we closed, to make it clear that the position that was mentioned in California, where you had merely violence in your political work, at your elections, and the position in Colorado, where there was violence both in your effort to express yourself politically and your industrial work, indicates a different situation, and that Colorado is a place where the conditions are extreme, and where violence was justified as resistance to men that were anarchists, who were not themselves submitting to the law.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I gather from that you make it a point to inform yourself of conditions there, and followed this struggle as it went along?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir; in Colorado.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then being well informed on the subject, will you be good enough to tell us what constitutional method the strikers followed before they went the limit of strike and resistance?

Dr. McCORKLE. I would not undertake to present that, because while I am assured perfectly in my own mind, I was not a man in the field, and there were men testifying before this commission that must have been acquainted with the steps taken.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Perhaps I did not understand you correctly then. I had gotten the impression from what you said a few minutes ago that you had informed yourself and was posted on the conditions there?

Dr. McCORKLE. I think that I know what the conditions were fairly well, but I don't want to give in testimony my understanding of it, when I think there are men whom the commission could call who would give it far better than I can.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know, for example, whether the strikers before they struck and before they went the limit, whether they called, for example, upon the governor to investigate the conditions under which they were laboring?

Dr. McCORKLE. The governor to investigate the conditions?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes, sir; before they resorted to the extreme measure?

Dr. McCORKLE. As I understand, they endeavored to get the operators to meet with them, and consider the trouble, and it was impossible to do it. Now—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (interrupting). Do you know of anything that they did? Pardon me, I thought you had finished.

Dr. McCORKLE. No; in regard to the governor, it is very little use to try to get an officer that does not want to do what is right to help you to get justice. I know a community in the State of Montana where the judge and liveryman in the town and a State senator and two other men were banded together and committed very serious crimes, and yet nobody could get any redress. In one case, where a trial was in progress, and indisputable evidence arose, the judge turned the jury loose for three days, and when he called them together again conviction was impossible. This same judge, a man in my congregation told me that he had sat on a jury under this same judge, and every day for 21 days that he sat on the jury that the judge was drunk, and one day he fell out of his chair. Conditions in the West make it useless to attempt an appeal to the authorities. You have to get different authorities.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. So far as you know, aside from endeavoring to come to an understanding with the operators and getting a hearing at the hand of the mine operators, you don't know of any effort that was brought on the part of the strikers before they went the limit, to pursue constitutional methods?

Dr. McCORKLE. In settling their grievances?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes, sir.

Dr. McCORKLE. I think I do know a good many cases of that kind. For instance, when Mr. Fitch was out there in Colorado making investigations about three or four years ago, there was an accident happened just when he arrived there—killing three men. The workmen wanted the coroner to investigate, but the coroner said he would not do it. He made no investigation. You appeal to an officer, and you can not get a response. There were some men, the State labor commissioners, I believe, I don't remember their official titles just exactly now, but they went to these fields and found what the conditions were, and finally were shut out, contrary to law, by some of these men in the closed camps—the company officials or company superintendents. The officers of the law that were with the company would not do anything, and the officers of the law opposed to the company were not allowed even to come in, as I understand it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. This accident, that you spoke of happening when Mr. Fitch was there, happened three or four years ago?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I want to confine our discussion, if you don't mind, to this particular strike, and I want to ask you again whether, of your own knowledge, you know of anything that the strikers did along constitutional lines to have their wrongs righted before they went the limit?

Dr. McCORKLE. I have heard that they did, and I have papers at home presenting a number of things. I remember them, but not definitely enough to give them in testimony now.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, you say a number of them?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Can't you remember some of them?

Dr. McCORKLE. I don't think so. I read the list at the time; but I wouldn't undertake to give them.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And yet you said a little while ago—you made the statement that you thought these men were justified in doing what they did, because they had exhausted every other avenue—and I am sure you would not have made such a statement without knowing what you were talking about.

Dr. McCORKLE. I am sure they exhausted every other avenue. They had a perfect right to go on strike, they were committing no offense to go on strike. It is something guaranteed them under the law of the State, and, well, Mr. Farr, if you will remember, swore in about 326 men as deputy sheriffs. He did not arm them. I believe he testified before your commission that he supposed the coal company armed them. He testified also that they might have been murderers, right from their criminal operations when he put them in, but he didn't know who to put in. He put in, I suppose, the men he was told to. He did that long before the strike began.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The justification came in resorting to violence and resisting the authorities, as you point out, was due to the fact that politically the State of Colorado was in a state of anarchy?

Dr. McCORKLE. Just that question again, please.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That the justification for resorting to violence and resisting the authorities was due to the fact, as you pointed out, that they could hope for no redress in any other direction, because the State was in a state of anarchy?

Dr. McCORKLE. You are mistaken when you say that I said that. I stated not only was the State in the hands of political anarchists, men that did not obey or submit to the law, but they had gone further, and had hired a private army, and were threatening the lives of those people with violence. When the State is merely in the hands of political anarchists, I don't believe in violence. I discriminate between your condition in California and in Colorado.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is, in Colorado, you had the California condition with the plus?

Dr. McCORKLE. With the plus of murders—men from the Mexican revolution; everywhere that they could be gathered up, men who were willing to be sold for a price to murder people. They were down there to intimidate those people and kill people in their homes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And the outlook for the immediate future politically was such that there was no hope to be sought for along those lines?

Dr. McCORKLE. No hope at all; as I understand it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you familiar with the last State election in Colorado?

Dr. McCORKLE. Somewhat.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You know, of course, that Mr. Carlson, who had been district attorney in the northern district, in which the strike had been going on since 1910, and who stood on a law-and-order platform, was elected by a majority of 37,000 over Senator Patterson, ex-United States Senator Patterson, who was a man of rare attainment, high character, and uncommon ability, but whose sympathies had been with the strikers? Therefore, Carlson was elected seemingly by a majority of 37,000, and I have not heard one whisper of any political scandal being connected with that election. You doubtless are aware of the fact that Attorney Farrar, a Democrat—Mr. Carlson was a Republican—was elected by a similar majority, showing clearly that the people voted as they wanted to vote, and were not influenced by any boss or political control. If you have heard any whisper, indicating any political scandal during that election, you have heard something that I have not heard, and I have had opportunity of hearing it, when I was in Colorado recently and discussed this matter with a great many citizens.

Furthermore, you are probably also aware that despite the strenuous efforts of the so-called interests, the recent legislative body of Colorado passed what is known as the welfare commission law, the workmen's compensation law, and the public inquiry act. Every one of these, the so-called interests, have for many years been hostile to.

Now, in view of these facts, don't you think you are mistaken when you said that the political situation in Colorado was hopeless, and that there was no likelihood of anything but political anarchy continuing to reign?

Dr. McCORKLE. The political situation in Colorado is somewhat difficult to understand by people who are not conversant with the lives of the people in Colorado and with the actual state of them.

I remember a few years ago when I was working in the harvest field, just after I graduated from college, I went to the harvest fields in Kansas, and I remember the fellow who was working alongside of me in the harvest field, he was from the Colorado mines. He had not voted but 12 times at the last election, and he said a good many he knew had voted more times than that. He told me this, and I think there is no doubt but what he was telling the truth and he had voted 12 times in the election, and I don't think it created much of a scandal.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. At this recent election?

Dr. McCORKLE. Not at this last election, but that is the state of mind in a good many communities in the State of Colorado. A man that will vote 12 times, it won't make much of scandal, but I suppose if he voted 120 times it might. Now, another thing is that Colorado is composed of people that get their livelihood from very diverse sources. I have worked on a ranch in Colorado, and mingled with them, and I know their knowledge of people that work in the mines is almost nothing, and, of course, when the coal companies had control of the State under Gov. Ammons, they were piling up debts on the farmers, which the farmers had to pay, through the taxes, and the farmers were very restless about having to pay those taxes, and they were, no doubt, a number of them, influenced to vote in favor of the present order, the present governor and legislature, because they thought maybe they could cut out the tax bills that they were going to have to pay.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you sufficiently familiar—

Dr. McCORKLE. Familiar with what?

Chairman WALSH. Were you going to say something else, Mr. McCorkle?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Please finish it.

Dr. McCORKLE. Not only do you have farmers there that are working differently, but there was a big question of prohibition in the last election in Colorado. There were many people that have just as much right to believe in not having prohibition as I or you might believe in having it, and those people seem to have influenced the Democratic convention to make a declaration in favor of retaining the saloons in Colorado, or something of that sort, and Mr. Patterson had to bear the brunt of that. Now, after that was done, a systematic effort was made by all of these various companies that were profiting by the saloons, to get a prohibition vote, and even the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. worked for prohibition. Not as I understand it, because they wanted prohibition, but because they were so vitally involved in this political struggle, that if they lost they felt that they would have to yield to the strike.

In fact, a man told me to whom Mr. Bowers spoke personally, that Mr. Bowers told him that they would have been defeated in Colorado if they had not carried that election. I have heard they spent $2,000,000 on the strike and in the election. I don't know the part they spent on the election, but I fancy a very large part of the strike and election expenses went there, because they said unless they carried the election, Mr. Bowers said, unless they carried the election, they would lose the strike.

Now, they got behind the prohibition vote in order to bring things about in favor of prohibition, to vote for their side, and as I look upon this election, it is an election that was carried by means of that prohibition vote, in addition to urging the tax question among farmers, who were not informed as to conditions in the mines. A lot of bulletins were sent out to deceive the people. A man that was informed, and had studied in school like I had, and who would pick up those bulletins, he would realize the falsehood in them. We got a bulletin saying that, for instance, Mother Jones was getting $40 a day, and some of them were getting $80 and $90 a day; it was claimed that it had come from the report of the treasurer of the United Mine Workers. I knew that it was not so. It was not long after that that I saw he article in the Survey, taking the actual figures from the treasurer's report, showing that to get the figures they had taken the salary and expenses of the man for a whole year, and added that together, and called it salary, and then had taken the expense in a second time, and published in their bulletin that this was what the treasurer's report showed that they got for nine weeks' work. Men that made them, had the figures before them, and people that can do that, can deceive the people of Colorado in an election. Those falsehoods were circulated among the people. It was shown to be false in the Survey. Mr. Welborn, according to the testimony, in the paper admitted that it was untrue on the stand, but still the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. did not rectify it. I have a large number of them, and there is that false bulletin in there, without any explanation. They waited until after the election, along in the winter, and finally I got a bulletin saying that they were misinformed, and that what they were now stating were the correct figures, and they gave the report as it was correctly.

There is a policy of deception carried on like that, and it will deceive the people until they get their eyes open as to what kind of regard a man has for the truth. I expect the bulletins at least to adhere to the truth. For instance, they said here is what the strikers have sent out to the people of Colorado, a call to rebellion. Now, the heading of that was not a call to rebellion, but a call to arms, and an appeal to arms in defense of their homes, and not to undertake to overthrow any government. They headed that falsely, and there are lots of other things that I know that are false, but they will be brought out some day. Men that can take the trouble, with the figures before them, on a page like that, and turn them around and make something else out of it and put it before the people, some of these days the farmers and all will know what regard they have for the truth, and then the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. will have to spend more than $2,000,000.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. In the election that Commissioner Weinstock mentioned, if there had been three parties, Democrat, Progressive, and Socialist in the election of Gov. Carlson over Senator Patterson, what would have been the result?

Dr. McCORKLE. I think there would have been a majority in favor of Gov. Carlson, anyhow, if all of the votes had been counted, but there is no question but what the division had this much to do with it, that they prevented those people from working together to get the votes, too.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Does not this fact remain, that the legislature passed a workmen's compensation act, which was in response to a demand on the part of the workers, that they knew that the employers were against it, and could they have passed that workmen's compensation act if the mine owners had owned the legislature?

Dr. McCORKLE. The Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. know very well that they can not own all of the legislatures in Colorado, and they know that the time is coming when political control will pass out of their hands. They have been doing in Colorado, I suppose, much like at Sunrise. It has been the custom at Sunrise that when a man got injured they would have him sign a release, releasing the company from all liability, and they wanted him to sign this release to the company before they would go ahead with their treatment, and when he did sign it they went ahead with his treatment, and I understand that they gave first aid beforehand; but while a man was needing help they demanded it, and in the last two or three years they have gotten this; the foreigners have learned that under the State law they don't have to sign it, and have refused to almost unanimously, in the last two or three years. Now, in southern Colorado they have not been paying damages, and sometimes when the political control passes out of the hands of these companies and if they have not the workmen's compensation law there will be an immense lot of damages and claims that they will have to pay. If they have a law like that to protect them, they will not have to pay them and it will limit the amount that they can be sued for. They are wise enough to see what is coming.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What are the mining conditions at this time in Colorado, Mr. McCorkle? Would you say that the State is still in the hands of political anarchists?

Dr. McCORKLE. I think it is. I am not sure about the governor. I think they probably took a better man for governor than they wanted, because of the fact that they were afraid if they didn't get him they wouldn't get anything at all. The fact that he vetoed the act of the legislature trying to abolish the courts of Judge Lindsey, who presides over the children's court—Judge Lindsey, who has done so much for the children—the fact that Gov. Carlson vetoed it, shows me that he had a little bit of independence, and that they did not actually rule him so thoroughly and so absolutely as they have ruled men before and as they have hoped to do with him.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, I suppose the governor of Colorado, as is the case of the governors in most of the States, is the real dominating power, isn't he?

Dr. McCORKLE. The governor of Colorado is the highest authority. As I understand, he has not all the powers that governors have in some of the other States. I think, for instance, if I remember rightly, in the matter of pardoning, he has not the liberty governors have in other States. I would not be sure about that, but I believe that is true. But he is the chief executive.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Would you call him a political anarchist?

Dr. McCORKLE. I said I did not know, but the fact that he vetoed the bill to get rid of Judge Lindsey leads me to hope he is not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then, do you know in what part of the administration the so-called political anarchy still remains?

Dr. McCORKLE. I think it resides in the legislature.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Despite the laws which that legislature passes, such as the workmen's compensation law, the creation of a welfare board, and the passage of the public inquiry act—you think, despite that progressive work, most of it in response to the demands of the workers, that the Legislature of Colorado is still a body of political anarchists?

Dr. McCORKLE. The amount of good that those measures will do the working people is negligible as long as the government remains in the hands of the coal company.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What is your ground for saying that the government of Colorado to-day remains in the hands of the coal company?

Dr. McCORKLE. Because every bill the coal company wanted, even to the bill abolishing Judge Lindsey's court—they hate Judge Lindsey like poison—even the bill to abolish Judge Lindsey's court was passed through the legislature.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. It is your opinion, is it, then, that no act could have been passed in the legislature unless it met with the approval of the coal company?

Dr. McCORKLE. In my opinion, everything that passed that legislature was passed with the concurrence of the coal companies.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And you believe that the workmen's—and you believe that those political anarchists passed such legislation as the welfare commission, the workmen's compensation act, and the public inquiry act?

Dr. McCORKLE. They certainly would. They all want to get the name of having done something for the people without giving them the goods. It is a very nice thing to give them a good law. They have had lots of good laws, as Mr. Gaddis testified yesterday, in Colorado. But, then, the companies have control of the officers and are able to ignore the laws. Now, why shouldn't they give us welfare commission and public inquiry act and workmen's compensation laws? And if they have got the officers, whenever they see fit, they will give us some more nice laws on the statute books, and they can go out to the other States and say, "See, here is what we are doing for Colorado."

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In other words, you have no confidence in the integrity of purpose on the part of the present administration of Colorado?

Dr. McCORKLE. I am afraid I haven't any.

Chairman WALSH. Mrs. Harriman has a question or two she would like to ask you.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Mr. McCorkle, I would like to ask you, if a workman has a right to quit his job when he wants to, why would you say the employer has not the right to discharge workmen when he wants to?

Dr. McCORKLE. That question, I believe, was brought out and was given yesterday when Dr. Gaddis was testifying.

Nearly all industry is cooperative. It means that a good many men work together. Of course, it is possible for a man who is trained to plan and to manage business, never to manage any industry except the industry he has got the brawn and skill to furnish the labor to operate. And any man with brawn and skill may never go into business he has not brains enough to manage.

But most of us furnish either brawn and skill or we furnish education and the talents of management, and perhaps some money for operation. Now, here is the situation: Not only does the employer and the company owning the business make an investment in a given point, but the people who are working there have an actual investment. At Sunrise, Wyo., I think the average cost of a man leaving there and getting another job would be more than $100; I should say $200 per man on an average. They have got their household goods, which must be sold at a sacrifice, or moved at a high cost for freight. They have got all kinds of sacrifices to make when they give up their job. So that the workingman, even though he does not directly own an interest in the plant, has a property right in the community. The employer, too, has property rights there. There is no use to go over that. We all admit that he has. Now, in working together, men with brawn and skill—labor, as we call it—on the one hand, and the men with the talent and training for the management of business on the other—employers, or whatever we may be pleased to call them—get into disputes as to how much of the returns from the industry as a whole are to go to the workingman in the way of wages and shop comforts and things of that sort, and how much are to go to the employer or the manager or the company in profits.

Well, there are six things that can be done.

The workingman can say, or the workmen, working for the company, can say, "We will quit and go somewhere else and get us a job where we can make a living;" or the employer can say, "I will quit; take my money and go somewhere else and invest it, and start up an industry and make a living there." We say that the employee has a perfect right to quit and go somewhere else if he wants to. We say that the employer has a perfect right to take his investment and go somewhere else if he wants to.

Or, again, the dispute may involve so many men that it is not convenient for them to move elsewhere and seek to invest or secure work. Then the workman can say, "We will just stop work until we get this point settled. We are not going to go off and leave and hunt another job, but we are just going to stop work and wait until we come to an agreement. We do not feel that we can live at the present basis, but we believe that an agreement can be reached on a basis on which we can live." Or the employer—the company or its management can say, "Here, we are not getting enough out of this. We can't afford to go on as it is. We will quit work and close down the shop and wait until we can come to some kind of an agreement on which we can go on with the work. We don't want to go somewhere else and invest. We want to stay." We say they both have a right to do that.

Now, of course, the subsidiary provisions under both of those heads occur. For instance, the employer, the company manager, may say, "Well, if you fellows don't want to work I will send off and get some strikebreakers that will work until you get ready to work;" or, on the other hand, the workmen may get together and say, "Here, this industry ought to be going on. We will just have somebody put in here to manage this plant until the employers get ready to operate it themselves." I believe that was done at Cincinnati in the ice plants, when they closed down here about two or three years ago—that they actually, by official actions—it was not by the workmen themselves; it was not a private matter like the employer assumes to do when he gets the strike breakers; but it was going through the regular channels of government. They did have a manager appointed.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You mean for a municipal plant?

Dr. McCORKLE. No; private plants, where the men were on strike.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What did the government have to do with that?

Dr. McCORKLE. It was a health proposition. I remember reading about it at the time, but I have not spoken about it for a long time. The city health authorities, through the city administration, appointed managers for those ice plants and said to the men, "Here are your jobs, go ahead and work until the employers get ready to go to work." Just the same proposition as the employer bringing in a strike breaker, only in that case it was done through legal channels, and not as a private act. Now, those are the next two considerations—third and fourth—with possible variations.

Then in the next place it is possible for the employer, the company manager, to say to the working man, "I don't like the way you are working. I don't like the wages I am giving you," or give no reason at all—I think Mr. Weinstock asked Mr. Gaddis about that—to give no reason at all for the discharge, but just say to the men, "Here, get out of here. We don't want you here." "Get out of here. I am going to put somebody else in your place." And the workingman has an investment there. It maybe will cost him $300 or maybe $500 to move from that place elsewhere and get work. He has property interests in the district, and he has got to sell them and he can't move them. He can't get value for them. And if there are a number of workmen discharged at once, there is no sale for their individual homes, and they have got to sacrifice them, and their household goods, too, that they can not carry with them. A great many quitting at once, those goods become almost worthless. Their property rights are ignored. They are driven out of the community, and sent elsewhere. And they destroy the property rights that the workingman has in the community. Or it is possible for the workingman to say to the company manager or to the company, "We are not satisfied with the way you are managing this business, and are not satisfied with the way you treat us," and it is possible for them to say, "Here, we don't have to give any reason, but we don't want you here at all. We want somebody else to manage this business," and make the manager of the company or the stockholders, or some of them or all of them move out and turn the business over to somebody else. Now, in that case, the employers' property rights would be disregarded, and it would be made to suffer loss just like the workingman has to do if he is discharged.

Now, it is my position that when the workingman is discharged without a just reason it is just as wrong morally and just as wrong legally, if justice were incorporated in our laws like it is going to be—it is just as wrong morally and as wrong legally for a workingman's property rights to be destroyed—say $50,000 or $100,000 worth of property—suppose there are a thousand men working in a place and they have all got to pull out and move when they don't feel like going to live at any other place, and they are discharged without any reason, and they have all got to move, and that would mean, at $100 per man for a thousand men, $100,000, or at $200 apiece, $200,000. A large part of that is destroyed for those men, from the fact of their being discharged. And I hold that the State has a right to step in and say, "Here," to the employer, "you have got no right to discharge these men without just and sufficient reason. They have property rights in this community, and we will protect them, and let them stay here." Or it may say to the workingman, when he wants to drive the employer out, or wants to drive the company manager out, "This company has a property right here. They are living in the community and working here, and have property rights. Now, you can't drive them out. You have got to give a good and sufficient reason before you can have the management of this company changed."

As I see it, there are just six propositions, and the difference between the right of a man—the rule works both ways in each case. Where you bring up the case of the workingman who quits of his own free will, and goes somewhere else to work, and the employer who quits business of his own free will and goes somewhere else and invests in industries, the rule works both ways.

Now, in the case where they could work, where the employees quit work, which is what we call a strike, and they say, "We won't work until they get this question settled." On the other hand, the employer, when he closes the shop down, says, "I am not making enough money, and I won't work until I can"; there the rule works both ways, and what is right for one is right for the other.

Now, where one undertakes, without assigning any reason, to destroy the property rights of the other—where the employer says to the employee, "Here, get out of here. Sell what you can, or anything, I don't care, just so you get out of here," he destroys the property rights of that employee. There the State has a right to step in and say, "Here, you can't do that." Or, if on the other hand, the employees say to the employer or to the management of the company, "We don't want you here and don't have to give any reason. Get out of here," why, the State has a right to step in and say, "You are wronging these men. You are destroying their property rights." And so the rule works both ways. I think Mr. Weinstock will find that answers the question that he put to Mr. Gaddis yesterday.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. You feel that the employer should retain a man regardless of his fitness for the job?

Dr. McCORKLE. I most certainly think that neither an employer who is not fit to manage the business, nor a workingman who is not fit to do the work, ought to be retained. I think the State ought to provide for removing men who are unfit for business on both sides.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Well, who is to be the judge of the fitness?

Dr. McCORKLE. The judge of the fitness must be some disinterested third party; ought to be.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. As things are at present there is no such system?

Dr. McCORKLE. There has been nothing created to adjust these difficulties so far. We allow the employer to destroy the property rights of the workingman, and nothing is said; but the workingman to-day is not allowed to destroy the property rights of the employer. Of course the I. W. W. people believe that the workingman ought to be free to destroy the rights of the employer when they want to, and set up somebody else without giving a reason. In my opinion, it would be far better to have a fair presentation of the situation before an impartial court; and by that I do not mean a court that is made up of anarchists, as I said—anarchists like you have got in Colorado—people that do not submit to the law and do not look for justice; but it should be a number of men who are fair and qualified to speak their opinion, and submit to them the question of the discharge of the employees, or the discharge of the management, either one, to those persons.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Would a system of collective bargaining answer that purpose in industry?

Dr. McCORKLE. The effort to work between the labor unions on the one hand as an organization and the employers on the other? As I understand, that is what you mean by "collective bargaining"?

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Yes, sir.

Dr. McCORKLE. I think the system of collective bargaining has been the nearest approach to it. What we have gotten out of collective bargaining after all, as in the settlement of the coal strike, or in the mediation on the railroads, has been a board of arbitration, to whom these questions are actually referred. We are just beginning to feel our way in regard to the employers' discharge of the workingmen. Now, there has been nothing developed for workingmen's discharge of the employer who is not fit to manage the business; and I think the gentlemen on this commission, and, in fact, everyone here will say, that they have seen some employers or managers of business who they thought were not fit to do it, and needed to be turned off just as bad as unfit workmen.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Mr. McCorkle, why do you think the workmen are so anxious to maintain the unions?

Dr. McCORKLE. Labor unions?

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Yes.

Dr. McCORKLE. Well, I think I have been through this experience more or less myself. I was very much afraid of unions, like a good many people on the farm are, when I was a boy. I thought they needed to be guided awfully close.

My study in college showed me some of the work the unions were doing for the welfare of the people. Then I got out and went to work in industries that were not organized. I went out on farms among the hoboes, as they are called—the fellows that wander from place to place and work in the harvest fields. I went into ditches and dug ditches and spent some months in Kansas and North Dakota. These men are nonunion men. Some had been union men in other trades. Many of them had never been in touch with the unions. I had not worked there very long until I realized that the nonunion men even realized that they must stand by each other. It had not been that way on the farm where I lived. We lived in a community of people who lived in one place, and if you worked for a man that was mean, people soon found it out that he was mean to his employees and he found it a hard matter getting anybody to work for him and you could quit any time and go hire to somebody that would treat you right. But I found out when I worked for these companies, particularly working in the ditches, that you had men over you that would pick up somebody else that did not know anything about the work, and that they had no public sentiment to restrain them. Men would come in there to work anyhow that did not have any chance to know whether they treated the men right or not. I found out that if the workingmen did not stand by each other, nobody would stand by them. If you did not help your nonunion fellow workingman out when he needed it, you would not really have any just claim to get him to help you out yourself when you needed it. So, as a matter of fact, I found there was a more or less silent union in the nonunion fields; that there is a strong sentiment among workingmen; that the workingman has practically come to see this. That was true among the ditch diggers and true among the hoboes on the farm. You must stand by the fellow workman first. It is particularly true among the ditch diggers. Men that have had experience in the union, as I have run across a good many of them or have several, in that connection—I have met with a great many union men since that time. They told me that the union, as a matter of fact, is the only show for the workingman. The fellow who don't stand by the unions, his wages will be so low his children will never amount to anything. If he lets the union be broken up it is ruin for his family. I have heard that time and time again from both nonunion and union workingmen; that, as a matter of fact, if you want a living for your family and to have any show for your children you have got to get in the union, where there is a chance to get enough to live on. It is the survival of the union man, that is what it is, or the children of the union man. That is the whole struggle. And union men have gradually come to feel toward their union just like you and I do toward our Government. Now Mr. Bowers—I have read some things he said and heard some things in Denver. Mr. Bowers is not very well satisfied with our Government. It has interfered with a lot of his liberties, the same as I feel that the Government has interfered with some of mine. I have no doubt that Mr. Bowers is perfectly sincere. Every one of us feels sometimes that the Government interferes with our liberties as it ought not to do. Well, we do not throw the Government over, because we say a man without a government does not have the chance to survive. There isn't any people without a government in historical times that has survived very long. We say, in spite of all the Government does that we do not want it to do—and I think Mr. Bowers would say that, too—we would rather have that Government than to have none.

Now, the union men and the nonunion men look around at the actual things occurring about us, and however much we may be displeased with the conditions that the union imposes and with the interference that it makes with some of the things we would would like to be free to act in as we want to, as a matter of fact, if we are going to live at all and see our children live, we have got to get into the union. And in the nonunion communities, in the closed shop, where they have organized a union, as there in Sunrise and lots of other places I have been in, as a matter of fact, the nonunion man that is supposed to be so oppressed by the unions and so much in need of liberation is nearly always the hearty sympathizer with the union. And it is a spirit of loyalty like loyalty to your government. The union man is for his union when he feels some of the things they are doing are wrong, when they get into a struggle, just like the same thing that makes you fight for your government when it gets into a struggle; and you do it even if you think some of the things that it is doing are wrong; you stand for it still, because if you do not have a government you do not have a chance to live; and if you do not have a union, the workingman don't have a chance to live and educate his children.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Lennon desires to ask you some questions. Commissioner LENNON. Just one line of questions, Dr. McCorkle: You were asked repeatedly along different lines as to whether or not the workingmen of Colorado exhausted every possible means for a peaceful solution of these difficulties before any violations occurred. What is more fundamental that can be done by workingmen in order to avoid any struggle—that is, any embodiment of violence—than to seek a conference through representative committees, with employers, to try to adjust their difficulties?

Dr. MCCORKLE. I think that is the first and best thing to do. If I disagreed with a man, I would rather go to him face to face than to try to settle it through the officials; and I think he ought to meet me face to face. But it is not true at Sunrise. The people there want to meet with the officials of the company and present their grievances; and they are not allowed to do it. And as they have told me at Sunrise over and over again, "It would do no good if Mr. Rockefeller came here. He would never see us, and he would never get a word from us." He might see some men like that minister who wanted me to give him the names of all the people who had complained against anything the company had done, and he would have them discharged. He sees those men, but he does not see and does not have an opportunity to see the men that really want to present a complaint.

Commissioner LENNON. Do you know anything of the history of the efforts made by the miners of Colorado, through the governor and through prominent citizens of the State, and through every means within their reach to have a conference with the operators?

Dr. MCCORKLE. I read of it at the time. I had it in mind when I spoke to Mr. Weinstein a while ago.

Commissioner LENNON. You have reason to believe that they exhausted their resources in that way?

Dr. MCCORKLE. I believe they did everything they could to get the men to meet with them and sent them registered letters which were returned, marked "Refused."

Commissioner LENNON. Do you know something—you brought it out in part—of the effort that had been made by the miners of Colorado, union and nonunion, for years to secure legislation governing their class of work which, after having been secured, was not enforced?

Dr. McCORKLE. I know that they got the 8-hour day. I heard about it when I was working down at Raton, N. Mex. They had an 8-hour day up there, but the company worked them 10 hours, just the same.

Commissioner LENNON. Now, after such laws have been enacted, who are in the position to enforce the laws, the employers or are the men?

Dr. McCORKLE. The men are certainly in no position to enforce them. If you take the situation at Sunrise—the constable and deputy sheriff is a company foreman; and the people would not think of trying to get any enforcement of the law through him. As a matter of fact, if you were to undertake to get a prosecution of the company for its abuses, being a resident of a closed camp like Sunrise, before the prosecution could come up, you would be put out of the camp and be going down the line hunting a place to get bread for your family; so you couldn't do anything.

Commissioner LENNON. But, take laws like those to which we are referring, isn't it within the power of the proprietor of an industry to enforce these laws without the intervention of constables and marshalls and deputies and other kinds of officials?

Dr. McCORKLE. It is within their power. They would simply have to give orders to the superintendent in regard to an eight-hour law or permitting the men to have check weighmen, and things of that sort.

Commissioner LENNON. Have you seen a copy of the compensation law that was recently passed in Colorado?

Dr. McCORKLE. I have not had an opportunity of reading that. I have had the Wyoming compensation law, and it gives a very low compensation, it seems to me. I know I would not want to be cut up and—

Commissioner LENNON (interrupting). Not only gives a very low compensation, but has several provisions in it that makes it inapplicable in many instances. I know it is considered by experts as the poorest attempt at such a law ever passed in the United States. That is all I desire to ask, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. O'Connell, did you have some questions you desired to ask?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I want to go back to the mines awhile, Doctor, with you; back to your home.

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I understood you to say that the mines at Sunrise were closed to union men?

Dr. McCORKLE. The railroad shops, as I say, have to employ union men, because they can not get anybody else; but the mines are closed to them.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You speak of the railroads. Those are operated by the general railroads running in there?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes; well, not the general railroads, but this is the Colorado & Wyoming Railroad, and they used to have tolerably cheap fare 6 miles down to Guernsey; but the prices were cheaper at Guernsey—

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Well, now, doctor, we wont go into a discussion of incidentals. I want to stick right to the very point and get through. The railroads deal with the railroad employees because they have some general arrangement with the general railroad organization.

Dr. McCORKLE. They are members of the general organization.

Commission O'CONNELL. Now, then, we will leave out the railroad men; but the mines where the miners work, they are closed to union men?

Dr. McCORKLE. They are closed to union men.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then, this is what you have commonly heard called here and elsewhere the so-called open shop where it is supposed that both union and nonunion men are employed.

Dr. McCORKLE. That is another fallacy. The difficulty is that it is not open for union men.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But only for nonunion men?

Dr. McCORKLE. Better not let it be known that you are a union man.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You would not be permitted to have employment there if it was known that you were a union man?

Dr. McCORKLE. No, sir; not at all.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. So the mine there is nonunion in every sense?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Have you made any investigation as to the income of the doctor at Sunrise?

Dr. McCORKLE. I have not had any definite way of getting at the exact facts, all I know is what was told me. I was told by different men that he is making more money than anybody in the town, that his income is by far the biggest in the whole community. They tell me, I don't know whether it is true or not, that he gets $100 a month out of this $1 a month paid in by the men. Take 300 workmen; there is $300 going to the company for hospital fees and things of that sort, and they really are entitled to medical attention, and some of them get it, and there are some of them don't, as I understand it. The men who work in the mines do, but their families are not entitled to anything free.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, about the doctor's income?

Dr. McCORKLE. About the doctor's income, I understand out of that he is paid, I think he gets monthly $100, the people have told me that, but I don't know. It is only hearsay.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You don't know?

Dr. McCORKLE. No, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Have you heard anybody estimate what his income was?

Dr. McCORKLE. I have heard nobody estimate it, but I will tell you this, that there are a great many families, growing families—there are a great many cases that bring him $25 and some $50, and his income must be large, it could not be otherwise.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, could you make us an approximation of what you think his income is annually?

Dr. McCORKLE. Well, I would say that he is getting, if I were going to estimate it, I would say he gets around $4,000 a year.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Is he a young man?

Dr. McCORKLE. A middle-aged man.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Did he begin his practice there or come there after graduating?

Dr. McCORKLE. He came there after having had quite a bit of experience. I understand that he worked in the Philippine Islands with the soldiers. He is a good surgeon, and I have heard that he administered chloroform in two or three thousand cases before he came there.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now you say that the company conducts a sort of banking system in the store there?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir; they do.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Is there any other bank in the town?

Dr. McCORKLE. Nothing except the postal savings bank.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That is a Government institution?

Dr. McCORKLE. And in it, as I said awhile ago, one young man—

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Yes; I understand; you told us about that.

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then the workmen have a choice of two propositions, either putting their money into the company store bank, so called, or taking a certificate at the post office, and that the post office is in the company store, and the postmaster is the storekeeper?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir; but here is another thing, it is not really a bank at the store. They give you a sort of a note, a promise to pay you on demand, and they will pay you a certain amount of interest on it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I was going to ask you whether they did or did not pay interest.

Dr. McCORKLE. It is not a bank in the true sense of the word.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. They do agree to pay the workmen interest that make deposits there?

Dr. McCORKLE. I know that a great many have sent their money back to Greece and Italy, because they were afraid to leave it there in that place.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you understand what interest they pay?

Dr. McCORKLE. I understand 4 per cent.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Have you any idea of the number of men that deposit money in the store?

Dr. McCORKLE. I have never investigated it. I know that the ones that do it have about $200 or $300 limit, or most of them; they usually draw it out and they send it to the banks in the old country when they get above that.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now you say that the company has in operation the check-off system in so far as it applies to doctors, to bills that are run in the store, including the gambling system that was in effect there?

Dr. McCORKLE. I will say this about the check-off in the store: There is a State law, it seems, that it is restricted, and therefore they have to get a man to sign up an agreement to turn his salary over at the store before they can collect it out of his wages.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Simply makes an assignment of it?

Dr. McCORKLE. In the doctor's case he makes no assignment, but in the store case he makes an assignment of his wages to the store before they allow him credit. Of course they have not asked me to do that; I have never gone in any stronger than $10 or $15 at a time, and only for a few days.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You run an account at the company store?

Dr. McCORKLE. Oh, yes; I have run there for about two weeks for $12 or $15.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. They can not take their check-off out of your salary, because it don't come from them?

Dr. McCORKLE. No, sir; but they demand it from the men before they let them have credit.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, they do practice and have practiced the check-off system in so far as the hospital fees are concerned of $1 a month?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And the doctors check off for themselves?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir; whatever he wishes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, one of the causes of the strike in Colorado, as I understand it, one of the demands of the men was that the mines would be unionized and they should have the check-off system; that is, that the miners, the company should pay the dues of the miners out of their earnings to the organization, just the same as it is done by paying the hospital dues of the members and the doctor's fee, out of the men's money before they turn over the balance to him? In that sense they have the check-off system, but in the sense of permitting the men to have a check off, as far as dues in their organizations were concerned; they would not agree to that, and that was one of the claims of the men in the Colorado strike?

Dr. McCORKLE. I have never heard of a company being worried about the check-off system when they were getting the money. They would not let the men check off money for the union, but they certainly exercise absolute freedom in checking off for themselves, and I think they would do it in regard to the stores if allowed to by the State law.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, Commissioner Weinstock—

Dr. McCORKLE (interrupting). I will say this about the check-off system: All I know is, take a man that had sickness and was in bad shape, and he was in debt about $60 or $70 at the company store, and they made him turn over his entire salary—didn't leave him any money for a postage stamp. He could not get any spare change to get anything else outside. Of course, a man like that is absolutely helpless. He had to give his whole salary to the store until he got it paid up—not salary, but wages.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The company simply took what was properly due them, the debt that the man had incurred at the store? It was a business proposition?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir; but there is no margin left the man for incidentals. There was not at least for this man, and they thought it was a very grave injustice.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, I want to discuss with you a second the question discussed with you by Commissioner Weinstock, as to the men arming themselves, and the general insurrection that took place in Colorado. I take it that you are familiar with that, because of the way you discussed it with Commissioner Weinstock, and he pointed out that the strike of the miners took place September 23d?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And that the miners bought all of the arms that they could get and ammunition about September 10?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir; the 12th.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Indicating that the miners were preparing for war some 10 or 11 days before the strike occurred?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you know that the sheriff, Jeff Farr, issued 328 deputy sheriff commissions about September 1?

Dr. McCORKLE. I have read that in the testimony that was brought out before this commission. I had heard it before.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And you understood that it was the duty of a deputy sheriff—the right of the sheriff when commissioning deputy sheriffs, that he is the officer who should arm them and give them everything necessary, the necessary tools of the occupation they are following—the proper gun, if that is necessary, a revolver, or such things as officers of the law do carry? The sheriff would be the proper person to do that?

Dr. McCORKLE. I am not absolutely sure whether the law requires it in Colorado or not, but every place that I have ever been that is expected—that the sheriff arm his deputies.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, do you know that there were 328 deputies that Sheriff Farr appointed that immediately were turned over to the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., and that they armed them; that a private concern armed the officers of the State?

Dr. McCORKLE. I read of it at the time, and later read it in the testimony before this commission.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And therefore 10 or 12 days before the miners bought their arms that has been spoken of, or armed themselves, that the sheriff of one county at least had deputized 328 deputy sheriffs, and they were armed by the officers of the coal company in that county, and put around their land, and it was probably the opinion of the miners that these men were being armed for a purpose, and knowing something of the record of men that are appointed usually as deputy sheriffs, picked up haphazard, without any knowledge by the sheriff, that was acknowledged by Sheriff Farr before this commission, that he made no investigation as to the personnel, where they came from, whether they were citizens of Colorado or not, and he didn't care, and didn't know where they practically went, or where they were employed after he had appointed them, that he had made no investigation, and had no record of them in his office, but he simply appointed them and turned them over to a private corporation, which armed them, and they must have taken it that they were armed and turned over for a purpose, and that purpose to your mind was what?

Dr. McCORKLE. The purpose of arming those men was to intimidate the working men, so that they would not call a strike, and if they did call a strike to be forced to settle it at the company's terms by using violence against them to intimidate them and make them afraid. The company, as the miners well know, do not spend their money without a purpose. They don't buy high-priced deadly guns for more than 300 men unless they have an object in view to make the money back. They expect to make the money back out of the advantage they get in the settlement that they would make with their men in their employ that were forced into their employ by the guns of these deputy sheriffs.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But the miners from past experience in the northern part of Colorado, where they had had trouble a few years before from their experience there in a strike lasting for months, their experience there was evidence to them that these men were being appointed for a similar purpose, and that it would be necessary for them to arm themselves, not to go out and fight these men, but to protect their homes and their wives and children and themselves against the invasion of these men, and it was further evidenced that these men would do what they did do, without warrant search the homes of these miners for firearms, tear up the floors in their houses, tear their beds apart, to ascertain if they had hidden away firearms of any kind, that all of these things in their mind would recur in this struggle, and that there was nothing left but for them to meet force with force?

Dr. McCORKLE. I have never heard anything from the miners themselves. The miners at Sunrise, some of them, had relatives that they lost in that struggle, but I never heard any of them say anything except that they armed to protect themselves, that they had had trouble before. I remember when I was at Raton, N. Mex., three or four years before, they told me the gunmen went into the homes and searched them and tore up the beds to find traces of union literature. And they would go to men's homes when they were not there and intimidate their wives, and do whatever they pleased, and the only idea in getting guns was to protect themselves and their families, particularly their families, against murderous assaults on the part of these men that this company had already hired. They were peaceable workmen that tried to make their living by honest labor, by the very labor that made it possible for these men to accumulate money in southern Colorado; they had been working all these years, but the men that they hired to intimidate them had been marauders and stealing, and everything of the sort, and had been trained in crime, getting prepared or being prepared by the company that hired them. It was a fight of honest working people, forced to defend their homes against the most vicious criminals you can bring in, to make trouble, so that the company can settle the strike in its own favor.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Speaking about anarchy, of the situation, I take it by anarchy you mean failure of the courts to properly carry out the functions of the courts? To dispense justice? Now, you don't mean by anarchy some one going out and knocking some one down in the street, but what you mean is the anarchy of the distribution of the law?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir; it is used in different terms.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, do you remember in Las Animas County, in 23 years, there never was a conviction in any of the courts? That a company had never been convicted in a case of death of an employee for 23 years in that county? Is it possible that all of the deaths that have taken place in and about the mines in Las Animas County in 23 years that that company would not in some way be responsible for some of those deaths, in carelessness or negligence or something else?

Dr. McCORKLE. I think everybody knows that it is responsible that lives there. They will all tell you so. Like that case at Starkville that I mentioned. Now, there is no doubt but what the company was guilty, but Mr. Fitch found out when he was down there the coroner would not investigate.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I was coming to that in a moment.

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, is it not possible that judges might even make a mistake in finding the company guilty in 23 years—accidentally do it?

Dr. McCORKLE. Well, if he got his salary from the company or accepted a dividend he might not make a mistake; it would cut off his dividend.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Might he not accidentally do something so that the company would be found guilty?

Dr. McCORKLE. If he was a judge who was not actually in the pay of the company to find a decision for them? They are given their office by the company in order that they would never let any judgment be registered against the company, and I think he might have made a mistake in their favor, as I understand it, and in fact I have heard repeatedly in many cases, in most cases, they are never allowed to get as far as the judge. They simply don't let anything be known. If a man would testify in a case he would be sent out of the community so quick he would not have anything to live on.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. There was a list furnished this commission in Denver showing the number of accidental deaths that have taken place and the basis on which most of them were settled.

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I think the average amount was about $300 a life, or the basis upon which they were settled.

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, do you know that one of the judges who presided at this court in Las Animas County—I don't know how many years, but for some years—is now the attorney—George Northcutt—is now attorney and has been trying recently cases in Colorado for the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Dr. McCORKLE. I am aware that he is now in the employ of the company.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And he was on the bench when a number of these cases came before him?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And that the company was held not responsible, not guilty of negligence, in connection with deaths?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And that Judge Northcutt was the man that made that speech denouncing in a political campaign the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., charging them with every offense, practically, and otherwise in the State of Colorado?

Dr. McCORKLE. It is my opinion when he made that speech he wanted a little bigger divide up with the company.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And when George Northcutt was on the bench that his law partner was then the attorney for the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. in Las Animas County?

Dr. McCORKLE. I don't believe I knew that.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The chairman corrects me. Judge Northcutt's partner succeeded Judge Northcutt as judge on the bench after he got off.

Coming back to Sunrise. I want to discuss a little the rents and living with you. You say you pay for your house $10.50 a month?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir; that includes electric light on a flat rate and water. I have a hydrant in my house.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you have a bathroom?

Dr. McCORKLE. There are only two or three bathrooms in Sunrise.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do all your people go to those two or three bathrooms?

Dr. McCORKLE. That was one of the reasons why we wanted a hall, so as to have a bathroom put in in connection with it. They were willing to pay for it; they didn't want it free.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. What would this house that you live in be worth? What is it worth; the real value?

Dr. McCORKLE. This college man, as I said, an expert, a graduate from one of the best institutions in our country—I won't speak of it for I don't want to make trouble for him—but he told me they were not worth over $200 or $300. I think the highest estimate I have heard is $700. My own estimate would be about $450.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Say, $500?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes; about.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Five hundred dollars to the house?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You are speaking of the houses alone?

Dr. McCORKLE. The land of course is practically worthless, and could not be put to any other use.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Is the land mined underneath?

Dr. McCORKLE. No, sir; it is not mined.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Is this property connected with the coal-mining operation?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. It would be of no value without the mine there?

Dr. McCORKLE. No, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. So if the property cost $500, or cost $500 to build a house and you paid $10.50 a month for it—

Dr. McCORKLE. I think I heard them say that they counted the rent for the house $8. and the rent for light and water, $2.50.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The highest value you could put on it would be $500, that would be $10 a month rent, would be $120 a year, that would be 24 per cent on $500.

Dr. McCORKLE. If you take $8, I understand that is the rate, and $2.50 for water and light, but you take $8 a month would be $96 for the whole year, so even that is a high interest.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That would be approximately 20 per cent.

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. How many houses are there in Sunrise?

Dr. McCORKLE. Well, there are, I forget the number exactly; I have a map of the place here, but I would say about 100 altogether. There are not 100 four-room houses, though.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. They are about half and half?

Dr. McCORKLE. No, sir; mostly four-room houses. I think there are about 70 or 80, but I can not remember exactly. I can count them up in a little while.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The income from the house rent in that town would probably be a thousand dollars a month, approximately? For 100 families or more?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir; fully that.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Including the stores and other things that might be there?

Dr. McCORKLE. Not including the store; it is fully $100 a month.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then, there are some offices in the town rented? Do you have a dentist in the town, or does the doctor do the dentist work?

Dr. McCORKLE. The dentist comes there and rents a little room, and works every two or three or five or six months.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you have a barber shop in the town, or does everybody do their own barbering?

Dr. McCORKLE. They have a barber shop in the town with a bathroom for men that is usually in operation. I will say this, too, that the workmen have a good washhouse. It is a good house, with a shower bath.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, as I take it the opportunity of social life in Sunrise are, first, you have a little church?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. One church?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Which can only be used for the purpose for which your denomination stands for?

Dr. McCORKLE. They don't allow other denominations to use it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. There are no other churches there but your little one?

Dr. McCORKLE. That is all.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then there is a doctor in the town. Is there a hospital in the town?

Dr. McCORKLE. There is no hospital; that is one of the things that we ought to have by all means.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You have not got it now?

Dr. McCORKLE. No, sir; we have not got it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then a dentist that comes occasionally to look after the teeth of the community?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir; there has been one there once in the last eight months.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I would imagine he would be pretty busy when he does come down there.

Dr. McCORKLE. He was busy for four or five days.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You have a picture show on Saturday and Monday, you say, in the church?

Dr. McCORKLE. That Mr. Gaddis helped; we got one in the church—

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You explained how you got it.

Dr. McCORKLE. Since September we have been having two shows, and since about the 1st of January we have had different reels on the two nights.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, you have a picture show twice a week?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, you have a church and a picture show in the church twice a week, and a doctor in the village, and a dentist that comes there occasionally?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And you have a dance occasionally in the church, or some other place?

Dr. McCORKLE. We have a dance in the hall.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. In the church hall?

Dr. McCORKLE. No; I said we had a little hall that was suitable for dances.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And you have a little place that you have dances?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you have dances often?

Dr. McCORKLE. Before the motion-picture show we had them very frequently, but usually now about once a month.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, what other amusement have you, or places where you could have amusement? Say, in the wintertime, when you can not very well get out?

Dr. McCORKLE. In the summer time by going a mile on the hill they have a place to play ball. Since the agitation has been going on in Sunrise, I heard that the company has given orders for a playground to be made down near the school building for baseball. But I heard later that it was not going to be done, that they changed, and now whether it will be done or not, I don't know. There is nothing in the wintertime, and as these men said, unless you go to the saloon at Hartville, where a man can spend his idle time, there is nothing to do. A few of them sit around the barber shop, a few of them only can sit there, perhaps a dozen.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, as I gather, the home life in your village—you say there are about 500 people there altogether?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes. Let me mention one thing else in this connection before we go further; that is, that there are several lodges, fraternal organizations there; they had the Odd Fellows' encampment, and the Odd Fellows' ordinary lodge, the lower organization; the Rebeccas; they have the Woodmen of the World, and the Royal Neighbors; they have the Eagles, and the Greeks have a society called the Sophocles.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Where do these societies meet?

Dr. McCORKLE. In the loft over the company's stables. The Odd Fellows, Rebeccas, Royal Neighbors, and Woodmen meet there, and some of the others go to Hartville and rent a part of the saloon building there. They do not like to do it, but they have no other place to go. The Dante Alighieri, among the Italian people, they got together and built a hall at Hartville, near Sunrise, where they could get away from the saloon and have the hall under the control of their society.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, summing up, as I understand your home life, you have got an absolutely nonunion town, in so far as the company is concerned. There may be union men there probably—by the way, are you a member of the union?

Dr. McCORKLE. I joined the union in 1910, in Billings, Mont., when I was working there on the streets for about six weeks, but I did not keep up my dues only for a month or two after I left there.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. So you are not now a member?

Dr. McCORKLE. No; I am not now a member.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. So you would not know the things that go on inside of the union?

Dr. McCORKLE. No; I would not know.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You have about 500 people in your community?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And they are all employees, those who are employed, in this mine owned by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes; all of them.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. There is no other employment in the city at all?

Dr. McCORKLE. I am the only man in the town that does not draw his money from the company.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And the opportunities for amusement in the town are going to church occasionally on Sunday; that is, those who want to go to church, and those who do not believe in that way of celebrating do not have any amusement?

Dr. McCORKLE. Before we got our motion pictures in Sunrise one of the annoying things was our young people going over to Hartville, where the saloon put in moving-picture reels in the back and charged 25 cents.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That was in opposition to your moving-picture show?

Dr. McCORKLE. No; before we put ours in. And our boys would go there and spend 25 cents or more for drinks. In that way the boys were beginning to drink and get drunk, and that is the reason I put the question up to Mr. Gaddis.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You have the picture place now and the church and the hall where you have a dance occasionally, and you have some societies that meet over the stable, or in some garret in a barn?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And this is an absolutely nonunion town; you have no place where men meet as union men for the purpose of sitting down and calmly and collectively considering their industrial life at all?

Dr. McCORKLE. No place at all.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. So that when men are not employed during any part of the day—do they work night?

Dr. McCORKLE. Not now.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. When they are not employed during the day, after they get home from their work, they sit around home, and if their home is not a very pleasant place they seek their pleasure elsewhere; the church is not open every night; you do not have service every night?

Dr. McCORKLE. Only on Sunday night.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. So possibly they go to the other little towns where the saloons are open—nothing else is going on—or else they sit down in bunches on the street corner, or in a barber shop or on some vacant lot, and they grumble and growl and talk to each other about the darn things being wrong, and how they are living, and sort of brooding and breeding hatred toward people; there is a sort of something growing in them; they do not know just what it is, but something is boiling up in their systems; there is a sort of resentment within, and a spirit of rebellion. Don't you find that situation?

Dr. McCORKLE. There is very little sitting about in groups. A few may be found on the store porch, but the groups are mostly at Hartville around the saloons. The men are usually tired enough to try to get some rest after they get back from their work on the regular days. It is only when they are out of a job, when the work is slack, or on Saturday night, or something like that, that they feel there is a lack of places to go to; but there is a bitterness and feeling that the company won't do anything for their welfare and won't give them places to go to.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you think the men work so hard that all they think of is going home and going to bed? Is that all the ambition they have in life?

Dr. McCORKLE. Most of them told me that is all they have a chance to do, before I got there, but they do enjoy the motion pictures and go to them in great numbers. They want something to go to.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you have in the State of Wyoming the referendum and recall?

Dr. McCORKLE. No, sir; I believe not.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. So the application that Mr. Weinstock put on your opportunity to get judges out in Wyoming, or displace them, does not apply in regard to the citizens of Wyoming; they do not have that power in their hands?

Dr. McCORKLE. No, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then, this final question: Do you believe that the workman has a right to work under any condition for whoever he pleases, and for whatever wage he pleases, regardless of the industrial life surrounding him, indifferent to the possibility of accident, without consideration for his fellow workmen, simply because the employer says, "I have the right to discharge and you have the right to quit"?

Dr. McCORKLE. I do not think that a workman has a right to disregard the life of the fellow alongside of him. I have worked in nonunion places where the man alongside of me would be discriminated against, and I felt it was not right for me to work there and let him be discriminated against, and that I ought to help protect him; maybe he has a family.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Outside of that—you don't catch the phase of it that I want you to catch. Do you think you have the moral right, if I quit my job because I think it is not paying me enough, that you have the moral right to come along and accept the position at one or two dollars, or whatever the employer wants to pay you, less than I was formerly getting; do you think you have the right to take the place of myself, or of any man that went on a strike, for no other reason than to get the employer to carry out the laws of the State as to wages and hours of labor, and as a protest that we should not be compelled to trade at the company store unless we wished; that the mines shall be properly inspected under the laws of the State; and that the hours of labor shall be as provided under the law; do you feel that you have the right, regardless of whether these things were complied with, to take my place?

Dr. McCORKLE. I think it is pretty nearly next to murder to do it; most of the nonunion men I have worked with, that did not belong to the unions, feel about the same way, that a man who will go in and take a workman's place who is on strike, when that workman is protesting against injustice, is looked upon as in the lowest depths a man can go.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Weinstock says he has some further interrogatories. [Laughter.] Ladies and gentlemen, I desire to say that we must have strict order, and if there is any audible expression of feeling in any way, we will have to invite whoever does it to leave.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Will you tell us whether the eight-hour day is still being violated in Colorado?

Dr. McCORKLE. I have heard reports which lead me to believe that it is not being violated now. I have not heard that it is being violated.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Have you any means of knowing how long the law has been observed?

Dr. McCORKLE. Why, I have heard they began to observe it about the time that the talk of this strike arose—well, I think perhaps at the time, or a little before the time the strike was voted for at Sunrise, and they did not have it because they could not get a unanimous agreement on it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That was a year and one-half ago?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You were pointing out that the mine operators employed gunmen to intimidate the strikers?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And you consider that wrong, of course?

Dr. McCORKLE. I do.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You also pointed out, a little while ago, a very interesting philosophy, new to me, and all the more interesting on that account, as to the relationship that ought to exist between employers on the one hand and workers on the other hand.

Dr. McCORKLE. What is that?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I will recite it. You started out with the premise that the scales should be equally balanced?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And that one side should have no advantage that the other side was not permitted to enjoy?

Dr. McCORKLE. No, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That there should be no special or favored legislation?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That both should start out on an equality?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I do not think anyone can take issue with that, as a premise. Now, if it was wrong for the employers to employ gunmen to intimidate the strikers, what about the attitude on the part of the workmen, of renting spaces controlling the entries into guarded towns or cities or whatever you call them, to intimidate the so-called strike breakers?

Dr. McCORKLE. Do you mean to say that they did that to intimidate them?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I think the record shows that they took positions—that they took possession of ground that controlled the entrances, and that the purpose in so doing was to prevent the strike breakers from taking their places.

Dr. McCORKLE. Let us see the situation there; was that before closed or open camps?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I could not say that of my own knowledge.

Dr. McCORKLE. If those were only before closed camps—in other words, the company said to the men leaving there, and whose property rights were absolutely disregarded, it told them to get out of there, that it did not want them in there, and making them go out as they did there, and some went out who were allowed to go back and get their household goods; but it did not leave men there to tell the men coming in to take the places of these men that there was even a strike in progress. If they had left men there to tell the new men that came on, "There is a strike on and we don't believe you should go in and take these jobs," it would have been different; but they said to these men, "Get out, and get as far away as you can; we are going to bring these men in here"; and they brought men in ignorant of the situation and thinking that the strike was settled. They brought them in without a chance to see any of the men that were displaced. Then the striking miners did the best they could to get an opportunity to see these men and try to persuade them not to take their positions, as they would have done if there had not been violence on the part of the company in shooting up their tents first; they wanted to persuade those men peaceably not to go in there.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you familiar enough with the Colorado law—I confess I am not—to know whether the law provides that an employer must publish the fact that a strike is going on at his place if he notifies people to come there and take the places of strikers?

Dr. McCORKLE. I think that is in the record, under the Colorado law, but I am not sure.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know, Mr. Walsh?

Chairman WALSH. My recollection is that there is such a law in Colorado.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If there is, the so-called strike breakers must have known they were going into a territory where a strike was going on.

Dr. McCORKLE. Many men would be brought in who would not be able to read the advertisement, but would merely get the word that employment was to be had there, and they would not hear the statement that a strike was going on. The employment agents the company used in various places to get men to ship in certainly were not going to explain that in such a way that the men would realize a strike was going on.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. It is your impression then that the men that came to take the places of the strikers were ignorant of the fact that a strike was going on?

Dr. McCORKLE. It is my impression that a large number of them were; I have heard repeatedly of men coming in who were ignorant of that fact.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You went on to say that your conception of the proper relationship between the employer on the one hand and the worker on the other hand was this: That the worker should not leave the employ of his employer without good reason?

Dr. McCORKLE. No, sir; I said the worker has a right to leave the employ of his employer at any time he wants to without giving him any reason, and the employer has a right to quit the business and go somewhere else and invest his money anywhere he pleases; that is his right.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Suppose the employer does not want to quit his business, and simply wants to make a change in his men; that the men he is employing are not efficient in his judgment, not fit; what would you do?

Dr. McCORKLE. In that case, as I said, these are men who have property; they have money invested in that community; they have homes costing a thousand or two thousand dollars. He says to them, "You must get out of here and sacrifice your property; I want you to get out." He says to them, "You are not efficient"; and if they are not efficient and are not doing good work then there ought to be a change made. But he is not the man to say they are inefficient.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. He is not to be the judge?

Dr. McCORKLE. Not to give the final decision.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In other words, some one else other than the man himself, despite the fact that he is the wage bearer, shall determine the efficiency of his men?

Dr. McCORKLE. Some one else is going to determine the efficiency of his men if he is going to violate their property rights by driving them out.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The way you have put it, it would be the case of a lockout, where he would dismiss all his men; but take the case of an individual, are we to understand that the employer has no moral right, to say nothing of his legal right, to dismiss a man because, in his own judgment, the man is unfit, or incompetent, or inefficient?

Dr. McCORKLE. I drew, as you remember, the two parallels, the management on the one side wanting to dismiss the employees as a whole, and the employees on the other side wanting to dismiss the entire management.

Let me carry that parallel further; the employees, on the one side, wanting to dismiss some one member of the management, or the employer wanting to dismiss some one man, and saying to him, whether he be employee or manager, that he must move out of the community; this man would suffer property loss.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I do not quite follow the matter the way you present it. I am working in the employ of a mine owner; have I the right, in your philosophy, to quit that mine owner for any reason or for no reason?

Dr. McCORKLE. You have.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I do not have to give any explanation to my employer as to the reason why I want to quit.

Dr. McCORKLE. No, any more than the employer would, in case he wanted to quit and invest his money elsewhere.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And has he not the right to dismiss me for any reason or for no reason?

Dr. McCORKLE. No.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then, how are your scales evenly balanced?

Dr. McCORKLE. That he simply has the right to move away. But for him to say that some other man might manage this business so it would pay him more, he has not a right to say that. It is only a third person who knows whether you are fit to manage the business who has a right to decide that.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Following your philosophy, then, if I wanted to quit your employ, I would have a right to quit for any reason or for no reason, but if you wanted to dismiss me you would have to bring in a third party to pass on your right to do that?

Dr. McCORKLE. You are not drawing the same parallel; you would have a right to quit, but you would not have a right to dismiss him, and he would not have a right to dismiss you, without a just reason.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I am frank to confess that I can not follow your reasoning. Maybe I am very stupid, but I can not follow it. If the scales are to be evenly balanced, and no one to have an advantage over another, and if both are to have exactly the same privileges, and if you say the worker should be accorded the right to quit at any time, for any reason or for no reason, why should not the employer have the same right?

Dr. McCORKLE. The employer does have the right to quit at any time. If the worker has the right to quit at any time, then the employer has.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If I, as a worker, have a right to quit your employment, and the scales are to be evenly balanced, why have not you, as the employer, the right to dismiss me at any time?

Dr. McCORKLE. Because I have not the right to dismiss you at any time.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Why?

Dr. McCORMICK. I can not come to you as an employer and say I would rather have some other man to manage the business—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (interrupting). I am not talking of the manager, but of the worker.

Dr. McCORKLE. I am speaking of the two. If a man wants to quit, he has a right to quit, whether he is an employer or an employee; if a man wants to dismiss another, he has no right to do it, whether employer or employee, unless there is a just cause.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If you were the employer and I was the worker, and you were not satisfied with my work, what would you do?

Dr. McCORKLE. I would put your case before men who were disinterested, who would consider it on its merits.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You would follow their judgment more than your own?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes; I would follow their judgment more than my own.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Even though nothing was to be gained?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. It is a new kind of philosophy to me, I am sure.

Dr. McCORKLE. I would follow their judgment more than my own, just because of this—that I can see the case from my own viewpoint, what is right from my viewpoint. But I could not see the loss I was inflicting upon them so plainly, and whenever you undertake to deprive a man of his property right he has a right to have the thing adjudicated, and the workman has a property right there which is denied him.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Would you apply that rule you have just illustrated all up and down the line, that all employers and all workers should come under the rule, or would you limit it to certain industries?

Dr. McCORKLE. That all employers and workers should be included.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, if you had a cook in your service that was unsatisfactory to you, you would call in a third party to determine her fitness before you dismissed her?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes; if we could not come to an agreement between us. She has a right to have the case considered, whether she is fit or not. But, Mr. Weinstock, in cases of that kind there is never any serious need of any third party to adjudicate it, because she could quit her place and find a thousand other people who wanted cooks; but when you have a big corporation and a very large number of men involved, they can not quit and leave their places without a large sacrifice.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You have pointed out what you consider the serious causes of industrial unrest, Mr. McCorkle?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You are a student and have read much and thought much and have had broad experience for a man of your years. Now, will you be kind enough to tell us what is your remedy for this unrest?

Dr. McCORKLE. Why, the remedy is in the principle of establishing just relations between men and teaching them to be kind to each other and to consider the welfare of each other.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Applying that practice, how would you supply it to legislation?

Dr. McCORKLE. In legislation I would apply this, as I mentioned, as to the employer and employee, so that neither man could be deprived of his savings and earnings and an opportunity to make a living, without he merited it by his own failure to live up to his obligations.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Assuming that you could secure the enforcement of the laws, what laws that we do not have now would you create to bring about a higher degree of industrial rest?

Dr. McCORKLE. Well, I do not know whether I know what you mean by "industrial rest." If you mean a kindly spirit between workmen and employers—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (interrupting). I think that covers it.

Dr. McCORKLE. Men should always be striving for something better, and the idea of rest is simply a state of inaction, to which I should be opposed. I do not care how good things are, if we can make them better we should do so; but at the present time there is very bitter hatred on both sides.

I was in Paterson, N. J., while a student in the seminary and observed the strike there, and I met a wealthy man on the train who said he had a hundred tenant houses and could not get any money from them because the men were on strike, and he said, "We ought to drive them out of here, law or no law." I asked him about that, and he said, "Yes; cut their livers out, law or no law." I said, "They are ten to one with you and they will be in control some day," and I asked him what he would do if they were in control. He did not know about that, but he was more violent than any labor agitator, Socialist, anarchist, or any other variety of person who is displeased with our present order of things that I have ever met on the side of labor. He would throw over the law and kill the men to get rid of them.

Now, the hatred is common, and what we need is to work in a thousand ways, in every place we can, to get justice. If there is any man who is not getting a chance to feed and clothe his family properly, if there is any man living in a house that leaks, he is going to be pretty bitter if you do not get busy and see that he has a good roof over his head. He is going to be more bitter after a while, and his children are.

Now, we can not change these things all at once. I believe the time is coming when the workingman will hire the manager of the property, just as the manager hires the workingman to-day; I think that is coming in the future, the socialistic form of government; but it is not coming here like something dropping out of the sky. Every time we get a chance to pass a law that will make things better, we should do it, and we should try to take pains to see that neither side gives the other an unfair trial. We will struggle; we need to have our unions, collective bodies of workmen on the one side and employers on the other, and we need to provide that they shall be compelled under the law to meet with each other.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Have you any constructive suggestions, Mr. McCorkle, to give this commission along the lines that you have outlined?

Dr. McCORKLE. I would suggest for one thing that a law be made compelling any labor organization, any established labor organization, and any established company to meet each other, and to discuss their differences before and after a strike. I should provide that they would be required by law to meet each other.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And that you would make compulsory?

Dr. McCORKLE. I would not compel them to arbitrate the strike and accept the award.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But you would adopt the Canadian system of compulsory inquiry?

Dr. McCORKLE. Yes, sir; and I would have a compulsory inquiry, and the men meet with each other; then I don't believe there would have been a strike in Colorado had there been a law of that kind in force, to compel the representatives of the operators and miners to meet each other.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you sufficiently familiar with the Canadian compulsory inquiry act to say that it covers your ideas?

Dr. McCORKLE. I think I am sufficiently familiar with it to say that it does not. I think it works to the disadvantage of the workingman, especially where the industry is not organized. It may work fairly well where the union is established, but to deny them the privilege of striking; before the thing is brought up for consideration, may work a grave injustice to unorganized trades.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then your idea would be the Canadian act modified?

Dr. McCORKLE. I would say this, too, the Canadian act requires too long delay, as I understand it, before the men are allowed to strike. I would modify it to that extent. I believe the award is not compulsory, is it?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No.

Dr. McCORKLE. That is my remembrance. I would modify it in that respect, but I would have the men get together; I would have the men get together and discuss their differences; and I would provide laws and try to have them enforced to do away with these abuses like we had mentioned at Sunrise and in Colorado as far as possible. Get rid of them before the men are angry enough to feel like they wanted to go on a strike. As I have told men repeatedly, workingmen don't get in the humor to go on a strike or in the humor for violence because some agitator talks to them for a day or two. It is only when they are burning with a sense of wrong through weeks and years, that finally somebody mentions the fact, and they are all mad enough to fight. I am not conversant enough with the Canadian act to speak of all its features. I don't know how acceptable it would be for the workingman. It has been quite a long while since I read it, but I remember when I was a student in the seminary in New York City that I heard it discussed, and there seemed to be features that did not give the workingman a fair show. I wrote an article for one of the papers there at the time and discussed the fact, and pointed out that it would prevent the workers from getting the advances that they needed, and promoting their organization in a number of fields at least. But I think to make an effort along that line is our duty.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. That is all. We thank you, Mr. McCorkle.

Mr. Rockefeller.

TESTIMONY OF MR. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, JR.

Chairman WALSH. Your name is John D. Rockefeller, jr.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And you reside in the city of New York?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do.

Chairman WALSH. You have been a witness before the commission before, I believe, Mr. Rockefeller?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. For three days, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And you were asked to produce certain correspondence and submit it to the commission afterwards, I believe?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I was, and did so submit the correspondence. Mr. Chairman, will you allow me to say just a word at this time?

Chairman WALSH. I would prefer, please, if you would let me ask a few preliminary questions, in order to place certain people.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would be glad, in view of the fact that you have referred to the correspondence, and in view of the statement that appeared in the newspapers in regard to that correspondence, which led me to feel that there were matters in it that were not clear to all of the members of the commission, and other matters that did not seem to the commission to be consistent with testimony previously given, and I would be very glad if you would allow me, in a desire to clear up these several matters, to read a statement that I have prepared, and I would be glad to read it at this time.

Chairman WALSH. I would be very glad to have you, but there are a few preliminary questions that I think would clear up and help us in understanding your statement. Who was Mr. L. M. Bowers?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Who was Mr. L. M. Bowers?

Chairman WALSH. When I say was, I understand that he is now not with the company.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. You mean who is he?

Chairman WALSH. What connection did he have with the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He was chairman of the board of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., and treasurer of the company up to the early part of this year.

Chairman WALSH. And what connections has he with your interests now?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He resigned from the position which I have just mentioned with the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., to come into our personal staff.

Chairman WALSH. And he is on your personal staff now?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. On a salary?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, at the time of the trouble in Colorado, or up until the time he quit, where was he located?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Chairman, if you will allow me to interrupt a minute, I have only asked the same privilege in regard to reading my statement which has been accorded to every witness—

Chairman WALSH. Very well, I will not discuss that further. I would have liked to have had this light, but if you do not seem inclined, I will let all the questions go until you get through.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would be very glad to give it to you.

Chairman WALSH. This is the time I wanted it, but if you wish to give these answers at a later time, you may read your statement now.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I thank you, sir.

Since I testified before the commission in New York in January my office has furnished to the commission, at its request, certain correspondence between my office and the officers of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. with reference to labor conditions in Colorado. Portions of that correspondence have been made public by the commission, and the press has contained statements to the effect that the correspondence shows that whereas I had testified that I had no knowledge of conditions in the Colorado coal fields, I was in reality the directing mind throughout the struggle.

The commission will recall that at the hearings in New York in January I made this statement:

"The correspondence between myself and the officers of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. during the strike has been produced before this commission and is now public. If one thing more than another is shown by the letters exchanged, it is that, as respects conditions of employment and the interests of the company's employees, I have sought to inform myself and have not hesitated to make suggestions looking toward more adequate representation on the part of the employees and participation by them in the determining of matters pertaining to their working conditions. It is not less apparent, however, that I have studiously avoided anything that might afford ground, either to the employees, the management, or the public, for the belief that in any particular I was seeking to dictate a policy or to arbitrarily control any situation."

I wish now to reaffirm that statement and to emphasize the fact that all policies, as well as matters of detail, were decided upon and carried out by the executive officers at Denver without asking our advice.

Neither my New York associates nor I directed the conduct of the strike. As matters progressed and we acquired fuller knowledge of conditions, our activities were directed toward making suggestions which we hoped might facilitate the termination of the controversy. To show precisely and completely what these activities were, I give below the substance of every suggestion which we made to the Denver office during the progress of the strike:

Suggestion 1: That an investigation by three Federal judges be invited.

On December 1, 1913, Mr. Murphy wrote Mr. Bowers, suggesting that he write to the President of the United States saying that:

"We strongly urge an investigation of all the facts as to the relations between the company and its employees and the circumstances leading up to this strike."

The suggestions being that the investigation and findings as to the facts be made by three Federal judges to be appointed by the President.

Suggestion 2: That provision be made for injured employees and their families.

On April 26, 1914, I telegraphed Mr. Bowers as follows:

"If it is true, as reported in the papers, that any of our employees have been injured in the recent disturbances, I trust that you have already taken steps to provide fully for them and their families."

Suggestion 3: That disinterested mediators be appointed to intervene.

On April 29 Mr. Murphy telegraphed Mr. Bowers inquiring whether or not the fuel company and possibly the other operators would agree "to have some one or three disinterested men act as mediators between the various parties directly and indirectly engaged in the present turmoil? Such mediators * * * to go from one side to the other, undertaking to formulate in definite terms the position of each, and then to act as negotiators in seeing whether anything could be done."

Suggestion 4: That the operators reiterate their acceptance of Gov. Ammons's proposition of settlement.

On April 30 I received from Chairman Foster, of the congressional committee, a telegram stating that an officer of the union had made a public statement that the mine workers would waive recognition of the union and asking if I was willing to enter into negotiations for the settlement of the strike on that basis. I replied that the officials of the mining companies in Colorado were the only ones competent to deal with the question, but at the same time I telegraphed to the officers of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. in Colorado as follows:

"The letter of Gov. Ammons of November 27 to the operators and miners shows that at that time the only obstacle to a settlement was recognition of the union. He then suggested a solution covering all points except recognition, and the operators accepted his suggestion, invited their employees who had not been guilty of disorder and other unlawful acts to return on the terms mentioned by him, and assured him and their former employees that they would conform in good faith to all of his suggestions. It seems to me that the operators should * * * reiterate their willingness to accept this settlement * * *."

Suggestion 5: That a plan to get together be developed.

On May 3 I telegraphed Messrs. Welborn and Bowers:

"We strongly urge operators to take a vigorously active position looking toward the acceptance by all the parties concerned of Gov. Ammons's plan of November 27, and to outline a method by which the parties can now get together for the reconsideration of the matter from that point unless you already have some better plan in mind."

Suggestion 6: That disputed points other than union recognition be submitted to a board to be appointed by the President of the United States.

On May 26, referring to Chairman Foster's telegram of April 29, I telegraphed Messrs. Welborn and Bowers:

"If the President should suggest to the operators and miners that all questions affecting the relations between themselves and their present and former employees, except the recognition of the union and the unionizing of the camps, be submitted for adjudication to a board to be appointed by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, to consist of members of the Supreme Court or other Federal judges, would the operators accept. * * * If accepted by the miners, would it not put an end to the present controversy?"

Suggestion 7: That a plan of publicity be developed.

In June, having become impressed with the desirability of getting the operators' side of the controversy before the public, I suggested, and was instrumental in bringing about the adoption by the operators' committee of a means for securing such publicity which was subsequently developed under the committee's direction.

Suggestion 8: That a plan of organization to secure collective bargaining and opportunity for presenting employees' grievances be considered.

During the progress of the strike, I felt increasingly the importance of finding some way of adjusting industrial disputes and preventing their recurrence. In that connection, I made the acquaintance of Mr. W. L. Mackenzie King, formerly minister of labor of Canada, who had had exceptionally wide experience in such matters. In a letter to him on August 1, I spoke of ways in which a permanent condition of peace might be restored, one of which I said might be "by developing * * * the opportunity for collective bargaining, for easy and constant conferences with reference to any matters of difference or grievances which may come up, and any other advantages which may be derived from membership in the union. * * * I am wondering whether you can take the time to dictate * * * an outline of such an organization and send it to me * * * for our discussion of it with the officers of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co."

In response to this request, Mr. King outlined such a plan, a copy of which I sent on August 11 to Mr. Welborn.

Suggestion 9: Suggestion in regard to President Wilson's plan of truce.

After the President of the United States had issued his letter to the Colorado operators, proposing a plan of truce, Mr. Murphy wrote to Mr. Welborn on September 15, making certain suggestions for his consideration in formulating the reply of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. to the President, but saying: "It is merely by way of suggestion, without in any way indicating a desire to depart from the policy which we have steadfastly maintained of leaving the decision of these questions to the executive officers."

Suggestion 10: That a plan of self-government for employees be considered.

On October 5, Mr. Murphy wrote to Mr. Welborn suggesting a plan of local self-government, under which there should be in each mine a committee consisting of representatives of the operators and representatives of the miners employed in that mine, chosen by the miners from their own number, to serve as a medium of communication with the management in regard to any matters of common interest, and which should also be charged with the duty of enforcing the statutes of the State and the regulations of the company looking to the comfort and safety of the miners and the protection of the company's property.

In so far as I can recall or ascertain from our correspondence, these are the only suggestions of any kind which we made, and every one of them was made with a view to ameliorating conditions, and in the hope of arriving at a solution of the problems involved.

It has been stated that I knew on the admission of my own "agents in the field that the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. controlled the prices and fixed the working conditions at the mines."

This inference is based upon a letter from Mr. Bowers to me, dated April 25. I had sent him a letter from Mr. J. B. Corey, of Braddock, Pa., inclosing a cooperative agreement in use between Mr. Corey and his miners, which provided for fixing wages, or, as it was referred to in the agreement, "the price of mining" on a sliding scale, based on the selling price of coal. Mr. Bowers, in returning the letter and referring to the agreement, wrote:

"The Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. usually leads in fixing prices and conditions, which the larger companies usually agree to and the smaller concerns also, if it is for their interest. * * * In this present trouble the prices of mining and the income of the workmen had nothing to do with this strike."

It will thus be apparent that in his letter Mr. Bowers was not referring to the prices at which coal was sold, but to the prices or wages paid the men for mining coal. To me the letter never had any other than the very obvious meaning that the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., as the largest factor in the field, was usually first in making changes in operating conditions, their lead being sometimes followed and sometimes not.

Certain additional statements concerning the correspondence which we have supplied to the commission have appeared in the newspapers during the last few weeks. To these statements I have already publicly replied. The substance of these replies will be found in an appendix to this statement, which I will read at this time.

"APPENDIX.

"1. It has been stated that correspondence filed with this commission shows that I exercised 'a personal influence that extended even to the statehouse at Denver, and presumed to dictate letters that went out to the President of the United States and to the governors of the States, over the signature of the governor of Colorado.' The facts are as follows:

"Last May Gov. Ammons sent Maj. E. J. Boughton, adjutant general of Colorado, to New York. I never met Maj. Boughton, but he met one of my associates, and later, Mr. Lee. Maj. Boughton said that Gov. Ammons had been concerned over the misunderstanding which seemed to prevail in the East over certain phases of the strike. Maj. Boughton, as the governor's representative, called on numerous people and invited suggestions as to how the governor's position and the attitude of the State might more effectively be brought to public notice. Mr. Lee suggested that one method would be for the governor to write a letter to the President of the United States"—

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Lee suggested that to whom?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. To Maj. Boughton.

Chairman WALSH. Were you present?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir; I was not. I never met Maj. Boughton, as I stated before.

Chairman WALSH. Did Mr. Lee report that to you at about the time that he suggested to Maj. Boughton that a letter should be written to Gov. Ammons?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't recall when it was mentioned to me.

Chairman WALSH. When did you first find it out and put it in this document?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Find out what?

Chairman WALSH. That Mr. Lee had suggested to Maj. Boughton that it would be a good thing to write a letter to Gov. Ammons to write a letter to the public.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The matter first is mentioned in the correspondence, in the letter from me to Mr. Lee, or Mr. Lee to me.

Chairman WALSH. When did Mr. Lee tell you that Maj. Boughton was in town? Was it right after he made the suggestion to Maj. Boughton or was it before he made the suggestion to Maj. Boughton that he told you he thought it would be a good thing?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't recall it.

"Mr. Lee suggested that one method would be for the governor to write a letter to the President of the United States and another to his fellow governors of other States, setting forth the situation as Gov. Ammons saw it. Maj. Boughton stated that he could not tell how the governor would regard such a suggestion, and that even he himself would have to convey the suggestion to Gov. Ammons through Gen. Chase. Maj. Boughton's superior officer. Maj. Boughton suggested that perhaps a statement addressed to the public would be better.

"To get the matter into shape for his further consideration Maj. Boughton suggested that Mr. Lee make his ideas concrete by preparing a draft of the kind of statement or letter he had in mind. As a basis for such a draft, Maj. Boughton sent to Mr. Lee a memorandum of his own views of the situation.

"The memorandum written by me and referred to in one of my letters as having been sent by me to Mr. Lee was nothing more than a rough draft of a statement concerning the Colorado situation which I had drawn up in answer to statements which had appeared in the press, but had never been used. A copy of this memorandum, which, as I wrote Mr. Lee on June 10, 1914, was incomplete and only suggestive, was given to the press some weeks ago."

Chairman WALSH. Have you with you this statement?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. I have not seen it published. Have you a copy of that memoranda any place?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It is in my office; whether I have it in Washington I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. Will you please see what you have, because in none of the articles that ever came under my observation was that statement set forth.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I will look it up.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. (reading):

"In reference to Mr. Lee's suggestion, it occurred to me that this memorandum contained material which Mr. Lee might find helpful in that connection.

"Personally, I have never seen a copy of the draft which was sent. Maj. Boughton has since advised Mr. Lee that he went no further with the suggestions."

Chairman WALSH. When did Maj. Boughton advise him of that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know that.

Chairman WALSH. Is this your personal statement that you are reading now?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, Mr. Chairman; but I don't recall the date.

Chairman WALSH. Oh, you don't remember. Go ahead.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. (reading):

"and that neither Gen. Chase nor Gov. Ammons ever knew that such suggestion had been made.

"2. It has been stated that the correspondence disclosed that I 'withheld from the Department of Labor at Washington information asked for when Secretary Wilson sought to avert the strike before it began' and that in response to a full account of the interview with the Government agent, communicated by Mr. Murphy to Mr. Bowers, 'Mr. Bowers wrote back highly praising Mr. Murphy for his discretion in not giving the Government agent any information.'

"The letter of September 16, 1913, from Mr. Murphy to Mr. Bowers, which is in the record, clearly shows that no information was asked for by the Department of Labor, none was withheld, and in Mr. Bowers's letter of September 19 to Mr. Murphy there was no reference to any information having been refused the Government representative.

"3. It has been stated that 'I had a plan * * * for publishing a string of daily newspapers.'

"The apparent basis for this statement is contained in correspondence between Mr. Lee and myself, referring to a letter which I had received from a man I had never heard of and which I had forwarded to Mr. Lee. That letter began as follows: 'This note is from a stranger to you, making a suggestion * * * for a string of fearless, honest newspapers across the country.'

"Mr. Lee, in his reply to me, expressed his disapproval of the suggestion, and added:

"'I do not believe * * * that I will ever come to the point of thinking that you should establish and become responsible for a string of daily papers.'

"No further attention was paid to the suggestion.

"4. It has been stated that the correspondence shows that I 'had a plan * * * of financing the publication of the official organ of the National Chamber of Commerce.'

"The paper referred to is The Nation's Business and is distributed without charge to members of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. The president of the chamber discussed with me on various occasions a financial plan for enlarging this publication so as to make it a more effective medium by which the chamber could place before the business men of the country facts of interest to them in regard to business, commerce, national legislation, industrial matters, etc. Although I considered the proposition entirely legitimate, it was never favorably acted upon.

"5. It has been stated that the correspondence indicates that my associates and myself were indifferent to the distressing conditions in Colorado.

"The following quotation was made from one of Mr. Bowers's letters to me:

"'Several of our mines are working from one-half to two-thirds capacity, and if we can continue undisturbed, we can keep our steel works running and supply our railroad friends with coal to keep them going in good shape until the strike is over.'

"Apparently, without other evidence, this quotation was taken to support the assertion that 'This was at a time when the people of Colorado were suffering for coal and the price had been advanced until thousands of families were without fuel.'

"The fact is that when the strike was called, the price of coal was not raised by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., and most energetic and effective measures were taken by the company to insure that the supply of coal for domestic use should not be curtailed."

Chairman WALSH. What was the date of the letter, I did not carry it in my mind. What was the date of the letter that Mr. Bowers wrote, saying they were running from one-half to two-thirds?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The date is not mentioned here.

Chairman WALSH. Was that at a much later time in the winter, after the strike was called in November?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It may have been.

Chairman WALSH. So the price was not raised until the time of the strike?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think you will see as I go along that the price was not raised at all. [Continuing reading:]

"In response to an inquiry, Mr. Welborn, president of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., forwarded to me the following explicit statement concerning that point:

"'When the strike was called we discontinued shipping coal to the Santa Fe Railroad, the C., B. & Q., the Missouri Pacific, and the Colorado Southern, and continued shipping a small amount to the Denver & Rio Grande. We also stopped shipments of coke to the smelters and other large consumers.'

"After furnishing fuel to the steel works to operate on a reduced basis, we had a small amount of coal available for domestic trade. We continued shipping with no advance in price over our regular winter schedule. For our Denver retail department we bought coal from Wyoming, which cost us $1.50 per ton more than our normal supply for the Denver market."

Chairman WALSH. Now, when was that that you bought the coal from another company?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It was, I suppose, during the fall and winter period.

Chairman WALSH. And when you bought it from another company the retail price in Denver was raised $1.50 a ton?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I was about to complete the statement in which that is mentioned.

Chairman WALSH. That is mentioned?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. May I proceed? [Continues reading:]

"The retail price on this coal was increased correspondingly. We had some of our own in stock at Denver, which lasted until about November 15, and was sold at the price prevailing before the strike was called."

Chairman WALSH. Then am I to understand that the retail price of coal of November 15 went up $1.50 a ton?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Not on the coal that the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. mined, but on the coal which they had bought, that had just exactly that much advance.

Chairman WALSH. Now, if I understand this statement, it is this, that you had coal of your own on hand until November 15, and that until the weather began to get quite cold out there you had the coal on hand and there was no advance, but on November 15 you had sold out all that coal, and you bought coal from the other company, and therefore the retail price went up $1.50 a ton.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. We had bought coal from another State, from Wyoming, for which we had to pay $1.50 more, and this price was added to the selling price of the coal.

Chairman WALSH. So that coal cost $1.50 more, retail, in Denver after November 15?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir. That was not a gain made to the seller, but an advance paid by the seller to the man from whom he bought it.

Chairman WALSH. Did not that price obtain in Denver after November 15 for all coal sold in Denver regardless of where it came from?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. For that I will have to refer you to Mr. Welborn.

Chairman WALSH. So that the statement that the price of coal went up a dollar and a half a ton when the weather got cold was absolutely true?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Not the price of coal that we mined, but the price of coal we bought in order to accommodate these customers.

Chairman WALSH. Which you bought and sold?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Go ahead.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have a further communication from Mr. Welborn that I will submit afterwards, but I will not do it now.

Chairman WALSH. If it is on the same line I should be glad to have you read it now.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would rather finish my statement.

Chairman WALSH. Very good. Take your own time.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. (reading):

"I should like also at this time to refer to statements which have appeared in the newspapers ascribing to me and those associated with me participation in the prosecution of Mr. John R. Lawson. I desire to state unequivocally that neither I nor any of my associates has had any connection whatsoever with this case. I feel, and have so expressed myself very explicitly, that when private interests, either individual or corporate, participate in criminal prosecutions, the proceedings tend to lose that impartial quality which should characterize the administration of justice.

"As soon as I learned that this trial was coming on, I made careful inquiry to assure myself that the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. was not participating in any way in the prosecution, and was assured by Mr. Welborn that this was the fact and that no deviation from this policy would be permitted by the officers of the company in any prosecutions.

"On April 21, the day the trial started, Mr. Welborn, president of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., issued the following statement to the press in Denver:

"Reports that this company has engaged attorneys to assist in the prosecution of either Mr. Lawson or anyone else for offenses growing out of the strike are entirely without foundation. It may be that some of our employees will be called as witnesses, but as a company we have had nothing to do with the prosecution of the defendant. None of our attorneys is associated with the work of the district attorney, and no suggestions have been made to him by us or for us. We feel that the district attorney is competent to handle the case and that he probably would be averse to receiving any offer on our part of helping him, if we were disposed to make such an offer, which we are not. The strike and the occurrences growing out of it are behind us and we have no desire to resurrect them."

"I am also informed that the attorney general of Colorado has publicly stated that the Lawson case was conducted entirely under his control and with his assistants in personal charges; that neither the coal operators nor anyone else had anything to do with the case; that he was not influenced in any way by any corporation or individual, and that the only possible ground for associating the name of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. with the case was the fact that he necessarily had to secure evidence from employees of that company.

"I am sure that the officers and directors of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. agree with me that the administration of justice should rest solely in the hands of the State. This principle I regard as so vital that I would not stop at anything which might be necessary in order to maintain it absolutely.

"In reviewing recent events in Colorado, while it is doubtless true that many of those who had a part in them would, in the light of present knowledge, have acted differently in many respects, I can only say for myself that at each step I did what at the time seemed to me right and wise. As I see it, the vital questions now are these: Are conditions as they ought to be? If not, are sincere and effective efforts being put forth to make them better?

"I had hoped to have carried out before this the purpose mentioned to the commission in January to go to Colorado and see for myself what conditions are. But through an unfortunate succession of events, I have thus far been prevented from doing so. While I might, of course, have found time to go for a few days, I have been postponing the trip until such time as I could be free to stay for several weeks, or as much longer as necessary. It is still my purpose to undertake this mission as soon as it can be arranged, with due regard to my other obligations.

"In the meantime, I am assured by the officers of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. that they are cooperating with the employees to improve working and living conditions, and that these cooperative efforts are meeting with gratifying success. Following the hearings in New York in January, I was glad to avail myself of the opportunity for informal conferences with members of labor organizations, to get their point of view concerning the Colorado situation. We have also had helpful conferences with the commission of which Mr. Seth Low is chairman, appointed by the President of the United States, and have assured that commission of our desire to cooperate with it in its work of promoting harmony and good will.

"As to the future, we are bending every energy toward the development of sound conditions, and in that effort we seek the cooperation of all those interested in establishing relations of mutual confidence and advantage between the various elements associated in the industrial life of the State of Colorado."

Chairman WALSH. Would it be convenient for you to read that other letter that you got from Mr. Welborn in regard to the price of coal?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. This is dated May 15:

"During the winter of 1913-14, following calling of coal strike, there was no shortage of coal in Denver market except on account of railroad blockades caused by unprecedented snowfalls early in December. Lignite coal produced immediately north of Denver has always been the main source of supply for this market, and was able during all of the strike to more than meet demands of Denver trade, except when operations were interfered with by snow blockade.

"The Wyoming coal, which on account of greater mine prices and higher freight rates sold here at $1.50 per ton more than coal of similar grade from southern Colorado, was purchased only by consumers desiring coal of higher grade than the lignite from north of Denver, and not because of shortage of lignite supply. With exception noted due to snow blockade there was no actual shortage of Colorado coal or consumption in State during the strike, though there was some change in source of supply."

Chairman WALSH. Do I understand from that that the price of coal remained the same—all the coal that came from southern Colorado?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Until that supply of coal was exhausted.

Chairman WALSH. November 15?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And after that—is the Wyoming coal of the same general character as the southern Colorado coal?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The Wyoming coal is of a higher grade, as I understand it, and it is used by those that want a fancy article and are willing to pay the higher price. That coal from the northern part of the State is a coal used commonly in Denver.

Chairman WALSH. What was the date of Mr. Welborn's letter?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. This telegram?

Chairman WALSH. That telegram; yes.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. May 15 of this year.

Chairman WALSH. That was a few days ago?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What was the price of coal—you say there was no change in the price of coal after November 15?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. We are talking of two kinds of coal.

Chairman WALSH. The coal that was commonly used in the retail trade in Denver, prior to November 15?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would understand that there was no shortage of coal; he doesn't say what the price was.

Chairman WALSH. Whether it was short or long, was there any raise in the retail price of coal to the consumer in Denver after November 15?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I can not tell that.

Chairman WALSH. How long did those snow blockades last that raised the price of coal?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That I can not give you.

Chairman WALSH. A month?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. Two months?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Your information derived from that letter is not very illuminating regarding the retail price of coal in Denver generally?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I supposed that I was expected to speak of the coal produced and sold by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

Chairman WALSH. I would like to ask you a question or two before adjournment. Now that you have referred to the Lawson trial here, you say Mr. Welborn gave out a statement immediately preceding the Lawson trial that your company was not going to furnish any attorneys. I see this in that statement, "It may be that some of our employees will be called as witnesses, but as a company we have had nothing to do with the prosecution of the defendant."

Now, were there employees referred to, the men that came through the Baldwin-Felts Detective Agency, and who during the strike were pretending to be striking miners but were in reality detectives employed by your company, and did they afterwards for the pay that your company gave them go upon the witness stand and testify to that portion of the evidence which connected Joe Lawson with the crime of murder?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would have to refer you to Mr. Welborn.

Chairman WALSH. Suppose that were true, with your repugnance to the taking part by the corporation in these prosecutions, would you go to Denver and take some action against the action of the officials of your company? If it proved to be that the witnesses that connected the man with the crime were in your employ as detectives and were spies, pretending to be workmen, and, as a matter of fact, were Baldwin-Felts detectives, paid by you during all of this time and down to the time the trial took place, would you protest against that, or do you consider proper—

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. (interrupting). I presume that is a matter which the attorney general decided when he called his witnesses. I would not feel it was up to me to suggest to him.

Chairman WALSH. Even though a part of your money paid for the testimony that convicted the man of murder? You say that is up to the attorney general and "I will take no part in it"?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is a matter I have no knowledge of.

Chairman WALSH. But suppose knowledge is brought to you, would you take any part to save a man from lifetime imprisonment?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I certainly would not be willing to stand back of anything that was not perfectly fair.

Chairman WALSH. Then you would go there and call attention to the fact that these men whose testimony convicted Lawson were paid detectives by you, and you did not believe that men that were paid to do that kind of work should be trusted where the whole lifetime of a human being was at stake?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am not prepared to say what step I would take, but I meant what I said when I said that the administration of justice should rest entirely in the State, and in that I would stand for that principle at any cost. I am not prepared to say what steps I would take.

Chairman WALSH. Suppose that it should be brought indubitably to you that one of the jurors that served upon this trial had been given the exclusive privilege, he being a traveling salesman, the exclusive privilege of selling his product to all of your camps, would you suggest, if that was brought to you, to the authorities that you didn't think that was fair where a man's whole life was at stake? You met this man Lawson, he called on you at your office?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. He was one of the men that conferred with you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I met him.

Chairman WALSH. And if that was brought indubitably to you, what kind of steps would you take to save his life?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I can not say.

Chairman WALSH. Would you think that was fair for a man that had an exclusive contract with you and was making money out of it every day, to serve as a juror in an acute conflict of this sort?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am not familiar with the conditions.

Chairman WALSH. If it turns out that way, what would you do?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Whatever was necessary to see that right was done.

Chairman WALSH. Do you think that was right or fair, if it was true, to try a man before a juror who was so situated with reference to your company?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think that the jurors should all have been selected with the greatest care, and if any jurors were not selected and properly fitted for the place, they should have been excused, and if it can be shown now that they were not proper men the attorney general would want to try the case again, I am sure.

Chairman WALSH. Now, what would you do—were you here when Dr. Gaddis testified?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir; I was not.

Chairman WALSH. But his testimony was brought immediately to you so you could see what he said?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Were you notified that Dr. Gaddis, head of the sociological department, would testify to matters seriously affecting your corporation at these hearings?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I heard he had testified, and I have arranged to have a copy of the testimony and will be very glad to read it carefully.

Chairman WALSH. Is it a part of the plan in your own mind that you will not hear anything about conditions in Colorado?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have arranged, as I have just stated to you, for a copy of the testimony and to go over it very carefully.

Chairman WALSH. You remember we had this discussion in 1904, men were driven down the canyon and thrown out on the prairies, and in some cases left to die, or received such treatment that they afterwards died, when you had charge of this company, and I believe you stated you knew nothing about it, and I believe you were asked to inform yourself about the true condition in the State of Colorado?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Then I will advise you of this, although it took place here yesterday. I think Mr. Heydt, your secretary, was here. Did he advise you of what Dr. Gaddis said?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Did you hear what Mr. Gaddis said about that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Did you read the Washington morning papers?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not.

Chairman WALSH. Then, Mr. Gaddis said that he was informed that there was a man upon that jury by the name of W. W. Wilson, and Mr. Wilson had told him personally upon a train that he had been given the exclusive right to sell the products of the National Biscuit Co., for whom he was working, to all of your camps; that it was an exclusive right that had been given by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.; that he saw afterwards that W. W. Wilson actually served as a juror and was on the jury that condemned him to life, and he said that he was the only W. W. Wilson that he knew in Trinidad, and that he was reasonably sure that he was the same man that told him this on the train. A telegram was sent F. W. Clark asking if he was the same W. W. Wilson, and he replied, "Wire received. W. W. Wilson is a traveling salesman of the National Biscuit Co., your information is correct."

If this turns out to be true have you such zeal for the full administration of justice that you will make some demand on your company and the authorities of Colorado in regard to getting Mr. Lawson a new trial and tried before a jury none of whom are beholden to your company?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would not be a party—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). What would you do, if that turns out to be true?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am reserving the right to decide that when I am informed as to the situation. I stand on this very definite statement, that I believe that the administration of justice should rest in the hands of the State, and regard the principle as so important that I would not stop at anything which might be necessary to maintain it absolutely.

Chairman WALSH. But I am giving you a specific instance, if that turns out to be true, what will you do? Lawson has a wife and children, and suppose he was sent to the penitentiary under this judgment delivered by this jury, would you tell them to read that statement to him in the penitentiary, or his wife and child, that you didn't believe in any such thing, or what would you do yourself when an injustice was being done?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If an injustice has been done I will do what I can to maintain justice, and see that justice is done.

Chairman WALSH. You heard that letter read that Mr. Bowers wrote you, in which he said that there is one sheriff down there in that county that has been on the job 16 years?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I was not here.

Chairman WALSH. Did anybody tell you about it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Of course, I have seen the letter.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you knew that was the man, Jeff Farr?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I was so informed.

Chairman WALSH. And you know that he is still in there?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have so heard.

Chairman WALSH. I am leaving the Lawson case for a minute, and I believe you stated in here, I never saw this before and want some time to go over it, but you stated in there, I believe, that you had no direction in what took place in Colorado; that you were not the guiding force in Colorado?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir; that is what I stated.

Chairman WALSH. Now, do you, as I understand, represent your father in the management of these companies?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I represent my father in regard to these various investments.

Chairman WALSH. Is this one of them?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It is.

Chairman WALSH. He keeps very close track of matters himself?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No.

Chairman WALSH. And you have a way of sending out to these men what your father thinks of these things?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know of any case in which I have.

Chairman WALSH. I will read you a letter signed by yourself and submitted by your officials, dated December 26, 1913:

"DEAR MR. BOWERS:

"Your letter of December 22, with inclosed clipping, is received. I note with interest the fact that the miners are rapidly going to Colorado from the South and East."

These were men to take the place of the striking miners?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I presume so.

Chairman WALSH. And the men from the South were negroes?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. Did you not know they were bringing in negroes in large numbers from the South?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I didn't state they were bringing them in; they were going.

Chairman WALSH. That there were large numbers of negroes going in there?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. I will continue with the letter:

"I assume this means that conditions have become so nearly normal that business can be very generally resumed. It is most gratifying to feel that this struggle is so rapidly becoming a thing of the past.

"I know that father has followed the events of the past few months in connection with the fuel company with unusual interest and satisfaction."

I will leave out what follows.

"Thanking you for your holiday greetings, and wishing you and yours a happy new year, I am,

"Very sincerely,

"JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr."

You sent that letter to Mr. Bowers, did you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did.

Chairman WALSH. Now, were you at your father's house or was he at your house on December 28?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I can not recall that, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. I note the day before was Christmas; did you meet him on Christmas?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. This last Christmas?

Chairman WALSH. 1913.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I can not remember that; it is very probable that he was in the country.

Chairman WALSH. Now, how did your father express satisfaction as to events in Colorado that he had watched so closely for a few months prior to December, 1913?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I see him as often as I can, and he is always interested in having me tell him anything that I can tell him or volunteer to tell him with reference to his various investments, and he is naturally at liberty to ask any questions that he cares to ask, and it is the natural course of our intercourse that he should mention from time to time a matter of this kind.

Chairman WALSH. Did he get information any place else than from you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know that he did, but he would have been at liberty to inquire of any member of his staff, or write to the company.

Chairman WALSH. Now, in what way did he follow the events there, through talking to you and getting reports from you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know of any other.

Chairman WALSH. How did he express satisfaction; say that he was glad to see how things were going, or just laugh?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It is a little difficult to recall it, it being a year and a half ago.

Chairman WALSH. You can not tell how he expressed it, but he was unusually satisfied with the trend of events in Colorado?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. You seem to know.

Chairman WALSH. I will read it to you:

"I know that father has followed the events of the past few months in connection with the fuel company with unusual interest and satisfaction."

The fuel company is the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, on September 26, 9,000 of his faithful employees took to the canyons of Colorado rather than work under the conditions they had been working under?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would hardly think the figures were correct.

Chairman WALSH. Was it 8,000?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would think it was very much smaller.

Chairman WALSH. Give me the number that left and went to the canyons, or went to living in tents, or scattered away?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. Was it 9,000?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. My impression was that the total number that went out was about one-half of the total number working, which was about 9,000 altogether.

Chairman WALSH. So that there were about 4,000 or 4,500 went out and went to living in the canyons, rather than live in the camp any longer?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would think something like that came out, from the reports that came to me.

Chairman WALSH. And a few months prior to the time that you wrote that letter about your father, Jeff Farr had deputized 326 gunmen and allowed your company to arm them and turned them loose in the community; that is true, is it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is the statement made; I don't know from personal knowledge.

Chairman WALSH. Is it not true that these deputized gunmen, before you wrote about your father's unusual satisfaction, that the gunmen had riddled the Forbes tent colony with machine guns, and had shot a boy of one of the striking miners nine times through one of his legs?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I can not say as to that.

Chairman WALSH. Prior to the time you wrote that letter about your father's unusual satisfaction, is it not a fact that an effort was made to have the officers of this company meet the representatives of the striking miners, and they were brought together in the statehouse for that purpose, and that the representatives of your company refused to go through a door, or thin partition, to meet those men?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That I do not know, but I know that the officers of the company met representatives of the miners in a conference, in which Secretary Wilson, of the Labor Department, was present, and the propositions that were made by the governor looking to a settlement of the dispute were all acceded to by the operators and not by the representatives of the miners.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you if prior to the time that you wrote that letter about your father's unusual satisfaction you had not received a letter from Mr. Bowers stating that he had used every weapon at his command to coerce the governor of the State and whip him into line?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't recall. If you have such a letter from my office I have seen it.

Chairman WALSH. Do you mean to say that on such an important matter as that, that an officer of your company boasted that he would whip the governor of the State into line, that you have forgotten it after submitting it to this commission?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. There is a mass of letters there.

Chairman WALSH. Then you have forgotten it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And is it not a fact that, prior to the time that your father expressed this unusual satisfaction, that a score of strikers were being thrown into jail by the military authorities and denied a hearing before a civil court, and that constitutional government had given place to despotic rule in southern Colorado? Is that true?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. You know better than I do.

Chairman WALSH. Your father was one of the big owners of this and was following the events closely in Colorado, and that letter was the truth?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Certainly, it was.

Chairman WALSH. We will adjourn at this point, and will ask you to please resume the stand in the morning.

(At this point, 5 o'clock p. m., the commission adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, May 21, 1915, at 10 o'clock a. m.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Friday, May 21, 1915—10 a. m.

Present: Chairman Walsh, Commissioners Harriman, Lennon, O'Connell, and Weinstock.

Chairman WALSH. The house will please be in order. We will resume now. Mr. Rockefeller.

TESTIMONY OF MR. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, JR.—Continued.

Chairman WALSH. I would like to go back just for a moment, Mr. Rockefeller, to the question of the price of coal.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Chairman, I would like to add just a word to the testimony in the Lawson case.

Chairman WALSH. Would you like to do it at this time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Very well.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Since giving my testimony yesterday I have read with care the stenographer's transcript of the questions asked by the chairman of this commission in reference to the Lawson trial, and my view of certain hypothetical cases, and the course I would take should the facts subsequently prove to be as presented. As these questions all relate to a criminal appeal at present pending before the courts of this country, I feel that my position can not be too precisely stated, both as respects the questions already asked, and questions of a similar nature which may be addressed; and I therefore desire to give to this commission my opinion on these matters in the form of a written statement, which will be unequivocal, and admit of no misunderstanding or misinterpretation.

As already expressed, my opinion is that justice should be so administered as to be above suspicion; and if in any material particular the trial of Mr. Lawson has been wanting in this respect, I, for one, should desire to see the Supreme Court of Colorado, to which the appeal has been taken, carefully consider every ground that may be urged, and grant a new trial should any material ground be sustained.

I have no more right than has any other citizen in this country to attempt to interfere with or influence the course of justice; and questions which are so framed as to seek to put me in the position of appearing to concede that there has been willful tampering with the courts, or of stating what I am prepared to do to influence the future course of justice, either as respects Mr. Lawson or any other person, I can not regard as other than improper questions, and a direct reflection upon those who are charged with the administration of justice. To sinister reflections of this kind I must decline to be a party, even by inference.

Were I, either directly or indirectly, to attempt to influence the judiciary of Colorado as respects the present appeal of Mr. Lawson's trial, I should be guilty of the very procedure against which witnesses before this commission have so strongly protested, and which I myself have not less strongly condemned; and I hope the chairman of the commission will not expect from me replies to any questions which imply that I believe others have been guilty of unlawful or improper acts in the administration of justice, or that I entertain a position superior to that of any other citizen of the Republic, either before the law or toward its administration.

I thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Now, with reference to the questions I ask, Mr. Rockefeller, if there are any of them that you think for any reason you should not answer, why, you state that at the time, and of course it will be given consideration, and they will be taken up for action by the commission later on. Now, I suppose this high regard you have for the law extends to all of its officers charged with its administration? Is that correct?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Certainly.

Chairman WALSH. And you have not a contempt for officers who do not do your bidding, of course? You respect them, whether they do your bidding or not, do you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Are you speaking of officers of the law?

Chairman WALSH. Officers of the law; yes.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not undertake to direct the officers of the law, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. I want to read you a letter that was written to you by Mr. Bowers, and ask you if it is true. You have respect for the authority of the people's representatives, you claim, always—do you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have respect for the duly elected authorities, certainly.

Chairman WALSH. All right. I will read you this letter of Mr. Bowers, dated November 18, 1913; but do you first, before you have respect for these officers, get them in a state of mind, by coercion on your part and by combining every great financial interest, to think your way before you give them that respect?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not undertake to get the officers of the law in any position, Mr. Walsh.

Chairman WALSH. I will read you now this letter from Mr. Bowers, of November 18; but before I get to that, Mr. Bowers has been in the employ of your father for many years?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He was formerly in the employ of my father. He is not now in his employ.

Chairman WALSH. How long was he in the employ of your father before he went to Colorado?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I should say, offhand, 10 years, and perhaps 12.

Chairman WALSH. I notice in one of the letters he says that your father and he had an understanding as to how he was to conduct himself toward the employees of the enterprises he was in some 20 years before the Colorado trouble. Did you notice that letter?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't recall the number of years, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. What did he do for your father first?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Bowers was the—was related to my father as the head of the lake transportation—ore-transportation business.

Chairman WALSH. The lake ore transportation business. Did he have many employees under him there?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Quite a number.

Chairman WALSH. About how many?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. Didn't they have a strike while he was the representative of your father there?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That I can not recall.

Chairman WALSH. How long was he with the lake ore transportation before he went to Colorado?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. My mind is not fresh on those dates, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Was it as much as 15 years?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think he was with the Lake Transportation Co. until—if not right up to the time he went to Colorado, within a year or two, at least.

Chairman WALSH. How soon did he go to Colorado after your father secured the interest which he has in the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I should say some years.

Chairman WALSH. Well, could you say about how long?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I should think five years.

Chairman WALSH. Had he ever lived in Colorado before?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That I don't know. I had not known that he had.

Chairman WALSH. Don't you know that he had never lived in Colorado?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No. It is my impression he had not, but I don't know it as a fact.

Chairman WALSH. You don't know it as a fact? Did he know Mr. Welborn or Mr. Madison or Mr. Weltzel before he went out there, so far as you know?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Not so far as I know.

Chairman WALSH. He went there as the representative of your father; did he not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What had he gone there as?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He went to Colorado because of his wife's health, as I stated very clearly in my testimony before the committee of Congress a year ago. Mr. Bowers's wife was ill and the doctors ordered her to go to Colorado, and Mr. Bowers of course went. When we knew that he was to be in Colorado we asked him if he would take time to acquaint himself with the interest which we had in the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

Chairman WALSH. Who asked him? Who do you mean by "we"?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did, I presume, or some of my father's representatives.

Chairman WALSH. Didn't your father ask him?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. My father was not in the habit of dealing personally with his representatives, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Now, do you remember whether it was you or some of your associates that asked Mr. Bowers to go out there?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think very probably it was Mr. Gates. At that time he was active as one of my father's—one of the members of my father's staff. I think it was probably Mr. Gates.

Chairman WALSH. Were you present at the time he asked him?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I could not recall, Mr. Chairman, but I think not.

Chairman WALSH. In what capacity did he go out there?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He went out as—you mean, in what capacity did he look into the affairs of the company?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; who was he looking into them for?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. For my father.

Chairman WALSH. And how long after he went out there was it before he became chairman of the executive board of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That I can not state. It was some months. It might have been a year or more; but when he ceased—when he became connected with the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., then he became a representative of all of the stockholders of the company. He was placed in any of the positions he held there in the regular way and regarded his duties to any other stockholder just the same as to my father.

Chairman WALSH. What is the regular way you have of appointing them? Just tell them there is a job, they can go take it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Chairman, I object to that method——

Chairman WALSH. To what method?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Of implying that we have a method of appointing to office which is irregular.

Chairman WALSH. Well, I might explain to you the reason I asked it in that way was that you said in the New York hearing that Mr. Jerome Greene went off the board of directors of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., and that the place was filled automatically, as I remember it, by Mr. Ivy Lee. Don't you have a meeting of the stockholders? Don't the stockholders elect the directors in your companies?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Chairman, there again you are implying there are irregularities in our company. I am glad to give you any information, but I object again to your implying an irregularity.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you the direct question, Do you just put in directors and take them out without action of the stockholders in your companies?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The stockholders, Mr. Chairman, elect directors in any company with which I have connection the same as they do in other companies, I presume, at their regular meetings. And, as you know, it is customary if a vacancy occurs in a board of directors between stockholders' meetings such vacancy for the unexpired period is ordinarily filled by the directors.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know what was done with Ivy Lee?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. What is—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Was he elected by the stockholders or put in by the directors between meetings of the stockholders?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. My impression is, and I think I am correct in saying that he was elected by the directors, because the stockholders' meeting comes in the fall, and he did not come on my father's staff until the first of the year. So that he was not elected until after that time; and it was doubtless at one of the stockholders' meetings. But I want it understood that that is the perfectly regular ordinary way of electing directors, and that is the procedure that was adopted.

Chairman WALSH. How did Mr. Murphy get on the executive board—Mr. Starr J. Murphy—of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. In just the same way.

Chairman WALSH. Was he made vice president in just the same way? Was he elected during an interim between meetings of stockholders, or elected by the stockholders?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't recall.

Chairman WALSH. Do you have the authority to veto the action of the board of directors of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. with respect to selecting members of the executive committee?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Do I personally—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Do you personally; yes?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I should have no other authority than any other director, Mr. Chairman, nor do I undertake to exercise any other authority.

Chairman WALSH. I will read you this letter of November 18, 1913. That was addressed to you two months after the strike:

"You will be interested to know that we have been able to secure the cooperation of all the bankers of the city, who have had three or four interviews with our little cowboy governor, agreeing to back the State and lend it all the funds necessary to maintain the militia and afford ample protection, so that our miners could return to work, or give protection to men who are anxious to come up here from Texas, New Mexico, and Kansas, together with some States farther east. Besides the bankers, the chamber of commerce, the real estate exchange, together with a great many of the best business men, have been urging the governor to take steps to drive these vicious agitators out of the State. Another mighty power has been rounded up in behalf of the operators by the gathering together of 14 of the editors of the most important newspapers in Denver, Pueblo, Trinidad, Walsenburg, Colorado Springs, and other of the larger places in the State."

Did you get that letter?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If it was directed to me, I naturally did.

Chairman WALSH. That expression "our little cowboy governor" referred to the governor of the State of Colorado, did it not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The inference is quite as clear to you as to me.

Chairman WALSH. It also says:

"There probably has never been such pressure brought to bear upon any governor of this State by the strongest men in it as has been brought to bear upon Gov. Ammons."

Is that true?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Of that I can not judge.

Chairman WALSH. That is a letter you got from Mr. Bowers, the chairman of your executive board in Colorado, is it not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. I will call to your attention a letter dated December 22, 1913, from the same source:

"DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: If the governor had acted in September 23 as he has been forced to act during the past few weeks, the strike would have never existed 10 days.

"We used every possible weapon to drive him into action, but he was glove in hand with the labor leaders and is to-day, but the big men of affairs have helped the operators in whipping the agitators, including the governor."

Did you get that letter?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If it is directed to me, I presume I did.

Chairman WALSH. "Now these fellows are cursing him without regard for common decency, so everybody is giving him more or less taffy to keep him from backsliding."

Now, that was the correspondence between you and the chairman of your executive board while this trouble was going on in Colorado, was it not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. So the policy was to get bankers and powerful people to whip these people into line and give them taffy and talk nice to them to keep them with you and to defeat these men on the strike?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is apparent—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). That is apparently the policy of Mr. Bowers. I am bringing this down to your responsibility to show whether or not it was the policy of Mr. Bowers, your executive officer in the field, who was reporting to you personally.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Did I write that letter or Mr. Bowers?

Chairman WALSH. How is that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Did I write that letter?

Chairman WALSH. It is written by Mr. Bowers.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. How can it be my policy then?

Chairman WALSH. You asked me the question. I will tell you, although I will say that hereafter the same rule must be applied to you as to others, that we do not answer questions. I will reply to your question by saying that I am going to read you six letters in a few minutes in which you say you back up every bit of this.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. You asked me, Mr. Chairman, whether that was my policy.

Chairman WALSH. Whether that was your policy; yes.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have stated in my statement of yesterday that neither I nor my associates ever initiated a policy or directed the details of the strike, or anything in connection with it. That statement is true. I did not initiate that policy, and did not frame it and the policy, Mr. Chairman, is simply this: It simply means that there was disorder in the State of Colorado, and naturally every citizen would use what influence he could to bring the authorities to protect life and property, and if he failed to use such influence as he properly could, to move the authorities if they were sluggish in moving, to protect life and property, I should think he was derelict in his duty, and evidently that was the view shared by a very large number of people of high standing in Colorado from that letter, which says that these various groups joined in undertaking to have the properly constituted authorities afford the protection which should be afforded to life and property. That was, of course, the first step to take to try to have the proper authorities act.

Chairman WALSH. So that you had this crowd cooperate with Mr. Bowers, as director of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., under this interpretation that you have just given? You agreed, then, with all that Mr. Bowers said and co-operated with him; is that correct?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did not either agree or disagree. I made no expression about the details of the letter of Mr. Bowers, referred to, nor in the various letters to which you make reference, in which I stated that I stood back of the officials of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. I meant that when they did things that they were doing, and as we believed they were doing, in the interest of justice and of law and order and the proper administration of the trust which had been placed in their hands, men of standing and of reputation, we, of course, stood back of them, and I fancy, Mr. Chairman, it would be impossible to secure men of any ability or character to fill positions of trust in the administration of business, either large or small, unless those who are owners of and directors of such properties stood back of the men whom they put in such positions.

We consider it to be the duty of the men whom we place in charge to take such action as they saw fit, and just the moment an occasion should arise when there was a reason to feel that these men were not doing what was right it was our duty to remonstrate with them or replace them.

Chairman WALSH. So you do stand for this condition and for this interpretation:

"We used every possible weapon to drive the governor into action, but he was glove in hand with the labor leaders, and is to-day, but the big men of affairs have helped the operators in whipping the agitators, including the governor.

"Now, these fellows are cursing him without regard for common decency, so everybody is giving him more or less taffy to keep him from backsliding."

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Chairman, I object again—

Chairman WALSH. Don't you know that the deportation of individuals was a crime; that it was a crime to drive a man, even though you called him an agitator, out of the State, and that it was a crime on the part of the governor?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am not familiar with that.

Chairman WALSH. You are not familiar with that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. I just wanted to get back to one little question here, as to the price of coal in Colorado. The first letter addressed to Mr. Welborn—the telegrams—was what?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. May I interrupt to hand you the only copy I have of that statement that you asked for? It appears in the New York Times of the morning afterwards.

Chairman WALSH. That includes the suggestions that you made to Mr. Lee to give to Maj. Boughton to put into a letter to Gov. Ammons?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think you have not quite stated the case as it was. That does not include the suggestion that I made to Mr. Lee to put in a letter. It included a statement that I had prepared some time previously in answer to certain suggestions or statements which appeared in various publications, a rough draft of such a statement, which I had never used. When this matter came up Mr. Lee—

Chairman WALSH. What matter?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The matter of making some suggestions—

Chairman WALSH. To whom?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. To Maj. Boughton.

Chairman WALSH. For what purpose?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. For the purpose of suggesting how, at his request, matters in Colorado could be brought before the attention of the public.

Chairman WALSH. Was it not for the purpose of giving it to Gov. Ammons to put in a letter which you hoped to be addressed to the President of the United States and the governors of the several States?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Now, again, Mr. Chairman, I must object. You are trying to make it appear that I prepared a statement. I did not prepare a statement and did not have anything to do with the statement.

Chairman WALSH. Will you answer the question?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Was the memoranda which you have now given me intended to be given to Mr. Lee to incorporate in a letter which was to be given to Maj. Boughton, and the memoranda then to be given for the signature of the governor of the State of Colorado for any purpose?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It was a memorandum which was sent to Mr. Lee because it contained certain facts culled from various statements which had been made which I thought he might find useful in the consideration of that letter.

Chairman WALSH. What letter?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The letter from the governor.

Chairman WALSH. What governor?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. From Gov. Ammons, of Colorado.

Chairman WALSH. To be sent to whom?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. To be sent, as Mr. Lee states, to the President of the United States and governors of other States with reference to matters in Colorado.

Chairman WALSH. Now, coming to this other matter—

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Allow me not to leave in your mind the idea that this statement of mine was prepared with reference to the letter which Mr. Lee was suggesting to Maj. Boughton. It was simply a memorandum in my files prepared weeks before, and when the question of preparing such letter—when the suggestion was up—I said, "Here are certain data which may be suggestive."

That was the whole and sole purpose of it.

Chairman WALSH. Didn't you say that it might be well to use it in the letter of Gov. Ammons to the President?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall that I made any suggestion as to using that thing which I have characterized as a rough draft—

Chairman WALSH. If you had said in any letter that you had turned over the memorandum and that you thought it was good to use in the letter Mr. Lee was addressing to Gov. Ammons, it was a mistake?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not think I said that. It is possible that I said it might be used in connection with the draft which he was preparing.

Chairman WALSH (after reading letter). That is the letter you wrote?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Exactly.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you may go to the letter that you got from Mr. Bowers, or the telegram, with reference to the price of coal in the winter that the strike started.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Do you mean the quotation from my statement or telegram I read you later?

Chairman WALSH. The quotation from your statement first—I just want the date of it; I do not want you to read it again, unless you desire to do so.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. This quotation from Mr. Welborn's letter—the date of the letter, as I stated yesterday, I think it is—I think it does not appear in this; the date of the telegram does not appear.

Chairman WALSH. It was within the last month, was it not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes; I think so; it was just about the time I made this statement in the paper.

Chairman WALSH. This telegram that you read later?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That was dated May 15, as I said yesterday.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I must confess, to my mind, they both were a little involved. Do you say now that you understand the effect of those two telegrams to be that Mr. Welborn denies that the price of lignite coal, which was the kind you had, you stated, was raised the winter after the strike started?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Chairman, I can of course only speak for the coal which was sold by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

Chairman WALSH. Was that the same as lignite?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think that is what the telegram says.

Chairman WALSH. To bring this matter to a close the attorney general at that time, named Farrar, is the present attorney general?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I believe he is.

Chairman WALSH. He was reelected; don't you know it is a fact that Mr. Farrar, the attorney general, went to the governor in person and asked the governor to use the militia of the State of Colorado to install the strike breakers in your mine, and that he so testified before this commission at Denver, Colo.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I know nothing of that.

Chairman WALSH. I will now read you, Mr. Rockefeller, from the testimony of the same attorney general, given before our commission while we were holding our hearing in Colorado; the present attorney general, and he was at the time this strike started and was during the strike and was attorney general in the Lawson case:

"Mr. FARRAR (continuing). That was an absolute military necessity; it would be an absolute necessity to keep strike breakers out in order to maintain order. There was also a practical question involved, and that was that coal was prohibitive both in price and in supply. Winter was coming on and coal was selling here, and I mean lignite coal, such as we produce, at from $9 to $10 per ton and could not be procured in sufficient quantities at that price."

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. May I ask who the Mr. Farrar is who is speaking?

Chairman WALSH. The attorney general of the State of Colorado, testifying before our commission. Do you want this commission to gather from the letters you read from Mr. Welborn that this statement is not correct; that it is an error and untrue?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Of course, the commission must gather what information they like from that statement. I would not for a moment say that it was not given in the best of faith and in the belief on the part of the person giving it that it was accurate, and that it should be entitled to consideration as I should be entitled to consideration for the statements I make; and that it was made in good faith by the president of the company.

Chairman WALSH. Do you claim that the president of your company, in those two telegrams, claims that the price of coal was not increased to $9 or $10 a ton, as testified to by the attorney general?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He makes no reference to that; and I am not attempting to speak as to the price that might be put on coal; but I am speaking, and he was, too, for the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

Chairman WALSH. As a director of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., engaged in that great public utility of providing fuel for the wants of the people of the State of Colorado, did you or did you not know that the price of coal was prohibitive to the people and could not be had while the strike was going on?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have Mr. Welborn's statement to the effect that the price of coal was not changed or the supply diminished, except when the snow tied up traffic. I read you that and I make no statement other than I have read.

Chairman WALSH. As a director of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., engaged in that important utility, you have no personal knowledge as to whether or not the people were deprived of coal while the strike was going on?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have the knowledge the president gave me in his statement.

Chairman WALSH. That is within the last month that you got that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. But the statement covers the period under discussion.

Chairman WALSH. I am now trying to discuss your own knowledge as a director of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., mining what percentage of coal mined in the State of Colorado; 40 per cent?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Something like that.

Chairman WALSH. And you say you do not know the price that coal sold in Colorado in the winter following the strike?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No; I never know what the price of coal is there, and do not pretend to know.

Chairman WALSH. Did you hear the testimony of Mr. Doyle given before this commission?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You knew—you were advised by Mr. Bowers that one of the grievances of the strikers was that they were not allowed checkweighmen?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That statement was contained in one of Mr. Bowers's letters, which you have.

Chairman WALSH. Did you hear or read the charges made that your company cheated in weights?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Where did I hear them made, Mr. Chairman?

Chairman WALSH. Haven't you read the newspapers and read the statement of Mr. Doyle, the representative of the miners, given before this commission?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes; you are asking me where did I hear it, and I don't know, but I have heard the statement has been made that the coal operators did what you say.

Chairman WALSH. Cheated. If they did, you would say that was a contemptible crime?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Absolutely.

Chairman WALSH. If the company cheated the men digging coal under the ground out of pay for their service?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And if it was done, it ought to be prosecuted to the last degree?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. We do not disagree on that, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Did your company cheat?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Not to my knowledge.

Chairman WALSH. Not to your knowledge.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. To your knowledge did the other companies combine with your company?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. We never combined with any other company.

Chairman WALSH. Didn't Mr. Ivy Lee represent all of the mine operators of Colorado when he was putting out this publicity, claiming to be facts, in regard to Colorado?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Chairman, what connection has that with the question of checkweighmen?

Chairman WALSH. I am just coming to it.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. You know that Mr. Lee was acting for the three operators who formed a committee representing the various operators.

Chairman WALSH. Your company formed a committee with the other coal operators to fight the United Mine Workers of America, or strikers in that field?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. There was no effort at any time to fight anyone.

Chairman WALSH. Well, to contest with them?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The effort was to maintain and protect life and property and conduct the business.

Chairman WALSH. And also to obtain publicity is what you got Ivy Lee for?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Certainly.

Chairman WALSH. And to conduct what you call a union educational campaign?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. What I call?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; in your letter to Mr. Lee.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall that any such educational campaign was ever undertaken. That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. You did so at that time.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. There is a statement in the letter. Allow me to make that clear: There is a statement in the letter as to the possible wisdom of undertaking to make publications which would give the public further knowledge with reference to the unions of the country; that was not undertaken. The purpose was that the facts might be known; it was as much in the interests of the unions as not in the interest of the unions. It was to present the facts; and that was the entire purpose of the publicity campaign.

Chairman WALSH. So you called it a union educational campaign in your letter?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think there is reference of that kind made, but, as I say, that was never undertaken.

Chairman WALSH. You just proposed that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know whether I proposed it or I discussed it with my colleagues, but I think it would have been a very useful service to perform, but it was not undertaken.

Chairman WALSH. We will get to that later, and see how much was done.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I will say nothing was done on that program that you refer to.

Chairman WALSH. I don't care what you call it, but Mr. Lee did send out the facts in the publicity campaign for the coal operators of Colorado?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Lee sent out nothing; the three operators that formed the committee—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Mr. Lee wrote it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. My typewriter writes the letters that I sign; is he responsible for them?

Chairman WALSH. Did your father pay Mr. Lee for his services in that connection?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He did.

Chairman WALSH. Then you did do it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Even though you hired the man that wrote the stuff and paid him $6,000 for sending it from Philadelphia to Denver, you still say that you and your father didn't send that stuff out?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think it is fair that you have all sides of this question, and if you will call to mind again the conditions under which that arrangement that my father would pay the whole, or any portion of Mr. Lee's compensation—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). It is perfectly clear to my mind.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. You seem to be confused. The suggestion was made to Mr. Welborn and the operators' committee that we regarded it of the utmost importance to the companies of Colorado and the people of Colorado, all of whom were being attacked publicly, and misrepresented, that the facts should be presented. We regarded it of such importance to the various interests that while we assumed the operators would want to bear the expense in whole or in part, at least, as far as they were able, that the whole matter was left entirely in their hands. As to their part of the expense, whatever they thought they could bear, well and good, and what they could not, we would bear. There was nothing concealed about it, nothing to be ashamed of, it was a perfectly open business transaction.

Chairman WALSH. But your father did pay him $6,000 for sending out the alleged facts in behalf of all of the operators engaged in the contest in Colorado?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. There were three people that took the responsibility for everything that was sent out, and those three operators were the ones that formed that committee.

Chairman WALSH. And your father paid the actual money to Mr. Lee for getting out these bulletins of the alleged facts, sending them from Philadelphia to Denver, and from there sending them out over the country?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If that is the way it was done.

Chairman WALSH. Who was Mr. Starr J. Murphy?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He is one of my associates and a member of my father's staff.

Chairman WALSH. Was he a director of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He is.

Chairman WALSH. Was he during the strike a director of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He was.

Chairman WALSH. And he is also a member of your father's staff?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir; and that is why he is a director, as one of my father's representatives.

Chairman WALSH. He is a representative of your father?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir; on the board of directors of the fuel company.

Chairman WALSH. And represents you to that extent?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am also a director; we are representing the interests.

Chairman WALSH. I will read you from a letter written by Mr. L. M. Bowers, September 19, 1913, which was four days before this strike was called, and call your attention—

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That was before the strike was called?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The strike was called—I thought it was called the 16th.

Chairman WALSH. September 23.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. But that was the day it took effect. The day the convention met—

Chairman WALSH. The day the strike was called and the men left your mine was the 23d.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The convention met on the 16th and the strike was determined on on that day.

Commissioner LENNON. My remembrance is that the convention met on the 16th.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. And it didn't take effect until the 23d.

Chairman WALSH. And your men went out on the 23d?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. As I remember it.

Chairman WALSH. And you were at Seal Harbor at that time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I may have been there, but I think I had returned to New York.

Chairman WALSH. They wired you as soon as the strike was called?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If they say so in the correspondence.

Chairman WALSH. What do you say about it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't recall.

Chairman WALSH. Did you send them a wire on the 23d that you were exceedingly gratified by the showing made by them?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't recall.

Chairman WALSH. I will come down to this letter written by Mr. Bowers to Starr J. Murphy, "As our miners shift more or less new men are coming all the while; about a year ago Mr. Welborn and the writer were discussing these questions, because one or two competitive companies—both of whom tried to interest Mr. Cooper in their bonds—were cheating their miners by false weights."

Did Mr. Murphy bring that information to you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I presume I read the letter.

Chairman WALSH. Now, did you notify the authorities on September 19 that the abominable crime of robbing laborers that were digging this coal was carried on by some of the coal companies out there?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't presume I did.

Chairman WALSH. Do you call yourself an accessory after the offense for not doing so?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If I am, I am in the same class with the commissioners.

Chairman WALSH. You think I am in the same class with you? I have called attention to it and ask that those men be prosecuted. Will you do the same and will you give the names and get Mr. Bowers to go out there as a witness in prosecuting those men?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't regard it as part of my duties.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you if it is a fact that after you knew those miners were being robbed by those companies that you joined those companies, and that your father paid for the information that was sent broadcast throughout the country that there was no just ground for the claim of the miners that they were being robbed and wanted a checkweighman?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It is a fact that this letter was written as you stated. It is a fact that that letter states just what it does with reference to the conditions in regard to checkweighmen.

Chairman WALSH. They were cheating the men?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is what the letter stated.

Chairman WALSH. That is the truth.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I presume it is; I have no more knowledge than you have of the fact.

Chairman WALSH. What were the names of the companies?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have no idea.

Chairman WALSH. Did you not ask Mr. Bowers before you joined with these companies who those companies were that were doing this robbery of those poor men?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I had nothing to do with the officials of the company joining with the other companies in any action they took.

Chairman WALSH. But you were a director?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And your father's personal funds paid for sending out this information that stated to the people of Colorado that the miners were making false charges against all of these companies.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It is easy to make charges.

Chairman WALSH. You have some doubt about this—about the men being robbed, although Bowers, the chairman of your executive board, wrote it to you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. You say all the companies?

Chairman WALSH. No; the two competitive companies.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Whatever Mr. Bowers says I have every reason to believe that he believed it was true. Beyond that I can not deny or confirm it.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Commissioner Weinstock desires me to read this over again:

"As our miners shift more or less and new men are coming all the while; about a year ago Mr. Welborn and the writer were discussing these questions, because one or two competitive companies—both of whom tried to interest Mr. Cooper in their bonds—were cheating their miners by false weights."

Chairman WALSH. Who was Mr. Cooper?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I never heard of him.

Chairman WALSH. What were the names of the two companies that were cheating?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. Have you asked Mr. Bowers?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not.

Chairman WALSH. Did you discuss this letter with your lawyer?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Have you discussed it with Mr. Lee?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you a direct question, bearing upon the developments we have heard as to the cause of industrial unrest. A gentleman—Mr. Weinstock wanted me to ask you; he said that he did not know the names of those companies or who they were. Were these competitive companies? Were they the competitive companies that joined with Welborn?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have no idea.

Chairman WALSH. There was a gentleman went on the witness stand here, and in answer to a very proper question from one of the commissioners, as to whether or not he believed the McNamara brothers were criminals—you know who they are, of course—they were the men that were convicted or pleaded guilty to a very atrocious crime in Los Angeles. You have read about it, of course?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. The question was asked of the witness on the witness stand whether or not he believed the McNamara brothers were criminals and his answer was a very shocking one to most of us. He said the McNamara brothers had committed no crime against his class or the better order of society, and although they pleaded guilty and were convicted, that he did not believe they were criminals. A man named Kubylak, who was questioned on the stand, said that he had been driven from the coal fields of another State, not yours, because after being appointed checkweighman by the men, and discovering that the company were cheating, that they drove him from the camp and charged him with high treason, punishable by death, and agreed if he would leave they would excuse him from the charge of treason, and he left. He said that he believed, that while the men generally were treated as he was, and were set upon violently by officers of the law, even though they were officers of the law, that he felt that he had a right to resist them, and then explained. A number of witnesses have explained that that is what is called class consciousness. Now, I want to ask you whether or not the fact that yourself, or Mr. Bowers, or Mr. Welborn did not call the attention of the authorities or publicly denounce these men that were robbing the poor, and the laborer of his hire, was not due to a sort of class consciousness in your mind, that you ought to stick together, no matter what the offense was that the other companies did?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Absolutely not. I have no idea what Mr. Bowers's motives in doing or not doing that might have been. I fancy they are the same as yours or mine in the town that we live, where we might happen to know that certain saloons were not closing at the hour they should close, and we might know a number of other things of that kind. Would you or I stop to bring charges against them or any other person that we might know were breaking the law?

Chairman WALSH. If I must answer your question, if I owned a saloon like the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. do in Colorado, through accepting an immense rental out of the profit, and I would be very particular in closing that saloon, and would close it, and as long as you asked the question, I want to ask you if it is your sense of responsibility as a director of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., when you discovered that the owners of mines, situated as you are charged, with some crime, that you are charged with, by your workmen, and you discovered that that crime is being committed, do you consider that you bear a different relation to that crime than the ordinary citizen does? Hereafter, I will direct my questions to you and will have answers direct.

Now, did Mr. Lee send out alleged facts stating that there was no just basis for the grievance that the miners had in Colorado, to wit, that they were not allowed checkweighmen, and were being robbed by false weights on the part of the company?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I will say that Mr. Lee never sent out anything; the operators' committee sent it out.

Chairman WALSH. Did Mr. Lee send them by his own hand from Pennsylvania to Denver, there to be sent out?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The operators' committee took the responsibility.

Chairman WALSH. Please answer my question; didn't Mr. Lee send them to the mine operators at Denver, and they sent them out there, so it would appear as if they were sent from Denver originally?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I take exception to your question, because you are putting on Mr. Lee the responsibility for sending out these matters. He had a perfect right to do what he did and did it with the concurrence of the operators' committee, and they assumed the responsibility for everything that was sent out.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you to answer my question; were these bulletins of alleged facts sent by Ivy Lee's own hand from Philadelphia to Denver to be sent out there?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I will have to answer that——

Chairman WALSH. Did he tell you that he did?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't recall.

Chairman WALSH. Did you read his testimony in New York that he did?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I knew the bulletins were printed in Philadelphia, where he was.

Chairman WALSH. And don't you know that he sent them out?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know whether he sent them, or his office boy or secretary.

Chairman WALSH. Whatever Mr. Lee sent out then from his office was either by himself, the office boy, or secretary, and was sent from Philadelphia to Denver to be sent out there?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. They were sent from Philadelphia.

Chairman WALSH. And from Mr. Lee's office?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It was by Mr. Lee's direction that they were sent.

Chairman WALSH. Now, as to the power that you had toward controlling these officers, I want to ask you if this did not appear in the letter of Mr. Bowers to you personally, of the date, October 21, 1913:

"At our annual meeting yesterday the matter of having a vice president in New York was taken up. We thought it very desirable that we have an officer there, and a lawyer preferred, so we elected Mr. Murphy as vice president and a member of the executive committee. I have written Mr. Murphy that if this is not in accord with your wishes we can change it at any executive committee meeting."

Did you get that letter from Mr. Bowers to the effect that they had elected out there in Colorado Mr. Murphy, who I take it to be Starr J. Murphy, the vice president of your company, but that if you wished it, they would reverse that action at once, as soon as they heard from you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The letter is perfectly clear.

Chairman WALSH. And if you had said to them, "I don't want him," off he would have come?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think we would have a perfect right to say whether people in our office shall fill certain positions or not, where they are representing an interest we have. If we thought it was best for him not to take up that position on account of his other duties we would have had a perfect right to say so, I think.

Chairman WALSH. I am asking about the power, if that was not in accord with your wishes off he would come?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I suppose that anyone employed by another naturally is under the direction of the person that employs him, and Mr. Murphy would not have taken the position unless we were willing that he should be, but I did not know it until after it was done, and it was done by the officers at their meeting.

Chairman WALSH. I note that. But if you did not want Mr. Murphy on the executive board all you would have had to do would have been to say that it was not your wish, and off he would have come?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I assume that he would be glad to do what his principal wanted him to do, if he was under salary.

Chairman WALSH. Although he was elected by the board of directors of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., of Denver, as vice president and member of the executive board, you had the power to veto that and put him off of the board if it did not conform to your wishes?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That power was not——

Chairman WALSH. Did you have the power, answer yes or no, and then make any explanation you wish.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Of course we had the power.

Chairman WALSH. You, I say, not we. Did you have the power?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Our office had the power.

Chairman WALSH. I will read this to you again, and if you don't want to answer it, say yes or no, and I will leave the subject. This was directed to John D. Rockefeller, Jr.:

"At our annual meeting yesterday the matter of having a vice president in New York was taken up. We thought it very desirable that we have an officer here, a lawyer preferred, so we elected Mr. Murphy as vice president and a member of the executive committee. I have written Mr. Murphy that if it is not in accord with your wishes we can change it at any executive committee meeting."

That was the letter you received?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir; and I—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). And if you wished, you could have taken him off?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. And if I answered yes or no I will not give the facts.

Chairman WALSH. Then you may omit the answer. You received that letter and he said if it was your wish they would take him off?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If you want me to give the facts, I will state them; but the facts can not be given by saying yes or no; I will give you a false impression. If you don't want to pursue the question or get at the facts, very good.

Chairman WALSH. I do desire to get at them, but I desire to get at them as facts, and I might say that these long involved answers that do not state the facts and that wind up by saying that you do not recall, do not furnish any illumination—

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. (interrupting). Mr. Chairman, I sat here all yesterday morning and heard another witness testify, and a large part of the afternoon, and he was permitted to speak on without interference; and I think I am entitled to the same consideration as any other witness.

Chairman WALSH. Just the same; yes.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is all I am asking; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Commissioner Weinstock suggests that you answer yes or no, and then qualify it any way you please. That is the rule we have applied all along to other witnesses. Will you accept that rule?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I certainly will if you will permit me to answer the question yes or no and then add my explanation.

Chairman WALSH. You may say yes or no and then make any explanation thereof that you see fit.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Well, then, I misunderstood your question.

Chairman WALSH. You entirely misunderstood me.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Very well. I will be glad to make any reply—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Read the last question, Mr. Reporter. I don't want to have it appear there that I required you to answer yes or no without an opportunity to explain.

(It was ascertained on reading by the reporter that the portion of the testimony sought was in that taken by the preceding reporter, not at the moment present.)

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I will say if that is your position—

Chairman WALSH. My position is that if possible you must answer yes or no; and then you are entitled, of course, to qualify your answer in any way that you see fit, or to make any explanation in regard thereto that you have to make. Now, I would like to keep to a consistent line of questions. So I am going to ask you again if it is not a fact that you had the power individually, you, John D. Rockefeller, jr., to veto the action of the board of directors in the important matter of selecting a vice president for the company and a member of the executive committee?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. And I may make the explanation after I answer?

Chairman WALSH. After you answer yes or no.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. You had the power?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes; I had the power; and I would like to state how I had the power.

Chairman WALSH. Very good. Make any explanation you see fit.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Simply that the man who was appointed to this position was in the employ of my father. I was representing my father and in charge of that employee in his office. That is, a member of his staff would not expect to take a position, representing my father's interests, which my father, through me, did not think it desirable that he should take or did not want him to take or did not want him to take the time to fill. Now, for that reason, of course, if I had said to Mr. Murphy, "Mr. Bowers has suggested, and the officers or directors have elected you to this position, but I do not feel that you can take the time to fill this position," of course Mr. Murphy would have withdrawn from it and would have been perfectly justified in so doing, and I would have been perfectly justified in asking him. But the question, as put, implies that my relation to the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. was such as to give me this power. It was not that. It was my relation to Mr. Murphy.

Chairman WALSH. But you had the power?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I had the power, as I have stated, to begin with; but I had the power not by virtue of my relation to the Fuel & Iron Co., but by virtue of my relations to Mr. Murphy.

Chairman WALSH. Regardless of how you had it, he would go?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Perfectly true.

Chairman WALSH. That would apply to Mr. Lee, too, I believe?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Certainly, because those gentlemen were representing our interests there.

Chairman WALSH. And it applies to Jerome Greene?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He is no longer on our staff.

Chairman WALSH. But when he was a director, that applied to him?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Applies to any man—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). And that applied to—

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. (interrupting). Applied to any man who does not wish to appear himself on boards, but who is entitled through his stockholdings to have representatives.

Chairman WALSH. And that would apply to C. O. Heydt?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Certainly.

Chairman WALSH. And you pay them for their work they do in their positions, and then you control the question as to whether or not they shall go on and off your boards of other corporations?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Why, certainly. Where they are representing us, we naturally control. It is hardly—it would hardly be proper that they should control.

Chairman WALSH. No; you are paying them, and they have to do it.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Why, certainly.

Chairman WALSH. As you wish?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Certainly; they have to expect to take such positions as we ask them to take.

Chairman WALSH. As you are willing for them to take; and if the board of directors of one of your companies puts one of them on, and it don't meet with your wishes, you put them off again? You have the power to put them off?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Certainly.

Chairman WALSH. I was just trying—

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. (interrupting). Certainly.

Chairman WALSH. That was on the question of your responsibility and power.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Certainly; no question about it.

Chairman WALSH. Now, do you recall the letter in which Mr. Bowers wrote to your father with regard to the welfare work, what he called the uplifting of the employees, in which he said that he had a talk with your father upon that subject more than 20 years ago when he first went in, and that they understood each other perfectly?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No; I don't recall that.

Chairman WALSH. I may not have quoted that in—

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. (interrupting). But I don't doubt the facts are substantially as you state them.

Chairman WALSH. But you recall reading the letter, do you not, since you have been here?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It does not remain in my mind.

Chairman WALSH. That is in the letter of September 29, 1913, six days after the strike. He says, "I told your father in the first interview that we ever had, nearly 20 years ago, I would flatly refuse to be connected with any business enterprise where I would be handicapped in uplifting and benefiting mankind, especially those in our employ." You recall that now, do you not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Well, I think I recall that.

Chairman WALSH. And your father and Mr. Bowers were well known to each other?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't suppose my father has seen Mr. Bowers six times in his life. I may be wrong about it.

Chairman WALSH. They were not well acquainted with each other?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Not through personal relations at all; only so far as Mr. Bowers was in business connections with my father.

Chairman WALSH. How often did Mr. Gates see your father in the last 16 years he was connected with him?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Many years went by that he did not see him at all.

Chairman WALSH. And he was on his personal staff?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And take Mr. Jerome Greene; I think the testimony was that he saw him twice in five years, and he was on his personal staff.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I hardly think that could be correct, because Mr. Greene was not in relation to our affairs five years ago.

Chairman WALSH. Wasn't he? How often did he see him during the time he was his personal adviser?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Very seldom.

Chairman WALSH. Once a year?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't think necessarily that.

Chairman WALSH. Once in two years?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I couldn't state.

Chairman WALSH. The truth of the matter is this term of "personal adviser" does not mean that any of these men would see your father?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Does not follow at all.

Chairman WALSH. Your father tells you what his wishes are, and you discuss them, and then you tell your father's personal advisers what his preferences are?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. My father does not tell me what his wishes are with reference to all matters; but he leaves with me and my associates, who are the advisers in the office, to determine many of these questions—most of them as they arise. If he feels disposed to advise with us, all of his people are glad to have him do so. If we want to take the responsibility of deciding various questions, or any questions, we do so.

Chairman WALSH. Do they write letters to him, these personal advisers of his?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Very rarely.

Chairman WALSH. And they do not see him?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He sees them whenever he cares to see anyone of them, but it is very seldom necessary.

Chairman WALSH. Is it true that Mr. Gates saw him only twice in 16 years?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If Mr. Gates says so, it is true.

Chairman WALSH. Did Mr. Greene see him—how long has Mr. Greene been his personal adviser?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think Mr. Greene was in our office either a year and a half or two years and a half.

Chairman WALSH. How long was he your father's personal adviser?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. During that two years and a half.

Chairman WALSH. How often did he see your father in that two and a half years?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have stated I could not say.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Ivy Lee is on the personal staff of your father now?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He is.

Chairman WALSH. How often does he see him?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That I can not say.

Chairman WALSH. Does he ever see him?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think he has seen him three or four times.

Chairman WALSH. Now, Mr. Bowers, before this strike, September the 19th, wrote you a long letter setting forth what the grievances or claims of your employees were, didn't he?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. That there were charges made by the men that the company had violated the law with reference to checkweighmen, with reference to the hours of labor, with reference to discriminating against them because they were union men, did they not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. You mean that was contained in that letter?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If I recall, it was.

Chairman WALSH. Yes. Now, then, with this authority that you had over directors and over executive officers, with that in view, I want to read you the extracts of the letters that passed between you—that is, between Mr. Bowers and yourself, Mr. Bowers and Mr. Murphy, and yourself and Mr. Bowers and Mr. Murphy, and Mr. Murphy and Mr. Bowers. I will just read you the extracts which I believe bear upon the point.

On October 6, 1913, letter from Mr. Rockefeller to Mr. Bowers:

"We feel that what you have done is right and fair, and that the position which you have taken in regard to the unionizing of our mines is in the interests of the employees of the company. Whatever the outcome may be we will stand by you to the end."

That is signed "John D. Rockefeller, jr." You wrote that letter, didn't you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I must have, if it is in the collection I sent you.

Chairman WALSH. Yes. Now, on October 10, 1913, did you not write a letter to Mr. Bowers containing this language:

"I realize that these are trying days for the management of the fuel company. Its actions are watched with great interest by this office, and its strong and just position will not lack backing at this end."

And you signed that "John D. Rockefeller, jr.," and sent it to Mr. Bowers, didn't you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If you have taken it from that collection; yes.

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. On November 21, 1913, you telegraphed to Mr. Bowers, did you not—on November 21, 1913, you wrote Mr. Bowers a letter in which you quoted a telegram which you had sent to the Secretary of Labor which contained the following statement:

"Action of our officers in refusing to meet the strike leaders is quite as much in the interest of our employees as of any other element in the company. Their position meets with our cordial approval, and we shall support them to the end."

That is correct?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Same answer to that.

Chairman WALSH. That was written November 21, wasn't it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And it was written before any serious troubles, such as the Ludlow massacre, occurred, wasn't it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The Ludlow occurrence occurred the following spring.

Chairman WALSH. The following spring. Now, I will ask you if on October 31, 1913—no, that is the letter I quoted you with regard to the appointment of Mr. Murphy. So I will not read it again.

On November 28 Mr. Bowers wrote you a letter—November 28, 1913—in which he stated:

"I can scarcely express our appreciation of the support you are giving us."

That is correct, isn't it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. My answer to that would be that if it is taken from the collection of letters—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Well, don't you know as a matter of fact that it is? I would like to get you to testify to the fact?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Chairman, if I had the letters before me—

Chairman WALSH (addressing Mr. Manly). Give me the letters. Maybe I had better do it from the letters for fear there may be some misquotation.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. These sound perfectly familiar. Quite probably I wrote the letter, but I can not tell.

Chairman WALSH. On December 9, 1913, Mr. Starr J. Murphy wrote to Mr. Bowers, did he not:

"In fact, as we have said many times before, we leave this matter entirely in your hands, having the utmost confidence in your judgment and the way you are handling the matter."

That is correct, isn't it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Now, at that time hadn't you heard about the arming of these 326 men by Jeff Farr?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think not.

Chairman WALSH. You think not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't recall.

Chairman WALSH. Wasn't it published broadcast that that was done, and that it was liable to cause bloodshed?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It may be true it was published broadcast. I don't recall seeing it.

Chairman WALSH. Don't you recall seeing it at the time it was published?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall.

Chairman WALSH. You don't recall seeing it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you this question: While that strike was going on and these tragedies were taking place, regardless of who was at fault, did you not keep informed as to the occurrence?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes; I was getting information from the office of the company—

Chairman WALSH. All the time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. (interrupting). Yes; as frequently as they thought it necessary.

Chairman WALSH. Now, on October 10:

"I realize that these are trying days for the management of the fuel company. Its actions are watched with great interest by this office, and its strong and just position will not lack backing at this end."

That was written, wasn't it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think so.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I will ask you if on July 27, 1914, after the horror at Ludlow had taken place, after all these deaths had taken place, after soldiers had been killed and guards had been killed and women had been killed and children had been killed, if you did not receive this written testimonial from Mr. Welborn, July 27, 1914:

"I appreciate very much your expressions concerning my personal welfare. My health has never been better than during the past year, and I am hardly conscious of any strain. The knowledge that we have your confidence and support makes everything else easy."

Now, that was after all these horrors had transpired, wasn't it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And you got that letter from Mr. Welborn that he did not even feel any strain about it; that the knowledge that he had your support made everything easy?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes; that was one of the letters.

Chairman WALSH. And that was the truth, wasn't it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Well, Mr. Welborn said—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). He did have your support and backing in everything they did, didn't he, Mr. Rockefeller, as expressed in this quoted part—as expressed in these letters written by Mr. Welborn to you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He had the support and backing to the extent I stated in my paper. We never had the operators, but had left the details to the company.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I want you to take the letter from Mr. Bowers, Mr. Rockefeller, getting down to these details, and what he wrote you on April 18, you got a letter from Mr. Bowers, didn't you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That I don't recall.

Chairman WALSH. Well, I am going to read some of it to you directly; but it was on April 23 that the so-called Ludlow massacre occurred, wasn't it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think about that time.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you have made some statements in your direct statement, and I might say that I have not had time to digest them. Perhaps we will give you an opportunity later when we get a little more definitely at the facts to make some further replies; but it will not be in the way of a public hearing. But take your statement in there—for instance, you made one public statement in which you said, as I recollect it, that the persons that lost their lives at Ludlow were not shot; they were smothered?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The persons that lost their lives underneath the floor of the tent.

Chairman WALSH. Well, you made no mention in that statement, or reference to those that lost their lives by bullets and the like?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't recall whether I did or not.

Chairman WALSH. Don't you recall what you wrote?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not.

Chairman WALSH. Why, you just wrote that about two weeks ago and sent it out publicly, saying that those who lost their lives at Ludlow—

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. (interrupting). In the pit?

Chairman WALSH. In the pit, you say now, were smothered. You remember saying that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you make reference to those who lost their lives by bullets?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't recall that I did.

Chairman WALSH. Did you intend not to make that public in connection with your statement to the public in regard to the loss of life there?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did not, no. The emphasis had always been put upon the women and children killed in the ground, and the point was to state that the report to us by people who should know that they were smothered and not struck.

Chairman WALSH. Did the reports that you got show that they were burned? That the arm of one of the women fell off—that the flesh fell off the bodies in taking them out?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't recall that. It might have been true.

Chairman WALSH. Did you read the coroner's inquest?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No.

Chairman WALSH. You did not read the account of the testimony any place?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No.

Chairman WALSH. And you have not yet?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No.

Chairman WALSH. Well, don't you think that you ought to read that to determine—you say hereafter you are going to try to have things better. Shouldn't you read that to determine what the facts are and what part your executive officers took in bringing on the train of incidents, we will say, that culminated in Ludlow? Don't you think you ought to know that, Mr. Rockefeller?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Well, I think so long as I am undertaking to do the things that I think should be done I shall have to reserve the right to do them in the ways that seem to me best.

Chairman WALSH. Now, in 1913, you know now, don't you, that many crimes were committed by the officials of your company? You saw a letter Mr. Bowers wrote that when he got up to — he found at the — Mills that everything said against him was true; and then you recalled the strike of 1903 where they took hundreds of men out of their homes and threw them out on the prairies there? You know all that, don't you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I know the letter that Mr. Bowers —

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). You believe it, don't you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I believe what Mr. Bowers says.

Chairman WALSH. And you know the details of the strike of 1903, how the rights of the citizens were outraged? You know that now, don't you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No; I don't recall the details.

Chairman WALSH. Well, don't you think that the executive officers—that the executive committee of the company, not the executive officers but the directors, ought to know what the executive officers do, so they may determine when they come to that whether to keep them in or not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That was a matter of 12 years ago, Mr. Chairman. What knowledge I may have had at that time I would not retain at this time.

Chairman WALSH. You would not have retained it at this time, but do you not think now you ought to have knowledge of what took place a few months ago, so that you could determine whether or not you would put these men back in these places again, where they could do such things over again?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have such knowledge as the executive officers of the company appointed by the board could give me in support of the statements in the letters.

Chairman WALSH. You took what the executive officers said, and closed your ears to every development brought out in court, and you closed your eyes to the transcript of the evidence before the coroner's jury, and you closed your eyes to the evidence given before the military court, and just simply sat in your office in New York and took the word of the executive officers for it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not closed my eyes to anything.

Chairman WALSH. Did you read the coroner's inquest, the testimony of the coroner's inquest over the 10 bodies taken out of the pit at Ludlow?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No; but that does not mean that I closed my eyes.

Chairman WALSH. Did you hear the information brought out by the regular processes of the court; that is, the coroner's jury, showing how they were killed?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did not.

Chairman WALSH. Did you ever hear it from any authoritative source?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have heard different statements from time to time presuming to come from authoritative sources.

Chairman WALSH. Did you read the report of the military commission that sat on the hearing of the matter at Ludlow presided over by Maj. Boughton, who was in New York to see you in regard to sending this rough draft to Mr. Lee, who was to send it to Maj. Boughton, who was to give it to Gen. Chase, who was to have it incorporated in a letter to Gov. Ammons?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Whether or not I got the report of the military commission?

Chairman WALSH. Of the military commission presided over by Maj. Boughton, who has been so extensively advertised?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall whether I saw it or not.

Chairman WALSH. As to the definite knowledge as to what was being done, I want to call your attention to this: On April 18, five days before the Ludlow horror, you got a letter from Mr. Bowers personally addressed to John D. Rockefeller, jr., in which he stated, "Another favorable feature of the strike situation"—I am putting in "strike situation"—"another favorable feature is the organization of a military company of 100 volunteers of Trinidad the present week; they are to be armed by the State and drilled by the military officers. Another squad is being organized at Walsenburg. These independent militiamen will be subject to orders of the sheriff of the county."

That is Jeff Farr referred to in the letter of Mr. Bowers as the sheriff of the county?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know whether that is Jeff Farr or not.

Chairman WALSH. You do not know whether that is Jeff Farr?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No.

Chairman WALSH. Have you never inquired to know who the sheriff was that had charge of your men?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No.

Chairman WALSH. The letter continues, "These volunteers will draw no pay from the State." Do you remember getting that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Getting that letter?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think so.

Chairman WALSH. From Mr. Bowers?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think so.

Chairman WALSH. That is what is now known as "Troop A" of the Colorado Militia?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know that.

Chairman WALSH. It is the only volunteer company that was organized. Didn't you get from this letter the knowledge that that was a volunteer company that you were to pay—that your company, the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., was to pay?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Well, I got whatever the letter states, Mr. Chairman. I can not recall what information I got from it. If that is what the letter states, I must have understood it so.

Chairman WALSH. I am going to ask you if it is not a fact that, in addition to the women and children that were smothered, that on that day Louis Tikas was knocked down with a rifle, in the hands of one of these military officers and was shot four times in the back while he was lying on the ground and picked up dead, if James Fyler was not also shot and killed on the same day, and if you did not know it when you made that statement referring to the women and children in the pit at Ludlow?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I knew there had been other casualties on that day.

Chairman WALSH. Didn't you inquire who they were or what sort of men they were, whether they were good men or bad men or anything of that sort?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think at the time I knew, Mr. Chairman; but I do not remember now.

Chairman WALSH. You have forgotten now the personnel of the men that were killed?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The names have not remained in my mind.

Chairman WALSH. Was one a little boy?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think I recall a little boy who ran out from a house and was shot.

Chairman WALSH. Regarding your publication that those people were smothered, I received the following postal card, which I will hand you, and then let it be put into the record:

"TRINIDAD, COLO., May 3, 1915.

"Mr. WALSH, Washington, D. C.

"DEAR SIR: We wish to inform you that here is one of the little victims that did not smother at Ludlow, but was shot through the head while caressing his little sister.

"His parents,

Mr. and Mrs. WM. SNYDER."

On the other side of the postal card is a picture of the boy with the words over it: "Frank Snyder, shot at Ludlow, Colo., April 20, 1914."

Do you care to look at it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. You have described it; and I see what the picture is.

Chairman WALSH. Now, after this volunteer troop that Mr. Bowers wrote you was sworn in, you learned, did you not, that they were all your own employees, and that the reason the State was not paying them was that you were paying them yourself or your company—when I say "yourself," I mean the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If that was stated in the letter, then I have the knowledge.

Chairman WALSH. You claim you have no knowledge of any of the details except those stated in the letters, which you were asked to produce and which you have produced in the examination. Don't you have any independent knowledge besides that contained in the letters produced?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I saw and read different reports from time to time.

Chairman WALSH. To epitomize what this troop of your company did, I will read you from the report of the military commission presided over by Maj. Boughton; do you know Maj. Boughton?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I never have met him.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Lee met him.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes; as I have stated.

Chairman WALSH. And the other officers of your company?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know about that.

Chairman WALSH. He came to New York for the published purpose of telling what he claimed to be the truth about the Ludlow atrocity, did he not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That may be true.

Chairman WALSH. Wasn't it in all the papers in New York?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I understood that he came to undertake—yes; to give the facts.

Chairman WALSH. And he went to 26 Broadway?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know whether he was there or not, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. He saw Mr. Lee?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. He saw Mr. Murphy?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know whether he ever saw Mr. Murphy or not.

Chairman WALSH. He saw Mr. Jerome Greene?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes; he saw Mr. Greene.

Chairman WALSH. Do you mean to say now, Mr. Rockefeller, that you do not know that you have ever been advised that Maj. Boughton went to your office at 26 Broadway to see you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. To see me?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; first to see you, then I will ask you another question.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No; he never came to see me; at least I never saw him.

Chairman WALSH. Do you say now that you were not advised that Maj. Boughton was at 26 Broadway after the Ludlow massacre?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I never was advised that he was there at all; I know he saw Mr. Lee and Mr. Greene, but where, I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. You know he saw them, but you do not know whether he went to 26 Broadway or not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No; whether he saw them at the luncheon club or not, I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. What luncheon club?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Some go to the White Hall Club; I don't know of any other.

Chairman WALSH. Can you suggest any other place he might have met Maj. Boughton, other than the White Hall Club?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No; I would not be likely to know.

Chairman WALSH. I take it, Mr. Rockefeller, that no facts, or alleged facts, presented from any other source, would cause you to change your mind as to what took place in Colorado, and the responsibility, if any, of your executive officers therefor?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not said that, Mr. Chairman. I have not said that no facts presented from any other source would not cause me to change my mind. No facts have come to my attention.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you if, immediately after the Ludlow massacre, on the next day, you did not receive this telegram from Mr. Bowers:

"Following withdrawal of troops by order of governor, an unprovoked attack upon small force of militia, yesterday by 200 strikers. Forced fight, resulting in probable loss of 10 or 15 strikers. Only one militiaman killed. Ludlow tent colony of strikers totally destroyed by burning, 200 tents, generally followed by explosions, showing ammunition and dynamite stored in them. Expect further fighting to-day. Militia to be reinforced. Suggest your giving this information to friendly papers. L. M. Bowers."

What friendly papers?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If I had undertaken to carry out his suggestion, I would not have known where to turn.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Bowers just imagined you had friendly papers to give this to?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I suppose he thought there were some; I don't know any more than you do; but I would not know where to turn in New York to find a friendly paper.

Chairman WALSH. Please indicate what friendly papers he meant.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know a friendly paper.

Chairman WALSH. Did you give it out to the papers?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. Did you give it to your publicity agent to give out to the papers?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall.

Chairman WALSH. You do not recall whether you followed that suggestion or not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not.

Chairman WALSH. After this Troup A was organized, this Ludlow horror followed within a very few days.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. So you have stated, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Don't you know whether it did or not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not carry the dates in mind; if that is what you read, it is correct.

Chairman WALSH. I will read you from the report of the military commission:

"Troop A, a troop of National Guards, were enlisted about the middle of April among the superintendents and foremen, the clerical force, physicians, storekeepers, mine guards, and other residents of the coal camps. This unit of the National Guard was designated Troop A, but so recently was it recruited that at the time of the battle of Ludlow it had not yet selected its officers nor was it supplied with uniforms, arms, or ammunition."

That is true, is it not; you have learned since that Troop A was made up of superintendents, foremen, the clerical force, physicians, storekeepers, and mine guards?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Does that say of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Chairman WALSH. It says it was a troop of men enlisted among the superintendents and foremen, the clerical force, physicians, storekeepers, mine guards, and other residents of the coal camps.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That would refer to any and all of them.

Chairman WALSH. Do you claim they were not your mine guards?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not claim one way or the other.

Chairman WALSH. I will say, that the other testimony showed, since you asked me the question, and for that reason only, that they were your mine guards, storekeepers, and others.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Exclusively?

Chairman WALSH. No; not exclusively; some of the Victor's were in there, also.

Now, these men, as such storekeepers, physicians, mine guards, etc., were actually paid with the money of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. for whatever they did that day?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not suppose they were put off of the pay rolls of the company because they went into the military service.

Chairman WALSH. What is that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not suppose they were dropped from the pay rolls of their respective companies because they became members of the militia.

Chairman WALSH. Do you have militia raised in other States that way?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. There is another question, Mr. Chairman, which I do not think is fair.

Chairman WALSH. You say it is not customary?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Is it customary in any State that you know of? I did not mean to ask a question.

Chairman WALSH. No.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I never heard of a case of a man serving in the militia and while doing so his pay being stopped by his employer.

Chairman WALSH. Has there a custom grown in this country, to your knowledge, that mine companies or other corporations have their employees enlisted as members of the State militia and pay them their salaries while they are acting in industrial disturbances?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have never heard of any such custom.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you the direct question: Were these men, mine guards, physicians, storekeepers, and others, that went into Troop A, paid by you for what they did that day? Were they kept on the pay roll?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. You don't know?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know that afterwards that Troop A, not only fired on this camp where there were women and children, but they looted the dead, stole their property, and set fire with torches and oil to the dwellings of the people, the tents in which they were dwelling?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is one of the reports that have been circulated.

Chairman WALSH. Do you have any doubt it is true?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have no way of corroborating it.

Chairman WALSH. You have no way of corroborating it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I will read you from the report of the commission presided over by Maj. Boughton, and upon which Capt. Danks and Capt. van Cise were members, which reads as follows:

"During the rescuing and afterwards the tent colony was invaded by the soldiers and mine guards for quite a different purpose. By this time the uniformed guardsmen had been joined by large numbers of men in civilian attire, part of whom were from Troop A and part of them mine guards, all unknown to the uniformed soldiers and their officers, and all unused and unamenable to discipline.

"By this time, the time of the burning of the tents, the nondescript number of men had passed out of their officers' control, had ceased to be an army and had become a mob. Doubtless all were seeing red on both sides of the conflict.

"This may account for the insane shooting by the strikers during the rescue of their women and children, and it may also account for what happened in the tents.

"We find that the tents were not all of them destroyed by accidental fire. Men and soldiers swarmed into the colony, and deliberately assisted the conflagration of spreading the fire from tent to tent.

"Beyond a doubt it was seen to intentionally that the fire should destroy the whole of the colony. This, too, was accompanied by the usual loot.

"Men and soldiers seized and took from the tents whatever appealed to their fancy of the moment. In this way clothes, bedding, articles of jewelry, bicycles, tools, and utensils were taken from the tents and conveyed away.

"So deliberately was this burning and looting that we find that cans of oil found in the tents were poured upon them and the tents lit with matches."

That is the report of the military commission, signed by Maj. Boughton. Do you believe it now?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Of course I believe the statement made by those gentlemen they believed to be facts.

Chairman WALSH. What do you think, then, of Mr. Bowers's reference about recruiting Troop A as a favorable occurrence for the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I should regard any instance where a private company had to supplement the authorities of the county to protect life and property as most deplorable.

Chairman WALSH. Would the fact that the troops were to be paid directly by the operators constitute the favorable feature in Mr. Bowers's mind of the strike situation?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I should not think so.

Chairman WALSH. Is it not fair for you to assume that Mr. Bowers, Mr. Welborn, and Mr. Weltzel were sufficiently well acquainted with the character of the mine guards to understand that such occurrences as the battle of Ludlow were likely to happen if they were given the authority of the State to support them in dealing with these striking men and their wives and children?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. And if that were true it was a question of protecting life and property. Mr. Bowers, Mr. Welborn, and others in charge of the properties had to use such men to supplement the deficiency of the State. And we had to accept their judgment of the facts as to what was necessary, and their judgment I would not question; I could not pass upon it.

Chairman WALSH. If you had known that that company, composed in large part of mine guards, was going to be put into the field, what action would you have taken as a director of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would have taken no action; I would have deplored the necessity which compelled the officers of the company to resort to such measures to supplement the State force to maintain law and order.

Chairman WALSH. As Troop A was paid for from the funds of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., of which you are principal stockholder, did you not feel morally responsible for their actions during the massacre at Ludlow?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I should have felt greater responsibility for the officers of the company if they had not used all means in their power to protect life and property.

Chairman WALSH. Have you made an effort to recover back the property belonging to these people from the employees who constituted Troop A?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. What efforts the officers of the company may have made I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. Have you made any effort of your own, as a director of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., to bring to justice those men in your own employ who are in Troop A who may have poured oil on the tents of those people and lit them with matches?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No.

Chairman WALSH. Did you hear the testimony of Judge Edgar M. Cullen?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No—

Chairman WALSH. Late chief justice of the court of appeals of New York City?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Well, he testified here that the alleged trial of Linderfelt before a military commission—Linderfelt being the man who admitted that he struck Tikas and knocked him down, and following that blow the shots were put into his body—I do not say that Linderfelt admitted he put the shots into his body, but he knocked him down, and while he was an unarmed prisoner, he was either shot or clubbed to death. Judge Cullen says, "It is mere subterfuge to say he was tried and acquitted by a military court; he should be arrested and tried by the civil officials."

As your company was interested in the upholding of the law, has it taken any actions, by the employment of attorneys, or otherwise, to have Linderfelt brought to justice in the criminal courts of Colorado?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. As I understand it, Linderfelt was a member of the State militia, under orders of the adjutant general of the State, and I should regard it as interfering with the military authorities of the State, and that the civil authorities and the authorities that are upholding justice, if I were to take any such step as you suggest.

Chairman WALSH. Did you keep track of the trial of Zankennell, who was sentenced to imprisonment for life?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. Did you keep track of the trial of what are known as the La Veta strikers?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did not.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know that Mr. Northcutt, your lawyer, represented the State of Colorado in the prosecution of men charged with the La Veta riot?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have stated what I have been informed, in reference to those matters, and I have nothing to add to what I have said.

Chairman WALSH. Was Mr. Northcutt prosecuting those men, if you know?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know whether Mr. Northcutt was present at the prosecution of this Italian?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not.

Chairman WALSH. Do you consider that your employees—these mine guards—were justified in burning the tents of the strikers during the battle of Ludlow?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't consider that any acts of violence or depredations are justified.

Chairman WALSH. Do you consider that they as your agents and employees were justified in looting the property of the strikers after the battle of Ludlow?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Certainly not.

Chairman WALSH. What efforts have you taken to ascertain the conduct of your employees on that day?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Those are matters, according to the custom, that the officers of the company have charge of. I have not undertaken to interfere with them in the discharge of their duty.

Chairman WALSH. If it was deplorable that life and property had been destroyed by private forces, why do you think Mr. Bowers's description of getting up the Troop A is a favorable thing in the strike situation?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Favorable to the protection of the lives and properties of the employees of the company.

Chairman WALSH. The employees of the company?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You saw what followed, that they burned the property of the company, and stole their property?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir; but what would have followed if that troop was not organized, I don't know, neither does anybody.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know it to be a fact that there was not a single life lost among the striking people and militia until your executive officers whipped the governor into line, and had the militia protect the importation of strikebreakers into the camp?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not.

Chairman WALSH. Do you say that it is not a fact?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't express an opinion about it.

Chairman WALSH. If it is a fact, would you say that something more horrible than the killing of these women and children of Ludlow would have happened if your mine guards had not gone into Troop A?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am not in a position to say that much more horrible things would not have happened.

Chairman WALSH. Is Mr. Lee still issuing bulletins?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He never issued them.

Chairman WALSH. Is he still sending them out?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Are the Colorado operators still sending out bulletins?

Chairman WALSH. Is Mr. Lee sending them out for anybody?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Not that I know of.

Chairman WALSH. Is he attending to your publicity; does he give out your statements?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He is one of my associates, related with me in preparing such statements.

Chairman WALSH. He is the one that hands them to the newspapers and other people?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That I can not tell; I do not know what methods he may employ.

Chairman WALSH. Does he give them out? Did he write the statement that you read here yesterday?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is a matter I don't think pertinent into the inquiry into industrial relations that this commission was appointed to inquire into. I read it, and I am responsible for it.

Chairman WALSH. Did he write it for you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't consider that it is an appropriate question to ask.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you the direct question, and I want you to understand the theory of the question is fixing the responsibility for the industrial situation in Colorado now and in the past, and what it may be in the future, if it is a fact that Mr. Lee wrote that alleged statement of facts, and that you merely read it to the commission upon yesterday?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It is not.

Chairman WALSH. Did you write it yourself?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did.

Chairman WALSH. To whom did you dictate it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. To various stenographers in the office.

Chairman WALSH. How many stenographers?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. Who attended to having it printed?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know whether one of the secretaries did, or who. I don't pay attention to those things.

Chairman WALSH. Who gives the articles to the newspapers with reference to the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. generally?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know that any are being given out.

Chairman WALSH. Does Mr. Lee give out any publicity?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. For whom?

Chairman WALSH. For anyone.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir; he gives out such publicity as he and my other associates think is desirable to give out.

Chairman WALSH. Who does he give it to?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It depends on circumstances, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I notice in one of the letters of Mr. Bowers he refers—I have not that particular letter. Does Mr. Lee write the material that is given out?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Chairman, I can not state generally. Mr. Lee writes some material that is given out. It is sent out with the authority of the office.

Chairman WALSH. What Mr. Lee writes, and your associates agree to, is sent out with the authority of the office?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir; usually over my signature.

Chairman WALSH. I just want to ask you one question. I notice Mr. Bowers recommends Leslie's Weekly very highly as a means of acquiring great benefit, getting information on industrial topics. You saw that letter, did you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. I just noticed, I had handed to me a Leslie's Weekly with that advertisement of the Standard Oil Co. on the back.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Is there any connection between those things?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Between what?

Chairman WALSH. Between Mr. Bowers's thought that this was a splendid publication, and that it is a good thing to send out industrial matters to, and the Standard Oil Co.'s advertisement on the back?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I resent the implication. There is absolutely no connection.

Chairman WALSH. What is paid for that advertisement to Leslie's?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have no idea.

Chairman WALSH. Who is representing the Standard Oil Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. There are many Standard Oil companies; you will have to tell me which one you mean.

Chairman WALSH. This seems to be the Standard Oil Co. of New York; principal stations New York, Albany, and Boston.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know, I have no connection with any of the Standard Oil companies.

Chairman WALSH. You don't know what that cost?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not the slightest idea.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you had some correspondence with Mr. Lee before you entered into this arrangement that you have spoken of, about his attending to your publicity, did you not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Do you mean when Mr. Lee first undertook the publicity for us and the operators in Colorado?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think there may have been some letters with reference to our arrangement.

Chairman WALSH. And those were letters that you were called upon to produce before this commission, were they not, and which you have sent to us?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If you have them there; yes, Mr. Chairman; I did not attend to that myself.

Chairman WALSH. Had the Rockefeller interests any publicity man before they got Mr. Lee?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I will have to ask what you mean by "Rockefeller interests" before I can answer the question.

Chairman WALSH. The same Rockefeller interests that are referred to by Mr. Bowers in his letter; I notice he refers to them—

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Previous to when?

Chairman WALSH. Previous to Mr. Lee's employment?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No.

Chairman WALSH. You understand what the Rockefeller interests are?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is, my father's interests. He is the owner of the interests in these various properties, which the rest of us, as his representatives, conduct for him, or direct for him.

Chairman WALSH. Now, the first employment of Lee as publicity man—you advanced him $2,000, as shown in one of these letters?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir; there were some expenses that had to be incurred before my letter to Mr. Welborn in regard to the arrangements and his part in it could be received and acted upon, and I advanced money until the bills could be sent to Denver for payment.

Chairman WALSH. That was about $2,000?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think that was the sum.

Chairman WALSH. Now, on July 17—Mr. Lee was regularly employed on that date?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think it was early in June or the last of May, probably. I think his employment began around the 1st of June.

Chairman WALSH. And he was first employed in an individual capacity by your father?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir; he was employed as my—I think those letters state, or as I stated in my testimony in New York, on behalf of the general situation in Colorado, in which we were largely interested and in which the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. was so largely interested.

Chairman WALSH. Now, Mr. Lee wrote you a letter in which he set forth his ideas, and said this—on June 11, Mr. Lee wrote you as follows:

"Desiring as I do that you should understand some of the ideals by which I work, I am venturing to inclose you a manuscript copy of an address I delivered before the American Railway Guild some weeks ago." As you employed Mr. Lee permanently after he had submitted this article to you as an expression of his ideals, I want to call your attention to some of the ideals expressed by Mr. Lee. In this article which he sent you, as showing his ideals, under the subhead of "Psychology of the multitude," Mr. Lee cites further certain alleged facts regarding the process of people and declares as follows:

"If railroad men, then, are to assume the place to which they are entitled as leaders of the public, they must consider these same elements in the psychology of the multitude. These elements may be briefly described as follows:

"First. In the first place, crowds do not reason. It is impossible to induce a crowd to proceed toward any proposition on a logical basis."

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I presume I read the statement; but I don't recall it.

Chairman WALSH. Is this idea of Mr. Lee's that a crowd does not reason and that it is impossible to induce a crowd to proceed toward any proposition on a logical basis—did that influence you to employ him in your publicity work?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think I made the arrangements with him before that.

Chairman WALSH. After this you made him a director in the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., and now use him as your publicity agent?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir; I have great confidence in Mr. Lee's ability and honor and integrity.

Chairman WALSH. "Second. Crowds are led by symbols and phrases. Third. Success in dealing with crowds, that success we have got to attain if we are to solve the railroad question, and rests upon the art of getting believed in. We know that Henry the Eighth by his obsequious deference in the forms of law was able to get the English people to believe in him so completely that he was able to do almost anything with them. At the present time the German Empire has, as I see it, the most despotic government, and yet the most progressive and the most contented people in Europe, for the reason that the Emperor of Germany is absolutely believed in by his people. So he may do anything he desires, and they are glad to have him do it."

Now, you knew that was the ideal under which Mr. Lee worked as publicity agent, and you employed him and retained him as the man to give out your publicity, and was it one of the reasons that he held those ideals?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That had nothing to do with the appointment of Mr. Lee at all.

Chairman WALSH. But he sent it to you as containing his ideals?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't recall that he made such statements to me.

Chairman WALSH. Let me read the letter to you. I am going to read to you his letter. It is dated June 11, 1914.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think that was subsequent to my employment of Mr. Lee.

Chairman WALSH. But it was after that that you selected him as a member of the board of directors of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The more I knew of him the higher I regarded his ideals and character.

Chairman WALSH. After you saw him in action you admired him more and more?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Absolutely. I never saw him do or be willing to do anything that was not honest and upright. That was one thing that drew me to Mr. Lee, his idea and methods of doing these things, absolutely open and aboveboard.

Chairman WALSH. Like Henry the Eighth?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I was not interested in him or anybody else.

Chairman WALSH. You read this when he sent it to you:

"Fourth. The problem of influencing the people en masse is that of providing leaders who can fertilize the imagination and organize the will of crowds. Napoleon's uncanny power in France was due to his resourcefulness in the appeal to these same elementary crowd impulses."

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is an essay on psychology.

Chairman WALSH. He wanted you to know what his ideals were as a publicity man, and to do that he sent you this statement; is that correct?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Whatever he says in the letter is correct.

Chairman WALSH. In the next paragraph Mr. Lee says:

"My point is that in working out the railroad problem we must take account of these same principles of crowd psychology."

Does not your employment of Mr. Lee, after he called your attention to those ideals, mean that he intended and you intended to follow the methods of King Henry the Eighth or Napoleon in dealing with the American people?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I see no ground for any such inference.

Chairman WALSH. I will read further from his article:

"We can never be too careful in the terms we use. Some time ago a certain public-service corporation was in great financial difficulties; it could not pay its bond interest. Its skillful president induced its bondholders to agree to a reduction of the rate of interest on the bonds. Their president then announced to the public that there was to be a 'readjustment' of the finances of the company. Now, 'readjustment of finances' is so much better than saying 'Your company is bankrupt,' and no one ever suggested that his company was bankrupt. It was a matter of terms, and we must be careful of the terms we allow to be lodged in the public mind. What we say to the public, it seems to me, must be with reference to its effect and not especially with reference to its logical sequence."

Do you recall that idea?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think it was very sound philosophy.

Chairman WALSH. Is it not just, in effect, a plea by Mr. Lee for mendacity to deceive the public, or for a statement of partial facts which, in effect, amounted to mendacity?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Absolutely not. If I had the slightest idea that that paper had any such thought in it at all, that it could be justly construed that way in his mind, I would not have touched Mr. Lee, if it can be so stated, with a 10-foot pole.

Chairman WALSH. I will read you the balance of his article: "We must tell our work in language."

"The layman can not understand. He will not analyze figures. What he wants to know is, Are you doing the best you can? Convince him of that, and you don't need to argue details. An experience in the anthracite coal strike of 1906 will illustrate this idea; the miners asked for a standard rate of wages to apply at all collieries. It seemed monstrous to the operators. They therefore took the actual pay sheets for certain mines and applied the proposed rates to the actual rates then being paid. They found, and so stated specifically to the public, that in some cases the men's demands called for wages three times as great as were being paid. That announcement was shown to a railroad president, and he said, 'What is the use of putting out anything of that sort; the people want to know about the whole thing, not about a few petty details.' He had hardly uttered that suggestion before the evening papers were on the street with such headlines as 'Miners ask 150 per cent increase in wages.'

"Now, if you will give me the headlines, I will give you the articles and the editorials. Any man reading that heading would immediately jump to the conclusion that the miners were a set of hogs. The effect of that was instantaneous."

Now, was that one of your ideas, to publish a partial truth applying to a few details that would fit the headlines, and make the public believe that the miners were a set of hogs?

Now, I will ask you if, as soon as you got Mr. Ivy Lee in, he did not send out bulletins to the people of this country, stating that the leaders of the striking miners of Colorado, Mr. McLennon among them, got $66 a day for their work, and Mr. Lawson got $90 a day, and if that was not a falsehood, and if it was not sent out in conformity with that idea of Mr. Lee to leave the impression upon the country that the workingmen were a set of hogs and that the innocent public might be prejudiced against them?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The inference is entirely unjustifiable. Mr. Lee never had any thought, that I have discovered—and I have seen something of him for the past year—of printing or allowing to be printed, anything that was not true.

The statement which was printed was taken from a statement, as I recall it, which had been printed in the papers of Denver for some weeks. It had not been challenged. It appeared day after day, as printed. The bulletins were made up, based to a considerable extent on the facts and reports made by various bodies and information taken from various sources which the operators thought, and which Mr. Lee thought, in suggesting it, were absolutely reliable, and as giving information which was accurate. So soon as it was found that that information was not correct—as soon as I heard of it—I asked Mr. Lee at once to telegraph to Denver, that the correction of the error which had been made must be made just as broadly as the original statement was made, and Mr. Lee so telegraphed.

He also telegraphed it in his own name, as I recall. Those were the instructions which he gave, and which I gave to rectify the error just the moment he knew or I knew that an error had been made. The correction was to be made as broadly as the error had been made.

Chairman WALSH. Didn't Mr. Welborn testify before this commission in Colorado that he did not know that that was a falsehood at the time he testified?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know that he testified so.

Chairman WALSH. Was it not brought out before this commission that this was a falsehood, and was it not emphasized afterwards before correction was sent out?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. You said that the correction was ordered to be made immediately. Was it not months before the correction was sent out?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I stated, Mr. Chairman, that immediately upon Mr. Lee's hearing that this was an error he telegraphed to Denver, and I asked him to telegraph to Denver, that the correction should be made at once.

Chairman WALSH. How long was it before the correction was made?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know. I did not have anything to do with it.

Chairman WALSH. It was sent out by Mr. Lee or his office boy or his stenographer, was it not—he sent out the falsehood?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. It turned out to be untrue, didn't it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It was subsequently proved to be untrue.

Chairman WALSH. How long was it before Mr. Lee sent out something to the effect that it was not true?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Lee requested the man who was issuing the bulletins to issue a statement correcting the statement which was made.

Chairman WALSH. How long was it before it was issued?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. Have you not heard since?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No.

Chairman WALSH. Was it not months before the correction was published?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It was several weeks.

Chairman WALSH. At the time Mr. Lee wrote the statement setting forth the account that the miners in the anthracite fields were a set of hogs, was he not at that time publicity agent for the anthracite operators in that strike?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. Did you indorse that method of publicity?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not feel called upon to pass on the methods of publicity used by the anthracite coal operators.

Chairman WALSH. Didn't that amount to deliberately creating in the public mind a false impression as to the miners?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not see any pertinence in the question to the investigation which the commission is conducting, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. The pertinence of it is that Mr. Lee is still sending out your publicity bulletins, and I am calling attention to his ideals and methods to find out whether you approve of them, so that the responsibility may be fixed for any unrest that may come from that action.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. You are trying to make it appear that Mr. Lee had attempted to do what is wrong and that I have sanctioned it.

Chairman WALSH. I am asking you if you approve of his ideals and methods, and your answer may be yes or no. Do you believe that the statement I have read you of Mr. Lee's in reference to the anthracite miners did amount to a deliberate attempt to create in the public mind that impression of the men on strike?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I shall have to ask to have the statement reread to get the context.

Chairman WALSH. This is the same article:

"The laymen will not analyze figures"—

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Did you reread the statement?

Chairman WALSH. I am going to reread the statement. I will begin at this point:

"An experience in the anthracite coal strikes of 1906 will illustrate this idea: The miners asked for a standard rate of wages to apply to all collieries. It seemed monstrous to the operators. They, therefore, took the actual pay sheets for certain mines and applied the proposed rates to the actual rates then being paid. They found—and so stated specifically to the public—that in some cases, the men's demand called for wages three times as great as were being paid. That announcement was shown to a railroad president, and he said: 'What is the use of putting out anything of that sort? The people want to know about the whole thing, not about a few petty details.' He had hardly uttered that suggestion before the evening papers were on the streets with such headings as 'Miners ask 150 per cent increase in wages.' Now, if you will give me the headings, I will give you the articles and the editorials. Any man reading that heading would immediately jump to the conclusion that the miners were a set of hogs. The effect of that was instantaneous."

Did this not amount to deliberately creating in the public mind a false impression as to the demands of the miners in that case?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It was true they asked for an increase of 300 per cent.

Chairman WALSH. You did not think that would have a tendency to create a false impression?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It did not state the whole fact, but it stated the truth, as far as it went.

Chairman WALSH. You believe that is right as far as it went?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am not passing on that. I did not write that article.

Chairman WALSH. I will pass to another part of the article. Mr. Lee said further in the statement he sent you:

"The crowd craves leadership. If it does not get intelligent leadership, it is going to take fallacious leadership. We know that the leadership which the mob has often received not only in this country but in other countries, unless corrected, is liable to produce disastrous consequences."

Who was the mob he referred to?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. You will have to ask him.

Chairman WALSH. Whom do you think he referred to?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. Was it the American people?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I can not say.

Chairman WALSH. Whom do you think Mr. Lee was referring to when he says:

"We know that the leadership which the mob has often received not only in this country, but in other countries, unless corrected, is going to produce disastrous consequences."

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think that is true of any group of people.

Chairman WALSH. Whom do you think he referred to as the "mob"?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. My inference is not any more accurate than yours. I suppose he was referring to the people of this country.

Chairman WALSH. The American people?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Wherever mobs have gathered—wherever there is a mob.

Chairman WALSH. Do you think he referred to the American people as a whole or simply to mobs in the sense that they gather to violate the law—to commit violence, or something of that sort?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think Mr. Lee will have to answer that question.

Chairman WALSH. He was setting forth his ideals to you as one of his employers. Can't you tell us?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No; I can not tell you.

Chairman WALSH. Do you say you do not know what he meant by that term—that he did not mean the American people, but such a mob as you intimate, a mob of rioters?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You do not know?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Do you believe that mobs that come together suddenly, for the purpose of committing violence, read newspapers?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I suppose so.

Chairman WALSH. I mean while the mob is being formed and while the riot is taking place?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir; but they read that which puts them into the spirit of doing that.

Chairman WALSH. Do you understand he referred to the American people when he referred to "the mob"?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall what I understood at the time. I assume from what you read he meant what he said—wherever there was a mob gathered in any locality.

Chairman WALSH. He did not mean the American people as a whole?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I see no reason for such assumption.

Chairman WALSH. He thought only of mobs gathered in localities to commit violence—they ought to have intelligent leadership and not fallacious leadership?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think it would prevent much violence if there were intelligent leadership.

Chairman WALSH. In the beginning of his article Mr. Lee sets forth three "Popular ideas of railroads," which he says has a deeply sinister meaning. He says:

"But somehow or other the public has come to have the idea that three essential evils are embedded in the railroad business:

"First. The first is that there is a vast amount of watered stock on which dividends are being paid. Now, there is no essential immorality in the existence of watered stock. It is, after all, a mere business question."

Do you agree with that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Will you read it again, please?

Chairman WALSH. "The first is that there is a vast amount of watered stock in which dividends are being paid. Now, there is no essential immorality in the existence of watered stock. It is, after all, a mere business question."

Do you agree with that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think it is always undesirable to have watered stock.

Chairman WALSH. Do you accept Mr. Lee's statement that there is no immorality in the existence of watered stock in a corporation that demands the right to earn interest on all its outstanding stocks and bonds?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think it is a very undesirable thing, Mr. Chairman, to have watered stock. I would not have it in any company with which I was connected.

Chairman WALSH. He says further:

"In the second place, there is a widespread feeling that the railroads are ruled from Wall Street; that a small coterie of bankers, in alliance with the so-called 'Money Trust,' are absorbing huge profits from the people."

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. So far as I know it is absolutely untrue.

Chairman WALSH. Do you mean to deny that the principal railroads of the country are controlled by a small coterie of bankers in New York, and that these groups are absorbing huge profits from the people?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do.

Chairman WALSH. Now, on July 17, following his employment, and after you had ascertained his ideals and his methods, as far as they are set forth in that paper, you sent him a communication from Seal Harbor, Me., which was your summer home, I presume.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH (reading):

"DEAR MR. LEE: I inclose herewith an article by Prof. John J. Stevenson, of the New York University, on 'Capital and labor,' from the Popular Science Monthly of May. This seems to me one of the soundest, clearest, most forcible pronouncements on this subject I have ever read. I am wondering whether there may not be a stage in our publicity campaign, either connected with the Colorado situation or the union education campaign, in which portions of this article might be effectively used."

Now, this was an article that you discovered yourself or read, while you were at Seal Harbor, Me., Mr. Rockefeller?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And it was written by Prof. John J. Stevenson, of the New York University, on the subject of "Capital and labor"?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And you considered it one of the soundest, clearest, most forcible pronouncements on this subject that you had ever read, and you sent it to your publicity man with the suggestion that he use it either in connection with the Colorado situation or the union educational campaign?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir. You have read it from my letter.

Chairman WALSH. You still hold that view about it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not read the article since that time.

Chairman WALSH. I will read statements from this article, which you say is the soundest, clearest, and most forcible pronouncement on the subject.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I suppose statements taken here and there will hardly give the whole idea.

Chairman WALSH. No; but I am going to read certain statements from it, and ask if they correctly represent your point of view.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. My statement was made on the whole article.

Chairman WALSH. I am going to take some statements out of it and question you on them particularly, and ask you to answer yes or no, following that with any explanation you may desire to make as to whether or not you still believe it is the soundest, clearest, and most forcible pronouncement you have ever seen on that subject.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I want to call attention to the fact that I made the statement on the article as a whole. On the whole I think it is just as I stated.

Chairman WALSH. I will call your attention to the statement in the second paragraph:

"It must be evident to any thoughtful man that wife and children can not be considered in connection with the relations of wage earner and wage payer. The only question concerns the worth of the man's service."

Do you agree with that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No; I do not think I do.

Chairman WALSH. But you were going to have this publicity man send that out as a whole?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. You read the suggestion that I made.

Chairman WALSH. But it was up to him to send out any part of it.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I suggested that the article could be used; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. In the third paragraph Prof. Stevenson says:

"One is told that in each year 200,000 women in our land are compelled to sell their bodies to procure the necessities of life, and that each year sees 700,000 children perish because their parents have insufficient nourishment. But the voices, which rise in bitter outcry against this awful condition, do not rise in protest against encouragement of unrestricted reproduction among the wretched or against the wide open door which increases the population annually by a net half million of, in great part, poverty-stricken immigrants—and this in face of the fact that our country is no longer able to provide work for those already here. If it be true that the alleged number of children die because they or their parents have insufficient nourishment, one must concede that their deaths are a blessing to themselves and to the community. Such children should not have been born."

Was that in the third paragraph in the pronouncement which you say is the best, clearest, and most forcible you have ever read on the subject of "Capital and labor?"

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I can not recall, Mr. Chairman, whether it was in the third paragraph or not.

Chairman WALSH. Do you agree with that statement?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That it is better for those children which can not be fed—

Chairman WALSH. I will read it to you again:

"One is told that, in each year 200,000 women in our land are compelled to sell their bodies to procure the necessities of life, and that each year sees 700,000 children perish because their parents have insufficient nourishment. But the voices which rise in bitter outcry against this awful condition do not rise in protest against encouragement of unrestricted reproduction among the wretched or against the wide-open door which increases the population annually by a net half million of, in great part, poverty-stricken immigrants—and this in the face of the fact that our country is no longer able to provide work for those already here. If it be true that the alleged number of children die because they or their parents have insufficient nourishment, one must concede that their deaths are a blessing to themselves and the community. Such children should not have been born."

Now, considering the whole article as one of the soundest pronouncements you have ever seen on this subject, and considering the statement that the deaths each year from lack of nourishment of 700,000 little children is a blessing to themselves and to the community and that such children should not have been born, I ask you the direct question: Do you believe that the poor should be prohibited from marrying?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. If not, do you believe in the limitation of childbirth after marriage?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What effect do you believe the sending out of a statement like that would have upon the millions of poor people in this country if Mr. Lee had sent it out?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not believe it would be read by them.

Chairman WALSH. You do not believe it would be read by them?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. When you were asking Mr. Lee to send out any part of that article that he might see fit to use, do you believe that if Mr. Lee had sent it out the people would not have read it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I say the poor people.

Chairman WALSH. Oh!

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not believe the poor people would read it.

Chairman WALSH. But there are many poor people who are very intelligent who might read it.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir; that it true.

Chairman WALSH. Was it just intended to be read by people in comfortable circumstances—rich people?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. By anyone interested in the subject.

Chairman WALSH. What effect did you believe it would have on the thousands and thousands of poor people who might read that article sent out by Mr. Lee?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. My statement that it might be useful if broadly published was not based on one or two passages. I did not write the article. I might have changed it if I had.

Chairman WALSH. You wanted it sent out?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I thought the article as a whole would be a good thing.

Chairman WALSH. It did contain what I have just read you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. At this point the commission will adjourn until 2 o'clock this afternoon.

(In accordance with which the commission, at 12.30 o'clock, adjourned until 2 o'clock, Friday, May 21, 1915.)

AFTERNOON SESSION—2 P. M.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Rockefeller, if you will please resume the stand now. In regard to the alleged correction of a misstatement made in the bulletin, or error that you say was made in the bulletin with respect to the compensation of the officers of the United Mine Workers of America—

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Pardon the interruption, but at the close of the morning session you had read a passage from a certain article, "Labor and capital," by Prof. John J. Stevenson, and asked my opinion in regard to it.

Chairman WALSH. Have you had an opinion written out since?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir. This was the passage: "The wage in shops and factories is said to be so small that women are driven to prostitution; one is told that, in each year, 200,000 women in our land are compelled to sell their bodies to procure the necessaries of life, and that each year sees 700,000 children perish because their parents have insufficient nourishment. But the voices, which rise in bitter outcry against this awful condition, do not rise in protest against encouragement of unrestricted production among the wretched, or against the wide-open door which increases the population annually by a net half million of, in a great part, poverty-stricken immigrants—and this in the face of the fact that our country is no longer able to provide work for those already here. If it be true that the alleged number of children die because they or their parents have insufficient nourishment, one must concede that their deaths are a blessing to themselves and to the community. Such children should not have been born."

You stopped at that point, Mr. Chairman, and the next clause reads:

"But the assertions are a priori, they can not be proved, and are closely related to the other assertion that poverty is the cause, not merely a cause of crime."

I submit that that additional sentence changes and gives an entirely different construction to the whole passage read, and when I am being questioned on passages, it is only fair that I be given the whole article, or the whole letter be read, so that there will not be such palpable misrepresentation of facts as have appeared. In the statement that you read in regard to Mr. Ivy Lee, the memorandum from which you quoted, was, I take it, the speech delivered by Mr. Lee before the American Railway Guild, and this sentence appears in that speech, which you did not read, if it doesn't appear in your copy I would be glad to produce one for you, or give you a copy.

Chairman WALSH. There was a great deal I didn't read.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think you will agree, and the commission as well, that this sentence was a most important one in view of the questions that you read.

Chairman WALSH. Maybe I will and maybe I will not.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. "Do not misunderstand me," Mr. Lee goes on to say, "Nothing is further from my thoughts than to suggest any attempt to prove things are good which are really bad. No one should condone the bad and it should be, as I believe it, the constant aim of nearly every railroad man to make things better. What I do mean is that we should not neglect the human nature of the situation but should take full advantage of it; that we should tell our story, tell it frankly, tell it fully, and tell it with a view of its being understood and carrying conviction as to the essential truth."

Chairman WALSH. Now, I will just continue my examination along that line. Now, this article that you say you construed one of the soundest pronouncements you have ever seen on the subject of capital and labor, also on page 2, paragraph 3—on page 3, paragraph 3, Prof. Stevenson further says:

"Unskilled labor is merely animated machinery for rough work and adds very little value to the final product. One E. H. Harriman is of more lasting service to a nation than would be 1,000,000 of unskilled laborers, without a Harriman they would be a menace."

Is that contained in that article?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It appears in this copy.

Chairman WALSH. And do you agree with Prof. Stevenson that unskilled labor, human beings, are merely animated machinery?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not see why, Mr. Chairman, I should be asked to express opinions on this article by another author. It is not an article that I have written. I don't see any connection.

Chairman WALSH. Didn't you send it to your publicity agent?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did.

Chairman WALSH. And said it was the soundest and best pronouncement on the subject of capital and labor you had ever seen.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did, and if you would desire to question me on this article, I think that it is only fair that the entire article may be read so the facts may be known.

Chairman WALSH. Well, this part of the examination I happen to be conducting myself, Mr. Rockefeller, and any strictures that you have to pass on the way I conduct my affairs may seem to you to be in good taste, and perhaps they are, but they will have no effect whatever on me. I am going to conduct this thing in my own way. I will ask you to answer the questions, with any explanations you have to make; you, yourself, with the assistance of your staff, after I get through, may put in anything you desire to put in. But so far as directing me how I shall conduct this examination, or as to the questions I shall ask you, I must decline to follow your advice, and will conclude as quickly as we can. Now, if you try to follow out that spirit—

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. (interrupting). My only purpose was that the investigation might in every way be a fair one, Mr. Chairman, but, of course, you will conduct it in any way you see fit.

Chairman WALSH. Yes; and I am to be the judge of the fairness of my way of conducting it; and your strictures will have no effect on it. I am not commenting on the way you conduct your business at this time.

In paragraph 4, page 3, Prof. Stevenson says:

"The asserted power of capital is little better than a nightmare. There can be no federation comparable with the existing federation of labor. The acquirement of capital—that is, the saving of a part of one's income or wages—demands much personal independence and self-control and individuality which makes impossible such slavelike obedience as prevails in labor unions."

That was your opinion, was it, and you wanted that sent out by your publicity agent to the world?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I prefer not to make an expression on that.

Chairman WALSH. Very good. Do you agree with this in the following paragraph of a letter from Mr. Bowers, then vice president and treasurer of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. dated November 18, 1913, to yourself, in which Mr. Bowers says:

"You will be interested to know that we have been able to secure the cooperation of all the bankers of the city, who have had three or four interviews with our little cowboy governor, agreeing to back the State and lend it all the funds necessary to maintain the militia and afford ample protection so our miners could return to work, or to give protection to men who are anxious to come up here from Texas, New Mexico, and Kansas, together with some from States farther east."

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. What is "this"?

Chairman WALSH. I say, do you agree with the paragraph here—paragraph 4 of page 3 of Prof. Stevenson's article, where he says:

"The asserted power of capital is little better than a nightmare. There can be no federation comparable with the existing federation of labor." But that letter I read you was a letter from Mr. Bowers, saying he had organized the bankers and financial interests of capital and would put into line what he calls the "little cowboy governor."

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I prefer not to express any opinions on this paper of Prof. Stevenson.

Chairman WALSH. You prefer not to express any opinions on it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do.

Chairman WALSH. You still stick to your opinion that it was the soundest and best pronouncement on the subject of capital and labor you had ever seen, and sent out, but decline to express any public opinion upon any parts of it? Is that the way of it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. My statement, Mr. Chairman, was made on the paper as a whole, and I stand by that statement.

Chairman WALSH. You stand by the statement you made on the paper as a whole, being one of the soundest and best pronouncements on capital and labor you had ever heard?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. As a whole.

Chairman WALSH. In another paragraph of the letter Prof. Stevenson says: "Workmen's compensation laws are enacted freely, and are wholly against the capitalist."

Do you want the people of the United States to believe that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have no opinion to express.

Chairman WALSH. Do you agree, or do you say that workmen's compensation laws in the United States are wholly against the capitalists?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No. On that concrete question, I say no.

Chairman WALSH. And still you were willing for your publicity agent to send out to the world what you said to be a sound and splendid pronouncement, containing the statement that compensation laws are enacted freely and are wholly against the capitalist, and you did not believe it at the time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am not defending the paper. I thought there was much that was excellent in it, and I still think so.

Chairman WALSH. On page 4, in paragraph 3, Prof. Stevenson says:

"The owners of concerns assume all risks, while others control the workers and the methods."

Do you indorse that paragraph?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Will you kindly repeat it, Mr. Chairman?

Chairman WALSH (reading). "The owners of concerns assume all the risks, while others control the workers and methods."

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I should have to get the entire context to know what that meant, what the "others" are.

Chairman WALSH. That means the worker, the others in the industry besides the owners who assume all risk.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I prefer not to express an opinion.

Chairman WALSH. Well, what would you say as to the relative importance of the risk by the taking of which a man might lose part of his income as compared with the risk which a man would assume by taking the risk of loss of life or limb and the subjecting of his wife and children to poverty or pauperization?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. You mean, which is the greater risk to the individual?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Of course the man that loses all is risking more than the man who loses part.

Chairman WALSH. That is, the man who loses his life or limb would assume a greater risk than the man who assumes the risk of losing a part of his income?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I should regard life as about the most important outside of honor.

Chairman WALSH. Yet you wanted your publicity agent to send out that article, didn't you, containing that statement?

"The owners assume all the risks, while others control the workers and the methods."

You wanted that sent out?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. My statement with reference to the article as a whole stands, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. On page 5, Prof. Stevenson says:

"Under existing conditions agreements can be enforced against wage payers, but not against the unions."

What did you mean by that? Or what did you consider Mr. Stevenson meant by that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am not prepared to undertake to interpret Mr. Stevenson's statements.

Chairman WALSH. In the second paragraph, on page 5, Prof. Stevenson says:

"It would appear that the only solution of the problem may be in placing the control wholly in the hands of wage payers as in the nonunionized industries."

Do you believe in that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not formulated any views on that subject.

Chairman WALSH. Do you believe that the only solution of the problem between capital and labor may be in placing control wholly in the hands of those who pay the wages, as in nonunionized industries?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. What do you mean by the "control"? Do you mean control or management of the business?

Chairman WALSH. I will read you Mr. Stevenson's words again, Mr. Rockefeller:

"It would appear that the only solution of the problem may be in placing the control wholly in the hands of wage payers, as in the nonunionized industries."

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. What thought he had in mind, of course, I don't know. But I have expressed myself on various occasions before this commission as believing that an industry—a business—was made up of its workers, its officers, and directors, and stockholders, and that all had a common interest, and that the common interest of all should be considered; and so far as that statement may be at variance with what Prof. Stevenson has said, I stand by the statement as against his statement.

Chairman WALSH. Then you differ with him?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. In so far as there is a difference in the statement I have made.

Chairman WALSH. And you did not believe that was sound economic doctrine at the time you told this man, or suggested to this man, that he send this out to the people of the United States.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did not make any statements as to what I believed as to any portion of that. I simply said the paper as a whole, I thought, was valuable.

Chairman WALSH. Well, that is a very important matter in industry to-day. It involves the question of compelling men to bargain individually, as they call it, or not to have the protection of collective bargaining, and the right of men to bargain collectively, don't it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And you stated on the stand in New York, and you state here now that you are a believer in collective bargaining?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And still you wanted your publicity agent to send out thousands of an article which you declare to be sound and practicable, in which it says it would appear that the only solution of the problem—that is, the problem of labor and capital—may be in placing the control wholly in the hands of the wage payers, as in nonunionized industries?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He says it may be; he don't say it is. That was an expression of his views; and whether I agreed with him or not don't follow.

Chairman WALSH. And yet you say, disagreeing with that now, that you wanted it sent out broadcast?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I thought the statement contained many points that were admirable. My suggestion was made, was it not, 18 months ago—or possibly last summer? It is a year since I recommended the sending out of this. Perhaps my views have changed in the meantime.

Chairman WALSH. Well, have your views changed in the meantime as to the right of the men to collective bargaining?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I stated my opinion on that.

Chairman WALSH. You said that you believed in collective bargaining. Now, you are the one that would know; have your views changed since you asked Mr. Lee to send that out?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not say whether they have or have not changed on that. I said they may or may not have changed. My views on various subjects may have changed.

Chairman WALSH. Well, have your views on that subject changed between the time you suggested that that article be sent out broadcast and now?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I stated—I said, Mr. Chairman, I had not formulated my views on that subject.

Chairman WALSH. If you have no views on that subject now, and have not had, how have you changed your views? You say now you believe in collective bargaining. Are you prepared to establish collective bargaining, so far as your influence as a director goes, in the coal mining industry of Colorado, and in the iron industry of Wyoming?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think that the statements which have been made in reference to the plan which has been started in connection with the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. of cooperation between the men and the officers of meetings between the two, of constant conferences, as regards various matters of common interest, is the nucleus. It has in it the elements of collective bargaining.

Chairman WALSH. Is that your interpretation of collective bargaining; what is being done in Colorado now?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think it has in it the nucleus of collective bargaining, and, as I stated before the commission in January, my understanding is that this plan is being developed from time to time as the representatives of the men and the officers of the company in conferences—they see that it is in their common interest to develop it.

Chairman WALSH. Did you read the statement made by Dr. Gaddis, your former sociological expert, with reference to the first meeting of those so-called delegates in Denver?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did not.

Chairman WALSH. That they were taken out in automobiles by the company, and that the delegate from one mine was a negro who owed the company $100 which he was paying upon installments. Would you call that a system of collective bargaining, or the nucleus of a system of collective bargaining—delegates of that kind?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't think the character of the delegates would have anything to do with whether that was the nucleus of collective bargaining or not. So far as the character of the delegates is concerned, as I have stated before to the commission, they were elected by the men at each camp in a meeting at which no officers of the company, or superintendents, or pit bosses were present, by secret ballot. If they were the men that the various camps selected to represent them I should think that they were the proper men to represent that group.

Chairman WALSH. But if you did not agree or your company did not agree with what they did, they could simply discharge them and they would have no final assistance from any source that would aid them in compelling your company to treat them fairly.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The plan is in its infancy, as I understand, and I have outlined to the commission the extent to which it has been developed as I have been informed.

Chairman WALSH. Prof. Stevenson says in this same paragraph:

"One might imagine that medieval conditions exist everywhere whereas they exist only among the peons of the trade-union."

Do you agree with Prof. Stevenson that members of trade-unions are peons?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have no opinion to express.

Chairman WALSH. Considering the conflict you just had with your workers in the State of Colorado, do you think it made for industrial peace and good feeling in the United States to have your publicity agent send out a statement containing the assertion that the members of trade-unions were peons, which, in the general acceptance of the term is but little higher than a slave—if not a slave?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No such statement was sent out.

Chairman WALSH. You suggested that it be sent out.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I suggested that it might be sent out, but it was not sent out.

Chairman WALSH. If it was sent out, do you think that would have a tendency, considering the fact that you had just come out of this conflict with your employees in Colorado, to make for industrial peace in the United States?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would not have suggested that the paper would be valuable to be sent out, unless I thought, on the whole, it contained statements and passages that would be generally helpful.

Chairman WALSH. In the same paragraph Prof. Stevenson says that the members of unions are said to number about 2,000,000 and that they thrive at the expense of the vast majority. Is that your belief?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am not here to express an opinion.

Chairman WALSH. If that is true should not the vast majority be encouraged to join the unions and share in their advantages, considering there are advantages to their economical welfare?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. My opinion is they should be allowed to do as they feel about it.

Chairman WALSH. In the next paragraph, on page 6, Prof. Stevenson says: "Labor unions defy the law and are ever ready to demand its protection; their principles are no better than those of the India Thugs, who practiced robbery and murder in the name of Goddess Kali."

Is that your opinion of labor unions?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is Prof. Stevenson's opinion.

Chairman WALSH. And coming right out of this conflict, in which there was bloodshed and killing of human beings, women and children, you wanted your publicity agent to send out through this country the statement of another man who said that the labor unions defied the law; that their principles are no better than those of the India Thugs who practice robbery and murder.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did not suggest that that paragraph be sent out, but the article as a whole be sent out.

Chairman WALSH. If the article as a whole was sent out do you not think it would produce in the minds of the 2,000,000 members of organized labor, and those who perhaps sympathize with them, feelings of bitterness and the thought that the educational institutions of this country were against them and were making them outcasts and classing them with robbers and murderers?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I certainly would not have suggested the article would be useful in that way, if I had that opinion, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. But you wanted the article sent out as a whole containing that statement.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If it was used at all, I suggested that it be used as a whole, as you will notice in my letter.

Chairman WALSH. As a matter of fact, you did not believe that the members of these labor unions were no better than India Thugs, did you, at the time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. What labor unions are you referring to?

Chairman WALSH. The ones Prof. Stevenson referred to and the ones you referred to in the article sent to Ivy Lee with the suggestion that the whole of it, as you now say, was to be used?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know what labor unions he referred to; is it labor unions generally?

Chairman WALSH. I will read it. Were you mad at the labor unions at the time you wrote and asked to have it sent out? Did you have a feeling of anger?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have expressed myself on various occasions as believing just as firmly in the organization of labor as in the organization of capital; I believe it is just as appropriate and desirable.

Chairman WALSH. I will read this paragraph: "Labor unions and their defenders justify the use of violence because without it they could not succeed." I take it that refers to labor unions?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. "The assumptions are that labor and society are at war, that the interests are irreconcilable, and that demands by labor leaders are always just. McNamara at Los Angeles saw no moral turpitude in arson and murder, because he fought for a principle. The unions evidently agreed with him for they expended a vast sum in his defense. Thirty-eight men were convicted in Indianapolis of complicity in his and similar crimes, but the union approved their work and reelected the convicts to their offices."

"The daily papers report almost daily cases of murder and arson in localities where strikes have been ordered."

"Labor unions defy the law but are ever ready to demand its protection; their principles are no better than those of the India Thugs, who practiced robbery and murder in the name of the Goddess Kali."

That refers to all labor unions, does it not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I should take it that it did.

Chairman WALSH. And at that time, you did not believe, as a matter of fact, in your heart, that the members of labor unions were robbers and murderers and no better than India Thugs?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No; not labor unions throughout.

Chairman WALSH. But you wanted that sent out, did you not, in June, 1913 or 1914?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I didn't want it just sent out; I suggested it might be a desirable thing to send out.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you suggested that to the man who was drawing his pay from the investments which you represented, did you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The question at that time as to who was to pay Mr. Lee had never been determined.

Chairman WALSH. You wanted Mr. Lee to send that out, did you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No. I suggested to Mr. Lee that it might be desirable to publish.

Chairman WALSH. Because it was such a fine article?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And so splendidly stated the question?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The general subject.

Chairman WALSH. Of capital and labor?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, as a matter of fact, I will ask you the direct question, Did not you have that sent out so that it would appear to be an article by a disinterested educator, and it might instill in the minds of the people to whom the labor unions would appeal for support the thought that they were robbers, thugs, and murderers?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I had no such intention at all.

Chairman WALSH. You have heard much, have you not, and read much about the power of public opinion in these industrial disputes?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. It is a powerful thing, is it not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And has been expressed by many persons upon the stand, particularly by large employers of labor, that all these questions must be settled by public opinion finally, has it not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Public opinion is the final court in this country.

Chairman WALSH. Now, if the members of the labor unions were not thugs and murderers, and you knew it, and Ivy Lee sent that out, was it not a palpable suggestion to him to do something that would poison the wells of public information, so that a false and incorrect opinion might be built up to the financial benefit of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. and your other investments?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Again I resent the imputation of the questions and utterly repudiate the motive. I had no such motive at all.

Chairman WALSH. Now, the second paragraph, on page 7, Prof. Stevenson says, speaking of the Standard Oil Co., the United States Steel Co., the Harvester Co., and the American Sugar Refining Co.:

"Attacks on these organizations by Government officials win great applause, in spite of the fact that so-called 'trust-made' products are almost the only ones which have decreased in price, although the great companies pay high wages and their workmen have steady work, because trade-unions can not gain a foothold to impoverish the wage earner by strikes and compulsory idleness."

Now, you read that in the article?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I read the article as a whole.

Chairman WALSH. Now, did you believe, in your heart, at that time that the effect of trade-unions upon the wage earner was to impoverish them, or was it, and did you not know that it was, to add to their economic independence?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think that sometimes trade-unions do impoverish and sometimes they help. I hope that much more frequently they help.

Chairman WALSH. In what instance did they impoverish?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. Name the union?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am not prepared to.

Chairman WALSH. Name the time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am not prepared to.

Chairman WALSH. Upon what do you base your statement?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. From what I have heard and generally understood upon the subject.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you say that trade-unions can not obtain a foothold in these corporations: The Standard Oil Co., the United States Steel Co., the Harvester Co., and the American Sugar Refining Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Did I make that statement?

Chairman WALSH. This professor made this statement in the article that you sent Mr. Lee to send out, and I am asking you for the truth of it, if you know?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. You just said that I said it, and I did not.

Chairman WALSH. I say it is contained in the article that you sent to Mr. Ivy Lee and had sent out to the public.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is not your first statement.

Chairman WALSH. I changed my statement, and now in view of it, as you now understand it, did you at that time know that trade-unions could not gain a foothold in these corporations?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know now that they could not.

Chairman WALSH. You would not pay for the circulation of a falsehood, would you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Of course I would not.

Chairman WALSH. And would you not want to know whether or not a thing was the truth before you sent it out?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would have to repeat what I said before, I thought the article as a whole would be one that would be helpful. I did not analyze it or say that this ought to be omitted or that, but it was my general impression of the article that it was helpful. I have not read it since, but I thought it would be generally helpful to all interested and concerned, and it was my suggestion that it might be desirable to publish that article.

Chairman WALSH. It was on account of the alleged facts contained in the article that made you think that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It was on account of the article itself.

Chairman WALSH. Now, what do you say now; is it true that trade-unions can not gain a foothold in those organizations?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am not in a position to know.

Chairman WALSH. Are you in a position to say now that wages are higher and conditions are better in those corporations I have mentioned than in unionized industries?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. Still you wanted that sent out containing those alleged facts to the people of the United States?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know that it was not true, and I have not made any statement with reference to the details of the article, but simply the article as a whole.

Chairman WALSH. Do you believe it proper, in attempting to establish a public opinion in this country, to send out statements of that kind that you do not know to be true or false?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would not have suggested the desirability of sending out that statement if I had not thought it was proper.

Chairman WALSH. But you did not know anything about the facts as to the wages paid in other industries compared with those?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have no reason to disbelieve them.

Chairman WALSH. You have no knowledge of them at all?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have a general knowledge of the subject.

Chairman WALSH. What is your knowledge as to the comparative rates of wages in these industries I have mentioned and unionized industries?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I meant the whole subject that the article treats of.

Chairman WALSH. I am speaking about that particular subject, the wages of the workmen.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have no knowledge.

Chairman WALSH. You had no knowledge when that article was sent out, or suggested to be sent out?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I had no knowledge.

Chairman WALSH. Now, with reference to the statements that you now say are incorrect, that are contained in the bulletin, "Facts in regard to Colorado," sent out by Mr. Ivy Lee, or his stenographer or office boy, from Philadelphia, I will ask you if what I read you now is not the correspondence upon that subject?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Chairman, may I state, first you say that what I "now" say is incorrect, making it appear that that was just developed here this morning. I stated that when I learned that statement was not correct that I directed a telegram to be sent to Mr. Welborn to correct that statement.

Chair WALSH. I will state that what you still say is incorrect.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Certainly.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you if that is all of the correspondence upon that subject. This is a telegram of September 30, 1914, to Ivy S. Lee, Broad Street, Philadelphia:

"It has been suggested, and I think very wisely, that on account of incorrectness of facts with respect to payments to officers of organization reported in Bulletin No. 4, that with the reissue of series 1, we inclose slip reading 'On page 67 it is stated that certain figures were taken from a report of secretary-treasurer U. M. W. of A., this is a mistake.' It is believed that officers are in doubt as to what information we have concerning their financial interest in the strike, and with this slip inserted they will not make any further answer. Number 14 has brought out some questions that can not be easily answered.

"J. F. WELBORN."

And Mr. Ivy Lee has sent the following:

"Pamphlet already printed and forwarded. Suggest you have slip printed in Denver and inclosed when mailing."

Was that all of the correspondence on that subject?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I had nothing to do with the first telegram, but whether the second is the telegram that Mr. Lee sent at my suggestion, or sent himself when we discovered this error, I do not know, but I presume it is.

Chairman WALSH. Now, can you produce any other letter or any other telegram referring to the question of correcting the statement as to the money that the officers received in Colorado that were conducting this strike?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall how I made this known to Mr. Lee; my wish was the correction should be made as full and complete as the error had been made, whether by word of mouth, whether by telephone, letter, or telegram, but I do know that is what I did.

Chairman WALSH. You said, I believe, in your examination this morning that you asked Mr. Lee to make the correction at once fully?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I asked Mr. Lee to have the correction made.

Chairman WALSH. Fully?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And fairly?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I will read you again the quoted part of Mr. Welborn's telegram: "On page 67 it is stated that certain figures were taken from the report of secretary-treasurer of U. M. W. of A. This is a mistake."

Was that not allowing it to stand as if it was still the truth, although not taken from the report of the United Mine Workers of America?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am not undertaking to interpret Mr. Welborn's correspondence. I am stating what my own act was the moment that I heard there was an error in that statement.

Chairman WALSH. If that is all the correspondence there is, then you would say that your request to have it fully corrected was not complied with?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know, I—

Chairman WALSH. You don't know of any other correspondence except this?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. But you have not produced any correspondence, nor can you prove, can you, that I have not telephoned or spoken to Mr. Lee about that? I didn't say how my message went to him, but I make the statement, and repeat it, and mean it, I say as soon as I heard there was an error I sent word to Mr. Lee, whether by telephone, telegraph, letter, or word of mouth, I do not recall, but I told him the statement should be corrected at once and fully and completely as the original statement was made. That is all I had to do with the matter.

Chairman WALSH. Now, if you found out that Mr. Lee did nothing except answer that telegram from Mr. Welborn, and that there was no correction made until after the strike was all over, until after the November election, you would say that your orders were not carried out by Mr. Lee, would you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Lee I do not think had anything to do with making the correction itself; Mr. Welborn was issuing the correction.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Welborn; then, if it be true that nothing more was done in respect to correcting that misstatement until after the strike was over, until after the November election, you would say that your instructions by letter or telegram or word of mouth or telephone were not carried out, would you not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. They certainly were not carried out at once, if that is a fact. I don't know when the correction was made.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I am going to call your attention specifically and direct your mind to the alleged control of yourself and your associates of the legal machinery and the governor in Colorado. Now, the opinion that Gov. Ammons refused to send the militia into the mining camps of Colorado to install strike breakers is true, is it not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think he did not do so at the outbreak, at the out-start.

Chairman WALSH. Now, did you read the statement made by former United States Senator Patterson in the inquiry in Denver?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't recall it.

Chairman WALSH. Have you ever read the statement made by Senator Patterson?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Not that I recall.

Chairman WALSH. I will read you a part of his statement leading up to this. This is a statement of ex-Senator Thomas M. Patterson:

"I then suggested to the governor that the public ought to know the purposes for which the State troops were to be used, in calling them out. There was intense excitement in the State. The partizanship was bitter, and that it was but due to the public that it should know the use that was going to be made of the State troops; and for that reason I suggested it would be well for him to have an interview prepared for publication in the morning newspapers, which would be the first paper to give notice of the act to be taken. He entirely agreed with me, and I telephoned to the office of the News to send up a reporter. In the meantime I had dictated something in the shape of an interview to his own stenographer, and I think had it ready by the time the reporter came; and in that interview the purpose for which the troops were to be used, first, to protect all property; second, to protect all men who were at work; third, to protect all who might desire to return to work; and, fourth, not to be used for the installation of strike breakers, was clearly set forth in the interview. After it was dictated and extended, it was read carefully to the governor, and he approved every word of it. Then it was given to the reporter, and that was published in the morning paper, this interview, together with the action of the governor calling out the State troops.

"I recall with great distinctness that the telegraphic report published of the reception of the militia, when they went into the strike field, indicated that they were received with genuine pleasure by the strikers. My recollection is that the newspaper accounts published in the papers were that the strikers cheered the first militia as they were disembarking from the trains, and I think I can safely say that there was the best of feeling between the militia and the strikers, so far as outward exhibitions were concerned from that time for the next several weeks—somewhere in the neighborhood of three weeks. They were playing baseball together and football, and things of that kind."

Now, I will ask you if following that you did not get the letter from Mr. Bowers stating that he had used the bankers, that he had used the financial interests to whip the governor into line?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall whether that letter from Mr. Bowers, from which you are quoting something, was written before or after the speech.

Chairman WALSH. It was written on November 18, and troops were sent out on October 28. If that was true, of course the letter was written that length of time after the troops were sent out.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. He said, in his letter, that he finally did whip the governor into line.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He said that he, with a number of other people in the State, was urging the governor to protect life and property.

Chairman WALSH. What he said was that he had whipped them into line.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is what I interpreted that to mean.

Chairman WALSH. And he used every weapon that could be used to whip them into line.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He used every influence he could bring to bear.

Chairman WALSH. He said he used every weapon to whip them into line. That was the language.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not suppose that he meant that he took a cudgel or firearm or anything of that sort. I suppose he used whatever force of public opinion he could bring to bear to urge the governor to do what was necessary to protect life and property.

Chairman WALSH. Let us see if we can ascertain what force he used. You say you are willing to leave everything to the attorney general as to the administration of law?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The attorney general and other forces of law and order in the State.

Chairman WALSH. Would you leave it to them before they were whipped into line?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Always.

Chairman WALSH. Always?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir; I would leave it to them always unless they failed to protect life and property.

Chairman WALSH. Then, what would you do?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I should do whatever might be necessary, under the circumstances, to protect life and property.

Chairman WALSH. You would meet violence with violence if the officials would not act?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would do what was necessary.

Chairman WALSH. Suppose the officials did not act, and a force was starting after your property, would you arm yourself or have others armed to repel that force with force?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It is a matter that was left, Mr. Chairman, as I stated, entirely in the hands of the officials of the company.

Chairman WALSH. What would you do?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not been put in a position where I needed to decide that question.

Chairman WALSH. Would it be proper for men to resist force with force if violence were absolutely impending?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think it would be absolutely necessary to protect life and property.

Chairman WALSH. And if the officials did not do it, you would do it yourself?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think everyone would do it.

Chairman WALSH. You think that is proper?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think no other course would be proper.

Chairman WALSH. Of course, you would have to make up your own mind and your own judgment and your own conscience, as to whether the officials were failing in their duty, and as to whether violence was impending against your person and property?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. In those circumstances the officials charged with the protection of life and property would have to make up their minds as to whether—

Chairman WALSH (Interposing). But you would have to make up your own mind and your own conscience as to whether or not the officials were failing in their own duty and as to whether violence was impending?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know where anyone else could turn.

Chairman WALSH. And if you believed that, you would resist that violence with all the force you could command?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I mean in order to protect life and property—

Chairman WALSH. Yes; in order to protect life and property, the officials failing, you would resist that force with all the force you could command?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. You mean the officials of the State?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. With whatever force I might be able to command.

Chairman WALSH. The officials failing you, and your property being about to be invaded or your life threatened, you would resist that force with all the force at your command?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. With all the force that was necessary, that I could command.

Chairman WALSH. And if it meant the taking of life, to protect your property or your own life, of course you would do it.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think almost any man would do it.

Chairman WALSH. It has been testified to a great many times here. [No response.] Now, as to the instrumentalities used by Mr. Bowers, I will get you to state whether or not you were informed that Mr. Bowers got the attorney general, Mr. Farrar, to go to the governor and ask him to change his order that he had made, that the troops were sent out to assist you in importing strike breakers from other States?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. You ask if Mr. Bowers informed me to that effect?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have no knowledge of that.

Chairman WALSH. Were the State authorities used for bringing imported strike breakers to your mines and putting them to work?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have no knowledge of that situation.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you if you did not read the testimony of Attorney General Farrar to this effect:

"I"—

Speaking of himself; he was testifying—

"told the governor that the operators had a property right in their mines that they were entitled to enjoy, that the men had a right to work, and that his position was tenable solely upon the ground that it was absolutely and imperative necessity in order to maintain order. I understand my view was not shared by Senator Patterson, but I will give you my view for what it is worth. The governor, therefore, modified that order and men were allowed to go to work. When he modified the order he gave specific instructions that the militia should see that the men brought to the mines to work were previously informed that a strike was in progress, and so far as I learned the militia required in every instance that that should be done. They gave men brought in to work the safe conduct to the mines and the production of coal was resumed by the mines.

"From the minute that the order was changed the relationship between the militia and the strikers changed also, and the strikers began to abuse them and continued to abuse them from that minute on."

Didn't you read that testimony given by the attorney general of Colorado in the hearing held in the State of Colorado?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall having read it.

Chairman WALSH. Didn't you know that it was a fact that the governor first ordered, under the advice of many citizens of Colorado, including ex-Senator Patterson—made an order when the militia was sent out—that they were to protect property and protect the men at work and protect the men who wanted to return to work, but they were not to be used by the company as an agency to conduct strikebreakers to the tipples in your mines in order to work in your mines?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did not.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you again, reading from the testimony at that point of Senator Patterson:

"At the end of about three weeks the newspapers were filled with details of violence. I made inquiry and then I learned for the first time, and much to my astonishment, that the orders that he had given to Gen. Chase as to strikebreakers had been recalled or changed, and that State troops were then being engaged in conducting strikebreakers into the mines. I think miners were brought from without the State, and under the protection of State troops were sent to the different mines. And things occurred under those circumstances, as I labored under the impression they would occur, because the history of all strikes is that where operators undertake to supply the place of striking miners it is met with resistance. And then things went from bad to worse, criminality and recrimination, the operators insisting that all violence was committed by the miners and the miners insisting that there was ample provocation for whatever violence they resorted to."

And he says that these went from that time onward from bad to worse, and that trouble commenced.

Now, if that is true—that which I have read you from the testimony of Senator Patterson and Attorney General Farrar, of Colorado—would you agree with me that the cause of the trouble was not in protecting your property, but in using State troops to conduct strikebreakers to the tipples of your mines?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did not have to act on this situation. Mr. Welborn and Mr. Bowers, officers of the company, were engaged in handling that situation. I can only say that I have every reason to believe they did what was right and necessary in order to protect the property.

Chairman WALSH. Now, on this question of political control I want to take you back a little. General Farrar, of course, is a credible man, and is at present attorney general, and was the attorney general at the time of the strike?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir; you make the statement that he was.

Chairman WALSH. You make the statement that he was a credible man, is he not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I assume that he is. I do not know him.

Chairman WALSH. You wrote a letter to Mr. Bowers congratulating him on the reelection of General Farrar, did you not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall. I may have.

Chairman WALSH. Do you not recall that one of the letters that you submitted to us congratulated Mr. Bowers on the reelection of Mr. Farrar?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall it, but it is highly possible.

Chairman WALSH. Is there any doubt in your mind that you wrote that letter congratulating Mr. Bowers on the reelection of General Farrar?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If Mr. Bowers had written me that it was a good thing for the State of Colorado and the people of the State, that it was a good thing for Mr. Farrar to have been reelected, I very probably did so.

Chairman WALSH. Do you remember that you did?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not.

Chairman WALSH. I will read it to you.

"I have just returned to the city after an absence of several weeks in the South with my wife, and find your letter of November 6 regarding the gratifying plurality for Carlson for governor and Farrar for attorney general. It would seem that the election of this Republican governor and the election of this Democratic attorney general, both of whom have established clear records as to their strong stand for law and order, would indicate that the sentiment of the people of Colorado is for law and order quite irrespective of party lines.

"Very cordially,

"JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr."

You wrote that letter, didn't you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If it was the one I sent you; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And law and order you referred to took place in organizing the militia and what took place at Ludlow, didn't it—that is your conception of law and order?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It included whatever they had done to establish law and order.

Chairman WALSH. Do you say that whatever a man does, who is clothed with official power, is right, in view of what you said about the right every man has to defend himself, where the officers of the State fail in their duty?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not quite understand the question. Will you repeat it?

Chairman WALSH. Do you say that everything a man does, clothed with official authority, is right?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Of course I could not say that any man was not bound to make mistakes of judgment. The millenium is not come yet.

Chairman WALSH. Your attention has been called to the fact that the sheriff mentioned in Mr. Bowers's letter has been elected over and over again for 16 years, and elected through the support of the mining companies, prior to 1904, is still in office and charged with the duty of summoning jurors in the strike cases, and he is the same man who swore in 326 mine guards to be paid by your company, before the 1st day of September, 1913.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. What sheriff and what letter?

Chairman WALSH. Sheriff Farr and the letter, I might indicate, is the letter in which Mr. Bowers said that even the mules were voted when they had names. He is the same Jeff Farr, is he not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That has done what?

Chairman WALSH. Who has been the sheriff of Huerfano County, who has been summoning coroner's juries, and is still summoning jurors for the criminal cases in Colorado.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. You do not know?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. I will read you what General Farrar said about that, at page 4303 of the testimony.

Before I come to Farrar, I will ask if Judge Northcutt is your attorney now?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. You do not know that Judge Northcutt is the attorney of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., and helped to select the jury that helped to convict Lawson and Zancanelli?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know that he is the same man.

Chairman WALSH. You do not know that Judge Northcutt is attorney for the Colorado Iron & Fuel Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall that that information has ever come to me.

Chairman WALSH. As a matter of fact, you do know that the company out there controlled elections, State and county, do you not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not.

Chairman WALSH. I will read you from the speech of the Hon. Jesse G. Northcutt, at Lamar, Colo., delivered October 10, 1912—and you say you do not know whether he is your attorney there or not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall.

Chairman WALSH. Did you read the details of Mr. Lawson's trial?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Were you interested in it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I was.

Chairman WALSH. Are you interested to know whether the men live or die who were engaged in that strike in Colorado?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Very much interested.

Chairman WALSH. Did you read the trial of Zancanelli, the Italian who was convicted, and the trial of John R. Lawson, the labor leader, who was convicted?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did not.

Chairman WALSH. In what way is your interest expressed in the life or death of these people—did you inquire into anything concerning it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It is expressed in a statement I made this morning in reference to my attitude.

Chairman WALSH. You do not care to go any further than that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think that covers my position entirely.

Chairman WALSH. I will read an extract from the Hon. Jesse G. Northcutt's speech delivered October 10, 1912:

"The farmer will refuse, because he feels independent and feels he is not to be driven as a sheep, and you people are fortunate in being located in a farming community where you can get indorsements for that which is good, whether some man up in Denver says you may have it or not. This has been the condition so far as the Republican Party is concerned, and I am not going to say so much about the other party because I do not know much about it. About all I have to do with it is to fight it, but recently I have concluded it is not so awful bad because it is seeking so many of the things we are seeking and they will help us to get them, and so long as they will do that I am not going to be very bad to them. But, so far as our party is concerned, there at a convention the delegates do not even claim the right to nominate a single man on the ticket. Let me tell you how they do it, because as a matter of fact you are really affected and you are interested in it, and I will endeavor to tell you why. Up there several men get together in a room some days before the convention. They have already fixed up who the delegates to the convention shall be. They have probably given the local superintendent of the mines the number of delegates to which that community will be entitled. They do not tell him whom to bring. He knows he is to select a certain number of delegates who are to come in and follow the dictation of a single man whose name is given to them before they leave. He goes around and picks out Jim Archulet or some other fellow and says to him, 'I want you to go down to a convention tomorrow down at Trinidad, to a convention, and you see Mr. So-and-so and do as he tells you.' Knowing that these delegates will come in and do as they are told, a meeting of four or five leaders is held and they proceed to make the slate. 'We will take for county clerk So-and-so; he is a good man for the purpose.' Some other man says, 'But still I think probably some time within the last 8 or 10 months he had some trouble with some pit boss,' and there is just a suspicion that the company dislikes him. He isn't right with the company; he goes off the slate, and so it is from bottom to top the candidates are selected, not with a view to their fitness, not with a view to their ability to discharge their duty, not with a view to their integrity, but 'Are they satisfactory to the company?' If they are, that settles it."

Now, that is the statement made by the Hon. Jesse G. Northcutt in October, 1912. Now, I will read you from the testimony given before this commission by Attorney General Farrar, and I will ask, before I do that, suppose the delegates were selected and candidates were selected in that manner, would you believe that that is a desirable social condition in Colorado?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think anything that prevents the election and the operation of local or national or State governments in an orderly and proper way is indefensible and deplorable, and should be terminated.

Chairman WALSH. Would you resist to the utmost of your power if it were applied to you individually? Suppose a man thus selected were a judge and attempted to try a case against you that might involve your life, would you not protest against it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would want to have just—I would want to have the trial conducted with absolute fairness.

Chairman WALSH. Suppose, now, you are a striking miner; would you want a man elected in that manner to pass on your case?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Certainly not.

Chairman WALSH. I will read you what General Farrar said about the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Referring to the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Chairman WALSH. And other fields.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If you will simply call attention to the fact that it does not refer particularly to our company—you say “our company.”

Chairman WALSH. It will be difficult to do that, and I shall have to decline. As I remember, the Royal is very close to your mines, and that the operators in that vicinity are operating together, and it would be impossible for me to take the time to analyze these matters closely enough to distinguish between them as we go along.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If it is understood it is the operators and not any individual company, I think it will tend to clarify the record.

Chairman WALSH. It is the operators, and when I say the operators it always includes your company and maybe some others—the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

“Then it is not your duty”—

This is a question to General Farrar—

“to make any investigation as to whether or not the election laws are obeyed in the counties of the State or whether political corruption exists, or improper influences are brought to bear or not?

“General FARRAR. Well, I did make such an investigation; whether it is my duty or not, I made it.

“Chairman WALSH. In what county?

“General FARRAR. Las Animas and Huerfano; particularly Huerfano.

“Chairman WALSH. When did you make it.

“General FARRAR. That was made, as I stated, on my first trip down to Walsenburg after I was inaugurated. Early in 1913, early in the summer, I believe, I made a partial investigation in that regard.

“Chairman WALSH. Was it after the Ludlow incident?

“General FARRAR. Oh, no; it was the year before.

“Chairman WALSH. The year before?

“General FARRAR. Yes, sir.

“Chairman WALSH. In what month?

“General FARRAR. I can not recall the month.

“Chairman WALSH. Did you make a personal investigation?

“General FARRAR. Yes, sir.

“Chairman WALSH. And what did you ascertain, briefly, as to the condition there so far as the political control was concerned—alleged political control by the company?

“General FARRAR. I found a very perfect political machine, just as much a machine as Tammany in New York, as I have any knowledge of it; just as much of a machine as you will find in any of the places where a great many voters are susceptible to an organization of that kind. I found that the head of this political machine was the sheriff and that it was carried along lines very similar to those maintained in Tammany; that is, it had a system of relief in cases of need, and a system of giving rewards to these people, and I think, briefly speaking, the term machine covers the situation, just such a machine as you people may have in your own States or your own cities. Certainly, it was a machine.

“Chairman WALSH. Did you ascertain from what source the money came in organizing and maintaining it?

“General FARRAR. I was not able to place that definitely. I believe that the machine probably—well, I can not say that it existed with the help of the coal companies; I believe, however, it existed through its power as a machine over the coal company. That is, I can not be sure which was cause and which was effect; but there was undoubtedly some relationship between the two.”

Now, that is the statement of General Farrar. Now, then, I want to ask you this question: If that control of the officials, the governor, and the attorney general, and judges, is in the control of the coal companies, I believe you stated that would be a very undesirable situation?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Those offices should be in the control of the people.

Chairman WALSH. How is that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The control of the officers of any State or community should be solely in the hands of the people who elected them.

Chairman WALSH. When they are not in the control of the people, but one industry controls them, what relief have the people of the community, if the officials themselves become law violators?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The ballot, I should say.

Chairman WALSH. But suppose it goes so far they arm men to go into the homes of the citizenry, then what must the people do?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The ballot would eventually give them relief, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Would you not think they should resist to protect their life and property?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think anyone whose life is threatened and can not get protection from the duly constituted authorities, would be justified in using any means at his disposal to protect his life and property.

Chairman WALSH. You heard the testimony of Mr. Gaddis and Dr. McDonald, the minister at Sunrise?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you read the testimony of Mr. Hansen Kubyak?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. They state the same belief that you do as to when the authorities fail in their duty and violence is immediately impending they have a right to fight back. You agree with that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think any man has a right to defend his life.

Chairman WALSH. Any man?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir; any man.

Chairman WALSH. I will take a case like this: If it be true that there is an alliance between the coal companies and these officials, what would you consider as being the remedy of a man under these circumstances, that the coal company had an attorney in the State senate; that he introduced a law, promoted its passage, and got it upon the statute books creating a new judicial district; that immediately upon that being done a judge was appointed who had been the attorney for the coal company in the conduct of its cases; that you were about to come on for trial with the men who were involved in a strike against the coal company, charging them with violence; they were placed upon trial before that judge, he refusing to stand aside, although affidavits had been filed that he had been attorney for the coal companies in the very prosecutions that were coming before him. Under those circumstances what do you say that the citizen ought to do?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I believe I stated in the statement I read this morning my opinion is that justice should be so administered as to be above suspicion.

Chairman WALSH. Do you think that the concrete case I have given would be above suspicion?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think that wherever there is a suspicion that justice can not be obtained—

Chairman WALSH. What is the relief of the individuals under the circumstances of the concrete case such as I have included in that question?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am not in a position to make a reply to the question.

Chairman WALSH. Will you give a reply?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am not in a position to give a reply.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If you will pardon me, Mr. Chairman, there is one answer that Mr. Rockefeller made that has left my mind in doubt as to what he intended to convey. Did I understand you to say, Mr. Rockefeller, that you would resist the authorities of the law?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir; and if I seem to have made such an answer, I have given the wrong impression.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then, I misunderstood you. To have it clear, I would suggest that the reporter go back and read that portion of the record.

(The reporter read as follows:)

"Chairman WALSH. But suppose it goes so far they arm men to go into the homes of the citizenry, then what must the people do?"

"Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The ballot would eventually give them relief, Mr. Chairman.

"Chairman WALSH. Would you not think they should resist to protect their life and property?

"Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think anyone whose life is threatened and can not get protection from the duly constituted authorities would be justified in using any means at his disposal to protect his life and property."

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you mean to resist the duly constituted authorities?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir; I said that he should take whatever steps that are necessary to protect his life and property.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. But not against the duly constituted authorities?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Certainly not; only when they fail to do what they are appointed to do.

Chairman WALSH. Suppose they started after you with a gun—these duly constituted authorities?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I should always protect my life, I think, Mr. Chairman, as you would and every other citizen.

Chairman WALSH. Even though it was constituted authority?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I should expect any man to undertake to protect his life.

Chairman WALSH. I was going to elucidate that and make this a little clearer, but maybe this little clearing up will not make it necessary.

Suppose, Mr. Rockefeller—I believe elections are every two years in Colorado, are they not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am not familiar with the law there.

Chairman WALSH. Supposing at the next election Mr. Edward Doyle should be elected governor of Colorado—one of the officials of the United Mine Workers of America, who is a citizen of Denver, and who testified before us; supposing that when you go out to Colorado that an indictment should be returned against you, rightfully or wrongfully, charging you with responsibility for what took place at Ludlow; supposing that the United Mines Workers also had control of the State Senate of Colorado; and suppose they had influence enough to have a law passed; and suppose they passed a law creating a new judicial district; that as judge of that district he appointed Horace N. Hawkins, the attorney for the United Mine Workers of America, as judge of that district, and you were indicted and brought before Horace N. Hawkins for trial; would you consider that you could get a fair and impartial trial under those circumstances?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Chairman, I should think that the chances were not the best.

Chairman WALSH. Now, then, what would you do to relieve yourself from that situation?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I should hardly be able to state until I was in the situation.

Chairman WALSH. Would you expect the men that were in charge of the United Mine Workers of America—at the head of it—charged with responsibility for the conduct of that organization, to come forward in their individual capacity as men and protest against your trial under those circumstances?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think that the protest should be—whatever protest was made—should be made in the orderly way of going to the authorities.

Chairman WALSH. At the polls?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Well, if it was a question of changing the authority; yes.

Chairman WALSH. I will add one other matter to my hypothetical question. Supposing the evidence that was produced against you was the evidence of three men that had been working in your office at 26 Broadway, but who were in reality spies paid by the United Mine Workers of America for every day of the time they were in your office, and while they were testifying against you; would you consider that a proper situation in the administration of justice?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Decidedly not.

Chairman WALSH. And you would not expect, if that came to light, that the leaders of the United Mine Workers of America would protest against your conviction upon any such ground?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Whatever orderly protest should be made, I should hope would be made.

Chairman WALSH. You would want the protest made orderly, even if you were being convicted under such circumstances?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I should not wish any supposititious case to reflect upon the officials in charge.

Chairman WALSH. Would it be orderly for the officials in charge, when that came out, at their own volition, to make inquiry as to the truth or falsity of it, and, after having found out the truth, they did not take immediate steps to remedy the wrong done you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I stated my opinion is that justice should be so administered as to be above suspicion, and I believe that always, whether in my own instance or the instance of any other man.

Chairman WALSH. I am asking this supposed case; if you were in that situation would you want the president of the United Mine Workers of America to write a statement saying, "I believe in the proper administration of justice at all times," and go no further than that to save you from a lifetime of suffering and degradation in the penitentiary?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have stated clearly my position, and I do not feel that I should add to that.

Chairman WALSH. That is as far as you care to go?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Then I will not pursue the matter any further. I want to call your attention to another letter written under date of September 4, 1913, from Mr. Bowers to you, as follows:

"There has been a group of labor-union agitators in southern Colorado for more than a month and threatening to call a strike for the purpose of securing recognition of the Western Federation of Miners, but protests have come from nearly all the State officials, from the governor down, together with the protests from the boards of trade and of commercial bodies, so that the matter has quieted down, though their national officials are still in Colorado. This has kept us all in a state of unrest, so that my vacation has been a season of worry. A disaster of this sort would put us up against a fight that would be serious indeed."

That was September 4. What action did you take, as a director of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., to secure information regarding the extent and character of this supposed possible disaster?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I had been informed that for some years a strike had been carried on in northern Colorado, and that an effort had been from time to time made to extend the influence of that strike into the southern part of the State, and this I interpreted to be another effort of a similar character, and I made no comment on the letter.

Chairman WALSH. Did you and your colleagues in New York have a fixed policy with reference to your conduct toward such effort to organize the men in the southern coal fields?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. We had no policy. The policy, as I have stated in my several statements, was made by the officials of the company in Denver.

Chairman WALSH. Did you not consider it a serious enough matter, after receiving that notification on September 4, before the convention was held that called the strike—that decided on a strike—that immediate action should be taken by your board of directors?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I had no knowledge that a convention was to be called, as I remember, at that time; and as I have stated, this was simply a statement like others that I have heard of; the union from the northern part of the State had been undertaking to extend its organization into the southern part.

Chairman WALSH. I call your attention to another letter dated September 19, which Mr. Bowers wrote to Mr. Murphy, as follows:

"The strike is called for the 23d, but it is thought on the part of a good many operators that the officials anticipating being whipped, will undertake to sneak out if they can secure even an interview with the operators, which so far they have been unable to do, thus boasting before the public that they have secured the principal point; namely, recognition of the union."

Did you see that letter?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did.

Chairman WALSH. So you knew, on the 23d of September, that in the opinion of the operators in Colorado, if your officers had simply met these men they would have sneaked away and not made any further effort to organize; simply using that as a recognition of the union?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I had that statement from Mr. Bowers that you read.

Chairman WALSH. Did you not consider that that request for an interview was a reasonable request and should have been granted?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It was a matter that was left for the officers of the company to decide.

Chairman WALSH. But it was sent to you, and you were a director of the company, were you not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The information was sent to me.

Chairman WALSH. And you had the power to remove the members of your own executive board at will?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No; that is not correct; I had the power to suggest the withdrawal of any members of our staff if for any reason we preferred to have other people represent us.

Chairman WALSH. And when you make that suggestion, they were retired?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I had no control over the other members of the board.

Chairman WALSH. When you made that suggestion to Mr. Bowers he retired and went back to the personal staff?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have no control over the members of the board other than those we appoint to represent us, and those may stay on or leave the board as we direct.

Chairman WALSH. Does that include Mr. Bowers?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He was not on the board as a representative of ours.

Chairman WALSH. Would that include Mr. Bowers, that course of practice?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The power to withdraw him?

Chairman WALSH. And to put him back on the personal staff?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I had no power over Mr. Bowers when he was an officer of the company; he was not in our employ at that time.

Chairman WALSH. Who put him on the board?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think I said this morning that the officers, or rather the directors, or else the stockholders.

Chairman WALSH. That was Mr. Murphy we were talking about, and I am talking about Mr. Bowers. When he first went on the executive board, who put him on? Was he put on the same as Mr. Murphy?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He would be elected by the board.

Chairman WALSH. And you would take them away and put them on the personal staff of your interests, if you wished?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If Mr. Bowers cared to resign from the position he was holding and take another, he would be free to.

Chairman WALSH. Now, in the case of Mr. Murphy, would you not express your will, and put him on the personal staff of your father?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't think you make the distinction. Mr. Murphy was in the employ of my father and paid by him.

Chairman WALSH. I think I make the distinction.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. On the other hand, Mr. Bowers was in the employ of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. and not receiving salary from us.

Chairman WALSH. When Mr. Bowers was first made vice president of this company, did he receive any salary as vice president of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He received salary always as an official of that company.

Chairman WALSH. But was he not the same as Mr. Bowers, who always received a salary, but who is now on the personal staff of your father?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Murphy has never received salary from the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

Chairman WALSH. Even when he was vice president and member of the executive board?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't recall that he is receiving a salary for that. It may be that he has a nominal salary.

Chairman WALSH. I thought you said he was on the board and received a salary?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I said when Mr. Bowers was an officer of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., he received salary.

Chairman WALSH. But Mr. Murphy did not receive any salary?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't recall that he did; if he did it is nominal salary.

Chairman WALSH. I am talking to you as a director and person made responsible by law for the conduct of the corporation, and I ask you regardless of what Mr. Bowers thought, if you did not consider that request for a mere interview a reasonable request, and one that should be granted?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It was not a matter that I passed on or undertook to form an opinion on.

Chairman WALSH. What do you say about it now?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did not take it up.

Chairman WALSH. It may come up again, and you are a director here, and a reasonable request—

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would leave it to the officers of the company to decide.

Chairman WALSH. You are a director?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir; and I would leave it to the officers of the company to decide.

Chairman WALSH. Even though it might cause bloodshed and loss of property and shooting down of men, would you still not exercise any of your influence as an officer of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If I thought the officers were not doing what was wise and best and right to all parties connected with the corporation I would have undertaken to have differed with them or removed them, as far as I had the power to that extent.

Chairman WALSH. Leaving your general policy for the moment, I will ask you, as the owner or a representative of the owner of 40 per cent of the stock of that company, did you not consider the request of the officers of the miners' organization for a simple interview a reasonable one, and one that ought to have been granted?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Personally I would have been inclined to have granted it, if the request had come to me, but it was for the officers to decide. You ask me, as a man, what I would have done, and I say that I would probably have granted it.

Chairman WALSH. You would have granted an interview?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you having no objection to granting the interview, I will ask you this question: In refusing to grant this interview, did not the officers of the coal company assume full responsibility for all the events that followed that refusal?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not think so.

Chairman WALSH. Did you make any attempt to induce Mr. Bowers or any of the other officers to grant such an interview?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did not.

Chairman WALSH. Since you acknowledge that the interview might have averted this strike, and you acknowledge that now—

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know that I made such statement.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I will say, since Mr. Bowers wrote in that letter that if they could secure even an interview, so as to go before the public boasting that they had secured the principal point, namely, recognition of the union, they would have sneaked out of it and no further effort would have been made to bring on the strike—in the light of that letter of Mr. Bowers, that an interview would probably have averted the strike—since you failed to take any action to bring about that interview, do you not yourself, with the majority stockholders of the corporation and directors of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., assume full moral responsibility for the events that followed?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am not a majority stockholder, nor is the interest which I represent.

Chairman WALSH. Well, 40 per cent stockholder?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. As far as the responsibility is concerned, I did not shirk that responsibility, but did what I thought was right under the circumstances.

Chairman WALSH. Then you do not think that the responsibility is yours, or any part of it, as a 40 per cent stockholder and member of the board of directors?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Responsibility for what?

Chairman WALSH. For all of the events that followed the refusal of the mere granting of an interview which would have averted the strike.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think we have no proof that all the events which followed were the result of that.

Chairman WALSH. I am asking you that.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I assume responsibility for everything that, as a stockholder and as a director of the company, I should assume responsibility for.

Chairman WALSH. Is that one of the things you should assume responsibility for as a stockholder and director?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. In so far as I have had any responsibility in regard to the stock I do not hesitate to assume it.

Chairman WALSH. As a director of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., do you say you have no responsibility whatsoever for the labor conditions in those camps?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. A very great responsibility; and I undertook to discharge that in the way that I thought that was right and best.

Chairman WALSH. Now, when it was conveyed to you beforehand that a mere interview would avert a strike, why didn't you say to them, as a director and a stockholder, give them an interview and avert the strike?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That was simply a passing opinion that was expressed that it would have accomplished the result. I don't know that it would have.

Chairman WALSH. But you had this letter from Mr. Bowers before the strike was called.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Bowers expressed that as an opinion. He did not suggest that an interview be had; and he and Mr. Welborn were the officers in whose hands the directors had placed the active responsibility for the conduct of the business.

Chairman WALSH. Well, now, when you come to consider that that would affect probably 9,000 employees, and a great many more human beings, those employees, many of them, having wives and children, didn't you think that an important enough thing, as a member of the board of directors, to voice your opinion on it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I evidently did not at the time, Mr. Chairman, or I should so have acted.

Chairman WALSH. Now, calling your attention again to the clause in the letter from Mr. Bowers to the effect that he and Mr. Welborn were discussing some questions because one or two competitive companies were cheating their miners by false weights. You stated that you did not know Mr.—I had better read that over again. In a letter of September 19, 1913, from Mr. Bowers to Mr. Murphy, Mr. Bowers writes:

"About a year ago Mr. Welborn and the writer were discussing these questions because one or two competitive companies, both of whom tried to interest Mr. Cooper in their bonds, were cheating their miners by false weights."

Do you know Mr. Cooper?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Now, that you read that again, I recall that Mr. Cooper was at that time a member of our office force.

Chairman WALSH. And which were the companies that were trying to interest Mr. Cooper in your bonds?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. In their bonds.

Chairman WALSH. In their bonds?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have no idea.

Chairman WALSH. Since the recess for luncheon have you asked Mr. Bowers, who wrote that letter, the names of the companies that were cheating their employees by false weights?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not.

Chairman WALSH. Did it interest you enough after the questions that were propounded to you this morning, with reference to these companies cheating their men, to make it the subject of inquiry of Mr. Bowers, who is here, as to who were those companies?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not regard myself responsible, Mr. Chairman, as to the operations of the many, many coal companies in Colorado with whom I have no connection whatever.

Chairman WALSH. I think you are a member of the association of coal operators, are you not, that was resisting the demands of the strikers?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. There was an informal committee of the operators who acted together on certain matters of mutual interest during the strike.

Chairman WALSH. That was resisting the demands of the strikers?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. They acted on certain things.

Chairman WALSH. Now, if one of the demands of the strikers, one of their grievances, was that they had been cheated by false weights, how can you claim, Mr. Rockefeller, that you had no responsibility, that you had no interest, if the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. did not so treat its employees?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. did not so treat its employees.

Chairman WALSH. But, I say, if you formed a combination with other mining companies that did seek to resist the grievances of those men with which you were at issue, so that they did not have checkweighmen, would you not, by the fact of joining those other miners—operators—become a party to it and assume responsibility to that extent?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Not at all.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you if that statement as to the cheating of those companies was not conclusive evidence to you that the miners were justified in charging that the State law providing for checkweighmen was violated?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I said that Mr. Bowers said that certain companies were not obeying that law.

Chairman WALSH. If that is correct, do you not consider that the miners were justified in striking to secure their legal rights and to protect themselves from being cheated out of the results of their own labor?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. My interest and responsibility were directed to the company in which we were interested, Mr. Chairman, and I ascertained that no such conditions existed there. And beyond that, I did not feel it my duty or responsibility to go.

Chairman WALSH. The coal companies of the State of Colorado were organized into an association for mutual protection, were they not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know whether it was called an association. As I stated, various of the companies did act together in certain matters.

Chairman WALSH. Do you consider that it would have been possible for the miners to have carried on a strike against any one or two members of that association without involving all the companies in the association?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Well, that Mr. Welborn or Mr. Bowers could answer much better than I.

Chairman WALSH. You can answer that.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I haven't the information.

Chairman WALSH. Do you not consider that since Mr. Bowers had knowledge of the violation of the law that he should have taken action to secure the prosecution of the violators, or at least have given information to the proper State officials, or to the miners, who were being cheated?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No.

Chairman WALSH. You don't think he should? If he failed to do that, would you consider him, in a sense, accessory after the fact?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Not at all.

Chairman WALSH. If these companies were members of the coal operators' association, do you not consider that they should have been expelled from the association and legal action taken to secure the enforcement of the law?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Of course, Mr. Chairman, it would be very desirable if all the people with whom we are associated in life should be free from faults and failures. I think none of us are associated with people who are. We have to associate with just the best people that there are or that we are thrown with, and I think we can not assume responsibility for the actions of other people.

Chairman WALSH. Well, if you join with them to resist the demands of the men that are being robbed, then would you not feel morally responsible?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Joined with them to resist the demands—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Yes; if you joined with the companies that were cheating the men, to resist the demands of the miners who claimed they were being robbed; if you joined with them to resist the efforts of the men to get justice, to have checkweighmen to see that they were not cheated, then would you not feel that you were morally responsible in so joining to resist these efforts?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. We were not undertaking to resist the demands of the men to get justice. We were trying to see that they did get justice in the future.

Chairman WALSH. Well, if they claimed that they were being cheated by reason of not having been permitted to have checkweighmen, and you knew that some of the companies were being cheated for want of checkweighmen to resist or to protect their rights, would you not feel responsible in joining in with those companies to resist the demands of the men who were being robbed for the want of checkweighmen?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would feel morally responsible to do everything I could in the company with which I was connected to prevent such things. But if they were not doing that, I should not feel responsible. As I have stated, every effort has been made in the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. to get the men in the various camps to have their own checkweighmen. Everything has been done, as I stated in January, at a number of the camps to get them to do so, but less than half of them voted to have checkweighmen; and after they voted to have checkweighmen, I am informed that there is only one mine where the men have been willing to have a checkweighman. The company has done everything it could to get the men to have that official to appoint one.

Chairman WALSH. On September 29, 1913, Mr. Bowers wrote to you with reference to Mr. Stewart, who, I believe, is an official of the Federal Department of Labor, and who is attempting to bring about mediation in strikes. This is a letter from Mr. Bowers to you about Mr. Stewart:

"He was told that we would work such mines as we could protect and close the others, and that the writer, with every official of this company, would stand by this declaration until our bones were bleached as white as chalk in those Rocky Mountains."

Do you approve of that sentiment?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Will you kindly read it again, Mr. Chairman?

Chairman WALSH. "He was told that we would work such mines as we could protect and close the others, and that the writer, with every official of this company, would stand by this declaration until our bones were bleached as white as chalk in these Rocky Mountains."

Do you approve of that sentiment?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The declaration was that we would work such mines as we could protect and close the others. I think he was entirely justified in making that declaration.

Chairman WALSH. Then you do approve of that statement?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I certainly would not expect them to work mines that we could not protect or to keep open mines that we could not protect.

Chairman WALSH. Would you have allowed the bones of a loyal official, such as Mr. Bowers is, to bleach rather than to submit to the formality of an interview with three labor leaders?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think that is a question—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Mr. Bowers remarks that he thinks that would have ended it.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Well.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you the question again: Would you have allowed the bones of a loyal official, such as Mr. Bowers is, to bleach in the mountains of Colorado rather than to submit to the formality of an interview with three labor leaders?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I stated, Mr. Chairman, that for myself, if the matter had been for me to decide, I probably would have had the interview.

Chairman WALSH. And not have allowed the bones to bleach.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would not, if I had had it to do, whether the bones bleached or not.

Chairman WALSH. Bleached or unbleached?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Bleached or unbleached; yes.

Chairman WALSH. On September 29, 1915, Mr. Bowers wrote to Mr. Rockefeller—I want to call your attention to one matter to which you referred in your written statement. It is:

"Several of our mines are working from one-half to two-thirds capacity, and if we could continue undisturbed we could keep our steel works running and supply our railroad friends with coal to keep them going in good shape until the strike it over."

Who is "the railroad friends"?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I presume any company with whom the company does business.

Chairman WALSH. Who were your railroad friends in Colorado at that time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. Was your father a large stockholder or bondholder in the Southern Pacific Railroad at that time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. Did that refer, the "railroad friends" refer, to those railroads in which your father was a part owner or a bondholder?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think it referred solely to the railroads with which the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. was doing business, and to no other.

Chairman WALSH. Then did you understand that Mr. Bowers expected to supply all the railroads with coal, or only those railroads in which you or your father were interested and who might therefore be classed as "friends"?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The question of whether my father or I was interested in the railroads or not had nothing whatever to do, I assume, with determining in Mr. Bowers's mind what railroads were to be called "railroad friends," but rather the railroads that were customers of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

Chairman WALSH. Did you own stock in the Southern Pacific Railroad at that time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you own bonds in the Southern Pacific Railroad at that time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. Don't you know, Mr. Rockefeller, that you did?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No; I don't, Mr. Chairman, or I should have stated it.

Chairman WALSH. In the list of securities furnished to this commission in New York, of securities which went to make up the $100,000,000 of the Rockefeller Foundation, were not stocks and bonds of the Southern Pacific mentioned?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That list numbers a hundred or more, and I could not recall all of the investments. My impression is that there may be bonds or stocks in that list.

Chairman WALSH. Did you consider it was equally or more important to supply the general public with coal during that winter than it was your "railroad friends"?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That was a matter that I was not considering. It was a matter that the officers of the company were considering.

Chairman WALSH. On October 6 you wrote to Mr. Bowers as follows:

"We feel that what you have done is right and fair, and that the position which you have taken in regard to the unionizing of the mines is in the interest of the employees of the company. Whatever the outcome may be, we will stand by you to the end."

Did you not assume full personal responsibility, or your share of it, for all the events which followed, in notifying Mr. Bowers that whatever the outcome might be you would stand by him to the end?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The position therein referred to, Mr. Chairman, which had been taken by the company, as I stated clearly and fully in my testimony in New York, was not one of antagonism to organized labor. The position was one of a desire to protect the employees of the company who desired to work for the company, whether they were members of the union or not members of the union. The question of unionism did not come up in that statement of position which I stated I fully approved.

Chairman WALSH. On October 10 Mr. Rockefeller wrote to Mr. Bowers as follows:

"I realize that these are trying days for the management of the fuel company. Its actions are watched with great interest by this office, and its strong and just position will not lack backing at this end."

What steps did you take to ascertain the actions of the fuel company other than reading letters from Mr. Bowers and Mr. Welborn?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That was my source of information.

Chairman WALSH. Was that your sole source of information?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It was.

Chairman WALSH. Did they at that time, or at any time, inform you of the conditions testified to by Dr. Gaddis and Mr. McCorkle?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. They did not.

Chairman WALSH. In failing to do this, did they not, in effect, deceive you by omitting to tell you essential facts—if Mr. Gaddis tells the truth?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Chairman, the statements which I heard made by the witness yesterday were largely hearsay and personal opinion. Of course, you can understand that, as a director of the company, I am at very much of a disadvantage in undertaking to reply to any statements made 2,000 miles from the point of the occurrences alleged to have taken place; and it would have seemed to me that when the hearing was being held in Denver, where the officers of the company were and where the company's side could have been set forth in reply to such statements as were made yesterday by witnesses, that would have been the place to take up such an inquiry.

Chairman WALSH. You do not claim that Mr. Gaddis's statements were hearsay, do you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did not hear them.

Chairman WALSH. Haven't you read Mr. Gaddis's statements?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not.

Chairman WALSH. Why didn't you read them? He states some very startling things, if they be facts, about the condition of your camps at the present time; and you say, as a director, you have full responsibility for the labor conditions in your camps. Why don't you read what Mr. Gaddis testified to here?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I stated yesterday, Mr. Chairman, that I have copies of the testimony and am proposing to read them when I find opportunity.

Chairman WALSH. He was your representative, was he not, there?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I understand he was in the employ of the company at one time, there.

Chairman WALSH. And you saw the letter of Mr. Welborn recommending him as a Christian gentleman, reliable in every way?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did not.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know that such a letter is in existence?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It seems to me that I have heard that such a letter was written.

Chairman WALSH. Where did you get that information?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know. I have heard it mentioned in the last two or three days, that such a letter had been written.

Chairman WALSH. Now, Mr. Welborn says that "Mr. Gaddis entered the employ of the company as a minister, conducting church services in the coal camps of southern Colorado. Some time later, after the old superintendent of the sociological department had resigned, the work of that department was in part placed under the direction of Mr. Gaddis. He was an earnest, faithful worker, and undoubtedly a Christian gentleman. He is, however, strongly sectarian, and for that reason we felt handicapped in securing the best results at the coal camps, made up of many nationalities and sects."

Now, Mr. Gaddis says that the sanitary conditions are in such shape in some of your camps that people get the typhoid fever, and said that they allow cesspools to overflow, and pointed out one particular instance. Do you not believe that your company, owning all the land and controlling the whole camp, it being a closed mining camp, is responsible for its sanitary conditions?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think that the company and any company should do everything that it can to make the conditions of living as comfortable and sanitary as possible.

Chairman WALSH. And if it fails to perform that duty and allows cesspools to overflow, which causes typhoid fever and death, would you not say that that is a very insidious and brutal form of violence exercised by the company as against the people who live in the camps?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I should say that sort of thing should not be allowed in any place where it could be prevented.

Chairman WALSH. Wouldn't you say that it was an insidious and brutal form of violence if it was allowed?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would not describe it in that way.

Chairman WALSH. Even if the people sickened on account of the lack to perform this duty and died, would you not say that was violence against them?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I certainly would not.

Chairman WALSH. Now, why not, if they sickened and died, due solely to the failure to perform that duty?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. You have asked me if I would characterize it in certain language that you used, and I said I would not.

Chairman WALSH. Would it be brutal violence to those that sickened and died?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would regard it as very unfortunate and a thing that ought to be corrected, and if such a thing exists, I would do all that I could to see that it is remedied, and I have every reason to believe that the officers of the company have done and are taking every step they can to remedy things of that kind.

Chairman WALSH. You are a director with full responsibility?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am.

Chairman WALSH. When would you take this action to see that that condition was remedied or done away with and that sickness and death were stopped?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I stated that I thought the officers of the company were doing everything they could do to do away with any such conditions, if they exist.

Chairman WALSH. You would leave that entirely with the officers of the company?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I certainly would.

Chairman WALSH. Did you ever hear of any officer of the company not discharging his duty, before this time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have heard of many officers in many companies not discharging their duties.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you if you do not know it is a fact that Dr. Gaddis called the attention of Dr. Corwin, who has been with your company for 26 years, to the condition existing in these camps?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know that.

Chairman WALSH. If he did, will you take whatever steps are necessary to ascertain whether or not that is a fact, what Dr. Gaddis has detailed here, and if Dr. Corwin told him not to say anything about it for fear he might step on somebody's toes, will you see that Dr. Corwin is removed as a surgeon of your company, and anybody else that is responsible for it, for the death and sickness which are caused in that way?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I will take whatever steps seem to me to be right and proper to see that the living conditions in the camps are made as near right as possible.

Chairman WALSH. Some of these people he claims are really dead and gone.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is what you say he claims.

Chairman WALSH. If that turns out to be true, will you not take steps to either prosecute those people—those officers of your company—or at least remove them from office?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I will take what steps seem to me to be right and proper to correct the condition.

Chairman WALSH. But you would not go so far as to say that if that is the truth, and if they were caused to sicken and die by failure of duty on the part of the officers of your company, you would not go so far as to say you would prosecute them or discharge the officers?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have stated my position—I would take whatever steps I thought were necessary and proper to remedy them.

Chairman WALSH. Would those steps be to prosecute or discharge those officials?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That I cannot determine now.

Chairman WALSH. If you found them guilty of such things would you have them prosecuted or discharged?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not care to answer that in advance of full facts.

Chairman WALSH. Now, Mr. Gaddis said that the foremen and officials that you have over these men treated them like brutes; that they blasphemed and cursed them when they gave orders, and acted toward them with great brutality?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know. If it is correct, I know that Mr. Bowers, when he was an officer would have, and Mr. Welborn will do whatever is necessary to prevent that sort of thing, they would be utterly opposed to it, as they know we would be.

Chairman WALSH. When would they do it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. As soon as they learned of it.

Chairman WALSH. How long was Mr. Gaddis with the company?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. I believe he was there, he stated about 22 months. How often has Mr. Welborn gone into the actual places where these men work in southern Colorado?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He would have to testify as to that himself.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know how often?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not; except in a recent letter he told me he had been twice, in the last month, through all of the local mining camps, and talked with the men and superintendents and local people.

Chairman WALSH. Twice in the last month?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is what he stated in a recent letter.

Chairman WALSH. And prior to that time do you know how often he had been to the actual working places, where the men do the work?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not.

Chairman WALSH. Do you think it is proper for a company organized for the purpose of profit, alone, like the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., to assume the power and responsibility of removing clergymen from these churches in these closed camps?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think that clergymen should always be put in a position and removed from them by those that attend their church.

Chairman WALSH. And what do you think of the letter which was introduced in the New York hearing from—or in the Colorado hearing, and referred to in the New York hearing, from Colorado, from Mr. Welborn, the president, who said: "We have thought for some time of removing the minister at Sunrise."

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. What do you mean, what do I think?

Chairman WALSH. You do not consider that Mr. Welborn was the congregation, he was the president of the coal company?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I stated that I thought it was always desirable for those who attended the church to select the pastor and remove him.

Chairman WALSH. Now, is it true that Mr. Welborn undertook to exercise that control over the church at Sunrise?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He would have to testify to that, I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. I believe I asked you that same question in New York as to whether or not the president of the coal company had undertaken to remove that minister at Sunrise?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That I do not recall.

Chairman WALSH. Do you not recall that four months ago I asked you that question and you said you didn't know?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No; I do not recall, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Have you made any effort since the New York hearing to ascertain whether the president of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. was exercising any such control over the churches?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Over the churches?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir; I have discussed the matter with him, and he has not undertaken to exercise control; he has undertaken to have the churches conducted by those that work in the churches, as far as they are willing to do it, and will do it. Where instances arise, as have arisen in some camps, where the people will not support a minister, and the only way to have church service in the community is for the company to select and support a minister; that has been done. While it is not ideal, it is a question between having church services in the community and not having them, and unless it can be done in that way I would regard it as better than having none.

Chairman WALSH. Did you call Mr. Welborn's attention to the letter which he wrote to Mr. Murphy, and in which he stated, "We have thought of changing the minister at Sunrise"?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know that I did.

Chairman WALSH. Do you recall that your attention was called to this in New York?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I remember the subject was up for discussion.

Chairman WALSH. On October 11, 1913, you received a letter from Mr. Bowers stating:

"When cheap college professors and still cheaper writers in muckraking magazines, supplemented by a lot of milk-and-water preachers with little or no religion and less common sense, are permitted to assault the business men who have built up the great industries and have done more to make this country what it is than all other agencies combined, it is time that vigorous measures are taken to put a stop to these vicious teachings which are being sown broadcast throughout the country."

Is that your sentiment?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It was Mr. Bowers's sentiment.

Chairman WALSH. Is it yours also?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The letter was written to me. I have not been called upon to form or express a view as to whether I agree with him or not.

Chairman WALSH. Do you consider yourself one of the business men that Mr. Bowers had in mind when he made this statement?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am not sure; I don't know. You will have the opportunity to ask him.

Chairman WALSH. I am asking for your understanding of the letter. Will you please explain what you have done personally to build up any industry in the United States?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. What have I done personally?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have done what any other director in a company like the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. would naturally do, to discharge his duties as a director.

Chairman WALSH. How many board of directors meetings of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. have you attended in the last several years?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think that was inquired into in New York, and I think I stated that for a number of years the directors' meeting had been held in Denver, I think, for the last 8 or 10 years; and I have attended no directors' meetings in Denver since I was there, 10 or 11 years ago. The meeting of the directors was held at one time in New York, when the finances of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. were being reorganized, and a number of directors' meetings were held for a year or two at that time. Since that time the directors' meetings have been held in Denver. I attended them in New York, but did not attend them in Denver.

Chairman WALSH. And that is a description of what you have done to build up the industry, the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have had correspondence and been in conference with officers of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. from time to time as opportunity has permitted, discussing with them such matters in connection with the company as I felt it was my duty and responsibility to discuss.

Chairman WALSH. Do you believe in the right of free speech?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do.

Chairman WALSH. What kind of vigorous measures do you consider would probably be applied to stop the vicious teachings strewn broadcast through the country by cheap college professors and still cheaper writers in muckraking magazines, supplemented by a lot of milk-and-water preachers of little or no religion and less common sense, which is referred to by Mr. Bowers?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have given no thought to that subject, Mr. Chairman. This was rather a picturesque description in Mr. Bowers's letter that I have not taken the time to formulate a reply to.

Chairman WALSH. Is it a business letter?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. You can judge as well as I.

Chairman WALSH. What do you say about it; is it a business letter, one that you received in your capacity as a director and in an effort to build up the interests of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If you will read the whole letter, I can tell.

Chairman WALSH. It has been testified before this commission that the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. has in the past, and does still, use the most vigorous measures to suppress any criticism of the company in the towns which they control.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. May I ask what you are reading from?

Chairman WALSH. From a memoranda which I made myself, so that I would not forget to ask you that question.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I thought you were reading from a letter. May I ask you to reread it? I thought you were reading from a letter.

Chairman WALSH. Yes. It has been testified before this commission that the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. has in the past, and still does, use the most vigorous measures to suppress any criticism of the company in the towns which they control. Is that correct?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. Do they undertake through their mine superintendents or the proprietors of the saloon in the closed mining camps to directly attack the character of the publications that are given to the men?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Not that I know of.

Chairman WALSH. Who did you understand Mr. Bowers meant by the cheap college professor?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am not sure; I have no idea who he had in mind.

Chairman WALSH. Did he mean the professors in the small colleges?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That I can not say, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Your attention has been called to explosions in your mines, in Colorado, followed by the deaths of the persons working in the mines, from time to time, has it not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I had known that accidents have occurred in mines.

Chairman WALSH. What is that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have known that explosions have occurred; I do not know that attention was called to it at the time.

Chairman WALSH. While I am on the subject of the cheap college professor, I will leave that and come back to the question of preventable accidents later.

While on the subject of the cheap college professors is it not a fact that in your publicity bulletin entitled "Facts Concerning the Struggle in Colorado for Industrial Freedom," sent out by Ivy Lee, you quote a public letter to the Secretary of Labor sent out and signed by a number of persons, including Dean Hart, of St. Johns Cathedral in Denver; H. A. Howe, dean of the College of Liberal Arts, University of Denver; and William F. Slocum, president of the Colorado College?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall that there was any such quotation from such a statement.

Chairman WALSH. Bulletin No. 7. Have you forgotten these bulletins?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have forgotten the detail of them, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. "Bulletin No. 7, July 22, 1914: The Bishop of Colorado, the president of Colorado College, and other leaders of Colorado life, have addressed an open letter to Secretary of Labor Wilson urging him to use his influence with the labor leaders to have the Colorado coal strike called off.

"The grounds on which these gentlemen made this plea are—

"That so small was the number of miners belonging to the union that there never was any general strike.

"That there have been so many acts of unprovoked violence for which the leaders of the strike have not attempted to disclaim responsibility.

"That those in charge of the strike have displayed bad faith.

"That the leaders of the strike have practically assumed an attitude of rebellion toward the State of Colorado, having openly called men to arms.

"That the strike is lost, and it being a losing cause it is not fair to union men in other parts of the country that they should be paying out their hard earned money to support in 'ridiculous idleness' the little camps of the union men who are still maintaining the nominal strike."

The open letter concludes: "Let the agitators from other States be withdrawn, as the mine guards have been sent away, and much greater credit will be done to the union than is possible by continued agitation."

This is signed by H. Martin Hart, dean of St. Johns Cathedral; H. A. Howe, dean of the College of Liberal Arts, University of Denver; William F. Slocum, president of Colorado College; Robert M. Donaldson, acting president Westminster College.

I will ask you if, after the sending out of that appeal, and after its publication in your bulletin, you did not contribute from the funds of the Rockefeller Foundation, or the funds of the General Education Board, $100,000 to the Denver University, and $100,000 to the Colorado College, the president of each of which signed that appeal thereof?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know whether such contributions were made or not, but I do know this, that if they were made, they had absolutely no connection with the authorship of that statement referred to in the bulletin.

Chairman WALSH. Sir?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I say, I do not know whether such contributions were made or not made, but I do know that if they were made, they had no connection whatever, absolutely none, with the statements made by these gentlemen.

Chairman WALSH. Do you think that the president of a college that received $100,000 from your hands would feel kindly toward your view of an industrial situation in which you were deeply involved?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think the most severe critics which my father has ever had were those from the university to which he contributed the largest amount of money, the University of Chicago.

Chairman WALSH. Do I understand, then, that you do not believe that college professors, to whom large amounts of money—to whose institutions large amounts of the money have been given as contributions—take a kindly view toward your attitude in industrial matters?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not think it affects their view as regards our attitude.

Chairman WALSH. What happened to the men in the Chicago College that criticized your father, if you remember?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall.

Chairman WALSH. What?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall.

Chairman WALSH. You do not recall?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No. It was not a matter of any interest to us.

Chairman WALSH. Are they still there?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know whether they are still there?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Commissioner Weinstock asks me to ask you this question: Was the donation made to the colleges referred to before or after the publication of this appeal that appeared in your bulletin?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know, Mr. Weinstock, because I do not know that such a donation was made.

Chairman WALSH. Was Prof. Charles Zublin one of the men connected with the Chicago University that reflected upon your father?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall.

Chairman WALSH. Was he not one of the men that reflected on your father, and was he not fired out of the college?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall either.

Chairman WALSH. Do you recall the names of the men connected with any institution of learning that received large contributions from the Rockefeller benefactions that were retained in the college?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Will you please read that question?

The REPORTER (reading):

"Do you recall the names of the men connected with any institution of learning that received large contributions from the Rockefeller benefactions that were retained in the college?"

Chairman WALSH. Maybe I have not made myself plain. Can you recall the names of any professors in any educational institution that have received benefactions from your father who attacked your father's methods and who were retained in the colleges with which they were connected?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I recall that you read at considerable length at the hearings in New York statements made by President Schurman, of Cornell University, expressing views in regard to the Rockefeller Foundation and its charter, very divergent from those expressed by the founder and his associates. How many contributions have been made by my father individually, or by any of the funds which he has established, to that institution, I do not know; but I know that several contributions were made directly by my father some years ago.

Chairman WALSH. To Cornell University?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. In what amounts?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That I can not recall, but I remember in the early days when I was in the office myself having to do with a contribution made to Cornell for the erection, I think, of a building of mechanical engineering, or something of that sort.

Chairman WALSH. So that your father did contribute to your own knowledge to Cornell University?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I was instrumental in arranging the gift.

Chairman WALSH. While we are on that subject, I will ask you this question: Do you know there was distributed to the members of the classes in Cornell University copies of a pamphlet containing an address entitled "Real Issue of the War in Colorado; A Sermon to Young Men," by Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, I do not; I don't know that.

Chairman WALSH. I will read a letter to you, Mr. Rockefeller, written by the dean of the law school of the Colorado University, Mr. James H. Brewster, addressed to the Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, as follows:

Boulder, Colo.,

838 Fourteenth Street, January 23, 1915.

Rev. Dr. NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS,

23 Monroe Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

MY DEAR SIR: There were distributed within a fortnight to the members of a class in engineering economics at Cornell University copies of a pamphlet containing an address entitled "The Real Issue of the War in Colorado; A Sermon to Young Men." My son, a member of that class, has sent me one of these pamphlets.

An introductory note states that the sermon is by you, "one of the most profound thinkers and teachers in America," and that you have "evidently given the conditions in Colorado a great deal of study after careful investigation." A note at the end of the pamphlet announces that "there is no subject of vital importance to the patriotic American citizen on which there has been forced such an amount of misinformation as on the subject of which this address treats," and that it is "therefore desired to give this pamphlet the widest circulation possible, especially among those who think for themselves and in any sense have a share in the molding of public opinion."

As the father of one of the young men to whom this "sermon" is thus especially addressed I am impelled to ask you a few questions, expecting that you will, in the interests of truth and justice, answer them.

In connection with these questions I shall direct your attention to manifest errors in statements of facts in your sermon, suppressions of truth, and to unwarranted conclusions.

I pass by such untrue statements as that there are "16 mines with 14,000 workmen," and that "silly people" "start a funeral procession in front of the house of a man who owns only a fraction of the property and 1 of 16 mines," and that the legislature passed a law ordering "payment for the removal of dead stone," with the remark that these assertions but serve to demonstrate your ignorance of some of the most readily ascertainable facts concerning the situation which it is claimed you have investigated.

You do not even set forth the demands of the men correctly, but you do say that to their demands "the operators answered that they were perfectly willing to recognize the union and treat with the members of the union collectively through their officers." Upon what "investigation" do you base this assertion? It is not only absolutely untrue, but the contrary fact has been made a matter of proud boast by the operators and all their defenders except yourself.

You say "the leader of the strikers was a Greek"; and, again, "A young Greek, knowing little about the Republic and having no stake in the country, and under the influence of the war in the Balkans, organizes his followers, foments hate, and precipitates a war that costs the State $5,000 a day and $1,000,000 in seven months, while the miners pay $12,000 a year in taxes"; and then you say, "Alas, for men who follow a leader who points them not to God's pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night, but waves a firebrand before them with which to burn up all ships, all factories, all legislative halls, and the Constitution of the fathers."

Can you name this "young Greek," this terrible leader? There is no such man, nor was there ever such. Are you not aware that, so far as the "Republic" and the "Constitution" are concerned, it has been incontrovertibly shown that constitutional government was first destroyed by the coal-mining companies in certain counties of Colorado? A merely cursory examination of the testimony given last February before the congressional investigating committee, as well as that given before the United States Commission on Industrial Relations, would have made this clear to you. (Or the admission of the governor of the State to the Rev. Mr. Atkinson, secretary of the "social-service commission of the Congregational Church," ought to have convinced you of this. That admission was as follows:

"'But, Governor,' I remonstrated, 'I hope that you will not think I am criticizing; but have you no constitutional law and government in Colorado?' 'Not a bit in those counties where the coal mines are located,' he replied. 'This is a pretty serious statement; let me get it straight,' I said. 'Do you mean to say that in large sections of your State there is no constitutional liberty?' 'Absolutely none,' he replied." (Harper's Weekly, May 23, 1914, p. 11.)

As you "call the roll of the causes and conditions that have made possible this terrible conflict" you begin by noting that "nine-tenths of these miners can not read our newspapers nor speak our language nor understand our institutions," and then you state that these ignorant foreign miners "transferred their bitterness and hatred of rulers to the American Government." In view of the absolute fact that the principles underlying American Government had been ignored by the mining companies in many of the mining towns, so far as the miners' rights were concerned, what have you to say?

Did you learn in your "investigations" that miners and their friends were arrested and detained in prison by representatives of the State without charges made against them in accordance with the fundamental law of our "institutions"? Did you learn that when they sought the protection of the great writ of habeas corpus the reply made in open court to their request that they might know why they were thus arrested and imprisoned—the reply made by the representatives of the “government”—was that “It is a matter of supreme indifference (to these representatives) whether men arrested and held are guilty or innocent of crime”? Do you know of any European tyranny worse than this?

You speak of wicked, grafting labor leaders whom you have known and others of whom you have heard, and then you say, “Not otherwise has it been in Colorado.” And you describe the Colorado strike leaders as follows: “Some of them are ignorant, some of whom are misguided, some of whom are vicious, and some of whom are traitors to their followers and to their country.”

In your “investigations” did you not also find some who were not possessed of the characteristics you set forth? If so, why did you not mention that fact, instead of leaving the impression with the young men to whom your sermon is addressed that all were “ignorant,” “misguided,” “vicious,” “traitors”? Everyone else who has investigated the matter has found many leaders of a different type from those you describe.

The only labor union you mention by name is the Western Federation of Miners, and one who should rely upon your sermon for his facts would almost necessarily infer that this recent strike in Colorado was managed by this union, which you refer to solely for the purpose of telling how some of its members “sowed murder and death at Cripple Creek in the old days.” Why do you not mention the atrocious lawlessness of those days on the part of the employers and their hirelings? It was all made a matter of official public record 10 years ago. The guardians of law and order and the “respectable people” then set a fine example for the workmen to follow!

And then, because the International office of the United Mine Workers of America is in Indianapolis, you refer to the fact that “from Indianapolis went forth the men and the dynamite that blew up 100 great bridges in this country, with many buildings like the Los Angeles Times building”; and then you say that 10 of “these labor leaders in Indianapolis started to the penitentiary, wearing fetters,” adding that some are out on bail, and that “politicians must be very gentle with criminals in the spring, when these criminals are going to vote in the autumn.” Then immediately you assert, “For eight years these strikers in Colorado have breathed this atmosphere of violence and crime.” Is this the method of reasoning you, a “profound thinker and teacher,” would direct young men to follow? Would you have them conclude by such a process of thought that because a Baptist minister murders a young woman whom he has ruined all Baptist ministers are of the same character, or that because some bankers have gone from a certain city to the penitentiary all men of a similar occupation in that city are at heart felons?

As you truly say, “It begins to look as if many of our people had lost the power to do any fundamental thinking.”

In calling “the roll of causes and conditions that have made possible this terrible conflict” why did you not do some “fundamental thinking” on the real underlying causes that led to this conflict, such as (to name but a few) the admitted disregard of State laws by the operators, the short weights, the employment of imported mine guards as peace officers and as members of the State militia, the encouragement of saloons by the mining companies in their closed feudalistic towns?

Of all the papers that have been published on the “subject of which this address treats,” there hardly can be found another that contains “such an amount of misinformation” as you have crowded into this sermon. I have not enumerated nearly all your untrue statements.

You say, in conclusion, that “The increase of brotherly love and the development of social sympathy may change the atmosphere of arctic hate to good will.”

Was this sermon composed in the spirit of brotherly love? Have you developed social sympathy?

You say that the press, the pulpit, and the schoolhouse “must unite to teach our people the two or three fundamental simplicities about the way to produce wealth.” Some, indeed, of those you suggest as teachers have learned these simplicities. It was shown at the Denver hearings before the United States Commission on Industrial Relations that one of the most widely known editors in this country had sold himself to one of the coal-operating companies; it appears, further, that two well-known educational institutions, some of whose officials last summer joined in a public false statement concerning the strike, have just received each $100,000 from the “General (Rockefeller) Education Board.”

These instances illustrate how the press and the school qualify themselves to teach "fundamental simplicities about the way to produce wealth." Now, how about the pulpit? Two important questions remain: Do you propose to prepare, now that you have had an opportunity to think the matter over, another sermon in which you will correct the errors of this one? And will you see that this later sermon is distributed to the young men to whom have been distributed copies of your former sermon?

I expect a prompt answer to these questions.

In addition to the sources of information to which I have heretofore referred, I would direct your attention to the files of the Survey for the past year, to the Rev. Mr. Atkinson's papers in The Congregationalist, and in Harper's Weekly, and to his recent official report.

Very truly, yours,

JAMES H. BREWSTER.

Chairman WALSH. Now, the article to which he referred was signed by the Rev. Dwight Hillis, was it not, entitled "A straight sermon to young men," a remarkable statement showing the real issue of the war in Colorado. You were familiar with that statement, were you not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. With what statement?

Chairman WALSH. The statement of Rev. Dwight Hillis that was sent out and referred to by Dr. James H. Brewster, the dean of the law department of the University of Colorado, in that letter?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I never heard of the distribution of that sermon.

Chairman WALSH. I ask you if you had not heard of the sermon.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If that is the sermon that Dr. Hillis preached in the early days of the strike, I have seen it.

Chairman WALSH. Very good. Do you say that you did not know anything about the distribution of the sermon in the universities of this country and in other countries?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I never heard of it until you just mentioned it.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you to look at the pamphlet which I now hand you, A Straight Sermon to Young Men. A Remarkable Statement Showing the Real Issue of the War in Colorado, and ask you if you have ever seen a similar pamphlet to that to this day?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Not that I recall.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I want to ask you some questions in regard to this. This begins with the foreword of this kind:

"NOTE.—The following address by Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis is one that should be carefully read, and read by every good citizen in the United States. Dr. Hillis is recognized as one of the greatest pulpit orators in America. He now occupies the pulpit made famous by Henry Ward Beecher and, later, from which Dr. Lyman Abbott gained international fame. Dr. Hillis is regarded as one of the most profound thinkers and teachers in America. Coming from a man of that caliber, and one who has evidently given the conditions in Colorado a great deal of study, after careful investigation, the marked contrast between this sermon and the unreliable, sensational, hysterical matter which has been and is being printed in the Eastern press is refreshing."

And on the last page of that pamphlet I find this quotation:

"There is no subject of vital importance to the patriotic American citizen on which there has been forced such an amount of misinformation as on the subject on which this address treats. It is therefore desired to give this pamphlet the widest circulation possible, especially among those who think for themselves, and in any sense have a share in the molding of public opinion. Additional copies of this address can be obtained gratis by sending requests to 2230 Dime Bank Building, Detroit, Mich."

Now, do you know who is sending them out gratis from 2230 Dime Bank Building, Detroit, Mich.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I never heard before of its being distributed.

Chairman WALSH. Whose office is 2230 Dime Bank Building, Detroit, Mich.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have no idea.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I am going to read you a particular paragraph, and I am not going to call your attention to the other statements to which attention—I will ask you if it is not a fact that that sermon of the Rev. Newton Dwight Hillis went to the same mailing list that was made up for the bulletins that Mr. Ivy Lee sent out?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If it did, I do not know it.

Chairman WALSH. I will read you an extract from it:

"The strikers insisted," this is the sermon itself. "That only union men be hired and that all nonunion men be refused a chance to work. As a matter of fact, in some of the mines less than one-third of the men were union men. The operators answered that they were perfectly willing to recognize the union and treat with the members of the union collectively through their officers."

Now, that was not the truth, was it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I never before heard it was the truth.

Chairman WALSH. It is not the truth, is it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That the operators said they were perfectly willing to recognize the union?

Chairman WALSH. And treat with the members of the unions collectively through their officers?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I never heard of it being the case.

Chairman WALSH. As a matter of fact, that was the one thing they declared they would not do?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. So I have always understood.

Chairman WALSH. And if the person that made that statement, and that was what Mr. Bowers said, that he would let his bones bleach in the mountains of Colorado before he would recognize the union?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No; I don't recall that.

Chairman WALSH. You don't draw that—

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Bowers's statement was the principle that he enunciated, and I said we stood back of, was that these men should be allowed to work, whether they were members of the union or not.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you, then, if it is not a fact that one point that the company said, through its officers, backed up by you, that it would never yield, was the recognition of the union? That is correct, is it not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I wish you would kindly repeat that.

Chairman WALSH. That is the one point that the company would never yield, was the recognition of the union?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is the statement that Mr. Bowers made.

Chairman WALSH. And that is the statement that you backed him up in?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I backed—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). You said you would stand by him until the end?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The point was, as stated in various of Mr. Bowers's letters, the recognition of the union, as demanded, meant that only men in the union could work, and when it came to the question of turning out from the mines men who were not members of the union, unless they were willing to join, on that principle I said I would stand by him.

Chairman WALSH. Did you not say that you would stand by him to the end in refusing to have a conference with the members of the union?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't recall whether the statement applied particularly to that or not.

Chairman WALSH. Did he not write to you and tell you that if they allowed a conference with the leaders of the union, that those leaders would sneak away, and then not have a strike, and claim that to be recognition of the union? And did you not say you would back him to the end in the position he had taken?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I said I would back the officers of the company in the general position that they had taken.

Chairman WALSH. And the position that they had taken was that they would not recognize the union?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That was one of the positions, the position that they had taken, but that they would not take such a step as would make it necessary for them to discharge these men unless they joined the union.

Chairman WALSH. Did you say—where is that stated?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know where it is stated, but that is the position that I have always stood for and what the officers stood for.

Chairman WALSH. Where do you get that statement that that is what the officers always stood for?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It was in some letter of Mr. Bowers, in which he stated that 90 per cent of the men employed by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. were not members of the union, and that recognition of the union would involve the discharge of those men. I took the position that in justice to the men working for the company they ought to be allowed to work whether union men worked or not; that they were not to be discharged because union men worked.

Chairman WALSH. Did the operators ever say to the miners that they were perfectly willing to recognize their union and treat with members of the union collectively through the officers?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Not to my knowledge.

Chairman WALSH. On the contrary, they assumed exactly the opposite position, that they would not recognize the union; now, that is true, is it not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes; I think that is true.

Chairman WALSH. Now, then, Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, in his sermon that I have referred to, states that the operators answered that they were perfectly willing to recognize the union and treat with members of the union collectively through their officers, but they must also recognize the rights of the nonunion men who objected to the methods of the labor union, and claimed the right as American citizens to sell their labor at such price as they considered fair, and thus maintain their individual liberty. The strikers said, "You must ununionize this mine." The operators answered, "We will recognize your union and give work to all its members, but we will also give work to men who do not want to join a union."

Did the operators ever say that to the union, that we will recognize the union and give work to all its members?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know what the operators said, but as far as the officers of our company were concerned they had no antagonism to union men. They desired that men who were not union men would have the same right to work, though.

Chairman WALSH. Did they say that they would recognize the union, as this man states in his sermon?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I never have heard them say that.

Chairman WALSH. You know, on the contrary, they have said they never would recognize the union?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. This statement is a qualified statement. This statement says that the operators would recognize the union in as far as the men working for the union were working for them, but at the same time they would also recognize the right of the other men to work.

Chairman WALSH. Let us see if it is qualified. The operators answered that they were perfectly willing to recognize the union and treat with the members of the union collectively through their officers. Will you say they never said that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Will you read the balance of the statement?

Chairman WALSH. I have read it, and I am reading this now. The operators answered that they were perfectly willing to recognize the union and treat with the members of the union collectively through their officers.

Did they ever say that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. You read that sermon?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know. I told you I saw a sermon from Dr. Hillis in the early part of the strike. Whether this is the one or not I have no means of knowing.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you if on July 17, 1914, following out his announced ideals, Mr. Ivy Lee did not write you the following letter:

JULY 17, 1914.

Yours of July 15 inclosing copy of Elbert Hubbard's article just at hand. I will go over the article and see if we can not make something out of it for a bulletin. You will realize that up to the present time it has been the theory of the bulletins that they be confined to statement of fact from sources or people of standing in Colorado itself. We have been seeking to lay a foundation of fact on which perhaps later we can follow with such things as Dr. Hillis's sermon, this article of Hubbard's, and perhaps other publications on the subject. It has been my hope, however, to get the basic facts stated in these earlier bulletins. I feel that we still have a little distance to go in that direction.

Bulletin No. 8 is to consist of quotations from Mrs. Helen Grenfell's statement to President Wilson, regarding the battle of Ludlow. It seems to me that a statement from an organization of women was the most effective thing we could present on this subject. The next following bulletin will deal with the question of the wages actually paid to the miners. Mr. Welborn has sent me some interesting and suggestive figures dealing with the wages paid a large number of men for an entire year.

Mr. Murphy sent me a copy of the article in the Popular Science Monthly, which concerns the subject of capital and labor. I am going to arrange to have it widely distributed, as you suggest.

Very truly, yours,

IVY L. LEE.

Now, that was the article from the Popular Science Monthly extracts from which I read you this morning, was it not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know that Mr. Murphy sent him one for wide distribution, as you suggest?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you did read Dr. Hillis's sermon, did you, when Mr. Lee wrote you that he was laying the basic facts from which he would afterwards send out Dr. Hillis's sermons?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If this is the sermon referred to, I have seen it, which he preached in the early part of the strike.

Chairman WALSH. Perhaps you had better look at this and see whether or not it is the same sermon.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I could not tell you, Mr. Chairman; I have never seen it in pamphlet form. I am not able to identify the sermon.

Chairman WALSH. At this point we will stand adjourned until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock, when you will please resume the stand.

(Whereupon, at 5 o'clock p. m. of this, Friday, May 21, 1915, an adjournment was taken until 10 o'clock to-morrow, May 22, 1915.)

SATURDAY, MAY 22, 1915—10 a. m.

Present: Chairman Walsh, Commissioners Harriman, Weinstock, Lennon, and O'Connell.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Rockefeller, if you will please resume the stand.

TESTIMONY OF MR. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, JR.—Continued.

Chairman WALSH. I want to refer to a brief extract or two from your testimony, Mr. Rockefeller, given at New York, before the commission. This question was asked you:

"Did you read the reports and dispatches of the Associated Press containing the testimony of Jefferson Farr, sheriff of Huerfano County, in the congressional investigation and in the investigation of this commission?"

"Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, Mr. Chairman.

"Chairman WALSH. You believe that it should be made unlawful for private detective agencies to keep up armed men, enrolled for the purpose of transporting them from State to State to be used where labor disputes are in progress?"

"Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is a question I have no knowledge about.

"Chairman WALSH. What is your information about it as a citizen?"

"Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I believe that whatever measures may be necessary in order to protect life and property in emergency situations must be adopted. If my wife and family were thus threatened, I would take whatever measure I could, I would consider afterwards the propriety of them, but I would adopt the thing that I felt would be my first duty."

You meant by that that you would exercise what is known as the necessary self-defense of person and property?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I meant by that when the forces of the law were not adequate to protect me, and the actual life of my wife or family was at stake, I would protect myself.

Chairman WALSH. And necessarily you would have to determine the moment that that situation occurred, would you not, Mr. Rockefeller?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It would be a last resort, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. It would be a last resort, but finally you would have to determine those facts, first, as to whether the protection which ought to come from the constituted authorities was present or not, and next whether or not the violence, in the absence of that protection, was so close and impending that you would have to act yourself?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Of course, if an officer of the law were present to perform his duty, there would be no question as to the impropriety of so acting.

If an officer of the law could be gotten, or was accessible under such circumstances, I would not justify for a moment the opposing of the forces of the law. But, if a burglar, as I think I there stated, came into my house and held a revolver at my head, and it was a question, the next second, of my life being taken or acting in self-defense, under those extreme circumstances, where there was no opportunity to get the protection of the law, under those very extreme circumstances, life about to be taken, I think a man would be justified then.

Chairman WALSH. Suppose the burglar's mask fell off, and you recognized he was the sheriff of the county, and notwithstanding his official position he was about to commit violence upon your person?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The officers of the law should never be opposed. If the officer of the law is about to shoot me with a revolver at my head, and I have either got to die or defend myself, in that extreme and remote circumstance, a man has a right under the law to defend himself, but only in such a case.

Chairman WALSH. You would feel that there was nothing left for you to save your life, or the lives of those that were entitled to your protection, except to kill the man?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't say to kill the man.

Chairman WALSH. Or shoot him or use whatever force was reasonably necessary to repel his attack?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If he was about to shoot me, and had his finger on the trigger, I would feel justified in undertaking to prevent that, but not to kill him, unless it came to a death struggle, and it was a question of fight, man to man.

Chairman WALSH. Unless you thought you had to die to defend your own life or your family's?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It would not be a question of thought, but whether he was getting the better of me, and in the fight man to man I had to defend myself.

Chairman WALSH. Do I understand that you would wait, if it was the sheriff that was the burglar, that you would wait until he had his finger absolutely upon the trigger before you fired?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It is difficult, except when one is in a position of that sort, to say just how one would act at the moment.

Chairman WALSH. In other words, you would have to decide the moment the danger was presented and the amount of force you would have to use to save your own life?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The danger would have to be so great that I would have to feel before taking action that when I was brought before a court of justice to defend the resistance of an officer of the law, that the court would find me guiltless, and find that circumstances were such that I was justified. If I did not think that such a situation existed, I would not be justified.

Chairman WALSH. In other words, you would have to be the judge in the final instance as to whether or not you were compelled to use violence to repel the attack? Otherwise, you would not act?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would have to be the judge, but I would have to have, as overbalancing the possibility of death, the possibility of sentence at the hands of the law for having opposed an officer of the law.

Chairman WALSH. Even if the officer of the law was the burglar?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You know there have been such cases, you have read of them frequently, where a highwayman was captured and he turned out to be a police officer, and they have been convicted of it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't recall any of them.

Chairman WALSH. You don't recall any of those cases?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. But take a case of that kind, where a highwayman attempts to hold up a citizen, and notwithstanding the citizen sees that this highwayman, with a revolver at his head—and would say, give me your money or I will kill you, and the citizen recognized the highwayman as a police official, should he give his money or take death rather than resist him?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I can not make my position clearer than by repeating what I have just said; the imminence of death must be so great that the individual is willing to take the chances of justifying his act before a court of justice—his act of opposition to the law before a court of justice—else he is not justified in resorting to violence.

Chairman WALSH. So you think that if an attack was made upon you by a highwayman, and you discovered that that highwayman was a detective that you had seen, that you should attempt to impartially at that moment determine what the result of the case would be in court thereafter?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have stated my views on the subject.

Chairman WALSH. Very good; I will state another case. Take a case of this sort: You have a home, I believe, at Seal Harbor?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have.

Chairman WALSH. And we will suppose that while you were in your home, conscious in your own mind that you have committed no offense against the law, that the sheriff came to your door; that he was accompanied by three other men—small, dark, strange men—that you had never seen before in your life; that the sheriff was elected, and after he was elected you heard from sources that carried conviction to your mind that that sheriff was an anarchist; that is, that he had no respect himself for the courts or for law; that he had no respect for the property rights or the liberty of the individuals in his county; that you knew that; that he came to your door with these three other men in the dead of the night and aroused you without giving you an opportunity to properly clothe yourself, and said, "Come and go with me"; that you recognized him as the sheriff, but you had in mind that he was an anarchist, and you knew it. You asked him if he had a warrant, and he said he had no warrant; and you asked him then what he proposed to do with you, and he told you that he had a boat at the landing that he was going to put you in with the assistance of these other three men, and then he was going to transport you to a place where there was an empty box car; that they were going to put you in that box car and take you to Girard, Kans., and there going to throw you out of the box car; and you asked him for a warrant, and he said he had no warrant, and you appealed to the other men with him, and then you discovered for the first time that they either did not speak English or spoke it so imperfectly that you could not understand it; that they were speaking in a strange language, a sort of a corruption of the Spanish language, and that you could not understand it. Knowing the character of these men, would you leave that house without resistance and stand being put into that box car and shipped to Girard, Kans., or Walsenburg, Colo., or some other point in the West?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I stated the principle that I think should govern a man in any such instance.

Chairman WALSH. What was that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The statement that I made a moment ago.

Chairman WALSH. You think under those circumstances he should resist to the best of his ability?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is, if the man's life was the next second to be taken—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). I am leaving out the life. I am stating that these four men were just going to up and do that with you—put you in a box car and take you to Girard, Kans., or Walsenburg, Colo., and dump you out of the box car.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I stated the principle upon which I think alone a man would be justified, under the extreme circumstances which I have mentioned, in opposing an officer of the law, only when death is imminent, and only when he should feel that before a court of justice, were he subsequently brought to defend his action, he could be defended and would be acquitted. I am not prepared beyond that statement, which covers fully the circumstances, to express an opinion in such cases.

Chairman WALSH. I am stating this case to you hypothetically, because I am going to read a concrete instance in the correspondence between Mr. Bowers and yourself, and I now ask you under those circumstances would you be willing to go without resistance with these four men, one of whom you know to be an anarchist, and the other three of whom did not understand your language, and without a warrant, even though one was the sheriff?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have made a statement which I think covers the situation, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Is it not a fact, Mr. Rockefeller, that you would have your associates or your family or your servants arouse the neighborhood and bring them up to defend you against these four men who took you away from your home in the dead of night?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have made a statement which I think covers this situation.

Chairman WALSH. Would you not arouse your neighbors and resist these men, this anarchist and these three strange foreigners?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not anything to add to the statement I have made.

Chairman WALSH. You would not say whether you would or would not? Do you wish to leave the implication you would tamely go with them without arousing your neighbors and allow them to take you to Walsenburg, Colo., or to Girard, Kans., if one of them happened to be a sheriff, although you knew he was an anarchist and a criminal?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not anything further to add, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. When did your father secure this interest in the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.? What was the date?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall the date. I should say some 12 or 13 or possibly 14 years ago.

Chairman WALSH. Was it not in 1902, the early part of 1902?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Do you, in the conduct of this and other industries, read the Government reports relative to labor, the condition of labor and the occurrences in labor fields?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not happened to do so.

Chairman WALSH. Do you not read the Government reports respecting the labor conditions and properties in which you are interested?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not.

Chairman WALSH. Don't you ever do it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not.

Chairman WALSH. I say, don't you ever do it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not done it.

Chairman WALSH. You have never done it? [No audible response.] Were you a director of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. while that strike was going on?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The recent strike?

Chairman WALSH. No; 1903 and 1904.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No; I can not recollect; I presume I was.

Chairman WALSH. Did you become a director as soon as your father bought his interest in the company?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That I do not recall.

Chairman WALSH. I will read you some extracts in regard to the labor disturbances in your own company from the Labor Commissioner's report of 1905:

"The first deportation by the militia at Trinidad occurred on the night of March 26, when Josef Paganni and Adolfe Bartolli, William M. Wardjon and 'Mother' Jones were deported. Six militiamen accompanied them from Trinidad to La Junta and warned them never to return. Paganni was the editor and Bartolli was the publisher of Il Lavatore Italiano. Wardjon was the national organizer of the United Mine Workers of America, and 'Mother' Jones was employed by that organization.

"Gov. Peabody, on being interviewed, said that he had issued no orders calling for deportations; that his orders to Maj. Hill, both public and private, had been of a general nature, placing authority in his hands to do whatever was necessary for the maintenance of law and order, and that any deportations which might be made would be carried out upon Maj. Hill's own responsibility.

"By order of Maj. Hill, saloons were permitted to reopen on March 31, saloon keepers being enjoined not to sell or give liquor to soldiers or to intoxicated persons.

"On April 2 eight men were deported from the State. They had been arrested at the several coal camps during the previous two weeks and had been confined in the county jail. They were placed on a Colorado & Southern train, conducted by a detail of soldiers to the line between Colorado and New Mexico and warned not to return. All of the men who were deported were strikers, some of them had been active in the conduct of the strike, and nearly all of them were officers in their local unions. Maj. Hill, on being asked if there were any specific charges against them, said, 'No; but I believe their absence is better for the people than their presence.'

Further on in this same report, being the report of the Commissioner of Labor for 1905, it is said:

"On April 9 a military detail deported four men from Trinidad to New Mexico. One was the secretary of a local miners' union, another was one of the union commissary managers at Aguilar, another a local union organizer. When arrested by the militia they had been charged with intimidation of nonunion miners."

Again, further on, the report says:

"W. M. Wardjon, national organizer of the United Mine Workers of America, was attacked and severely injured while he was a passenger on a Denver & Rio Grande train. When the eastbound train reached Sargents on the evening of April 29, it stopped 20 minutes for supper, but Mr. Wardjon and a lady passenger did not leave the parlor car. Three armed men entered the car and cursed Wardjon, beat him with revolvers, and kicked him. His injuries consisted of four scalp wounds, two cuts on the face, and numerous bruises on the body. After inflicting this maltreatment the three men left the train. Wardjon proceeded to Salida, where he entered the hospital of the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad. He was positive in his identification of two of his assailants as men in the employ of Reno's Detective Agency."

Again, this report says:

"On May 19, 80 Italian strikers were marched from Berwind to Trinidad by a troop of cavalry. They had refused to register at Berwind and to have their descriptions written for future reference, according to an order issued by Maj. Hill a few days previously. The men complained that the march of 18 miles over the mountains on a hot day caused them great fatigue and that some of them dropped by the wayside, but they were cursed and driven on by the mounted soldiers. They were given water but no food either on the march or at Trinidad. On arrival at military headquarters there they were photographed in groups and registered according to the Bertillon system, then turned loose. They were fed at the commissary of the union."

"On May 22, 10 men who had been arrested on various charges during the previous fortnight were placed on board a southbound Colorado & Southern train at Trinidad and taken across the line into New Mexico in charge of an officer and a squad of soldiers."

That is the report of the Government on certain crimes that were committed by the soldiers in the strike in your industry in 1904, and you say you never read the Government report and your attention never called to the fact, or if it was, you had forgotten that such were done in that strike?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have never read the report. I had knowledge, at the time, generally, of things told that were occurring, as such knowledge came to me from the officers of the company on the ground. What that knowledge was I do not now recall, the period being many years since.

Chairman WALSH. On September 29, 1913, I find Mr. Bowers wrote you as follows:

"Old 'Mother' Jones has been on the ground for two weeks, but Saturday, we understand, the governor ordered her to be taken to the State line and ordered not to return."

You got that letter from Mr. Bowers, your chief executive officer, in Colorado, on September 29, 1913, did you not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If that is among the letters which have been filed with the commission, I did.

Chairman WALSH. Don't you remember yourself that you did receive such a letter from Mr. Bowers?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't recall, Mr. Chairman, the contents of the many letters I received from the officials of the company. I do not question the letter was written if it was in the batch of letters that have been supplied to the commission.

Chairman WALSH. Is it possible, Mr. Rockefeller, that you have no recollection of any of the occurrences in Colorado except such as are contained in letters which have been produced and filed with the commission?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have seen statements in the papers and have received statements from various people in other publications in regard to conditions in Colorado in addition to the things which came to me from the officers of the company.

Chairman WALSH. You have answered questions repeatedly by saying, "If it is in the letter, then I receive it," or "If it is in the letter, why, that may be so." Is your knowledge or information with respect to the situation in Colorado definitely confined to the letters that have been produced before the commission or have you other and further information from interviews with the officers?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have had interviews with the officers in addition to the other sources which I have mentioned.

Chairman WALSH. I will read you an extract from the letter of September 29, which your officers furnished the commission from L. M. Bowers to you, addressed and sent to you at 26 Broadway, New York City:

"Old 'Mother' Jones has been on the ground for two weeks, but Saturday, we understand, the governor ordered her to be taken to the State line and ordered not to return."

Now, you got that from Mr. Bowers at the time, did you not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And a very few days thereafter you wrote to Mr. Bowers, the letter which I have already read, in which you said you backed the officers up in all they did out there, did you not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Chairman, will you be kind enough to read the whole of the letter from Mr. Bowers, from which you quote that statement?

Chairman WALSH. I can not do that at this time, Mr. Rockefeller, but I will say this, that any of these letters that you desire to submit more extensive extracts from or to read in full may be handed by your staff or used by you after I conclude my examination.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am unable to reply, Mr. Chairman, definitely to questions which are based upon statements contained in letters—fragmentary statements. I think you will recognize the justice of that.

Chairman WALSH. It is sometimes difficult, and at any time you are unable to answer because the further context of the letter is not given you may so indicate, and it will be accepted, so far as I am concerned, as a reason for not answering the question.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. This is such an instance, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. I believe it is your request that I read this. I happen to have it here, and I will read that letter through for you:

"I have your letter of September 29 with reference to the coal strike in southern Colorado. We know how earnestly desirous you have always been to have the men in your employ work under the best possible conditions and receive every consideration and advantage. We also know that you and Mr. Welborn have spared no pains to provide for the well-being and look out for the interests of the employees of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. Your letter simply confirms what we knew to be the case.

"You gentlemen can not be more earnest in your desire for the best interests of the employees of your company than we are. We feel that what you have done is right and fair and that the position which you have taken in regard to the unionizing of the mines is in the interest of the employees of the company. Whatever the outcome may be, we will stand by you to the end.

"Very truly,

"JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr."

That was written on October 6, 1913, and this quotation I have read to you about "Mother" Jones is in a letter of September 29; that is a letter written just a week before you said whatever the outcome would be you would stand by them to the end. The quotation I read you from this letter is the only quotation, as I recall, that had reference to "Mother" Jones or the deportation of any other persons. I do not care to read that letter in full, but I will read an extract:

"Old 'Mother' Jones has been on the ground for two weeks, but Saturday, we understand, the governor ordered her to be taken to the State line and ordered not to return."

Now, your mind is thoroughly familiar with that item in the letter, is it not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And you got it at the time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Are you aware that the deportation of persons is a violation of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, guaranteeing due process of law—you have often read of its being invoked—the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall at the moment.

Chairman WALSH. I will read it to you, then:

"Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law."

Now, it is a familiar provision to you, is it not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have just heard you read it.

Chairman WALSH. It is very frequently invoked for the preservation of property and life, is it not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I can not say that.

Chairman WALSH. You can not say that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Were you aware that that action toward that lady was a violation of that provision of the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I had no knowledge of it.

Chairman WALSH. Did you, as an official of the company, notify any public authority that the rights of this lady were about to be invaded?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did not.

Chairman WALSH. Did you, as an official of the company, remonstrate with Mr. Bowers, who was in charge of the situation for your company in Colorado, for condoning or sympathizing with what would have been a violation of the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have no reason to believe that Mr. Bowers condoned or sympathized with any violation of the Constitution or any other law.

Chairman WALSH. You had no idea of condoning or sympathizing with that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not.

Chairman WALSH. Do you recall the letter Mr. Bowers wrote you November 18, 1913, when things were quiet, comparatively, there in regard to that particular form of crime?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not.

Chairman WALSH. I will read this, if you do not recall it:

"NOVEMBER 18.

"It is true, Mr. Rockefeller, I have not sent you much published matter in regard to the strike during the last few days, as we have been having a season of comparative quiet in southern Colorado."

This is the one in which he also says:

"You will be interested to know that we have been able to secure the co-operation of all the bankers of the city who have had three or four interviews with our little cowboy governor. Another mighty power has been rounded up in behalf of the operators"—

Referring to the newspapers. I will not read that again. Well, Mr. Manly calls my attention to the fact that the particular thing I want to call your attention to follows immediately after "the little cowboy governor":

"You will be interested to know that we have been able to secure the co-operation of all of the bankers of the city who have had three or four interviews with our little cowboy governor, agreeing to back the State and lend it all the funds necessary to maintain the militia and afford ample protection so that our miners could return to work or give protection to men who are anxious to come up here from Texas, New Mexico, and Kansas, together with some States farther east. Besides the bankers, the chamber of commerce, the real estate exchange, together with a great many of the best business men, have been urging the governor to take steps to drive these vicious agitators out of the State."

Now, Mr. Bowers wrote and told you that he had rounded up the bankers and the big business men, and that they were urging the governor of the State of Colorado to violate the Constitution of the United States and drive people that they deemed to be agitators out of the State during a season of comparative quiet—so quiet that Mr. Bowers did not think it necessary to send you any newspaper clipping of the struggle.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Is there a question based on that?

Chairman WALSH. Yes. The question based upon that is, Whether or not you condone the act of your executive agent in urging the governor of the State and in rounding up, as he said, the bankers of Denver to urge the governor of the State to drive these people out of the State?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think it was the duty of that company or of any company to take whatever legitimate means they might see fit to see that the law was enforced and that proper protection to the people and to the interests of the State was given.

Chairman WALSH. Well, now, Mr. Bowers told you in that same letter that it was a season of comparative quiet; that there was nothing interesting enough to send you the clippings, and he said nothing here about upholding the law in this sentence; but he said they had rounded up these men, that they had had interviews with the little cowboy governor, and they had urged him to take steps to drive these vicious agitators out of the State. Didn't you believe that the upholding of the law would be to bring any person to answer in court for any violation of law—any agitator; but that under no circumstances could the law itself be violated—that is, that the people be driven from the State?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I presumed the governor would take such steps as he thought were within his rights as governor.

Chairman WALSH. But this is the supreme law of the land, the Constitution, that no man shall be deprived of his liberty without due process of law, and that every person shall be entitled to the equal protection of the laws. Now, when you got that letter from Mr. Bowers, stating that he had rounded up these powerful interests, and they were urging the governor to take steps to drive these vicious agitators out of the State, did not you know that was a violation of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, guaranteeing due process of law—

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. As I have already—

Chairman WALSH (continuing). And that those people were entitled to the equal protection of the law and that the State or the governor were not themselves permitted to deprive them of their liberty or of their property without due process of law?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am not a lawyer, Mr. Chairman, and I did not enter into all those questions.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know now that it was a violation of the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. You have so stated.

Chairman WALSH. Well, you heard me read the provision. Now, if it turns out that Mr. Welborn and Mr. Weltzel joined in that effort to have the constitutional rights of these people taken away from them, I suppose that you will not hesitate to cast your vote, at least, to remove them from the offices which they have thus abused in your company?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Whenever I have reason to doubt the earnest purpose of the officers of the company to do what they believe is right under the circumstances which exist, which they know about, and which I do not know about—whenever I have any reason to doubt the earnestness of their purpose to do what they believe to be right, I shall take such action as it seems to me is right and expedient to undertake, to change their view or to replace them. But I do not feel called upon to state in advance of the full statement of the facts on both sides of any case of that kind what action I should regard as justified by the facts as they might develop.

Chairman WALSH. Will you immediately take up the question as to whether or not that offense against the law was committed, so that you may act after you have full information in regard to the facts?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Chairman, there have been many commissions and committees sitting for several years undertaking to get the facts in connection with the disturbance in Colorado the past year or 18 months. The testimony, in so far as I have heard any of it or read any of it, is very conflicting; and it is a difficult thing—

Chairman WALSH. Well, Mr. Bowers is here. Perhaps you might ask Mr. Bowers if what he stated in his letter are the true facts.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It is difficult to know what the facts are. I am taking and propose to take, in the discharge of my duties as a stockholder and a director in this company, such steps as I believe are proper for me to take to see that what is right and proper is done; and I intend to continue to do that. If any injustice or wrong has been done and is proved to have been done, I am expecting, of course—no one would be quicker than I to take whatever means might be proper and I should regard as proper, to rectify a wrong done. But I am not prepared to state in advance as to what steps I would take in any instance.

Chairman WALSH. Now, as a director of this corporation and with Mr. Bowers, who wrote the letter, sitting right in this room, and Mr. Welborn, who is still president of this company, don't you think that you could determine, say, by 2 o'clock, say, during the noon recess, whether or not what is stated in that letter is true; and your attorney being here, I believe, Mr. Murphy, couldn't you call his attention to that provision of the Constitution of the United States, and thus have the facts readily at your hand so that you could begin to act promptly if any such crime had been committed?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The commission has been in a position to get any information which they may like from any of the officers of these companies; and I have stated and I maintain that I will do whatever seems to me right and proper in endeavoring to see that what is right is done in the companies where I am related. I do not expect, Mr. Chairman, to commit myself to any specific act in connection with the carrying out of what I may regard to be my duty.

Chairman WALSH. You say commissions have been sitting. You meant that perhaps you could get that information through the medium of this commission?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I meant that the commissions are able to get what information they want. They have had the opportunity of getting all the information they want.

Chairman WALSH. Now, are you ready as a director to see that the law is upheld when you get to it and see that any violation of any of the laws or of the Constitution of the United States is punished, or will you condone things done in violation of the Constitution by those who, with others, say they have rounded up other interests so that the Constitution of the United States would be violated?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I propose to do in any instance whatever I regard to be my duty as a citizen.

Chairman WALSH. You believe, of course, in upholding the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do.

Chairman WALSH. And you would not think that any agitator, no matter how vicious he was, should be driven out of the State in such fashion as I read to you, in 1905, that they took "Mother" Jones out, or that 8 miners, or 10, or 16, should be driven across the hills, without sufficient nourishment, simply because a militia officer thought their presence was not necessary? You would not favor that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am in favor of absolute justice, and nothing else.

Chairman WALSH. Then you would not answer whether you favor what was done in your own industry, in that particular instance?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have stated that I am not in a position and I do not feel called upon to answer in regard to questions in which I have not all the facts.

Chairman WALSH. Do you believe that the so-called viciousness of an agitator ever justifies the officers of the law in driving that agitator from the community?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Unless any citizen is breaking the law, they have the same right that other citizens have to live where they may choose.

Chairman WALSH. Now, suppose as a director of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., it was found that the men who actually drove out the agitator were in the employ and pay of your own company, would you then take action to have the officers of your company punished in the courts?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Chairman, I will repeat that I do not feel called upon to state what action I might regard as necessary, as proper, in the fulfillment of my duty, with reference to any wrongs which might be proved to have existed, while I have responsibility, and I would take what action I thought was right and proper under the circumstances. I have stated that, and repeated it, and beyond that I am not prepared to make answer.

Chairman WALSH. What would constitute proof to you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't think I need to discuss that question.

Chairman WALSH. Would you give any idea to the commission as to what you would require as proof before you would act, where your own subordinate men, elected by your own vote, were violating the law?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't feel called upon to state in what way I would act or upon what occasions, but I would satisfy my own conscience as to what action should be taken.

Chairman WALSH. Do you consider yourself a vicious agitator?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not so considered myself.

Chairman WALSH. Would you think that any person or persons who denounced you as a vicious agitator were staying with the realm of truth, or fair inference, in your actions in this Colorado controversy?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't care to enter into a personal discussion of that kind.

Chairman WALSH. I will state another hypothetical question to you: Suppose that a company of militia called at your home, and with arms ordered you to get out and walk ahead of them down Fifth Avenue and into another State, and when you protested against it you were told that you were a dangerous agitator, that the people in that neighborhood claimed that they had discovered that you had sent out a pamphlet written by another man, or paid to have a pamphlet sent out written by another man, in which you charged old Mr. Jones, an old neighbor, who was the president of the carpenters' local union, with being an East Indian thug and robber and murderer, and in the same article you had charged Mr. Smith, the secretary-treasurer of the machinists' union, who had lived in the neighborhood for many years, and was a law-abiding citizen, with being a robber and murderer and common thug, and that they discovered that you had sent this out, or paid to have it sent out, and that they had aroused the people, and had them to believe from that that you were a dangerous agitator, and that these men, although clothed with private authority, were just undertaking, not to arrest you for that, and arraign in court, but to march you across the State line into another State, what action do you think you would be entitled to take to protect yourself?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have stated that it is my belief that the officers of the law should be respected and not resisted, and I have stated the principle, in a rare case only, where life is immediately threatened, on which I think the man would be justified in resisting. I have stated what justification there would have to be—such justification as could be established before a court of law, where he might be taken, because he was opposing himself to the officers of the law, and it would have to be such justification as could be established before that court of law, and that principle is the principle I am prepared to stand on, and it covers all such cases. I am not prepared to make reply to supposititious cases beyond that principle.

Chairman WALSH. In view of the fact that Mr. Bowers was endeavoring to have the Government drive those people out of the State, I am asking the question, would you resist being driven from the State in which your home is located, without due process of law?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would not resist the officers of the law.

Chairman WALSH. You would let them take you to the State line and dump you out of the box car.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have stated the principle on which my action would be based.

Chairman WALSH. Say you were economically situated so that you could prosecute those people, I suppose you would go back and prosecute them?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am not prepared to answer such questions.

Chairman WALSH. And if not—

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am not prepared to answer questions of that kind.

Chairman WALSH. Now, supposing that a body of men, living in the only homes they had, in a tent colony, concluded that the forces of the law, sheriff's office, or whatever the law forces were, were not sufficient to protect them, would they be entitled to raise a force of men and arm them with deadly weapons to protect themselves in their homes?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Will you kindly read the first part of that question again?

Chairman WALSH. The first part of that question was, there was a large body of men; they have their families living in the only homes they have, which is a tent colony; they become convinced that the forces of the law are not sufficient to protect their homes, their property, and the lives of the people in them, and they themselves raise a body of men and arm them with deadly weapons for the purpose of taking the places of the constituted authorities or supplementing them; would you not say that they were thoroughly justified for the purpose of protection, in taking that action?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think no action would be justified which took the place of the constituted authorities.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask if you did not answer a question propounded to you in the New York hearing in this way:

"Do you believe the Government is strong enough in this country to protect the property and lives of its citizens or that a stage has been reached where that matter must be left to private endeavor?"

To which you answered:

"I certainly believe that the Government is strong enough to protect the lives of its citizens. Should there arise, as is constantly shown, instances where the forces of law are not gathered in sufficient quantity at a specific point to meet every emergency that may arise—and I should think that situation has developed in Colorado—that there was a time when the State of Colorado was not able to maintain law and order.”

And in that case you will recall you armed your own mine guards. Do you not believe that if it applies to you and the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., it should also apply to anybody who desires to protect his property, his home, and his own people?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think the rules of justice which apply to one citizen apply to all citizens.

Chairman WALSH. Are you a stockholder in the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am.

Chairman WALSH. And to what extent do you represent stock in the Pennsylvania Railroad?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not represent stock at all. I am not a director of the company.

Chairman WALSH. What amount of stock do you own in the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think I have three or four thousand shares of the stock.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know it to be a fact that the officers of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. have on hand thousands of deadly weapons and many thousands of rounds of ammunition constantly?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not.

Chairman WALSH. As a stockholder in the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., would you vote to retain in office a director who ordered the executive officers of the company to hold thousands of deadly weapons and thousands of rounds of ammunition in times of peace to supplement the authorities when they, in their opinion, believed that their property was not being protected?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I take no voice in the management of the Pennsylvania Railroad, Mr. Chairman. I have simply a small investment, as I stated. I am not prepared to dictate to the officers of any company in which I have an investment of the kind or to suggest to them what methods they should take for conducting their business.

Chairman WALSH. Do you also own bonds of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not.

Chairman WALSH. Are you a stockholder in the American Agricultural Chemical Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am not.

Chairman WALSH. Your father is?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He may be; I am not sure.

Chairman WALSH. The Rockefeller Foundation is the owner of bonds in that company, is it not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Very possibly; I do not recall.

Chairman WALSH. Do you, as the representative of your father's investments, know whether or not he has bought stocks and bonds of the American Agricultural Chemical Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall.

Chairman WALSH. Did you notice the fact that the American Agricultural Chemical Co. in the State of New Jersey, within some 15 or 20 miles from your home, while this commission was in session in New York, brought into Roosevelt, N. J., a body of armed men from without the State, although the courts were open and the sheriff of the county and the chief of police of the town were reputable officers, the governor, as chief executive of the State, was in command of the militia, and that a conflict took place between those armed men and the body of citizens, resulting in the death of some of the citizens?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I saw some mention of some of those facts in some of the newspapers at the time.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know that that is a fact?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I only saw the headlines. I never read the details of the occurrences there.

Chairman WALSH. The report which you made to this commission, I believe, showed that the Rockefeller Foundation had half a million dollars worth of the bonds of the American Agricultural Chemical Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If the report showed it it was true, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Do you now know whether the report showed that or not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. As I told you when you asked me in New York about the various investments held by the foundation, the number is a hundred or more, and I can not carry in my mind the different investments. I do not know of my personal knowledge. I may have known; I do not recall at the moment.

Chairman WALSH. Do you deem it perfectly proper for the officers of a corporation having a large amount of property in their possession to buy arms and keep arms for the purpose of protecting that property, outside of the officers of the law, or in cases where, in emergency, the officers of the law are not in a position to act?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think the officers of the law should maintain law and order.

Chairman WALSH. But if they do not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. What particular instances might arise in which certain individuals charged with the responsibility might think it was necessary for them to take such action as you have stated I could not state without knowing all of the facts.

Chairman WALSH. I will submit all these facts to you. On September 1, 1913, in the county of Huerfano and in the State of Colorado, and before any strike was called affecting any of the mines of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. in Huerfano County, Jefferson Farr, sheriff of Huerfano County, swore in 326 men and commissioned them as deputy sheriffs; that Mr. Farr did not know these men personally, and that, so far as he knew, many of them might have been red-handed murderers and criminals; that the county and State did not pay these men; but they appointed them at the request of Superintendent Madison, of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., who told him that they were to be furnished arms and paid by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. Assuming these facts to be correct, would you say that such conduct was a menace to the peace of the county as well as to a republican form of government?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I can not say whether that was more of a menace than not to have taken that action, because I was not on the ground.

Chairman WALSH. I am going to ask you now if that same question, or practically that same question, was not asked you on the stand in New York, and if you did not reply as follows:

"I should say that if the officers of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. thought there was danger impending to the company and the lives of its employees in a remote section of the country, where the ordinary forms of protection were not adequate, that it would be their duty to take any steps they might feel should be taken in an emergency case to protect such lives and property, and I can fancy that a situation like that arising might not make it always possible to do the thing most desirable, but one has to do some things in an emergency. I assume this situation was a situation of this kind, and the officers of the company felt their first duty was for the protection of lives and property, and they did what seemed to them wise. I should not be able to pass on the propriety of their actions in that instance without knowing all of the circumstances; but I would say unhesitatingly that anything that interferes with a democratic form of government is always to be deplored and avoided absolutely unless the protection of lives and property arises in such a situation that some immediate action has to be taken."

Do you stand on that statement to-day?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do.

Chairman WALSH. An emergency may arise in which immediate action must be taken by the officers of a corporation to protect their property and the lives of the people working for them?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is what I stated there.

Chairman WALSH. You stand on that proposition to-day?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Suppose it be true that there were 500 people in the Ludlow tent colony—500 men—with wives and families, numbering, altogether, more than a thousand people; that according to their best judgment their property was in danger; they were in a place remote from centralized government, as you might say, they believed that the emergency was upon them; that their lives were in danger and their property imperilled, were they not only acting within their rights, but acting as good citizens, when they armed themselves, as you say, they having a right to do so, to protect their property, as you say the company had a right to do, to protect their little property, and to protect their lives?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I stated, I think, in the article which you read, that the company officials on the ground would be the ones to determine that.

Chairman WALSH. And these human beings in tents would be the ones to determine what was necessary to protect their lives, would they not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would not want to determine it for them.

Chairman WALSH. Would they not have the same rights as officers of your company?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Any citizen would have the same right before the law.

Chairman WALSH. Now, if the Government was not strong enough to protect your property in Colorado and the lives of your employees, I want to ask you a few more questions, because you stated you believed in the ballot as a means of correcting the evil. Why did you not shut down your mines and bring an action against any peace officer that was derelict in his duty for malfeasance or misfeasance in office, and have him put out?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Chairman, the officers of the company will have to answer that. I can not.

Chairman WALSH. I believe you understand they have, in Colorado, what is known as the initiative, referendum, and recall of public officers?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have so heard.

Chairman WALSH. You have so heard?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, if the law was not adequate to permit you to run your property, to carry on the operations of your coal mines in peace, and the governor was not affording you the protection charged by Mr. Bowers in your letter, why did you not shut down your mines and immediately have petitions circulated in the counties of Colorado to recall the governor and then have an election or have an election to put a governor in who would protect your property and the lives of your employees?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is a question that the officers of the company would have to answer, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Suppose now that an emergency arose, such as you have suggested here. You say anything that interferes with the democratic form of government is always to be deplored and avoided absolutely, unless protection to lives and property is necessary in an emergency situation, and that in such a situation that some immediate action must be taken. Do you believe that a situation may arise calling for the protection of lives and property immediately without holding an election?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have stated the instance of the burglar with the revolver at my head.

Chairman WALSH. If a burglar got into your house and the life of yourself—and of course what you would do to protect yourself you would do to protect your family, as you stated in New York?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think any man would.

Chairman WALSH. I think any man would if he was not lacking in the common, ordinary impulses.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. But this point must be borne in mind, Mr. Chairman. My statement was if the man appears with the revolver at your head, about to pull the trigger—

Chairman WALSH. Must he have his hand on the trigger?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have stated the principle twice, and I will be glad to state it again, and upon which only, I think, a man is justified in opposing an officer of the law. If his life is immediately in danger; so that if he takes no action his life is about to be taken, and if he feels that the situation is such that when he is brought before a court of justice, to defend his action, the circumstances will, in the eyes of the judges before whom he appears, lead them to acquit him of the act which he has performed, then, I think he is justified in taking that action.

Chairman WALSH. What I was asking you particularly about is that you would use the same means to defend a member of your family, looking to you for protection, as you would for yourself?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would defend my family: yes.

Chairman WALSH. And if the danger was imminent and impending, at the time, you would not consider the question of attempting to circulate a petition to recall the officials, would you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Not if my wife or my children were to be killed.

Chairman WALSH. Would be in immediate danger—you would not think of falling back on the constitutional provision that you have a right to circulate a petition to recall the official?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would fall back on the right possessed by any citizen.

Chairman WALSH. The right of any citizen to defend the lives of your own loved ones—you would defend them?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would.

Chairman WALSH. And I believe you have also stated—but I will sum it up briefly, to see if I understand you—that you have a right to arm yourself in advance, if you think you are going to be attacked, have you not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. In the State in which I live, one has not the right to arm one's self without a permit. I do not know what the law is in other States.

Chairman WALSH. You are not allowed to have a revolver in your house?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Not under the Sullivan Act.

Chairman WALSH. The Sullivan Act requires you to have a permit to have a firearm in your house?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. So I understand.

Chairman WALSH. I thought it was directed against concealed weapons, but you are familiar enough with it to say that under the Sullivan Act a person can not have or own firearms?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is what I have understood. I do not wish to vouch for that, but that is my impression of the law.

Chairman WALSH. We will take the State of Pennsylvania or the State of Colorado. We will take a State where there is a constitutional provision that the right of the people to carry arms and have arms in their possession shall not be invaded. I understand that is the law of Colorado, that there is a constitutional provision that they shall have a right to bear arms?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know about that.

Chairman WALSH. But if that was the case, you would certainly say that a man who was meditating an attack would have a right to arm himself in advance to repel the attack?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I say men would be justified in taking such measures to prevent their own death, when death was imminent.

Chairman WALSH. I will not read the case in Colorado over again, but there was a case in which, before any strike was called, the company had arms on hand. Now, those were your executive officials—Mr. Mattison; you remember him, don't you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Don't you know he is your assistant superintendent out there?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know that, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. As far as you are personally concerned, he might be a very bad man, and you not know that at all?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I hardly imagine it, knowing our executive officers, who must know him very well.

Chairman WALSH. I will say, Mr. Mattison was your assistant superintendent there at that time, and it was testified before the various hearings of the commission that he was out there getting information upon which you might subsequently act. It was testified that he was your assistant superintendent. We will assume now that you know he was your assistant superintendent.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am willing to assume that from your statement.

Chairman WALSH. On my statement backed up by the investigations made by various commissions.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am entirely willing to accept it on that statement.

Chairman WALSH. He was assistant superintendent, and arms were on hand and provided before there was any strike. Now, would you say he was justified in having those arms on hand, if he had reasonable cause to anticipate that assaults were to be made upon himself or the employees of the company or that the property rights of the company were to be invaded by an armed force?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am not attempting to pass, Mr. Chairman, upon the acts which the officials of the Colorado Iron & Fuel Co. have performed.

Chairman WALSH. But you would say—

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. (interrupting). They have done what they thought was right, knowing the circumstances.

Chairman WALSH. And if they thought it was right to provide themselves with arms and ammunition to repel assaults, that they felt sure would come, to protect their property against these attacks, that they felt sure would be made, you would back them up in their proposition?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If I had any reason to believe that the officers of the company were not doing what they thought was right, knowing the circumstances as I do, I would take such steps as I could to change things.

Chairman WALSH. But if you thought that their property was about to be taken, or their lives, you think that arms in their hands to protect themselves and their employees and their property under those conditions——

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. They would have to determine that.

Chairman WALSH. I would like to have you say as a citizen. In addition to this Colorado situation, we are trying to get the views of the most prominent men in the country, business men, controllers of large investments, college men, lawyers, and public officials, as to this whole question of violence, and the application of the law in industrial matters, and I would ask you for your opinion as a citizen, having under your control very large investments, as to the right and propriety of persons to have arms with which to protect the property under their charge, and their lives, and the lives of those that have a right to look to them for protection.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Chairman, unless I know in each instance all of the facts, as a man on the ground knows them, I would not be able to answer that question. You have stated that the laws of Colorado would raise any man to violence.

Chairman WALSH. But that being true, and your officers contemplating, the men that were employed by you contemplating the attack upon their property or lives, would it not be their duty to arm themselves to protect their lives and property?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. They would have to decide about that.

Chairman WALSH. Would you not, please, outside of your connection with the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., give us your views as a citizen? Outside of our investigation, we are required to make recommendations in regard to the situation, and there are certain of the members of the committee that are applying themselves with great assiduity to the formation of suggestions for the State and the Government to control the agencies and forces for the protection of life and property, and to throw light on that, would you please give me your opinion as a citizen, whether or not it is proper for persons that have property in their charge to keep arms and ammunition on hand for the purpose of protecting that property and protecting the lives of their employees and their lives against assaults from armed bodies of men that they have every reason to believe are armed and are about to assault their employees?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have expressed my opinion, and I think I demonstrated in the three days in New York before this commission and during the past days here that I want to give the commission all of the information in my possession with reference to the subject of their inquiry. I have done everything that I could in my power to assist their inquiry. Where I have an opinion I am glad to express it, but where the questions are based on specific instances, where the facts in the case enter in, I do not feel prepared to say what a man should do in a certain position, in which he has the facts and I have not.

Chairman WALSH. I am asking for the general opinion, if you will give it, whether or not you believe it better under present conditions for those having property in their charge of their own and belonging to others to which they bear a trust relation, to have the right, and it is not proper for them to keep arms on hand to protect that property and also the property of their own, and protect their lives from assaults that may be made upon them, or attacks upon their property for any felonious purpose?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. As it has been stated, it would depend upon the laws of the State first, and second, upon the conditions, and I can not express any further opinion.

Chairman WALSH. I have to go back, because I think I have a very illustrating case from the actual field in Colorado with regard to the time that a man ought to use violence to protect his own life, and I believe you stated this morning that you could not act until the man's hand is on the trigger, or do I draw that too strong?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. A little too strong, because I said, in qualifying that, that he must be prepared to justify his action in a court of justice; he should be able to justify it in the eyes of his fellow men before the judge of the court of justice.

Chairman WALSH. And in addition to having his hand on the trigger, he must also be prepared to justify himself in a court of justice?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is what I have stated before four times.

Chairman WALSH. Then I will read you this and ask you if after hearing this case you might not change your opinion as to the time a person ought to act to save their lives.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The point was, When should a man be justified in resorting to violence?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir; in defense of his own person.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, with the finger on the trigger that you advanced, I want to read you from the testimony of Gov. Ammons.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I want to say, as you yourself have said, that was a figure of speech, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir; that is what I tried to straighten out, but you added to it, having in consideration that he should justify himself before a court, and I want to be fair and say that I took that as a figure of speech.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. What I meant was that a man should be so guarded that if he did not act that his life might be taken, and in addition to that justification, that he should be prepared to defend his action before a court of law, and unless he felt that the situation was such as to justify him before such a court, then he would have no right to act.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you will admit, will you not, that the circumstances under which a man must judge whether his life is in danger or not would be different under different circumstances?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have laid down a principle that would apply in all cases, and I do not feel that I need to undertake to interpret that principle in the specific instances. I have, with reference to different questions, enunciated as clear as I could my general beliefs and principles, and those are the principles and beliefs that govern my own actions, and beyond that I can not add anything of material value.

Chairman WALSH. I want to read you the testimony of Gov. Ammons in Colorado and see whether or not you might modify your opinion as to the exact time—

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It is not a question of time, but the conditions which I have mentioned.

Chairman WALSH. I will read you this without any preliminaries, so I am going to get this read and then ask you about it. This is from the testimony of Gov. Ammons:

"There was another, a nonunion miner, tried to break through the picket lines one night"—

That was the picket lines of the militia, you understand, not the strikers'—

"There was another, a nonunion miner, tried to break through the picket lines one night, and it was dark, and the young fellow on guard on the picket line tried to prevent his coming through, and, not knowing whether the man was trying to take advantage of him or not, had cocked his gun, and he prodded him with his bayonet and perhaps touched the trigger, probably, and in some way the gun was fired and it killed the fellow."

Now, in view of that, don't you think that circumstances arise in which a man would be justified in acting before it got so far as the person having the gun touching the trigger?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have stated the principles that would govern and I am not prepared to answer that.

Chairman WALSH. On this general question of people arming themselves and corporations arming themselves to protect their property and their lives I call your attention to a part of the record of this commission. When Mr. Atterbury was on the witness stand, the vice president of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., in which company you say you are a stockholder, he was asked certain questions which were referred to Mr. Long, the general manager. My impression is that among the questions asked him was whether or not their company maintained firearms and ammunition for use by their employees in emergency cases. I think he referred it to Mr. S. C. Long, who stated, if I recollect his testimony, that there were some arms and ammunition in the safe in Philadelphia. We had Mr. Chinnary, of our staff, collect data, and we asked Mr. Long, through him, to transmit to us a statement as to the arms and ammunition they had. We find this in a letter:

"Referring to the question raised at the hearing at Washington, Friday, May 7, at which time you asked Mr. J. C. Johnson, superintendent of telegraph, to furnish you a statement of arms and ammunition stored on the system for emergency use, we find that the purchasing agent has in stock in his rooms at Philadelphia 5,113 revolvers, 130 shotguns, 64,107 cartridges, 1,041 riot clubs.

This material is furnished on regular requisition when needed and is used when a strike is in progress and then collected and again stored after the trouble is over."

Do you believe it is proper, if there is nothing in the law to forbid it, for a corporations to have firearms to be used in emergency purposes?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have never been the superintendent or executive officer of any corporation, Mr. Chairman, and I have not had experience in dealing with such problems, and I have no opinion to express in regard to it.

Chairman WALSH. Speaking of violence again for a moment, do you consider a happening of preventable accidents in mines in which human beings are killed a form of violence?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I had never thought of it in that light. I should not say so.

Chairman WALSH. It has been stated here by numerous witnesses—one whose testimony is very strongly in my mind—that every accident that could have been prevented by reasonable precaution on the part of the owner of the mine which costs a miner his life, the intelligent workmen believe to be criminal and a form of violence against them. Do you agree with that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not formulated an opinion on that subject, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. You are a director of a mining company which has thousands of men working underground?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am a director in a company which owns and operates mines.

Chairman WALSH. Does it have thousands of men working underground?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. They are working in the mines; yes.

Mr. WALSH. You have received information from time to time of explosions which occurred in those mines, in which men working for your company met with death in horrible form, have you not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is a circumstance which unfortunately happens in connection with any kind of mining.

Chairman WALSH. That is, the miners were burned and suffocated?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. And death has resulted. Every effort is being taken and, as has been the case always, has always been taken by the officers of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. to reduce to the lowest possible point the risk of injury.

Chairman WALSH. You have heard it stated time and again, have you not, and read that there are more deaths in mine accidents in Colorado than from any other State in the Union, proportionately?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I rather think that statement has a familiar sound. That it is true, I do not know, nor do I believe.

Chairman WALSH. Did you ever look up, as director of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., how many men had been killed in your mine in the last five years?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not. The officers of the company are doing everything they can to prevent death. Beyond that I hardly see what could be done.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know how many explosions have occurred in your mines within the past three years?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know how many explosions have occurred in your mines or the mines of your company within the past year?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not keep posted on that, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. You do not know?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not.

Chairman WALSH. You are a director of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. When you hear of an explosion in which a great number of lives are lost, do you not attempt to find out how many men were killed—that is, of your own company? Personally, do you not try to find out how many men were killed and what caused the killing?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. As a director of the company I have done what was my duty in selecting officers or helping to select officers whom I regarded as most competent to deal with such questions and to deal with them much more wisely and successfully than I could. I mean by successfully to prevent accidents because of their knowledge of conditions. I feel that I am doing a greater service in the selection of such men and leaving with them the questions pertaining to the prevention of accidents of every kind than as though I were to undertake myself to go into the matter.

Chairman WALSH. Suppose you heard of explosion following explosion, where many lives were lost, and you have this great responsibility as a director, which you stated you were willing to take, do you not believe that you ought to at least know the number of men that were killed?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I undertake to discharge the responsibility which is upon me in the way which, according to my best judgment, is wisest. Beyond that I do not believe it is possible for any man to go.

Chairman WALSH. When you hear a number of men have been killed in a mine, do you inquire their names?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not done that.

Chairman WALSH. Do you ever inquire whether or not they have families?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not undertaken to investigate, Mr. Chairman, the details of matters pertaining to such questions.

Chairman WALSH. Do you inquire as to their social surroundings?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Those are all matters which the officers of the company are much better fitted than I to deal with in the wisest and best way.

Chairman WALSH. Do you inquire how much the company paid these men as compensation?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. As a director, Mr. Chairman, my experience has been that when officers have been appointed to operate companies, they must be given responsibilities, and they must be free, so long as they are worthy of trust. I repose such confidence in the men whom I have had a part in selecting, and I find that that is the way to conduct business. That is the ordinary, and, I feel, a more sensible way, so far as the interests of the employees are concerned, than as though I were myself to try to deal with technical questions.

Chairman WALSH. Do you think that injustice is ever done by executive officers toward the families of miners who lose their lives in the mines?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I suppose that injustice is done in the various walks of life.

Chairman WALSH. But I mean in that particular line by the executive officers.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know, Mr. Chairman. I only know that every effort is being made by the officers to see that justice is done and to prevent injustice.

Chairman WALSH. If you knew that explosion after explosion took place in your mines, do you not think it would be your duty personally to inquire into the cause of the deaths and what compensation is paid to the survivors of the dead so that you would have the personal knowledge, even though you went to the executive officers to find it out?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would take such steps, Mr. Chairman, as seemed to me right and wise in the performance of my duty.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. McCorkle has information that he claims to have received from the miner; that is, that the miner complained—it was a fire boss—that there was too much gas in the chambers and that an explosion was likely to take place, but that notwithstanding that the miners were ordered back into the place and the mine did explode and killed 56 men. Did you hear that statement by Mr. McCorkle?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did not hear that testimony; but I know that try as hard as the officers and superintendents of a mining company will to prevent accidents, it is often an exceedingly difficult thing to enforce regulations on the men themselves to make them careful not to take risks and not involve other men in risks. The officers do everything in their power to prevent accidents. The men who are in charge are as regretful as anyone could be when accidents happen and as anxious as anyone could be to prevent accidents. They are doing all they can, Mr. Chairman, to prevent such accidents.

Chairman WALSH. Do you believe that men go in those mines and take chances ever through economic necessity on account of their requirements for housing, food, and raiment for themselves and their families and take chances they would not otherwise take?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I suppose any man who goes into the mining business realizes that he does that.

Chairman WALSH. But do you not think—you are complaining and saying that the workmen themselves take chances. Do you not believe that in many instances they take those chances through the force of economic necessity?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall having said that they take chances. What I said, Mr. Chairman, was that men are very careless about observing the requirements and regulations which prevent or help to prevent accidents. The men themselves are often very careless in matters of that kind. That was my statement.

Chairman WALSH. Is it the first duty upon the managers of mines to make them safe before the men go into them?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It is the highest duty of the managers of mines to do everything they can to make the mines as safe as possible.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you the direct question: Now, if an explosion occurs in the mine from causes which could have been prevented by a reasonable outlay of energy and care on the part of the mine managers, in which human life is lost, do you not believe that that is violence against the persons of those miners and against the rights of their survivors?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I believe that every effort should be made to prevent accidents, Mr. Chairman. I am not prepared to make an answer to the other question which you have presented.

Chairman WALSH. If a specific case were brought to you of the deaths of miners caused by the negligence of your employees, known to the executive officers, in which lives were lost, would you then make a personal investigation to find out the actual names of the men that were killed, the facts leading up to their deaths, and all the details surrounding it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would always take such steps as might seem to me to be wise and proper in the performance of my duty as a director, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. What is that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would always take such steps as might seem to me wise in the performance of my duty as a director.

Chairman WALSH. As a director, when your attention was called to the fact—alleged fact—that injustice was done by your executive officers; that they were negligent; and that it did cause destruction of life and crippling of limbs; would you look into that personally to find out whether they were negligent or not, or would you still say, as a director, "I would leave it all to the executive officers whom I might pick out"?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If I had reason to believe that negligence was existing which might cause accident or loss of life, or distresses of any kind, I would take what steps might seem to me wise to see that that negligence was ended.

Chairman WALSH. Have you not received communication after communication from persons claiming to have been injured in Colorado in your mines, or from their survivors, pointing out injustices that have been done them?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall the receipt of more than one, and that was the one—possibly two; one of them was the case that you spoke of in the hearing in New York.

Chairman WALSH. One that we called your attention to—Mr. Dalton's case.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And what was the other one?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't recall what the other was, but I have an impression that I had some letter in regard to an injury.

Chairman WALSH. You did not answer the letters that those people wrote you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I—

Chairman WALSH. Did you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Are you asking the question?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; I am asking the question. I am putting it in a very leading form. I want you to answer that.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. You want me to answer?

Chairman WALSH. Please.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. With reference to the matter the commission brought to my attention in New York, I caused a careful investigation to be made at once. With reference to the other matter, I referred it at once to the president of the company and received from him a report in regard to it.

Chairman WALSH. But you have not answered my question. You did not answer these letters that these people wrote you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I can not recall whether I answered or not the people who wrote, but I took immediate steps to investigate the claims, and in both instances found out that the claims made in the letters in regard to improper treatment were not justified.

Chairman WALSH. Have you a definite policy by which you refuse to place yourself in personal connection with anything disagreeable in connection with the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., such as the loss of life, or the prosecution of any criminal acts, and the like?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not.

Chairman WALSH. When you receive letters such as Mr. Dalton claims he wrote you, registered letters, have you a system by which you turn them over to some one else, and do not answer them directly?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I use whatever means, Mr. Chairman, may seem to me right and wise in order to get at the facts in the case.

Chairman WALSH. Do you recall the telegram that was submitted to you during the progress of our last hearings from Mr. Harris N. Hawkins, the attorney in Denver, Colo.? Do you know Mr. Hawkins?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know who he is?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know that he is the attorney for the United Mine Workers of America; that he defended Mr. Lawson, and Mr. Zaccanelli and these other men who have been on trial in Colorado, and has represented them for some time and is a highly respectable and very able lawyer of Denver, Colo.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I know that he is an attorney of the United Mine Workers of America.

Chairman WALSH. Would you not agree to the rest, that he is a highly reputable and respectable lawyer of Denver, Colo., by reputation?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I know nothing of his reputation, and have no reason to suppose that he is not all that you declare him to be; but of my personal knowledge I know nothing about him.

Chairman WALSH. Know nothing of him but by reputation?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Nothing but by reputation.

Chairman WALSH. Haven't you heard his reputation as a lawyer and man?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you if during the hearings in New York a telegram was not sent to this commission—have you a telegram there or a copy of it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not a copy of the telegram.

Chairman WALSH. Well, I will try to state the substance.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I recall the substance of it, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. You saw the telegram, did you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did. [Here a paper was handed to the witness.] This is copy of the telegram.

Chairman WALSH. May I see it, please. I have not my copy with me.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. This is not a copy of the telegram. This is a copy of a telegram—the copy of the telegram appears in a telegram which I sent at once to Mr. Welborn upon the receipt of that telegram from the commission. I telegraphed Mr. Welborn at once, embodying that telegram in full, and I received from Mr. Welborn a reply in regard to the matter which, if you care to have me read, I will read.

Chairman WALSH. Well, I don't care for you to read it unless it is your desire to read it. The point I am trying to draw out is the fact, if it be a fact, that you have a way of personally avoiding all direct relations of all kinds to these more or less deplorable subjects where life is lost or where there is a charge of abuse of the law and everything of that sort. In other words, my inquiry—and I wish to say this respectfully—that I am inquiring whether or not you have all the power you say you have as a director and that you have a system of not taking the personal responsibility of these things, but of saying, "we," and "our associates," and referring disagreeable things to others and not coming in direct touch with them yourself?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have no policy in such matters, Mr. Chairman. I undertake to deal with each case in the way that seems to me wise and best and most just.

Chairman WALSH. Do you recall the case where complaint was ever made to you by another citizen of this country working in one of your industries in which you were a stockholder or director, in which you wrote him a direct answer over your own signature?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I can not recall receiving other such letters, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Except those we have presented to you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No; the one you called my attention to in New York, and the other that I spoke of as having received. I do not say that I have not, but I can not recall having received other letters of that kind.

Chairman WALSH. Well, at any rate, you knew Mr. Hawkins, did you not?
Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I knew of Mr. Hawkins.

Chairman WALSH. Yes; you knew of Mr. Hawkins?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Hawkins sent a telegram—may I look at the telegram you have there?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And I will also look at the other matter, and if it will add to our record I will thank you to leave it.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Well, Mr. Hawkins's telegram is repeated in full in that telegram to Mr. Welborn.

Chairman WALSH. May I look at the other telegram? I will not say whether I will want it for the record or not.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes; it may be filed. It is included in the telegram to Mr. Welborn. You will see the quotation.

Chairman WALSH. I see the quotation.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I thought perhaps it was not marked.

Chairman WALSH. I will read you this telegram, which was addressed to myself as chairman of the commission while we were sitting in New York.

"On November 8, 1913, a battle occurred"—

This is a telegram from Horace N. Hawkins to our commission—
"near La Veta, Huerfano County, between mine guards of Oakdale Coal Co. and striking miners, resulting in death of three guards and chauffeur of automobile in which guards had been riding. Company claims its men were ambushed; strikers claim they did not fire until guards attacked them. Murder charges against strikers removed here for trial and trials as begun January 4; on that day the appearance was entered for the prosecution of Thomas H. Devine, the regular retained counsel of the C. F. & I. at Pueblo, Charles C. Hayden, for many years representative of said company in Huerfano County, and Jesse G. Northcutt, the leading counsel for said company concerning strike matters. Mr. Rockefeller's company owns no interest in Oakview property, but is employing and paying attorneys who are openly conducting and controlling the prosecution, affidavits so charging filed January 4 have not been and will not be disputed. Detectives employed by C. F. & I. have been in attendance assisting said attorneys, including Walter Belk, of the Baldwin-Felts strike-breaking agency, and Jeff Farr, the C. F. & I. sheriff of Huerfano County. Large numbers of the nonunion employees of the Rockefeller Steel Plant are on jury list, and the Rockefeller attorneys are striving to qualify them as jurors notwithstanding the bitter feeling that has existed in numbers of other cases against the strikers growing out of the strike where alleged offenders are yet to be tried and in which neither Mr. Rockefeller's company nor his employees were concerned. Mr. Rockefeller's attorneys have entered their appearance, openly announced that they are going to conduct the prosecution. I respectfully submit that Mr. Rockefeller should be asked if he knows of these things and approves of them. Why should Mr. Rockefeller's company, after the strike is over, pay attorneys to prosecute men whose alleged offenses were not against either the property or employees of his company? Will not such conduct on the part of Mr. Rockefeller's company, after the strike is over, tend to keep alive bitterness already aroused and render ineffective any proposed plans of conciliation? You are authorized to make public this message.

HORACE N. HAWKINS,
Attorney for Defendants.

I will ask you now, Mr. Rockefeller, if it is not a fact that that telegram was immediately transmitted to you at your office, 26 Broadway, New York, with a letter from myself stating that after conference with other members of the commission, we had concluded not to recall you to the witness stand, you having been on the witness stand for about three days, but you were asked to make whatever comment you wished to make upon that message, and if the only reply that any member of this commission or the commission as a whole ever received was a few lines from Heydt, simply saying that in the absence of Mr. Rockefeller your telegram of such a date was received and signed by C. O. Heydt, secretary? That is all, so far as the public knows, as to any action that you took upon the appeal of Mr. Hawkins at that time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I assume, Mr. Chairman, that what I did, namely, to send that telegram at once to Mr. Welborn upon my return to the city, was the very best thing that I could do under the circumstances, I assumed that the commission was desirous that I should make inquiry in regard to the facts. That I did.

Chairman WALSH. What comment did you make on it to the commission?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I certainly meant no discourtesy to the commission.

Chairman WALSH. I did not mean that it was discourteous, but I am trying to establish if it is a fact that you have a way of not taking personal responsibility for anything in connection with the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., and you do it as a part of a policy, or intentionally? Now, you were asked to make comment, and you never did make any public comment on it, or any comment to the commission.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The acknowledgment of the letter, Mr. Chairman, I think, is the only reply that was made to the commission. I assumed that the action I took would be the action which would meet with the approval of the commission and of the public.

Chairman WALSH. How is that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I assumed that the course which I pursued would be the course which would meet with the approval of the commission and the public.

Chairman WALSH. That was a very definite charge, was it not, that your money was being used, or money of your company was being used to do something that you have condemned here on the witness stand, that is, taking the part of private persons in public prosecutions. You condemn that, don't you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I certainly do.

Chairman WALSH. You have it in the paper here. Your attention was called to a specific case, and you are director of that company, and let me see if this is what you did:

"NEW YORK, January 30, 1915.

"J. F. WELBORN,

"President Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.,

"Boston Building, Denver, Colo.

"Chairman Walsh has sent us a copy of telegram addressed to him"—

And then you quote the telegram. That is all you said to Mr. Welborn?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is all I said in the telegram.

Chairman WALSH. Notwithstanding you thought it was wrong to do that, you would not even tell your own executive officer you thought it was wrong?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Chairman, you are jumping to a conclusion. Mr. Welborn was about to come to New York.

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. As soon as Mr. Welborn reached New York, which was a short time after this—he was expecting to come to New York the first week in February but was delayed from day to day, because of certain matters that he had on hand—but as soon as Mr. Welborn reached New York I discussed the matter very fully with him, as did others of my associates in their individual conferences with him, stating very clearly our disapproval of any such actions, and leaving no question in Mr. Welborn's mind as to our attitude as to what we felt was right and just and should be done. Just as soon as I heard that the trial of Mr. Lawson was coming up, although I had stated and my associates had separately stated to Mr. Welborn so fully our views, and we had received his expression of opinion—just as soon as I heard of that—I think I was in the country at the time—I telephoned to one of my associates and asked him to call Mr. Welborn up on the long-distance telephone at Denver and assure himself and myself that the views which we had expressed, with which Mr. Welborn agreed, were being carried out with reference to the trial of Mr. Lawson. Mr. Welborn assured us that the company, as I have stated to you, was taking no part in any way in the prosecution of the case, nor would it in the prosecution of any other cases. I have read to you, in my statement, a statement made by the attorney general of the State of Colorado, stating that that was the fact, and I have expressed without reserve my belief absolutely in principle that the administration of justice should remain solely in the hands of the State, and my purpose has always been to do everything within my power to see that that principle is carried out.

Chairman WALSH. And you urged that upon Mr. Welborn when he came to New York?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I stated it very fully to him.

Chairman WALSH. And Mr. Welborn agreed with you? [No response.] And Mr. Welborn agreed with you that it was the fair, right, and proper thing to do?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall whether Mr. Welborn agreed or not.
 Chairman WALSH. But when he went back, in the Lawson case, he did not have the lawyers appear in the case, so that he must have taken your opinion in the matter or agreed with you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He certainly did agree with me.

Chairman WALSH. As a matter of fact, don't they always agree with you, no matter how mildly you put it—"I would suggest, for instance, that perhaps it would be better for the cause of justice not to have Mr. Northcutt appear in case"—that is not a command, but very pleasantly stated, but when you state it to one of the directors, you owning the stock and having a control in the board of directors, that this executive officer, who is also a director, usually does whatever you suggest?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. We have 8 out of the 11 members of the board of directors who are representatives of our holdings—of my father's holdings.

Chairman WALSH. How many directors have you in New York, who live outside of Colorado?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The three directors that are the representatives of my father's holdings are in New York—Mr. Murphy, Mr. Lee, and myself.

Chairman WALSH. How many directors, regardless of your father's holdings, live outside of Colorado?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I should have to count them; there are those three, Mr. Gould, and an associate of his, who until recently has been a director.

Chairman WALSH. What Mr. Gould?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. George Gould.

Chairman WALSH. Are you interested with Mr. Gould in railroad properties—yourself and father?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. You mean have we investments in properties which his family have investments in?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. We have.

Chairman WALSH. And Mr. Gould and his son Kingdon were directors?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir; he was on the board until recently, when he resigned, and also a further representative of his interests, Mr. Jeffries, who recently resigned.

Chairman WALSH. Who else?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Ward.

Chairman WALSH. Who is Mr. Ward?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. All of these matters were covered in my testimony in New York. Mr. Ward is the owner of some securities of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. and lives in New York, and Mr. McClement is another director living in New York.

Chairman WALSH. I have counted six, then.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir; you said a majority of the directors.

Chairman WALSH. You said you had three, and I am taking the directors outside of Colorado. There are six outside of Colorado?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. There are seven directors outside of Colorado.

Chairman WALSH. You have 11 directors altogether?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think 11 or 13.

Chairman WALSH. So yourself and the Gould interests and Mr. McClement, whoever he may represent—in other words, the eastern directors—could get together at any time and outvote the Colorado end?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. A majority of directors can always out vote the minority.

Chairman WALSH. So you really had the potential power to control the whole situation, and the size of your investments made your influence much greater than that of an ordinary director?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That I stated in the paper which I read in New York.

Chairman WALSH. Now, then, I am going to follow out the line of conduct now that was taken with reference to the situation, that you say was improper, and that Mr. Welborn then agreed with you was improper, to act in that way—

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Chairman, would you be good enough to read the reply?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir; I am going to read that, but I want to get it chronologically, and logically as well.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Chairman, pardon me; that will give the chronological order, because those replies came in answer to the telegrams.

Chairman WALSH. How long after these telegrams came was it before Mr. Welborn got to your office in New York?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't recall.

Chairman WALSH. Was it weeks?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think in the next month, but I also stated, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. Welborn's coming was put off from day to day because of affairs that detained him.

Chairman WALSH. I recall that very clearly. You sent the telegram containing this complaint of Mr. Hawkins—you quoted it, without any comment whatsoever—on January 30?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is the telegram.

Chairman WALSH. You made no comment on it, but simply sent the telegram that Mr. Hawkins sent to me to Mr. Welborn?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If I had the copy, I could tell.

Chairman WALSH. I will say that you made no further comment in it except to say: "Chairman Walsh sent us the following telegram addressed to him."

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is a copy completely quoted in the telegram.

Chairman WALSH. And you made no comment whatever. Here is what Mr. Welborn said:

"JANUARY 31.

"Answering your telegram Saturday. Prosecution of La Veta, Huerfano County, murder trial is being conducted under supervision of J. J. Hendrick, district attorney of that county. His affiliations are with strikers. County commissioners of Huerfano County passed resolution authorizing Northcutt, Hayden, and Devine to assist Hendrick in prosecution of La Veta case. Neither Northcutt nor Hayden was ever our attorney previous to strike. At the beginning of the strike the coal operators jointly employed them to look after all matters relating to the strike. There are many indictments pending, growing out of violence during the strike, some relating to employees of one company and some to other companies. The coal operators conceive it to be their duty and they have been requested by the State authorities to assist in bringing to trial all persons who have participated in the atrocities connected with the strike. In taking this course the operators are simply doing what in justice they owe to their employees who have been subjected to all kinds of violence and to the wives and children of employees who were murdered at their regular working places. Attorney Devine is employed by coal operators in case now on trial. He is in general practice at Pueblo, where he represents us locally, and but a small portion of his time is devoted to our business.

"J. F. WELBORN."

You did not answer that, did you? The incident stopped right there?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir; I was expecting Mr. Welborn in New York.

Chairman WALSH. Now, on February 3 Mr. Welborn wired you:

"JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,

"26 Broadway, New York, N. Y.:

"Supplementing my telegram to you January 31. Mr. Hawkins, who has been and is defending the numerous persons indicted for violence or murder in connection with strike, has been attorney for United Mine Workers' organization for several years, and it is generally understood that that organization is paying him for his services, notwithstanding officers of the organization disclaim any connection whatever with the violence.

"J. F. WELBORN."

Now, that is all the correspondence that passed between you in reference to this until May 1, 1915, when we have a letter from Mr. Welborn inclosing a copy of telegram as requested by your secretary?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No, sir; that is not all the correspondence. I have a letter that I would be glad to read, if you will allow me.

Chairman WALSH. May I see the letter first?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It is a brief letter.

Chairman WALSH. May I see it, please?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. May I read it afterwards?

Chairman WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. This is a letter which, after Mr. Murphy had the talk on the telephone with Mr. Welborn, to which I have referred—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). I see it is dated April the 19th, and I am very much afraid I might break into the order in which I am presenting this to you, and when we get to that—

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. You have already referred to the letter of May 4, and skipped the chronological order.

Chairman WALSH. I prefer not to read it now. I have not read the letter, but have merely referred to it as the letter of May 6, and then I asked you if that was all of the correspondence. You said it was not; but I prefer not to read this now, and didn't read the other, and unless you make it a point that you desire to read it now and unless there is some compelling reason for getting at the truth that this should be read now, I would prefer that you read it later.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. You said that was all of the correspondence, and I said it was not, and I would like to read the letter now.

Chairman WALSH. Unless you insist on it, I will ask you a few more questions.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not insist; I request.

Chairman WALSH. Then, I must respectfully decline the request.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It will be noted in the record that you have declined?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir; the stenographer takes down all of the proceedings that are going on here, and we are all responsible for our actions, the witnesses, commissioners, and all. I am going to ask you this question again: You gave me the particular date on which Mr. Welborn came to New York, and you had this conversation with him?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know between the date that Mr. Welborn came to New York, and April the 19th, the letter that you have just handed me, was written, that the trial of the La Veta leaders had been concluded, that, notwithstanding the efforts of your attorneys, these men were acquitted? That after that a new circuit or new judicial district was made, and a man named Zancannelli was put on trial, and that the Zancannelli jury hung, although he was tried before a gentleman acting as judge that was said to have appeared in other trials by your company as their attorney; that the Zancannelli jury hung, and the vote was 8 to 4 for acquittal, and another jury was taken up, at the request of your attorneys, from the streets, and not drawn from the wheel or the box, and that Zancannelli was thereupon convicted and sentenced for life, and that of that jury taken from the street to try the Zancannelli trial, there were 33 of them left to go on the panel to try Lawson, selected by your attorneys partially? Do you know those are facts?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know that they are facts, and the letter of Mr. Welborn stated that the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. had nothing whatever to do with the trial of Mr. Lawson.

Chairman WALSH. At this point, now, Mr. Rockefeller, I will be glad, if you care to do it, to have you read that letter.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. (reading):

"New York, April 19.

"DEAR MR. WELBORN: We, at this end, are all much gratified to learn from my telephone conversation with you on Saturday that the criminal prosecutions in Colorado are being conducted solely by the attorney general and the public prosecutors, and that no counsel in any way connected with the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. have appeared in the case or are taking any active part in the prosecution. We feel that this is the only correct policy. While the strike was going on, we insisted that the preservation of order was a matter for the exclusive consideration of the public authorities, and we refused, against considerable pressure, to purchase immunity from criminal attacks by negotiations with persons who were making them or threatening them. The same principle, of course, applies to criminal prosecutions, and our feeling has been very strong that they also should be exclusively in the hands of the public authorities. As soon as private interests, whether individual or corporate, participate by private counsel in the prosecutions, the proceedings begin to take on an appearance of private vengeance rather than of the impartial administration of justice. While we of course appreciate that it is much easier for us in the East, who were not in the thick of the fight, to look at this matter in a detached and impersonal way, we feel sure that you will know that our position is not due to any lack of sympathy with officers and men in Colorado, whose lives have been imperilled and some of whose friends and comrades lost their lives in the struggle. We have felt very clear in our own minds that the restoration of normal conditions and the reestablishment of industrial peace will come quicker if the matter of vindicating the law is left wholly in the hands of the public authorities. We were therefore the more pleased to learn that you shared these views, and had already taken steps to see that they were carried out so far, at least, as our company was concerned.

"Very truly, yours,

"STAR J. MURPHY."

May I ask for those other telegrams?

Chairman WALSH. Yes. I would like to have that letter, too. I want to ask a question about it.

I will ask if that letter does not furnish an exemplification of how the real power in New York expresses itself? Here was a complaint from Hawkins that your paid men were pursuing a course which he afterwards said savored of private vengeance, and that you believed it. He wired to you and you received a confirmation, I take it, of Mr. Hawkins's charge.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He wired to you, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. He wired to me, yes, and I sent it to you, and you sent it to him.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I sent it to Mr. Welborn.

Chairman WALSH. You sent it to Mr. Welborn.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. You said Mr. Hawkins wired to you.

Chairman WALSH. Yes; I was a little wrong there. Mr. Hawkins wired to me complaining of this attempt to take private vengeance. I transmitted the telegram to you, notwithstanding your feeling in the matter; you transmitted my telegram to Welborn without comment. Welborn wired back confirming what Mr. Hawkins had said about the employment of your private attorney in this prosecution. He wired you some additional information shortly thereafter. So they went on with the trial, and these men that were intended, or that might have been made the victims of private vengeance, escaped, the jury acquitting them. Then Mr. Welborn comes to New York. He has justified all that in the telegram by saying this is a murder of those faithful employees, that "We owe it to their families." Then he sent another telegram stating that Hawkins was attorney for the United Mine Workers of America, and they disclaimed violence in their justification. You say nothing in reply to that until he comes, and then you tell them what you think about this thing, that it looks like private vengeance, and then we get a letter on April 19 in which Mr. Welborn says to you—or then, to get it chronologically correct, Mr. Murphy telephones out to Mr. Welborn—but I left out one occurrence there.

After these men escaped and after your conversation with Mr. Welborn, the trial of Zancanelli took place. Zancanelli was tried for murder growing out of one of these strike matters, and tried before Mr. Granby Hillier as Judge. He was defended by Mr. Horace Hawkins. Mr. Northcutt and the other attorneys, who were at the trial and conviction of the La Veta men, also appeared in the trial of Zancanelli. The jury hung eight to four. An order was made to bring in a special venire of jurors right off the street. That venire was brought in. Zancanelli was immediately put upon his trial again, convicted, and sentenced to the penitentiary for life. Your attorneys all appeared in that case. They insisted upon selecting the jury in this way. The judge permitted the jury to be selected in this manner. Then there was a bunch of 33 of those jurymen held over to be used on the panel of John Lawson. John Lawson was put upon trial. He was the man that testified before this commission, and you read his testimony, did you not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did not.

Chairman WALSH. You did not read Lawson's testimony?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No.

Chairman WALSH. You did not hear it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No.

Chairman WALSH. I am going to ask you if it has not been communicated to you that for vigor of mind and terseness of expression his testimony has not been equaled by that of any person who has been placed on this witness stand, and his apparent truthfulness. You have heard that comment?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not.

Chairman WALSH. Did you not read in the papers that he was a remarkable type—did not the papers say a remarkable type of American citizen, and showed great intelligence and apparent frankness in his testimony?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall that, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. And you shook hands with him, did you not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes; I had that opportunity.

Chairman WALSH. And you invited him to your office?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did.

Chairman WALSH. And he called upon you at your office, did he not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He did.

Chairman WALSH. And he appeared to be a frank and intelligent man, did he not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He appeared to be both.

Chairman WALSH. And you heard he was an American whose ancestry reached back two generations, or one generation at least?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did not take up with him the question of his ancestry.

Chairman WALSH. But he was a typical American, was he not, a clean looking man, and you gave out an interview in which you said you were glad to meet these people, that they looked like a clean, high type of American citizens?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Are you quoting from that interview?

Chairman WALSH. I am trying to quote from it.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall passing any comment upon their personal appearance.

Chairman WALSH. What did you think about Lawson, just from your talk with him and his appearance?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Chairman, I do not feel that I am called upon to express my opinion about Mr. Lawson or any of the other gentlemen who called upon me in a personal way.

Chairman WALSH. Did he appear to be an honest, frank, intelligent man?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not feel that I am called upon to express an opinion. I had a very agreeable conference, purely informal, unofficial, with several of the labor leaders who were in New York at that time.

Chairman WALSH. I am speaking of Mr. Lawson. He was a big, healthy specimen of manhood, at any rate.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not feel called upon to make any comments in regard to Mr. Lawson's personal appearance.

Chairman WALSH. At any rate, after Zancannelli was convicted, the papers contained statements that John Lawson was going to be put on trial and tried under the same circumstances that Zancannelli was tried. You saw that, did you not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. As soon as I saw any reference to the next trial going on, which was Mr. Lawson's, I took the steps I have outlined.

Chairman WALSH. I am asking you, and I want to lead up to it, if I can, chronologically and as logically as possible. You saw in the paper that Lawson was going to be tried under those circumstances, did you not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did not see it in the paper, but I was told that it appeared in the paper.

Chairman WALSH. Who told you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Murphy—that it appeared in the paper that Mr. Lawson's trial was going on and at once. I asked Mr. Murphy to telephone, as I have stated—but wait, Mr. Chairman, I want to make a statement in regard to that.

You have stated in regard to this telegram from Mr. Welborn to me that our attorneys were conducting the case. I want to call attention to the fact that it may be clear, Mr. Chairman, that it says:

"Prosecution of the La Veta, Huerfano County, murder trial is being conducted under supervision of J. J. Hendrick, district attorney of that county. His affiliations are with strikers. County commissioners of Huerfano County passed resolutions authorizing Northcutt, Hayden, and Devine to assist Hendrick in the La Veta case. Neither Northcutt nor Hayden was ever our attorney previous to strike. After the beginning of the strike the coal operators jointly employed them to look after all matters relating to the strike."

They were employed jointly during the strike, as this states—this is my information—to look after all matters in connection with the strike, and it was in that way that they happened to be employed, not by the fuel company, but by the several companies that were acting jointly at this time and in connection with this case.

Chairman WALSH. So they were all combined together to prosecute Zancannelli and these other men, were they—all the companies combined to privately employ these men and pay them?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The statement is just as I have read it.

Chairman WALSH. Read on about Devine, the local man.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. (reading):

"There are many indictments pending, growing out of violence during the strike, some relating to employees of one company and some of the other companies. The coal operators conceive it to be their duty, and they have been requested by the State authorities, to assist in bringing to trial all persons who have participated in the atrocities connected with the strike. In taking this course the operators are simply doing what in justice they owe to their employees, who have been subjected to all kinds of violence, and to the wives and children of employees who were murdered at their regular working places. Attorney Devine is employed by coal operators in case now on trial. He is in general practice at Pueblo, where he represents us locally, and but a small portion of his time is devoted to our business."

Chairman WALSH. The explanation you desire to make is that Mr. Hawkins is not correct in his statement that these were your attorneys that you have been reading about.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The explanation I desire to make is that these three gentlemen referred to here were employed by the several companies or the several operators.

Chairman WALSH. They were also the attorneys for your company?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. They were employed by the several companies, of which we were one in the group.

Chairman WALSH. But they were also your regular attorneys?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not understand so.

Chairman WALSH. Was Devine?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is the only man with reference to whom that statement is made. I simply wanted to make clear that those attorneys were employed by the several companies; that they had been employed during the strike for various matters growing out of the strike; that they were not employed solely by our company.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. A point of information, Mr. Chairman. Will you, before going into that, explain further in connection with this telegram who these commissioners are that are referred to in there.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know, Mr. Weinstock.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Will you read that part of the message again?

Chairman WALSH. They are referred to as county commissioners of Huerfano County.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Please explain more about those commissioners and who they represent?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. My information is limited, too, Mr. Weinstock, to what the telegram says, and it says "County commissioners of Huerfano County passed resolutions authorizing Northcutt, Hayden, and Devine to assist Hendrick in prosecution of La Veta case."

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And the county commissioners are authorized officials of that county?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is what I assume from the telegram.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And they authorized the employment of these attorneys to assist the district attorney?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is what the telegram states.

Chairman WALSH. Those are the same people referred to by Mr. Murphy in his letter when he says, "As soon as private interests, whether individual or corporate, participate by private counsel in the prosecutions, the proceedings begin to take on the appearance of private vengeance rather than of the impartial administration of justice." Those are the ones he referred to, selected in that way?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He referred to the counsel employed by the various mining companies together.

Chairman WALSH. Those are the men we are talking about now?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Very likely.

Chairman WALSH. I am getting down now to where the power is, and whether or not the power is really exercised by the New Yorkers instead of by their executive employees in Denver. Now, notwithstanding the conversation you had with Mr. Welborn, those same private counsel went out and prosecuted Zancannelli, and in the prosecution of Zancannelli they got a panel of 33 jurors that was carried over for the prosecution of Lawson. Then it appeared in the papers that Lawson was about to be put on trial for his life, and that he was to be tried by Grant B. Hillyer, who had been attorney for the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., and there were charges that the jury was unfairly selected; did you see the newspapers—did you see the newspaper accounts?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did not see the newspaper accounts.

Chairman WALSH. Did Mr. Murphy tell you what he saw in the papers?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Murphy told me he saw the trial of Lawson was coming on.

Chairman WALSH. Did he tell you anything else he saw in the papers about the trial of John R. Lawson?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No.

Chairman WALSH. What made you suspect, if you did not hear about the trial of the Zancannelli case, and what caused Mr. Murphy to suspect that if private counsel were employed the proceedings would begin to take on the appearance of private vengeance?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The first I knew of this thing being done was the telegram you sent me from Mr. Hawkins, and the action I took at once on that I explained in full, and my subsequent talk with Mr. Welborn I have referred to several times.

Chairman WALSH. I assume Mr. Welborn agreed with the views then expressed?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. So far as the company he was connected with was concerned; but I wanted to take no chance that so far as I was concerned, as a director of the company, and there was any possibility of my influence being exerted, and I wanted to be sure that justice was being administered without interference by the company to which I was related, and so I supplemented the talk with Mr. Welborn. So, as soon as I heard that another case was coming on, and the Lawson case was the next case, as I understood it, after the case referred to in this telegram—as soon as I heard of that case, I at once arranged for Mr. Welborn to be called, and I telephoned, and after the talk Mr. Murphy had with him I had it supplemented by that letter. I was taking every means I could to make assurance doubly sure that the company should not in any way interfere with the administration of justice. In other words, just as soon as it came to my attention that interference with the processes of justice was suspected even, I acted as I have stated, and have done everything I could to prevent a recurrence of such a thing in the company in which I am interested.

Chairman WALSH. Now, coming back again to the question of your power, and the way it is being exercised, I will go back to the question; after you saw that Mr. Lawson was going to be tried, Mr. Starr J. Murphy went to the telephone and telephoned to Mr. Welborn; that is correct, is it not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Just as soon as—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Were you present?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No.

Chairman WALSH. Why didn't you go to the telephone?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is a right I have to determine for myself, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Was it to keep out of what might be called a personal touch with any of these disagreeable details of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., such as hanging a man or sending him to the penitentiary for life, or the question of compensation of a man with his eyes out, or women whose husbands were killed; those disagreeable matters? Was it to keep from having a personal contact with those things that you had Mr. Murphy do it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Not at all.

Chairman WALSH. Now, did you get a telegram, following the conversation referred to—

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. (interrupting). A telegram?

Chairman WALSH. No; a letter, which makes a complete record, which you kindly offered in evidence, and I will just read parts of it:

"We at this end [New York] are all much gratified to learn from my telephone conversation with you on Saturday that the criminal prosecutions in Colorado are being conducted solely by the attorney general and the public prosecutors, and that no counsel in any way connected with the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. have appeared in the case or are taking any active part in the prosecution."

Then I will skip down to another place:

"As soon as private interests, whether individual or corporate, participate by private counsel in the prosecutions the proceedings begin to take on the appearance of private vengeance rather than of the impartial administration of justice."

Then there is another skip, and then I will read further:

"We were therefore the more pleased to learn that you shared those views, and had already taken steps to see that they were carried out, so far at least as our company was concerned."

Now, is not that a way you have of not giving orders, but holding the influence that you have, that was well expressed in Mr. Bowers's letter of May 13, 1913, where he says: "It is well known that the Rockefeller interests are managing the affairs of the C. F. & I. Co.?" Is not that the way you exercise that power to call up and say, "That is merely suggestive," and thinking out loud that way; "but I think it might savor of private vengeance if you had a special prosecutor"; and, Mr. Rockefeller, when you were here a month or two ago you remember stated that to me, and then the man out in Colorado, who is only one of four or five, as against your seven or eight directors in New York, would say, "Yes; I have been thinking that for some time myself; in fact, I have taken steps not to have Mr. Northcutt actively in this case."

Now, does not that state what might be called a concrete case of the way you suggest your desires and the way the power possessed by the New York end is applied to the local officials?

MR. ROCKEFELLER, JR. I think not, Mr. Chairman. It has been our custom in any business relations we have had responsibility for to appoint men of high character and ability to positions of responsibility. Men of that type are not in the habit of receiving dictation from even those who appoint them. Men of that type would not take dictation; it would not be desirable that men should go into positions of such great responsibility, such as directors of great corporations, that were not large enough to be given responsibility and then to be held to that responsibility; they to form the policies and conduct the business. I think when Mr. Bowers is on the stand, you will very likely see quite plainly that Mr. Bowers, one of the gentlemen who was an officer of the company at this time, is not the kind of a man who would take dictation, but the kind of a man who, from his experience, ability, and training is able to conduct the business.

CHAIRMAN WALSH. You expect him to get quite savage when he gets on the stand?

MR. ROCKEFELLER, JR. I think it will be quite clear, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. Bowers, as is Mr. Welborn, is competent to deal with situations of importance.

CHAIRMAN WALSH. Why would you telephone out there all the way from New York about this situation where it might appear that your company was seeking private vengeance if you already had had a talk with him and he was a man of such strong character that he would not be dictated to and told you what he was going to do?

MR. ROCKEFELLER, JR. May I continue?

CHAIRMAN WALSH. Yes; I interrupted you?

MR. ROCKEFELLER, JR. That has been the way the business has been conducted, to appoint men and leave to them the responsibility of immediate action. Now, I think no better demonstration of the fact that the method which you impute to our office of dictating power is incorrectly suggested—

CHAIRMAN WALSH. I should say transmitting it.

MR. ROCKEFELLER, JR. (continuing). Is contained in the 10 suggestions which made a part of the paper which I read at the outset of my investigation; 10 suggestions made by our office to the officers of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. during the strike. I have not counted, as between those suggestions, but my guess offhand is that the minority were adopted and the majority rejected. That will indicate to you the attitude toward suggestions from our office, and that they are not adopted unless they coincide with the judgment and opinion as to what is wise of the officers on the ground who are conducting affairs there.

CHAIRMAN WALSH. Let us see if that indicates that to me. Suppose when you sent out those 10 suggestions they wrote back and gave certain statements as to what they thought the line of conduct ought to be, and that such statements were strictly in line with the continuing profits of your company, we will say, and that you followed that with a letter telling them that their letter was received and you would back up to the very end any suggestion that they made; would you not simply be transmitting the power, but nevertheless having a record that could be produced any place from which it could not be gathered whether or not you had transmitted power?

MR. ROCKEFELLER, JR. I see no connection between the remarks you have just made and the statements I made in regard to those suggestions, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. At this point we will stand adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon.

(Whereupon, the commission at 12.30 o'clock p. m., of this Saturday, May 22, 1915, adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS—2 P. M.

TESTIMONY OF MR. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, JR.—Continued.

Chairman WALSH. I noticed in one of your publications, Mr. Rockefeller, that you had stated you were making efforts to establish peace or maintain peace in Colorado, and that you were having the cooperation of certain union-labor leaders or certain union men in your efforts. Is that correct?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall the statement, Mr. Chairman. If you will point it out—

Chairman WALSH. It is not in a letter. It was in a newspaper statement. Did you write your own newspaper statements, or were they dictated, or were they written by some one else?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I assume the responsibility for everything that was sent out in my name.

Chairman WALSH. You assume the responsibility, but you do not seem to remember one that was published very shortly. Did you dictate it to anyone, or was it dictated by you, or did some one else write it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I assume the responsibility for everything that was sent out in my name.

Chairman WALSH. Did Mr. Ivy Lee write the newspaper interviews purporting to come from you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have answered the question.

Chairman WALSH. Do you assume the responsibility for that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. For everything that goes out in my name.

Chairman WALSH. I am asking for the fact. Did you write it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have covered the situation, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. You do not care to go any further?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not. I do not think it is necessary.

Chairman WALSH. I want to say, in fairness to you, that I am going to assume that the interviews were not written by you, but were written by Mr. Ivy Lee, and that you assumed the responsibility therefor.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It is not an inference that the premises justify.

Chairman WALSH. Very good; but that is the one I shall have to draw unless I can get a direct answer. Do you recall an interview in which you said you were having the cooperation of labor leaders in Colorado in establishing peace?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall it.

Chairman WALSH. Are you having the cooperation of labor leaders in Colorado in establishing peace?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. As I have stated, I have had interviews with several of the labor leaders in New York, and I think they would feel as I feel, that, although the point of view which they might have and the point of view which I might have would be different, our purpose was the same. Our method of accomplishing it might be different, but our purpose, namely, to improve the conditions generally and to improve the situation for the workers, was the same.

Chairman WALSH. You think you and Mr. Lawson to-day would have similar views as to the establishment of peace in Colorado, he being under conviction of life imprisonment in the penitentiary and you on the stand in Washington?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Chairman, I do not assume for a moment that the question is meant to be put in such a way, but it is referring so closely to matters that are now before the courts that I prefer to make no answer to that question other than the answer which I gave yesterday in a carefully prepared statement, and any other questions of a similar character I should be obliged to refer to the same answer.

Chairman WALSH. Did you write that answer?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I take the responsibility for that entire answer.

Chairman WALSH. Did you write it, or did somebody write it for you?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It is not a matter that I think is material.

Chairman WALSH. Did Mr. Lee write it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have no further answer to give.

Chairman WALSH. He is smiling.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. So are you.

Chairman WALSH. And he looks proud.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. So do you.

Chairman WALSH. I am smiling because I thought I caught him smiling in such a knowing way that perhaps I could get you to state just who did write that answer. Did Mr. Lee write it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have no further information to give on that point, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Name the labor leaders who are cooperating with you in Colorado to establish and maintain peace.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have stated, Mr. Chairman, the point with reference to the labor leaders whom I have met. I have no knowledge of their actions other than what was stated to me at the time of the meeting.

Chairman WALSH. I know the labor leaders as the ones who appeared before our commission, and I do not believe I knew any of them or saw any of them before; but I will leave them out of this question—that is, those who called upon you and whom I know by seeing. Are there any other labor leaders you have consulted or referred to in Colorado other than those that waited upon you or met with you in New York?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think that the disposition has been shown by all those in Colorado to cooperate, not only labor leaders, but others, in improving conditions.

Chairman WALSH. Did you know they are getting up a procession to march through the streets of Denver and protest against what they say is the activity of the Rockefeller interests in the efforts to convict these men out there; that that meeting is called by the citizenship of Denver for next Sunday?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did not.

Chairman WALSH. Are the labor leaders who are cooperating with you in Denver those labor men who are furnished you by the Baldwin-Felts Detective Agency?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Chairman, the cooperation to which you refer is limited to two things—the exchange of views informally which I had with certain labor leaders in New York, and my general observations from information which comes to me from various sources that the labor people and employers and people generally in Colorado are cooperating toward the bringing about of better conditions.

Chairman WALSH. But my question was, have you now in your pay, through the Baldwin-Felts Detective Agency, any laboring men that are in unions?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know of any Baldwin-Felts men who are in the employ of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

Chairman WALSH. Do you recall a letter that Mr. Bowers wrote to you toward the close of his service in Colorado, which wound up substantially with saying, "We will now go forward in the campaign of 1916 for an open shop?"

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not recall that, but it is entirely probable that that statement is in there.

Chairman WALSH. This is dated April 7, 1914, and you testified before the congressional committee. You received a letter from Mr. Bowers which concludes with this paragraph—and I will only read the one paragraph, because it covers what I want to ask about:

"I can not put into words my satisfaction, I will say boundless delight, with your magnificent and unshaken stand for principle, whatever the cost may be. Now for an aggressive warfare to 1916 and beyond for the open shop.

"Sincerely, yours,

"L. M. BOWERS."

Are you now engaged in the warfare for an open shop?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am engaged in no warfare, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Following that now, you started what you called a union educational campaign, did you not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. No; Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Did you not submit in a letter to Mr. Lee certain things that you wanted published, and you said in connection with the Colorado situation as well as with your union educational campaign?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I stated very clearly yesterday, Mr. Chairman, just the nature of that suggestion with reference to union campaign. I also stated that the suggestion, which was one of many suggestions that passed between us was never acted upon.

Chairman WALSH. When did you abandon your idea of a union educational campaign?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I never had it definitely fixed. It was simply one among other ideas.

Chairman WALSH. It was just an idea at the time you wrote the letter?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It was.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask if it is not a fact that you did abandon your union educational campaign at the time it became disclosed, after the question was put up to Mr. Welborn and after he refused to answer and submitted it to counsel, and then stated that Ivy Lee was the man sending out those bulletins. Was not that the time you abandoned the idea of having a union educational campaign?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. There was no possible connection between the two, and, Mr. Chairman, it is impossible to abandon what you have never entered upon. The campaign was never entered upon; therefore it could never be abandoned.

Chairman WALSH. When did you get the idea with reference to the time you wrote the letter?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I presume the letter would suggest quite accurately.

Chairman WALSH. When did you abandon the idea?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is all I recall about the idea.

Chairman WALSH. Did you abandon it as soon as you wrote the letter?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Never had it except as a thought that I expressed at that time in that way.

Chairman WALSH. Did not Mr. Lee understand that you were in a union educational campaign?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Chairman, I have stated that we were not in any union educational campaign.

Chairman WALSH. But when you told him the material was for use in the union educational campaign, did you afterward tell Mr. Lee that was only an idea and you didn't propose it to be carried out, or did you tell Mr. Lee about it afterwards?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think the facts appear in the letter.

Chairman WALSH. You just stand on the letter?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I stand on the letter.

Chairman WALSH. Now, if there is a later letter to that, referring to that union educational campaign, what would you say about that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would say it was a later letter.

Chairman WALSH. A later letter on it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It was a further word.

Chairman WALSH. If there was a later letter, the union educational campaign continued a little longer?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It was never undertaken.

Chairman WALSH. But the idea of the union educational campaign was still in your mind, was it?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. Later on?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't recall, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. An open shop, as defined by Mr. Bowers, and as acted upon by your company, is this: In Sunrise, Wyo., if a man comes into a nonunion camp and is found out to be a union man he is put out of the camp; you know that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is not my idea of an open shop.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you if that is the way your business is conducted in Sunrise, Wyo.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't know how it is conducted there as distinguished from other places.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I will ask if your practice has been this, that you engaged spies that went into the unions, also into your mines pretending to be miners having no connection with your company and being loyal union men, and that they told your officers the names of the men that talked about joining unions, and they were immediately told to go up the canon, which meant to leave the camp?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is a question the officers would have to answer; I am not able to.

Chairman WALSH. Did you read Mr. Welborn's testimony taken in Denver, in which he said it had been the practice of the company for years to hire detectives, who pretended to be regular miners, to get into the unions and give them the names of agitators, and they were discharged then from the service?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I read the testimony, but I do not recall that.

Chairman WALSH. You read all of the testimony of Mr. Bowers?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I did not know that Mr. Bowers had testified.

Chairman WALSH. I mean Mr. Welborn.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I read part of it; I think possibly all.

Chairman WALSH. Did you read that testimony where he said it had been the custom to hire spies for years?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If I read it all, I did; but I do not recall whether I read it completely or not.

Chairman WALSH. Do you recall the fact, if it is a fact, that that was the practice of your company?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I didn't know it to be a fact.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know now that your company hired spies that pretended to be regular union men for the purpose of giving information to the executive officers of your company, on which they acted and discharged the men?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If that is stated in Mr. Welborn's testimony, and I read all of it, I must have known it; but I don't recall.

Chairman WALSH. Is that the sort of open shop that Mr. Bowers was starting the campaign for 1913 and beyond?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Bowers can answer that.

Chairman WALSH. What kind of a campaign did you then have in mind?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. My idea of an open shop is a shop where men are employed who are members of the organization or not members, each man employed on the basis of his fitness.

Chairman WALSH. And the union men are allowed freely to join the unions?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The question of whether a man is a member of the union or not, in the open shop, would not prevent his employment as long as he was efficient and as long as the nonunion men are given the same privilege.

Chairman WALSH. And the same privilege of joining the union—would you demand that privilege for the nonunion man, too? That is, that he should not only have the right to work in the mines, but join the union if he saw fit?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. A man has a right to join a union if he sees fit.

Chairman WALSH. But would you invade his right and discharge him for exercising that right?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. If I was personally in charge, I should not.

Chairman WALSH. If it is a right that a man has, and that right was invaded by your executive officers, and you, as a director of the company, you would call his attention to that, that he was invading the right of an American citizen?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would take whatever steps I thought were necessary.

Chairman WALSH. Did you ever take any step?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I don't recall that I ever have in that direction.

Chairman WALSH. I will say that there are some other questions that I have to ask you, Mr. Rockefeller; but they are more or less of a formal nature, and I will refer them to our department of research, and they will communicate with you in writing about them.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would prefer to stay here and complete my testimony in public. Ever since this investigation has been going on—some six or nine months—these things have been before the public, and there should be a time when this investigation will finally end. I would prefer to remain on the stand indefinitely until the examination is finished.

Chairman WALSH. That is not convenient at this time for the commission, and I will say, in view of the fact that you have attended for a number of days, if you feel that these questions ought not to be asked, and will indicate that, I will take it up with the commission, and, as far as my vote is personally concerned, I will excuse you from answering.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. On that point, you have been here a number of days, and you see that Mr. Bowers declared in this letter that there was a campaign to go on in 1916 and beyond for an open shop. The commission has been given the testimony on the actual practice of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., deemed to be the open shop. In addition, that we have had this letter and other letters that I am quite sure—I will not stop to get them now—that indicate that you are carrying on a union educational campaign now. Don't you know that your foundation has started an inquiry into industrial relations generally, and we have been informed that Mr. King, who is here present, has spent a lot of time in Colorado, and in view of those facts, as far as my agreement to call you in the organization of our public hearing is concerned, I deemed that you represented, probably, the largest investors in this company, and a director in this company; that you might be called the principal side of the labor controversy. And I am now going to ask you this question: Do you realize, or is it a fact, that with vast power great responsibility would always abide?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That with vast power—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). With vast power great responsibility should always abide?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think I have always recognized fully the responsibility that rests upon me.

Chairman WALSH. Do you mind the fact that on account of the many concerns in which yourself and father have stocks and bonds, on account of the vast number of industries in which you are interested, that you possess a power, a potential power, and an influence, especially over those that are associated with you in business, much greater in extent than an ordinary stockholder or director?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I stated in the statement which I read to the commission in New York that I recognized the power of the large stockholder was out of proportion to the exact amount of his stock, and that it necessarily was great. I recognize that fact.

Chairman WALSH. And the mere fact that conditions should go on in Colorado without your protest might lead these gentlemen, like Mr. Bowers, to believe that was your will, and therefore you were morally responsible, at least, for everything that took place in Colorado, leaving aside for the present the particular instances to which attention has been called?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have undertaken to discharge my responsibility to the fullest of my ability. If I have failed it is not because of my desire not to do what is right, but because of the weakness of human nature, to which we are all subject.

Chairman WALSH. Do you not believe that the fact that you did not put any arresting hand upon the situation at any time, before Ludlow or afterwards, might be taken by these gentlemen to believe that it was your desire that that should go on, and that therefore it did go on?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. These gentlemen were operating as they thought wise, and did what their judgment prompted. They knew I was free to express my opinion, and I have expressed my opinion; they have acted on it when they saw fit and have declined to act on it when they did not see fit. They knew I had the right, as a stockholder, if I felt they were not performing their duty in the way that I thought was right, that I had the right to use any influence as a stockholder to replace them, and that right I would have used if I had thought it was necessary.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you are speaking as an ordinary stockholder, but, in view of the vast influence that you have on account of the industries over which you have potential control, weren't you in a different position than the ordinary stockholder?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am speaking of my responsibilities as I see them, in view of the position in which I am placed.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I want to ask you just one more question. Mr. Welborn is president of that company, isn't he?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And he was the direct representative, the executive representative, and the highest one, of your company in the field in Colorado?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. During the strike, Mr. Chairman, and until the end of this last year Mr. Bowers, who was the chairman of the boards, was the ranking officer.

Chairman WALSH. But before that time he was the president of your company, and after Mr. Bowers left he was in complete control, so far as rank was concerned?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. He was.

Chairman WALSH. Now he is a man, you say, of high intelligence, of fine perception, and you believe a good and kind-hearted man?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I believe so, absolutely.

Chairman WALSH. You believe so, absolutely. Now, then, at least 4,500 of your hitherto faithful employees went on strike against conditions in your industry in Colorado; they went out to live in tents in the canyons of Colorado. There was suffering and there was privation growing out of that difficulty. Many men were killed. Some of the men who were discharging their duties believed in every instance, I have no doubt, that they were rendering a very high service to the State, acting as an arm of the military power. There were many men killed, believing, whether right or wrong, that they were fighting for existence and better conditions for other men. Women and children were suffocated and their flesh burned off their bones. Children were shot through the head. The people of Colorado were arrayed against each other. The governor, whom we have heard spoken of contemptuously as "our little cowboy governor," and who was said to have been whipped into line; delegations were sent to the East to expose, as they said, the conditions in Colorado; people who took one side were denounced as defamers of the fair State of Colorado. People on both sides had their lives threatened. The governor of the State declared publicly that civil government had broken down in Colorado. I mention a few of the standing out marked events of the strife in Colorado. Now, I want to call your attention to the fact that after Ludlow, after the killings, after all I have stated to you and many other things had transpired, if you did not receive a letter from Mr. Welborn, this man of fine perceptions and a man of kind heart, in which he said:

"I appreciate very much your expressions concerning my personal welfare. My health has never been better than during the past year, and I am hardly conscious of any strain. The knowledge that we have your confidence and support makes everything else easy."

That is, all the deaths and all the disgrace and everything was easy to him, and he felt no strain. Does that suggest to you that you have a vast influence over that of the ordinary stockholder, over the men connected with you in these industries, and that you ought to raise your voice in protest if human beings were being mistreated?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, JR. I see no connection whatever between the letter and the statement you make.

Chairman WALSH. You may now examine, Mr. Weinstock.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. There was read into the record this morning, Mr. Chairman, some extracts from the report of the Commissioner of Labor for 1905, relating to the labor disturbances in Colorado. For the full information of the commission, I want to have this also included in the record—

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Weinstock, you may read anything into the record you please that—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, this is in very close relationship to that which was developed. This appears on page 340 of the report. It reads:

"Mr. Mitchell held a conference"—

"Mr. Mitchell" refers, I take it, to President Mitchell, of the miners' union—

"Mr. Mitchell held a conference with Gov. Peabody in the latter's office in the State capitol on December 6. Mr. Mitchell refused to discuss the conference, but the governor, being interviewed, said:

"The conference was very pleasant, although it was not productive of results. At its conclusion President Mitchell stated that so far as he could see there was no immediate probability of a settlement of the strike.

"Our conference began by Mr. Mitchell reciting the different aspects of the situation, and the causes that led to the strike, the eight-hour day, the mining of 2,400 pounds of coal for a ton, and the issuance of scrip. He stated that the union had furnished transportation to 1,300 or 1,400 strikers to other fields, where they secured employment; also that over 1,000 strikers who had money had paid their own transportation and had gone to work in other fields. The remainder are being provided with strike benefits as called for—single men, $5 per week; married men, $8. Mr. Mitchell declared that his organization would furnish the strikers with food, clothing, and shelter as long as the strike should last, or until they could be transported to other fields.

"In turn, I told him that I would protect the people with the same jealous care as he had said he would look after his men. I called his attention to the geographical location of Colorado, and the absolute necessity of having coal, and that I would see to it that it is produced if enough laboring men can be found to mine it. I told him his men might remain in idleness as long as he cared to board and clothe them, provided they obeyed the law and committed no act of violence. As soon, however, as they interfere with the men who care to work, that moment I will interfere with the troops and grant protection to those who care to work. I told him that I drew no distinction between organized and unorganized labor. Neither did I intend going into the merits or demerits of the controversy, but that any individual desiring to labor would have absolute and certain protection.

"I further called his attention to the fact that I had declared qualified martial law in Teller County, and that I intended doing the same in every county of the State, if necessary, to bring criminals to trial and justice. I told him if criminals could prove their innocence in civil courts they might go free, but if I could later produce evidence I would have them rearrested and send every one of them to the penitentiary.

"I also told him that if there was anything I could do within the scope of my duty to bring about an early settlement, I would lend my influence in that direction. But I give him to understand that I would not undertake to arbitrate the question at issue, as that is a matter concerning employer and employee, and not the general public. Mr. Mitchell expressed himself as well satisfied with my statement, and said he had no criticism to make in regard to my proposed action in the matter."

Now, on page 341, the following appears:

"The first cases of assault during the strike of coal miners took place in Las Animas County on December 7. In the forenoon Marshal Milton Hightower was superintending the tearing down some of the shanties of the Victor Fuel Co. at Hastings, in which some of the miners had formerly lived. He was set upon by a mob of Italian women, one of whom struck him with a clever, nearly severing one of his ears from his head.

"Thomas Jennings, an employee of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., and a brother of the superintendent of the company's mine at Berwind, had conducted several parties of men from Berwind to Primero. He was conducting a party of four on the afternoon of December 7, when they were fired upon by several unmasked men. None of them was hit by the bullets, but one of the mules drawing the wagon in which they rode was killed."

And on page 352 the following appears:

"An open letter to W. R. Fairley and Chris. Evans:

"Answering your communication which appears in the daily papers in this State, addressed to the public in general—

"We admit, as you have stated, that 'five months have now elapsed with nothing but turmoil and vexation of spirit in the hearts and minds of business men and citizens in every walk of life.' We admit, also, as stated, the result is 'manifest, not only to the coal companies involved, but business men also, who have been deprived of their only source of revenue as a result of this strike.' We also indorse heartily your statement that the public in general, in its broadest sense, is 'entitled to receive due consideration in all affairs of such vital importance to them, regardless of the source from which all this trouble has originated. We further admit, as you state, 'there has been, and is at present, a large amount of money being expended on both sides,' and that the burden of expense to maintain the strike has, by the advent of the militia, been transferred from the coal companies to the taxpayers of the whole State, and that, as you suggest, it is 'a question that offers plenty of food for thought.'

"We fail to find anything in the above citation of facts and conditions which are commendable or greatly to your credit. Up to this time we have remained neutral. We have given you a free hand to correct the conditions of which you complain, and in return you have flatly boasted your determination to make the business conditions of this community as nearly unbearable as to force the people to interfere in your behalf.

"The miners, in whom you profess so deep an interest, privately advise us of their desire to return to work, to be protected from the paid emissaries whom you have placed over them in control. And we now take this opportunity of serving notice on you of our intention, from this time on, as you have it, 'to receive due consideration in all affairs of such vital importance' from the source from which it emanated.

"We are tired of you. Your misguided followers are tired of you and your methods, and we respectfully request you to withdraw from the county, to the end that we may speedily repair the injuries we are sustaining, and have sustained, on your account. We feel that from now on we will be pardoned if we pursue in the future a policy of self-protection which will be as aggressive as in the past it has been lenient."

Chairman WALSH. Who is that from?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. "Many taxpayers and citizens."

Chairman WALSH. Does that give any place that it is from?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. "The following communication appeared in the Trinidad Chronicle-News of April 5." Gov. Peabody, interviewed on April 20, said:

"I have made no attempt to settle this strike, except that I tried to arrange a meeting between the operators and the miners, and the operators refused to attend. Previous to that time, when Mr. Mitchell came to Denver, last December, he had been greatly misinformed by his agents here as to the true situation. However he took the word of these agents without further investigation. It has not been my business to settle this strike; my only duty has been to maintain law and order in this State.

"I told Mr. Mitchell at that time that if he wished to keep his men in idleness in Colorado he was at liberty to do so, as long as they should conduct themselves in a peaceable manner, but if they did not there would have to be military interference. Mr. Mitchell asked me to keep the soldiers out, but said that if conditions should warrant such a move he would be one of the first to sign a petition for them to be sent to the scene of the disturbance.

"The whole matter has worked itself out exactly as I told Mr. Mitchell it would. I see no reason why I should take the word of Wardjon, Bartolli, and "Mother" Jones against the word of civil authorities, senators, mayors, and reputable citizens generally as to when or when not to call out the militia. I sent the troops into the disturbed districts with only one purpose in view, that of maintaining law and order. That has been my position all along, and that is where I stand to-day.

"Gov. PEABODY."

In the discussion this morning, Mr. Rockefeller, a hypothetical question was put to you, and I am not altogether sure that I clearly and distinctly understood your attitude. The question was put to you if a sheriff, disguised as a burglar, should attempt to enter your house, and to hold a pistol, as it were, to your head, would you yield or would you resist. Now, I understood, in substance, that your answer was as follows—and let me make sure that I did understand it correctly—if he came to you as a burglar you would treat him as a burglar, and if he came as a sheriff you would treat him as a sheriff; that if he came in the name of the law, you would respond in the name of the law and offer no resistance, but if he came as an everyday burglar you would treat him as an everyday burglar. Am I right?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That was, in substance, my thought, but I expressed it a little differently.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Did I catch the spirit of your answer?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes; that I would always treat the representative of the law with the respect that was due to a representative of the law, unless, as I stated, the extreme case arose where immediate death was liable to occur unless a person were to take immediate action. I stated that such action could only be justified under such circumstances such that one would feel that before a court of justice one's position would be defended.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I gather then that you are in harmony with the attitude of Dr. Goodnow, president of Johns Hopkins University, who testified on that point, when the question was put to him:

"Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Taking a concrete case, Doctor, taking the case, let us see what your counsel in the matter would lead to. The governor ordered out the militia in connection with some coal strike that took place in Colorado. There was a conflict of testimony there as to the cause and effect. The National Guardsmen maintain that they fought in self-defense; that they were first attacked by the strikers. The strikers deny that, and claim that the initiative was taken on the part of the National Guardsmen, which led to riot. Let us assume, for the purpose of our illustration and for the purpose of our analysis, that the workers are correct in their statement, and that the militia did take the initiative, and did abuse their power, and did harass and fire upon innocent people. Your advice and counsel under those circumstances to the worker is, take the result? Yield for the time being; do not attempt to take the short cut and get immediate redress, but recognize the existing authorities and abide by their demand? Let your remedy come by use of the ballot, see to it that the commander in chief that is responsible for this is either recalled, under your recall law, or is condemned by public sentiment and not reelected? Do I follow you?

"Dr. GOODNOW. Yes, sir; it seems to me that any other advice is going to lead to anarchy. It seems to me that the fundamental proposition you have to start with is that we must have peace, and we shall not recognize any such thing legally as right to restrain the constituted authorities. The right of revolution or violence or anything of that sort. We must as civilized men adopt that idea or else there is no peace for our Government.

"Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In other words, the short cut to the remedy must be condemned?

"Dr. GOODNOW. Yes, sir; as I look at it.

"Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And that it is better for a group of men to suffer from real or fancied injuries temporarily than to have chaos prevail?

"Dr. GOODNOW. Certainly. One of the many troubles seems to be the workers in the country never will gain anything by any such thing as organized violence. The people as a whole condemn it, and they can do very much better by presenting their case as forcibly as it can be to the courts, where that is possible, or to the public as a whole."

Are you in harmony with that position?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I am.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I took it upon myself, Mr. Rockefeller, to send you a letter this morning, which I desire to read into the record now, which read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 22, 1915.

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.

DEAR SIR: It has been the uniform practice of this commission to give witnesses advance copies of the questions to be asked in order that the witness may come fully prepared to make answer. It has not been the practice of individual commissioners to do this, because the individual commissioners could not anticipate the questions which they as individuals are likely to ask.

In your case, however, you have been on the witness stand often enough and long enough to make clear in my mind just the questions among others which I shall consider it essential to ask. In order to save your time and the time of the commission, I am therefore taking it upon myself to inclose an advance copy of the preliminary statement I shall make when my turn comes to question you. This statement as you note, presents, as I see it, the three prime issues involved in the controversy. Having noted that you carry with you a great mass of material, I trust that the intervening time may be sufficient to enable you to have in readiness such part of it for submission to the commission as will bear directly on the points touched upon in the inclosure, and that you will also state which of your witnesses who have been asked to attend this hearing can give further light on these same points.

Yours, very truly,

HARRIS WEINSTOCK, Commissioner.

Now, this is my statement, and before proceeding with my questions I want briefly to review the situation as I see it. This commission sat between 25 and 30 days in actual hearings, including the time spent in Denver, New York, and Washington, D. C., investigating the Colorado coal strikes, and endeavoring to find the underlying causes and to locate the responsibility for the great loss of life and property in that Commonwealth. The cost to the Nation for such Colorado investigations through this commission, I should say, has been much over $10,000. There has accumulated a great mass of testimony, much of it more or less unavoidably nonessential to the vital points at issue.

What I have been able in brief to get out of it all is that the strikers and their sympathizers make these three specific charges:

(a) That at no time after the strike could they get a hearing at the hands of the operators.

(b) That the civil and judicial machinery for obtaining such justice as the law affords was in the hands of the operators and not available to the strikers.

(c) That the operators through their agents were the first to resort to violence and that all the violence which followed was defensive on the part of the strikers and not offensive.

If these three charges have been established then it must be plain that the responsibility for the unfortunate happenings in Colorado must clearly be laid at the door of the operators and the strikers are entitled to all support and the sympathy of the American people.

Despite the volumes of testimony that have accumulated in the hands of the commission in this case, much of it is so befogged and so beclouded, the contradictions are so pronounced, there is so much evidence of bitterness and ill will on both sides of the controversy that the impartial, fair-minded investigator, such as I hope I am, finds himself in a mental maze and more or less at sea.

Speaking for myself, I have entered this Colorado investigation without any preconceived judgment or prejudices. Not any of the participants on either side were known to me. I, for one, have absolutely no object other than to find the truth, wherever the truth may be; and, speaking for this commission as a whole, it is neither for nor against any witness; it is for the facts, whatever the facts may be.

It is in this spirit, and this spirit alone, then, that in order to crystallize the issues and reduce them to their prime essentials I ask you specifically to make whatever answer you are able to make to the three foregoing charges.

If you can show that an opportunity was afforded the strikers at some stage of the dispute to get a hearing in the presence of the representatives of the operators; if you can show that the strikers had not exhausted their constitutional rights to get justice before resorting to violence; if you can show that the strikers and not the operators or the authorities were the first to commit acts of violence in defiance of law, then these three charges made against the operators must, to my mind, fall to the ground, and the burden of responsibility for all the consequential casualties and loss of property must then, as I see it, be placed at the door of the strikers.

Now, before asking you to reply to these statements, Mr. Rockefeller, I want to ask, did you receive a copy of the questions that were to be put to you by this commission before you came here?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have never received any questions in advance of coming before this commission.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. It has been the uniform practice to furnish every witness with advance copies, so they could come here prepared intelligently to answer questions; and if none was furnished in your case, there must have been some mistake about that, which I am sure our chairman will at this time be glad to explain.

Chairman WALSH. I will be glad, if I can keep the witness here. I will explain by stating you were entirely mistaken about the facts.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Perhaps I am; I will be glad to be corrected.

Chairman WALSH. I have been compelled, and you know the duty has been placed upon me by the other commissioners, to arrange with the staff for these hearings. Your duties and responsibilities elsewhere have kept you away from the minutia of attending to these hearings. Mr. Rockefeller was notified by letter in New York of the New York hearing, and a communication was addressed to him asking him to come, and he gave the public notice through the newspapers showing that he knew he was to be examined on these letters. I will not at this time stop to tell you what I would like to say, but as soon as Mr. Rockefeller is excused I will place Mr. Manly upon the stand, and he will advise you as to what has been done with reference to other witnesses. I am simply saying that, with very few exceptions, every witness has appeared upon this stand just as Mr. Rockefeller has, and the labor witnesses whom you heard testify and whom you examined, and properly examined, in your own way, were not notified in advance, any more than Mr. Rockefeller, as to what they were to be asked.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I was under the impression that our witnesses, as a rule, had been furnished with the questions asked.

Chairman WALSH. You are mistaken, and that is because you have not given attention, and were not asked to give attention, to the details of these matters that I have given.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What led me to believe that was the fact that frequently a statement was made to witnesses, "You have been furnished with a copy of the questions?" and they would answer them in rotation as they appeared. That conveyed to me the idea that it was the uniform practice of the commission.

Chairman WALSH. It was not. That was only done in a very few instances, and those questions were put after a witness got here and in many instances wanted to go into matters outside of the scope of the hearing, and I ordered the questions to be prepared and submitted to those witnesses to be followed. Of course, we would have gladly given you that information—it is available here—had we had the opportunity.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That explanation is entirely satisfactory, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. May I adjust one word? Is it true that with the summons I have received in both instances there have been several general questions stated, but I supposed the question which you directed to me was as to whether the specific questions which the examining officer was to ask on the stand had been presented. Those questions, as Mr. Walsh says, have not in any instance.

Chairman WALSH. Do you claim all the questions have been presented to any witness, Mr. Weinstock?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No; not all. But the primal questions have been submitted, because we always digressed upon them and took very wide latitudes.

Chairman WALSH. That was not done in this case.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The explanation is entirely satisfactory, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Thank you, Mr. Weinstock.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Will you proceed to answer this statement in your own way, Mr. Rockefeller?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. May I ask you, Mr. Weinstock, in regard to question A, where you say "the strikers and their sympathizers"—"What I have been able, in brief, to get out of all this is that the strikers and their sympathizers made these three specific charges."

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Do you mean men working in the mines, and who struck, or the representatives of the unions?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I take it the representatives of the union.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I ask because the representatives of the unions, so far as I know, have not met in conference with the operators; but the striking miners—as I understand it, the striking miners were present at the meeting called by Gov. Ammons on November 26, where they met three of the operators, with the governor, and discussed the situation. Briefly, it is referred to in a telegram from a number of the operators to Dr. Foster, under date of May 1, which telegram Mr. Welborn supplied in the correspondence, and which says:

"In connection with and as supplementing the operators' telegram to you last night, permit us to call your attention to the fact that on November 26 last, in the governor's office, a conference was held between three of the operators and representatives of their former employees then on strike."

That is the only conference I know of where the representatives were present.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then it is not a fact, from the answer just made, Mr. Rockefeller, that the operators, from start to finish, had absolutely refused to meet with any representatives of the striking miners?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I can only speak definitely with reference to the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., and they have always been ready, and always are ready, to meet with their men or with the representatives whom their men may elect—men working in their mines.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Can you tell us what was the result of this conference you spoke of? You say there was a conference at the office of Gov. Ammons, at which there was present three representatives of the striking miners, three operators, and the governor?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know what was the outcome of that gathering?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I have not the telegram which covers it, but my recollection was all of the points of difference, other than the recognition of the union, were covered by a suggestion made by Gov. Ammons, which he recommended to the representatives of the striking miners and to the representatives of the operators. The operators subsequently, in a letter, accepted the governor's recommendations. The representatives of the striking miners did not accept them.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And the result of the conference, then, was nil?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. As I understand it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And due to the fact that—have you the date, Mr. Rockefeller?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir; the date of the telegram that I spoke of is May 1, in which it is referred to, but the conference was held on November 26.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. November 26, and the strike was declared on September 23?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It took effect, as I understand, on September 23.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And this was about two months after the strike?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You say that conference failed because, while the operators were willing to abide by the decision, the workers were not?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The operators expressed in writing to the governor their willingness to adopt the suggestions, and the workers or the representatives of the miners were unwilling to adopt the suggestions.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Take up the second part.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. As to whether "the civil and judicial machinery for obtaining such justice as the law affords was in the hands of the operators and not available to the strikers," I am not in position to state, Mr. Weinstock. I have understood testimony has been offered on both sides. I think the fact is that the election which took place in Colorado in the fall, turning out as it did, without regard to party lines, would indicate that the ballot is still powerful in that State to represent the will of the people.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What changes—so far as you are acquainted with the political conditions there, Mr. Rockefeller—what did that election mean in effect, the last State election?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. It meant the election of a governor by a large majority who, as I am informed, whom the people of the State belated, would maintain the law of the State, and the reelection of an attorney general who had evidently proven satisfactory to the people of the State in his previous term of office.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are both of those officers of the same political party?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I think they are of two political parties.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then it was not, so to speak, a party victory?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. The election was without regard to party lines.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. It was known previously that the governor was of another political party than the previous governor? What is the answer to the third, Mr. Rockefeller, that the operators, through their agents, were the first to resort to violence, and all the violence that followed was defensive on the part of the strikers and not offensive?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I naturally regret, Mr. Weinstock, now that these are all matters of the past, to reopen a question of where the blame may be said to properly rest in regard to the beginning of the struggle, but the information, since you asked the question, the information that I have is that the beginning of violence was on the part of the strikers, when one of the camp marshals was killed.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you familiar with the date and place, can you specify?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. In a letter of September 29 to me from Mr. Bowers, which has been placed on file with the commission, Mr. Bowers says that one of our marshals, who was one of the best men in our employ, was deliberately shot by Greeks when he undertook to stop them from tearing down a bridge. That, as I understand, was the first act of violence in the strike.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then summing up your answers to the three propositions, as I gather, it is as follows: That it is not true, at no time after the strike, could the strikers get a hearing at the hands of the operators, because you pointed out on November 28—

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. (Interrupting). November 28.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (continuing). There was a conference held in the office of the governor of Colorado at which were present three representatives of the striking miners, three representatives of the operators, and that the governor submitted what was, in his judgment, a fair proposition to both sides, and that the operators were willing to accept it, but that the strikers rejected it; and, second, you point to the last election in Colorado as showing that majority rules, and that the people have actually the kind of government and officers they want; and, third—

Chairman WALSH. What is your answer to that?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Mr. Weinstock has correctly given my answer.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And in answer to the third point, which reads that the operators, through their agents, were the first to resort to violence, and the violence that followed was defensive on the part of the strikers and not offensive, by the citing of that circumstance, which, to the best of your knowledge and belief, was the first act of violence that occurred after the strike was declared, and it was an instance where a representative of the mine owners had been assaulted?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Had killed a camp marshal.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. A public official.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would not say killed; I don't know whether he was killed or not; but this says deliberately shot.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If I remember rightly I was informed, as a member of the commission, and I am not sure that my information is correct. If I am in error I am sure you will correct me, that sometime after the New York January hearing, the commission came into possession of certain correspondence that you had withheld from the commission? Will you state the facts?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That we had withheld?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know what you mean unless it is—I think I can explain that. I was asked on the stand at New York for certain correspondence, and I was asked for other information. I directed my office to secure and send to the commission the information as asked for. Within the last couple of weeks one of the members of the office force, to whom the matter had been referred, came to me and said that from a further examination of the files there had been discovered an envelope in which certain letters were filed, which I had taken to Washington at the time of the hearing before the congressional commission last April. Those letters I had myself placed in that envelope. They were letters in regard to conditions in Colorado. That envelope when I returned to New York had been filed separately, instead of the letters being put into the general files. Through this accident, therefore, those letters, which were properly included in the request by the commission, were not forwarded with the others, but immediately that they turned up, the man in the office who had had charge of the matter, had copies made and sent them at once to the commission, writing a letter explaining the cause of the error, and apologizing for his oversight in the matter.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The question of mine accidents was touched upon by the commission this morning, Mr. Rockefeller. Is there such a thing as a State report, or does your company keep reports of the number of accidents which have occurred in the mines in the State of Colorado?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I could not answer definitely, Mr. Weinstock, but I assume there must be a State report.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know as a matter of fact, Mr. Rockefeller, whether the number of accidents in the mining company in which you are interested are greater or less than the other coal companies in the State of Colorado?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I do not know from definite knowledge.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Is that information available, do you know?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I would think it could be ascertained from the officers of the company. My impression has always been that the number of accidents, taken the year as a whole, was less than in other mining camps.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Was less in the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Yes, sir; that is my impression; but I would not like to state it as a fact.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I think that this also has been brought out in the testimony, that so long as the National Guards, who were called out in Colorado during the strike, did not permit so-called strike breakers to enter the mine there was no trouble; that the violence began when the National Guards of Colorado permitted the so-called strike breakers to enter the mines and to take the jobs vacated by the strikers. Now, can you tell us whether the Federal troops, when sent there by the Federal authorities, did or did not protect nonunion workers brought into the mines?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. I understand that the Federal troops protected any worker in the mines.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then the Federal troops did precisely what the State troops did—that is, they protected all workers whether or no they were unionized or nonunion?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. That is what I have understood. I have no reason to think otherwise.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The chairman calls my attention to the fact that he was under the impression that the order was issued, I think, by the President, that the protection should be limited to the men living in Colorado, but if my memory serves me right, I am under the impression that that order was modified, and that there was no limitation put upon the protection of the workers. Have you any information on that point?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. My recollection was that men who applied at the mining camps were to be put to work, but the men who applied at the Denver office would not be sent down to the various mining camps. That is the only restriction that I recall, Mr. Weinstock; but I couldn't speak from a definite knowledge on that subject.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is all, Mr. Rockefeller.

Chairman WALSH. Just a question or two. I believe, though, that I said we would let you leave at 3 o'clock, and I believe I will. You may be excused now.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Jr. Thank you, very much. May I before leaving hand you two telegrams which have been received to-day, unsolicited, one from J. F. Welborn and one from W. W. Wilson, which you may put in the record if you see fit. I have copies made of the originals, and if you will allow me to keep the originals I will leave the copies with you.

Chairman WALSH. I thank you. You will be excused.

I would like to make a little statement in the record, by agreement with Mr. Weinstock, so that there will be no misunderstanding on the question that arose on the opening question by Mr. Weinstock to Mr. Rockefeller. It is to this effect, that public hearings of the Commission on Industrial Relations are managed by a subcommittee, called a committee on public hearings, of which Mr. Weinstock is not a member. When that committee was created the members of the commission were all invited, all notified that they should give all of the time they possibly could to attendance upon that committee, and to get up the plans and details of the public hearings, and that the chairman repeatedly urged upon the members of the commission, including Mr. Weinstock, that they should attend the committee on public hearings and give all the time they possibly could from their other affairs to the management of the details of these public hearings, the suggestions to witnesses, the summoning of witnesses, and the topics on which the witnesses were to be examined.

That is a statement made, of course, by agreement.

TESTIMONY OF MR. IVY L. LEE.

Chairman WALSH. I might make the announcement that these hearings will have to be continued over into next week, and therefore there will be no further witness called this afternoon. Mr. Lee will be the last witness.

Your full name, I believe, is Ivy L. Lee?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You reside in the city of New York now?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And you have appeared before this commission before?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And have given your employment and your history up to this time in a general way?

Mr. LEE. I have.

Chairman WALSH. I am going to address your attention to some particular questions, Mr. Lee. In a letter of June 10, 1914, from Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., to you, Mr. Rockefeller writes as follows:

"Several points in my memorandum, however, could well even more appropriately be used in the letter from Gov. Ammons to President Wilson, which you are proposing to prepare as soon as the major's memorandum reaches you, which I hope will be very shortly."

Again, on June 11, 1914, you wrote Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr.:

"I am inclined to think that at the moment the best thing we can do would be to give the letter from Gov. Ammons to President Wilson our attention, and I hope that we can accomplish something very soon."

On July 2, 1914, the letter submitted here—the copy of the letter—shows that you wrote to Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., as follows:

"With reference to the letter for Gov. Ammons, I am not entirely satisfied with the draft I prepared, and I am making certain amendments to it. I sent out a draft for discussion, but will get it into shape in a day or so, and then send you a copy of it. The idea—and it is a difficult idea to execute—is to prepare a very brief statement of the case which will command public attention rather than to make any very comprehensive statement of the situation."

Do you recall those quotations as having been contained in those letters?

Mr. LEE. I do.

Chairman WALSH. The major referred to in the first letter, I understand, is Maj. Boughton—Maj. Edward C. Boughton?

Mr. LEE. Edward J. Boughton, I think.
Chairman WALSH. Edward J. Boughton?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And Maj. Edward J. Boughton was a major in the Colorado Militia?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. He was the advocate general who presided over the military court at Trinidad that dealt with the strikers that were brought before him?

Mr. LEE. I do not know as to that.

Chairman WALSH. You have learned that since you have been in this publicity business, have you not?

Mr. LEE. I do not recall having that fact in my mind, Mr. Walsh.

Chairman WALSH. Was there not much written in the so-called "facts" in regard to the struggle for industrial freedom about Maj. Boughton and his military court?

Mr. LEE. I do not doubt the fact, but I do not recall it in my mind at the moment.

Chairman WALSH. You do not recall now that Maj. Boughton was advocate general and presided over the military court?

Mr. LEE. All I know of Maj. Boughton is that he was advocate general of Colorado. What he did I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. Did you not read the report more than once made by the military commission presided over by Gen. Boughton, with reference to the Ludlow massacre?

Mr. LEE. Is that the general pamphlet report that was made by the militia?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir; it was a report made by the military commission.

Mr. LEE. I read a report.

Chairman WALSH. It was the military commission consisting of Maj. Edward J. Boughton, Capt. Danks, and Capt. van Cise.

Mr. LEE. I read a report. I do not know whether that is the one you have in mind or not.

Chairman WALSH. When did you first meet Maj. Boughton?

Mr. LEE. I met him in New York. I do not recall the exact date. It was some time around the middle of June.

Chairman WALSH. Well, now, Mr. Rockefeller's first letter to you is dated June 10. It says:

"Several points in my memorandum, however, could well even more properly be used in the letter from Gov. Ammons to President Wilson, which you are proposing to prepare as soon as the major's memorandum reaches you, which I hope will be very shortly."

Was there a letter designed to be sent by Gov. Ammons to President Wilson before you saw Maj. Boughton?

Mr. LEE. I can tell you what happened. Mr. Greene, of Mr. Rockefeller's office, saw Maj. Boughton—

Chairman WALSH. Who was Mr. Greene?

Mr. LEE. He was one of Mr. Rockefeller's staff.

Chairman WALSH. Was he also a director at that time of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You took his place, I believe?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir. Mr. Greene told me that Maj. Boughton was in New York representing the governor, and that the governor had been very much concerned over the misunderstanding which prevailed in the East concerning various phases of the strike situation. He said that Maj. Boughton was extremely anxious to get suggestions as to how the facts might be brought more adequately to public attention, and it was through Mr. Greene that I made the first suggestion to Maj. Boughton that it might be a good idea if the governor of Colorado should write a letter to the President of the United States, and also to the governors of the other States, setting forth the situation as he saw it.

Chairman WALSH. You made that suggestion to whom?

Mr. LEE. I made that suggestion to Maj. Boughton through Mr. Greene before I met Maj. Boughton.

Chairman WALSH. Where was Maj. Boughton when you had this conversation with Mr. Greene, if you know?

Mr. LEE. I do not know. I think he was in New York.

Chairman WALSH. He was in the city of New York when you had this talk with Mr. Greene?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Proceed.

Mr. LEE. Then Mr. Greene, I think, gave that suggestion to Maj. Boughton, and Maj. Boughton told Mr. Greene—so Mr. Greene told me—that he did not know how the governor would regard such a suggestion, but that he, Maj. Boughton, would be glad to consider it if I would prepare any concrete illustration of the idea I had in mind as to the kind of letter which might be written, and which would do good. In order to get the governor's ideas—

Chairman WALSH. Be good for whom?

Mr. LEE. For the general cause.

Chairman WALSH. Not for the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. LEE. The Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., Mr. Chairman, no less than other coal companies in this situation, and also the State of Colorado, had been accused of practically equipping a private army, and that was, we all felt, a reflection on the State as well as the company.

Chairman WALSH. Were you a resident of the State of Colorado?

Mr. LEE. Was I?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. LEE. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Had you ever been in Colorado up to that time?

Mr. LEE. No, sir; so it was felt, in the common interest, that that point should be cleared up, and that was a point about which Maj. Boughton was very keen, and he said the governor was very keen—that that misunderstanding should not exist. Therefore, I made the suggestion to Maj. Boughton, through Mr. Greene, and I had word from Mr. Greene that Maj. Boughton would send the memorandum of the points we had in mind to Gov. Ammons, the governor of Colorado. Some days after that I met Maj. Boughton—

Chairman WALSH. How many days after?

Mr. LEE. I do not recall, but about a week, I should think. Maj. Boughton went over the situation with me and told me how utterly ineffective he had found any efforts he could devise to produce a better understanding in the East of things in Colorado. He told me then that perhaps it would be better to issue an open statement to the American people on the subject, such a statement to be issued by the governor.

Chairman WALSH. When was that, in reference to that first conversation with Mr. Greene?

Mr. LEE. I think within a week. I do not recall the exact dates. It made no special impression on my mind, because it was the kind of suggestion that is constantly being made to men in public and private life to take up.

Chairman WALSH. To governors?

Mr. LEE. To governors and to high officials in public life generally.

Chairman WALSH. That is, to have the publicity men of corporations draft letters?

Mr. LEE. To have private citizens suggest—

Chairman WALSH (interposing). You were doing this as a private citizen?

Mr. LEE. I was doing this—certainly, as a private citizen.

Chairman WALSH. Not as publicity agent for the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. LEE. Certainly not.

Chairman WALSH. All right; go ahead.

Mr. LEE. But I would have done it just as promptly in that capacity. I make no apology for the suggestion. It so happens that the suggestion was not carried out. It was submitted to Maj. Boughton. A draft of the memorandum was prepared and sent to him for his consideration, and Maj. Boughton has since told me that he went no further with the suggestion. The suggestion was not acted upon. But I insist that the suggestion was a perfectly proper one, and under similar circumstances I would make it again.

Chairman WALSH. It is customary, I believe you say, to do that?

Mr. LEE. It is customary for private citizens in all ranks of life to make suggestions to public officials.

Chairman WALSH. Would you have made that suggestion to Maj. Boughton or to Mr. Greene to be conveyed to Maj. Boughton if you had not been working for the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. or for Mr. Rockefeller, I believe?

Mr. LEE. Very likely I would not. I probably would not have come in contact with him. If I had come in contact with him as a private citizen and as a friend, and if he had asked me, I would have made him any suggestions that occurred to me in the same way.

Chairman WALSH. When did you see Maj. Boughton to find out what became of the draft and memorandum which you had made for the governor?

Mr. LEE. I saw Maj. Boughton for a few moments when I was in Colorado last August. I do not know whether the subject was mentioned then or not, but I also saw him in New York a few weeks ago, since this statement of yours appeared in the press, and since Mr. Rockefeller made his answer to that statement.

Chairman WALSH. Did you write it for him?

Mr. LEE. Mr. Chairman, that is a confidential matter between Mr. Rockefeller and myself.

Chairman WALSH. You wrote it for him, didn't you, Mr. Lee?

Mr. LEE. I decline to answer.

Chairman WALSH. On what ground?

Mr. LEE. On the ground that it has nothing to do with industrial relations.

Chairman WALSH. There is nothing about it that would tend to incriminate you or anything of that sort?

Mr. LEE. Of course not. It is simply a confidential matter between Mr. Rockefeller and myself concerning which I feel Mr. Rockefeller is the only person empowered to speak.

Chairman WALSH. Maybe if I would give you briefly my view, probably you would have a different opinion. An attempt is being made by this commission to fix the actual responsibility for industrial conditions in Colorado and elsewhere, and Mr. Rockefeller, being a director and possessing the vastly greater influence which he enjoys or possesses on account of the extent of his investment, is being considered as one of the factors, if not the largest factor, in the employing situation so far as the employers are concerned; and in attempting to fix that responsibility it had occurred to me that it is very important to know whether the action taken by Mr. Rockefeller is really his action and the statements made by him are really his statements, or yours, for instance.

Mr. LEE. Mr. Chairman, as to that I can only tell you that I have never known a man to be more careful and more conscientious and more painstaking about scrutinizing every line that went out over his name, whether he wrote it or whether somebody else assisted in writing it or not. I have had more or less experience with such matters, and I never knew of a man in his class doing that. Any statement Mr. Rockefeller makes to the public you may be sure he has gone over it with a fine-tooth comb.

Chairman WALSH. He likewise thinks very well of you, and has stated it, Mr. Lee. But my point was that in fixing the actual responsibility we would like to know whether the statement is Mr. Rockefeller's or some one else's.

Mr. LEE. Mr. Rockefeller has stated as clearly as words can state that every statement he puts out is his statement.

Chairman WALSH. Then you decline to answer the question. I will put it to you plainly. Is it not a fact that the statement read to this commission as a preliminary statement by Mr. Rockefeller was written by you and not by Mr. Rockefeller?

Mr. LEE. As Mr. Rockefeller has answered that question himself, I will say that it was written by him.

Chairman WALSH. That is, that he dictated it to a stenographer?

Mr. LEE. He did.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you if this statement with reference to the proposed letter from Gov. Ammons to the President, which was published in the newspapers as the statement of John D. Rockefeller, jr., was not in reality written by you and not by Mr. Rockefeller?

Mr. LEE. Let me get clearly just what you mean? What statement do you refer to?

Chairman WALSH. The statement published in the newspapers with reference to the drafting of a letter for Gov. Ammons to be sent to the President, and perhaps the governors of other States.

Mr. LEE. Do you mean Mr. Rockefeller's published statement?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. LEE. That was his statement.

Chairman WALSH. Was it written by you?

Mr. LEE. I decline to answer.

Chairman WALSH. We will pass that question for the present. The matter of compelling or attempting to compel you to answer that question will be taken up at a later date by the commission, and if we conclude to do it, we will issue a process hereafter.

Mr. LEE. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that if the commission as a commission decides that they would like to have that question answered, I have no doubt Mr. Rockefeller would be willing to let me answer it.

Chairman WALSH. Suppose we were to do that, how would you get into communication with Mr. Rockefeller?

Mr. LEE. I think he has left the city for the moment.

Chairman WALSH. Very well; we will take the matter up later.

Mr. LEE. Personally I have not the slightest objection to answering it, but I do not believe that in my confidential relation to Mr. Rockefeller I have a right to answer it without his permission.

Chairman WALSH. We will take it up later, but we may forego the question as not being of sufficient importance.

Would you be kind enough to show me the memorandum which Mr. Rockefeller referred to in his letter of June 10, which he said he thought could well even more appropriately be used in the letter to Gov. Ammons?

Mr. LEE. That was supplied to you by Mr. Rockefeller.

Chairman WALSH. I thought he took it back, because I tried to find it and could not find it.

Mr. LEE. It was a clipping from the New York Times. I would be glad to get you another copy.

Chairman WALSH. I think possibly I can get it. You got that memorandum from Mr. Rockefeller, and did you use it in the draft of the proposed letter which it was intended to have Gov. Ammons sign?

Mr. LEE. I should be glad to supply the commission with a copy of the draft which I sent to Maj. Boughton. I think you will see, then, there is very little relationship.

Chairman WALSH. I am asking you now, because I haven't it at hand. Have you the draft you sent to Maj. Boughton?

Mr. LEE. I do not have it here.

Chairman WALSH. Where is it and how can you supply it?

Mr. LEE. It is in my office in New York.

Chairman WALSH. It is in your office in New York?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Of course, not having it at hand, I can not examine you about it.

Mr. LEE. I will state very definitely that there is very little relationship between them.

Chairman WALSH. You did not include, then, in the draft of the letter for Gov. Ammons but very little of the memorandum that was sent to you by Mr. Rockefeller?

Mr. LEE. I do not recall that I included any of it.

Chairman WALSH. But the memorandum itself will show?

Mr. LEE. Certainly.

Chairman WALSH. And you say you will send that to us?

Mr. LEE. I will be very glad to.

Chairman WALSH. On June 11 Mr. Lee wrote Mr. Rockefeller: "I am inclined to think that at the moment the best thing we can do will be to give the letter from Gov. Ammons to President Wilson our attention, and I hope we can accomplish something very soon."

When did you see Maj. Boughton with reference to the time you had this talk with Mr. Greene?

Mr. LEE. I can't give you any more information than I gave you a few moments ago.

Chairman WALSH. You think it was about a week afterwards?

Mr. LEE. I think it was about the middle of June.

Chairman WALSH. That would take us to June 16 or 17—along there. Now, where did you first meet Maj. Boughton?

Mr. LEE. I met him at the Waldorf, in New York.

Chairman WALSH. And who was present?

Mr. LEE. Maj. Boughton and myself.

Chairman WALSH. Did you meet by appointment?

Mr. LEE. We did.

Chairman WALSH. Had you ever met Maj. Boughton before?

Mr. LEE. No.

Chairman WALSH. Did you meet him in your capacity as a private citizen, or did you do it as part of the compensation that was afterwards paid you by Mr. John D. Rockefeller, sr.?

Mr. LEE. I was introduced to Maj. Boughton by Mr. Greene, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Where?

Mr. LEE. Well, Mr. Greene made the appointment for me to see Mr. Boughton.

Chairman WALSH. Well, Mr. Greene introduced you.

Mr. LEE. He made the appointment for me to meet him at the Waldorf.

Chairman WALSH. Did he introduce him individually?

Mr. LEE. He told me Maj. Boughton would like to have me meet him.

Chairman WALSH. Then, what did he tell you?

Mr. LEE. He asked me if he could make an appointment for me to call on Maj. Boughton.

Chairman WALSH. And you told him all right?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And you never saw Maj. Boughton before in your life?

Mr. LEE. No.

Chairman WALSH. Didn't Mr. Rockefeller write you to Philadelphia and suggest that you should meet Maj. Boughton?

Mr. LEE. Why, I don't recall that, whether he wrote me such a letter or not, Mr. Chairman. He may have.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you were writing bulletins at that time, setting forth what you said was a history of the struggle for industrial freedom in Colorado, and you were actually engaged in that work in Philadelphia at the time this was going on?

Mr. LEE. I don't recall whether any bulletins had been issued up to that date or not.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you if you did not write a letter to Mr. Rockefeller on June 13, setting forth certain information and concluding with this paragraph:

"I have written Mr. Greene, asking him to make an appointment for me to see Maj. Boughton next Tuesday afternoon, and I shall be glad to communicate with you upon my arrival in New York and arrange as to when and where I shall meet you."

Mr. LEE. Now, Mr. Chairman, those are two distinctly different events and occasions that you are confusing in that paragraph. If you will read the whole of that letter, you will see there is a reference in it to an invitation which Mr. Rockefeller had extended to me to spend the night at his house; and that reference to meeting him was with reference to that invitation, and—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). I will read the whole letter.

Mr. LEE. I hope I am correct as to that point.

Chairman WALSH. You are absolutely correct. It refers to that and a number of other things, but I will read it all:

"DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: The various documents you have sent me have been received, and I am giving them careful consideration."

What were the documents

Mr. LEE. I can't tell you at this moment, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Were they matters to be published in a campaign, to be designated as a union educational campaign?

Mr. LEE. They were not.

Chairman WALSH. How do you know, if you don't remember what they were?

Mr. LEE. Because there was no union educational campaign.

Chairman WALSH. Oh! Were they documents with reference to publicity about the strike of the workmen of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. LEE. They may have been documents with reference to the strike.

Chairman WALSH. What did you think Mr. Rockefeller meant in his letter when he said we can use this Stevenson article in connection with our Colorado—or our union educational campaign? What did you think he meant?

Mr. LEE. I think he meant that that was a document that might be considered with a view to distributing copies of it. I certainly never took it as meaning beyond that, because I never distributed any copies of it.

Chairman WALSH. What did he mean by your union educational campaign?

Mr. LEE. I can't tell anything on that point more than what Mr. Rockefeller said himself.

Chairman WALSH. What did you think he meant—that he meant there was a union educational campaign then going on?

Mr. LEE. There was none going on at the time, and I didn't think there was or was not going to be one. Mr. Rockefeller and I had discussed a great many questions with reference to publicity, and with reference to the wisdom or unwisdom of issuing publicity material concerning various questions relating to unions.

Chairman WALSH. Was the subject discussed?

Mr. LEE. It was; but nothing ever came of it.

Chairman WALSH. Is Mr. Rockefeller also a man that is very careful about what he writes?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Careful in his phrasing?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Then, when you saw him, and never having heard of the union educational campaign before, did you ask him what he meant in that letter by referring to an educational campaign?

Mr. LEE. I don't recall that circumstance, Mr. Chairman. That letter was written practically a year ago. All I know is that nothing of the kind was done. We talked of such a plan, but never did anything with it.

Chairman WALSH. Well, you sent out a great number of bulletins after that, did you not—those Colorado bulletins?

Mr. LEE. I sent out no bulletins.

Chairman WALSH. Well, your office boy or stenographer.

Mr. LEE. I prepared bulletins under the direction of the committee at Denver, which were sent out by the Colorado operators.

Chairman WALSH. Did you actually write the bulletins and send them out from an office in Philadelphia to Denver, to be mailed from Denver?

Mr. LEE. Most of the bulletins, Mr. Chairman, were quotations from documents written by other people. Some of the material in some of the bulletins was written by Mr. Welborn, some written by others. I, as a matter of fact, actually wrote very little of it. I edited it, and saw to its being printed, and sent to Denver. No question about that.

Chairman WALSH. That is what I meant. I asked you the question to direct your attention to these bulletins and how they were sent out.

Mr. LEE. I think I testified very fully on that point before the commission in January.

Chairman WALSH. I was just asking you that to make clear another question about a matter that I was going to ask you later on. You were engaged in June, 1914, in writing, to a very small extent, and putting together what had been written by Mr. Welborn and others, and editing it and printing it, and either you or your office sent it out to Denver, what is known now as the Colorado bulletin.

Mr. LEE. I think now we understand each other.

Chairman WALSH. Understand each other perfectly. So, hereafter, as I refer to that as your sending out those bulletins—

Mr. LEE (interrupting). Well, I won't accept the description.

Chairman WALSH. Well, then, we will go over that each time. I will continue with the letter:

"The various documents you have sent me have been received, and I am giving them careful consideration. I have not received the series of articles by your father published in the World's Work. I remember reading them at the time, but shall be glad to read them again, as I would, of course, now go over them much more carefully."

When were those published in the World's Work?

Mr. LEE. I don't recall. I should say about 1905.

Chairman WALSH. You were not connected with either of the Rockefellers at that time?

Mr. LEE. No.

Chairman WALSH (reading.):

"I remember reading them at the time, but shall be glad to read them again, as I would, of course, now go over them much more carefully."

"The information from Mr. Easley is most interesting. I feel that about the third bulletin we should get out would be one summarizing the present strike situation in Colorado. It was with that idea in mind that I wrote the letter to Mr. Welborn."

"The printing of the bulletins is going ahead, and we expect to get the first bulletin out next week. There has been some delay owing to the fact that I want to get a typographical arrangement which is exactly as I think it should be."

You say there, "We expect to get the first bulletin out next week." Who were "we"?

Mr. LEE. Well, that referred to my office.

Chairman WALSH. You and the stenographer and the office boy and the other employees of the office?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And at that time you were expecting to get a bulletin out yourself right there, weren't you?

Mr. LEE. Mr. Chairman, I think you understand just exactly how that was done. There was never any thought of issuing any—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). I am trying to save time by agreeing upon a term. I am going to refer to this as your "getting out the bulletins," with that understanding that you had in that letter.

Mr. LEE. If you add the proviso that every bulletin was sent out by the Denver operators I will agree to it.

Chairman WALSH. That is, that you furnished the mailing list yourself to the Denver operators, and the bulletins were shipped from your office to Denver, and sent out to persons included in the mailing list that you furnished?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir. I don't want to take up time—

Chairman WALSH. I do want to get it straight. Were they not sent out in folders addressed by you, or your staff, from Philadelphia to Denver?

Mr. LEE. No; they were sent out in boxes, separately from the envelopes. The envelopes and the bulletins were sent out separately, the idea being that in the event that the Denver operators saw anything in any of the bulletins after they were printed, that they were not prepared to stand for in full, that they would not then waste the time of inclosing them in the envelopes.

Chairman WALSH. Did you send them proofs?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir; when any bulletin involved a statement which was not a quotation from some other document. In cases where it was a mere quotation, as some of the bulletins were, I sent no proof.

Chairman WALSH. Now, when those envelopes which you sent to Denver—those envelopes which you sent to Denver already had the address on them?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH (reading). "The printing of the bulletin is going ahead and we expect to get the first bulletin out next week. There has been some delay owing to the fact that I want to get a typographical arrangement which is exactly as I think it should be. After the first one is gotten exactly as we want it, the following ones can go ahead on just the same lines. My plan is that after we get this started, to get one out about twice a week for some months. The accumulative effect of this should be valuable."

"I have written Mr. Greene asking him to make an appointment for me to see Maj. Boughton next Tuesday afternoon, and I shall be glad to communicate with you upon my arrival in New York and arrange as to when and where I shall meet you. I am looking forward with pleasure to spending Tuesday night at your home."

"Very truly, yours,

"IVY L. LEE."

Now, that is the whole letter.

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, did you meet Maj. Boughton at the time indicated in that letter?

Mr. LEE. As far as I recall, I did.

Chairman WALSH. And you had never met him before?

Mr. LEE. No.

Chairman WALSH. And did you have an expense account with the Rockefeller interests?

Mr. LEE. I did.

Chairman WALSH. You had had some cash advanced to you for expenses?

Mr. LEE. I had.

Chairman WALSH. And out of that expense account you paid your expenses to New York at that time?

Mr. LEE. I should be glad to send you an itemized statement of expenses incurred in the publicity campaign.

Chairman WALSH. I am asking you about your recollection about that one time, did you pay your expenses to New York at that time out of this expense money which had been advanced to you by the Rockefeller interests?

Mr. LEE. I do not recall, because I was in New York on other business at the various times, and if I was there on other business it would not have been charged to Mr. Rockefeller.

Chairman WALSH. You say you have furnished the itemized account?

Mr. LEE. No, sir; but I should be very glad to.

Chairman WALSH. Please furnish us with the itemized account of your expenses, or the expenses of this publicity campaign?

Mr. LEE. I should be very glad to do so.

Chairman WALSH. And that will show whether or not the expense of this trip to New York was paid out of that?

What I am trying to locate, if possible, is that everything you did, to be plain about it, in connection with Maj. Boughton, you did as a representative of Mr. Rockefeller or the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

Mr. LEE. I will not contest that point for a minute.

Chairman WALSH. I thought you said a while ago that you thought what you did was as a private citizen?

Mr. LEE. I didn't mean to maintain that in any exclusive sense. I am perfectly willing to concede that.

Chairman WALSH. All right, I will leave that point.

Then as representative of Mr. Rockefeller, or the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., you met Maj. Boughton?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir; and he knew of my relations with Mr. Rockefeller; I didn't meet him on behalf of Mr. Rockefeller.

Chairman WALSH. You met him as the representative of Mr. Rockefeller, but not on behalf of Mr. Rockefeller?

Mr. LEE. I met him with full knowledge on Maj. Boughton's part as to my relations with Mr. Rockefeller.

Chairman WALSH. What did you meet him for?

Mr. LEE. To talk over the Colorado situation.

Chairman WALSH. What for—to get up the letter for Gov. Ammons?

Mr. LEE. I don't recall.

Chairman WALSH. Now, remember, this was the 13th, and on the 10th Mr. Rockefeller wrote and sent you some points in a memoranda that he thought would be good for a letter of that kind, and you wrote him on the 11th and said you thought the best thing he could do was to give the letter from Gov. Ammons to President Wilson his attention, and that you hoped to accomplish those things soon; and then you came down on the 19th to meet Maj. Boughton. What did you meet him for?

Mr. LEE. To talk over the whole Colorado situation. You must remember at that time I had only been connected with the Colorado situation for about two weeks and knew very little about it, and the primary thought was that I could learn from him things that would be helpful; naturally I expected to discuss with him this very letter.

Chairman WALSH. Was not that the chief thing and the only thing that you came down for?

Mr. LEE. I would not say so.

Chairman WALSH. Now, just explain anything else that you wanted to see Maj. Boughton about, in greater detail, if you can. Any particular thing that you wanted to see him about at that time.

Mr. LEE. I can not add anything to what I said a few minutes ago on that subject.

Chairman WALSH. Was there any other person present in your interview with Maj. Boughton?

Mr. LEE. No.

Chairman WALSH. You had been advised, I believe you said, that he was a direct representative of the governor of Colorado?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Did you read this letter, or has your attention been called to the letter by Mr. Bowers that they had finally whipped the governor into line?

Mr. LEE. I did not.

Chairman WALSH. You didn't know that letter was in existence?

Mr. LEE. No, sir; I did not.

Chairman WALSH. Did you know from anybody connected with the Rockefeller interests that they had the governor in line?

Mr. LEE. No such suggestion was made to me.

Chairman WALSH. Was there anybody else present during your conversation with Maj. Boughton at the Waldorf Hotel?

Mr. LEE. No.

Chairman WALSH. Where was the conversation had?

Mr. LEE. In Maj. Boughton's room.

Chairman WALSH. What did you say to him about this letter? I wish you would just first give us the substance of the conversation that you had with Maj. Boughton, as well as you can remember, right from the beginning to the end.

Mr. LEE. Mr. Chairman, I can not do that. I made the suggestion to Maj. Boughton, through Mr. Greene, and I probably repeated it to him in our conversation, that I thought it would be a wise thing for the governor to do.

Chairman WALSH. To do what?

Mr. LEE. To write such a letter or make such a statement to the public.

Chairman WALSH. To the public or to the President?

Mr. LEE. Both. I thought it would be wise for the governor to take some specific action, and in his official capacity to get his advice before the American people on the subject, and I may have suggested various ways to Maj. Boughton of doing it. I don't recall, but I suggested anything that occurred to me at the moment.

Chairman WALSH. How long were you there with Maj. Boughton?

Mr. LEE. I don't recall.

Chairman WALSH. Can you remember the substance of a single thing which you said to Maj. Boughton or that he said to you?

Mr. LEE. Not beyond what I have stated.

Chairman WALSH. If my memory serves me right, you have not stated anything. Can you remember the substance of any statement you made to Maj. Boughton, or he to you, in that conversation at the Waldorf Hotel?

Mr. LEE. A good deal of that conversation with Maj. Boughton was his talking to me about the conditions in Colorado as he saw them. I have heard so many people talk on that subject that I can not tell specifically what he said to me.

Chairman WALSH. Did you write down what he said to you?

Mr. LEE. No; I did not.

Chairman WALSH. Did you make any notes of what he said to you?

Mr. LEE. I did not.

Chairman WALSH. Did you see him any more in the city of New York?

Mr. LEE. I may have; I don't recall.

Chairman WALSH. Do you remember whether you did or not?

Mr. LEE. I just answered that question.

Chairman WALSH. You may have seen him; but you don't recall having seen him in New York again?

Mr. LEE. I may have; I don't recall.

Chairman WALSH. Did you go back to Philadelphia?

Mr. LEE. Probably; I live there.

Chairman WALSH. Do you remember when you went back?

Mr. LEE. I do not.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you think that was in the middle of June; now, when you got back to Philadelphia did you go to work on the letter for Gov. Ammons?

Mr. LEE. Just when I went to work on such a letter, I don't recall.

Chairman WALSH. Did you go to work on the letter after you got back to Philadelphia, to Gov. Ammons?

Mr. LEE. Some time thereafter I went to work on a suggested draft of a letter which might have been used by Gov. Ammons if he had so desired.

Chairman WALSH. And for that work you were paid by Mr. John D. Rockefeller, sr., afterwards?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you prepared one draft before July 2, and that is the one you wrote about with reference to the letter from Gov. Ammons, "that I am not entirely satisfied with draft I prepared, and am making certain amendments to it." Did you make an amendment to the first draft?

Mr. LEE. No other draft was sent.

Chairman WALSH. You said you were not entirely satisfied with the draft you had prepared, and was making certain amendments to it. Did you make amendments to that draft?

Mr. LEE. I had the draft before me, and was thinking about it, and was trying to improve it, but it so happened that I never sent another draft or did anything further with the matter.

Chairman WALSH. You never did anything further with the matter?

Mr. LEE. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You sent it to Maj. Boughton afterwards?

Mr. LEE. I sent it to Maj. Boughton. I wrote the letter to Mr. Rockefeller concerning the draft which I referred to in one of these letters as sent out to Maj. Boughton for discussion.

Chairman WALSH. You sent out the draft you made on July 2 to Maj. Boughton?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Where was he located then?

Mr. LEE. Denver.

Chairman WALSH. Did he acknowledge receipt of that?

Mr. LEE. I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. Did you send him a letter inclosing that?

Mr. LEE. I did.

Chairman WALSH. Have you a copy of that letter?

Mr. LEE. Probably.

Chairman WALSH. Have you seen it lately?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Will you send Mr. Manly a copy of that letter?

Mr. LEE. Gladly.

Chairman WALSH. Can you state the substance of it?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Please do so, and maybe we can get along without it.

Mr. LEE. That I inclosed a draft of letter or statement that might be made to the public, and suggested that if the governor approved of it and sent it out that it would be a good idea for him to send copies of it to the governors of the other States, and suggested that the matter be very carefully considered, and if any revision was made, that it be made in the direction of greater brevity, and that copies of it when they were sent out by the governor should also be given to the press. That was the substance of the letter.

Chairman WALSH. Then, you did not make any reference in that letter to sending it to the President by Gov. Ammons?

Mr. LEE. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. I see that your letter of June 11 here, "I am inclined to think that at the moment the best thing we can do would be to give the letter from Gov. Ammons to President Wilson our attention."

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir; and you will remember I told him that I had my interview with him, and he suggested that probably a statement to the American public would be better.

Chairman WALSH. And so you changed your mind about how you would address that letter, and you did not send him any draft to be addressed to the President?

Mr. LEE. I did not.

Chairman WALSH. The suggestion, then, was that the draft of that letter should be sent to the public and to the governors of other States?

Mr. LEE. That is right.

Chairman WALSH. Is that correct?

Mr. LEE. That is right.

Chairman WALSH. Were you informed at the time you had this interview with Mr. Boughton that in addition to being a major in the State Militia of Colorado he was the attorney—he was a lawyer, was he not?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. That he was the attorney by the year for the metalliferous miners?

Mr. LEE. I do not recall, Mr. Chairman, any such information having been given to me.

Chairman WALSH. Did you know that, or do you know it now?

Mr. LEE. I know it now. That is, I say I know it—

Chairman WALSH. You have heard his testimony, probably?

Mr. LEE. I know it in a general way. I could not testify to it.

Chairman WALSH. And that certain of the directors of the company that employed him annually were also directors in certain of these coal companies that were involved in the strike in southern Colorado?

Mr. LEE. I did not know that.

Chairman WALSH. You did not know that?

Mr. LEE. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You have not learned that yet, if it is a fact?

Mr. LEE. No.

Chairman WALSH. After this letter was prepared, or this draft of a letter was prepared, you sent it to Maj. Boughton?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Who else did you send it to?

Mr. LEE. I might have sent a copy of it to Mr. Welborn.

Chairman WALSH. Did you?

Mr. LEE. I say I may have.

Chairman WALSH. What is your best recollection at this time?

Mr. LEE. My best recollection is that I did.

Chairman WALSH. Who else?

Mr. LEE. That is all, as I recall it.

Chairman WALSH. You sent one to Maj. Boughton and one to Mr. Welborn, who was at that time the president of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Did you receive any letter from Mr. Welborn acknowledging receipt of that?

Mr. LEE. I do not recall, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Did you receive a letter from Maj. Boughton acknowledging receipt of that?

Mr. LEE. I just told you I did not recall. If I did I will be glad to give you a copy of it.

Chairman WALSH. Will you please look it up and see if you did receive such a letter from Maj. Boughton?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. You say you did not know until probably a month ago what Maj. Boughton did with that draft of the proposed letter which you sent to him?

Mr. LEE. That is true.

Chairman WALSH. That is true?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And you inquired of Maj. Boughton what he did with it for the first time after this letter containing the reference to it was submitted into the record of this commission and given wide publication throughout the United States?

Mr. LEE. That is true.

Chairman WALSH. Was Gov. Ammons out of office at that time—I take it that he was, because he went out the 1st of January. That is correct, is it?

Mr. LEE. So far as I know.

Chairman WALSH. Have you had any communication by wire, telephone, or mail with Gov. Ammons with respect to this matter?

Mr. LEE. I have not.

Chairman WALSH. Within the last month?

Mr. LEE. I have never had any communication of any kind with Gov. Ammons.

Chairman WALSH. Was your communication with Maj. Boughton as to what he did with the draft of the proposed letter a matter of correspondence, or was it done over the telephone, or how?

Mr. LEE. It occurred in New York. Maj. Boughton was in New York about two weeks ago, I think, and called me on the telephone and told me he was there. I called on him and asked him if the statement which had been made in the press by Mr. Rockefeller on this subject—and the substance of the information on this point was necessarily supplied by myself—I asked him if there were any amendments to that necessary, according to his recollection, that should be made. He told me it was substantially correct.

Chairman WALSH. Was that all you said to him, in substance?

Mr. LEE. I had a general conversation with him.

Chairman WALSH. About this particular matter?

Mr. LEE. That is all I said to him.

Chairman WALSH. So really all you said to him was, "Did you see all that was published?"—

Mr. LEE (interrupting). I beg your pardon; I did ask the specific question. I said: "What did you do with that memorandum?" He told me, "I did nothing with it."

Chairman WALSH. Did he say that he ever communicated it to Gov. Ammons?

Mr. LEE. He said he did not.

Chairman WALSH. Did he say he ever communicated the substance of it to Gov. Ammons?

Mr. LEE. He said he did not; and never communicated it to Gen. Chase, his superior officer.

Chairman WALSH. It was intended, when you gave it to him, that he was to take it to Colorado, and he was to give it to Gen. Chase, of the National Guard, and Gen. Chase, of the National Guard, was to give it to Gov. Ammons, and that Gov. Ammons was to put it in a letter, and that he was to send that letter to the governors of the other States and publish it throughout the United States?

Mr. LEE. Mr. Chairman, there was no intention. There was a suggestion to Maj. Boughton. Maj. Boughton, in his communications with the governor, had to report to and communicate with him through his superior officer, and so told me. I assumed that was correct. There was no intention of any kind. It was a suggestion such as one man makes to another, perfectly frankly and openly, and, as I say, I would do it again under similar circumstances.

Chairman WALSH. I will try to get that a little more definitely. You made a suggestion which was in a letter—that is, you made a suggestion to Maj. Boughton at the Waldorf Hotel—that you would prepare a draft of a letter which you desired him to have the governor of Colorado sign, if he was willing to do it.

Mr. LEE. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Please give the substance of your recollection of what you said to Maj. Boughton.

Mr. LEE. Maj. Boughton said the governor was very anxious to get his views before the public, and he wanted some effective way of doing it. I said one way would be to write such a letter as I suggested. His suggestion was, "If I will send you a memorandum"—or this is a combination of the conversations between Mr. Greene and myself and Maj. Boughton—"If I will send you a memorandum, will you prepare a kind of draft that you have in your mind?" There was no suggestion on my part that we desired Maj. Boughton to convey such a suggestion to the governor—nothing of that kind.

Chairman WALSH. Not even after you met at the Waldorf Hotel, there was no thought of that kind in your mind?

Mr. LEE. Not beyond what I have stated.

Chairman WALSH. It was your suggestion entirely about the letter, was it not?

Mr. LEE. It was.

Chairman WALSH. Given to Mr. Greene, and your suggestion was that a letter should be written by Gov. Ammons addressed to the President?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. That was your first suggestion?

Mr. LEE. Quite right.

Chairman WALSH. You followed that by saying that you thought it would be a good thing to do, and that you would prepare a draft of it. Did you not tell him—did you not convey that suggestion to him—that a draft was to be made for the governor to sign to be sent to the President?

Mr. LEE. I never put it that way; no, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Very good. Did you retain a copy of the draft of the proposed letter which you sent to Maj. Boughton?

Mr. LEE. I did.

Chairman WALSH. Is that one of the things which you say you have at your office?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And you will supply that to us?

Mr. LEE. Gladly.

Chairman WALSH. You can do that when you go back Monday, if you go back Monday?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Is that correct?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. As publicity agent, what was your occupation at that time or your relationship to Mr. Rockefeller and his business or his investments?

Mr. LEE. You know my main relationship at that time was with the Pennsylvania Railroad—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Yes; I understood that, and I do not care to go into that phase of it, but in doing this work what relationship did you bear to Mr. Rockefeller, either to Mr. Rockefeller or any of his companies?

Mr. LEE. Mr. Rockefeller put me into relationship with Mr. Welborn as chairman of the committee of Colorado operators, to advise with them and assist with them in getting their side of the Colorado situation before the public. Out of that relationship with Mr. Rockefeller, as we got better acquainted, other matters developed and I gave Mr. Rockefeller suggestions with reference to other of his interests.

Chairman WALSH. What kind of a publicity campaign were you intending to operate for Mr. Rockefeller in June of 1914?

Mr. LEE. I was not intending to operate any publicity campaign for Mr. Rockefeller.

Chairman WALSH. Who for?

Mr. LEE. The Colorado operators.

Chairman WALSH. I will read you from one of your letters dated June 11—one paragraph:

"I also acknowledge receipt of check for $2,000 applicable to expenses of organizing the publicity campaign. I understand that this is to be utilized as working capital and to be returned at your pleasure or when the scheme reaches a point where such working capital is not required."

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir; that is the Colorado campaign.

Chairman WALSH. How is that?

Mr. LEE. That is the Colorado campaign, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. That was just an advancement, you claim, of $2,000, and the combined operators of Colorado at that time were supposed to reimburse Mr. Rockefeller for that and pay for all the work that you should do?

Mr. LEE. They were to reimburse me for such expenses as I incurred, and then when the operators supplied me with funds to pay the bills incurred that money was to be returned to Mr. Rockefeller.

Chairman WALSH. Now, one letter following that—the letter of June 11—when did you enter into the employ of Mr. Rockefeller properly?

Mr. LEE. You mean exclusively?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; exclusively.

Mr. LEE. January 1.

Chairman WALSH. Of what year?

Mr. LEE. This year.

Chairman WALSH. January 1 of 1915?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And up to that time, all the work that you did was done for the operators?

Mr. LEE. All the work except, as I stated a few moments ago, such suggestions as I gave Mr. Rockefeller in reference to his general interests. There were a few matters that I handled for him with reference to some of his special interests.

Chairman WALSH. As a matter of fact, now, Mr. Lee, didn't you simply go to work for Mr. Rockefeller to do anything that he wanted you to do—that is, properly—in a publicity way, and you were starting a publicity campaign and that Mr. Rockefeller, sr., paid you out of his own private funds $8,000 for all the work done up to January, and that as far as you know he had never been reimbursed by any other interest in Colorado, and you have never received payment for what you did from any other source?

Mr. LEE. The whole of the expenses connected with the publicity campaign were repaid to me from Colorado, and my information is that the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. has, on behalf of the other operators in Colorado—what arrangement they have I do not know—had paid the greater portion of my salary up to January 1.

Chairman WALSH. On July 1—I see a letter which you have addressed to Mr. Rockefeller, as follows:

"DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: I have your letter of June 27 and shall take pleasure in placing upon our mailing list the names you suggest. The sermon of Dr. Hillis I am delighted to have, and shall want to make use of it."

Were you going to make use of that Dr. Hillis sermon for Mr. Rockefeller or the combined operators of Colorado?

MR. LEE. I do not recall; but I do recall that we made no use of it.

Chairman WALSH. It contained misstatements, didn't it?

MR. LEE. I do not recall the sermon, Mr. Chairman. I know—for what reason I can not say—that we did nothing further with it.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Rockefeller sent the sermon to you and suggested you circulate it?

MR. LEE. That may be.

Chairman WALSH. And the sermon did contain a statement such that the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. offered to deal with the unions collectively—were willing to recognize unions and deal with them collectively through the officials, didn't it?

MR. LEE. That may be. I heard that brought out yesterday. I did not know it up to that time.

Chairman WALSH. Have you seen the sermon since?

MR. LEE. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. As a matter of fact, it is being sent out now from some place in Detroit?

MR. LEE. So I understand, but we have nothing to do with it at our office.

Chairman WALSH. Have you advised those people that it contained misstatement with reference to your company—the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.—in reference to the offer to recognize the unions; that that was the whole fright, and because of the blood shed and other trouble that came about?

MR. LEE. I have done nothing in reference to Dr. Hillis's sermon.

Chairman WALSH. Did you see the published public statements from time to time denying the statements made in that sermon and published in—

MR. LEE (interposing). I did not. The point is, Mr. Chairman, we did absolutely nothing with that sermon, so that we have no responsibility for it. This was private correspondence between Mr. Rockefeller and myself and nothing whatever was done with that suggestion, so we had no responsibility for Dr. Hillis's sermon.

Chairman WALSH. But it was sent to you with the suggestion to send it out?

MR. LEE. I did not send it out.

Chairman WALSH. You stated in reply that you would be delighted to have the sermon, but that no use was made of it?

MR. LEE. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. It was not a private letter. It had reference to work that you were doing for these corporations?

MR. LEE. Well, it was what I call a private letter.

Chairman WALSH. Have you been advised that this Hillis sermon is being sent out from Detroit to the same mailing addresses that your bulletins are being sent to?

MR. LEE. I have not been so advised.

Chairman WALSH. Did you give that mailing address to any other person—those addresses?

MR. LEE. I have no recollection of having done so. I am almost sure it was not done. I heard the point brought out yesterday and my recollection is clear, but I am not prepared to testify definitely. I would be happy to inform you of it if I could, but I will say this, that I have a definite impression that nothing was done with that sermon and that that mailing list was not given to any such parties.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have any correspondence with the Cadillac Motor Car Co., of Detroit, or any of its officers?

MR. LEE. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have any correspondence with a man named Leland, in Detroit?

MR. LEE. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know who he is?

MR. LEE. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know anyone in Mr. Leland's office in Detroit?

MR. LEE. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. I will read one of the letters a little further in this matter. Perhaps I had better read the whole letter, because you might want to call for it. It is a letter which was written July 1, at the time you were getting up these bulletins, and at the time your pay was supposed to be from the operators in Colorado. When I say "supposed," I do not mean to reflect on what you said, but in view of the fact that Mr. Rockefeller first paid it and then was reimbursed by the combined operators. July 1 took in that period before you went to work definitely with Mr. Rockefeller?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir.

(The chairman thereupon read the letter referred to.)

Chairman WALSH. Now, the Rockefeller Institute had no connection with the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., so far as you are informed, did it?

Mr. LEE. No, sir; none.

Chairman WALSH. What were the interviews that you had with Mr. Harry Wheeler—were they in reference to the Rockefeller interests?

Mr. LEE. Mr. Wheeler and Mr. Rockefeller had had a talk in reference to enlarging the scope of the publications of the National Chamber of Commerce, called the Nation's Business. Mr. Rockefeller asked me to see Mr. Wheeler and to get his ideas in order that I might give Mr. Rockefeller my views as to whether it was desirable to go further with the plans which he and Mr. Wheeler had discussed. I saw Mr. Wheeler and others in connection with the matter, but never made a report to Mr. Rockefeller, because, as I told him verbally, I never had become convinced that the plan was quite practicable.

Chairman WALSH. What was the plan?

Mr. LEE. The plan was to enlarge the scope of the publication of the National Chamber of Commerce of the United States—a paper called the Nation's Business.

Chairman WALSH. How to enlarge it—to put money into it?

Mr. LEE. To enlarge the size, and, of course, the number of issues, and the question as to whether or not it would be desirable to lend the chamber sufficient working capital to enable them to put the matter on a sound and paying basis.

Chairman WALSH. Who was considering lending the money?

Mr. LEE. Mr. Rockefeller and Mr. Wheeler had discussed such a proposition, a proposition to finance such an enlargement. I do not know that I can add anything more to that.

Chairman WALSH. Where was the money to come from—from Mr. Rockefeller's funds?

Mr. LEE. If Mr. Rockefeller was to finance it, it was to come from Mr. Rockefeller's funds, naturally.

Chairman WALSH. We will stand adjourned at this point until Monday morning at 10 o'clock. I believe, Mr. Lee, you stated it would be very inconvenient for you to come back Monday?

Mr. LEE. Yes; Mr. Chairman, if you will let me have until Tuesday—

Chairman WALSH. Very well; you may come back Tuesday, and we will put Mr. Bowers on the stand Monday.

(Thereupon, at 4.30 o'clock, the commission took an adjournment until Monday morning at 10 o'clock a. m.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Monday, May 24, 1915.—10 a. m.

Present: Chairman Walsh, Commissioners Weinstock, Harriman, and O'Connell.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Bowers.

TESTIMONY OF MR. L. M. BOWERS.

Chairman WALSH. What is your name, please?

Mr. BOWERS. L. M. Bowers.

Chairman WALSH. Where do you reside, Mr. Bowers?

Mr. BOWERS. Binghamton, N. Y.

Chairman WALSH. And how long have you lived in Binghamton?

Mr. BOWERS. In the county all my life; 48 years in Binghamton.

Chairman WALSH. What is your occupation?

Mr. BOWERS. Business affairs.

Chairman WALSH. What is your present occupation?

Mr. BOWERS. I am on the advisory staff of Mr. John D. Rockefeller.

Chairman WALSH. That is, John D. Rockefeller, sr.?

Mr. BOWERS. Senior; yes.

Chairman WALSH. Now, what, generally speaking, are your duties on the advisory staff of Mr. John D. Rockefeller, sr.?

Mr. BOWERS. I represent him in several corporations.

Chairman WALSH. What are they?

Mr. BOWERS. I am president of the Cleveland Steel Co. I am on the executive board of the American Shipbuilding Co. I am connected with the Great Lakes Towing Co.—

Chairman WALSH. I did not quite catch that; will you kindly speak a little louder?

Mr. BOWERS. I am president of the Cleveland Steel Co. and have been for 15 years, I think, and on the board of the American Shipbuilding Co.—

Chairman WALSH. That is, the board of directors or the executive board?

Mr. BOWERS. Executive board and board of directors also, and the Great Lakes Towing Co.

Chairman WALSH. Great Lakes Towing Co.?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes; those three things I am in particularly.

Chairman WALSH. Are you connected now with the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. BOWERS. In no respect.

Chairman WALSH. You have been in the employ of John D. Rockefeller, sr., for something like 26 years, I believe?

Mr. BOWERS. No; this is my twentieth year.

Chairman WALSH. Your twentieth year?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What were your relations with John D. Rockefeller, sr., before you went into his employ?

Mr. BOWERS. I had no acquaintance with him whatever.

Chairman WALSH. Where I got that information—you testified, I believe, Mr. Bowers, before the congressional committee that was investigating affairs in Colorado, I believe?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Where did you appear before that commission?

Mr. BOWERS. In the senate chamber in Denver.

Chairman WALSH. In the senate chamber in Denver?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you if this question was not asked you [reading]:

"What are your relations with Mr. Rockefeller?" And you said, "A hired man. Have been for nearly 26 years.

"Question. In what capacity?

"Mr. BOWERS. In a variety. I have been in a great many different affairs."

You just estimated it six years too much?

Mr. BOWERS. No; it is a mistake. They left out one or two questions and my replies.

Chairman WALSH. Yes. Well, what were they, then?

Mr. BOWERS. Well, that should not be 26 years. That is a mistake.

Chairman WALSH. It should have been 20 years?

Mr. BOWERS. Well, it should not have been 20 years then. It is not 20 years yet.

Chairman WALSH. Well, was the balance of the answer right [reading]:

"In what capacity?

"Mr. BOWERS. In a variety. I have been in a great many different affairs."

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And you were hired by John D. Rockefeller, sr.?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. About 20 years ago, as I understand from one of your letters, you had an understanding with Mr. Rockefeller, sr., as to what your attitude was toward laboring people?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And you and Mr. Rockefeller, when he put you in there, he had a perfect understanding of what your attitude was?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. During all these years?

Mr. BOWERS. I think so. He knew what my attitude was at that particular time.

Chairman WALSH. At that particular time?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Let's get at your attitude; you had some thought about the uplifting of labor at that time?

Mr. BOWERS. I did.

Chairman WALSH. And the handling of labor matters generally?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You believed in what is called an open shop?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have any trouble on the Great Lakes with your employees?

Mr. BOWERS. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Any strikes?

Mr. BOWERS. Never.

Chairman WALSH. And you believed in the principles that were announced by John D. Rockefeller, jr., on the witness stand before this congressional committee, I believe, for which you wrote him a very commendatory letter?

Mr. BOWERS. This committee here?

Chairman WALSH. No; the congressional committee.

Mr. BOWERS. I don't know that I passed on that; possibly I did. Mr. Walsh, you asked me his attitude before the committee?

Chairman WALSH. Before the congressional committee. You recall his statement before the congressional committee being to the effect that he believed in a great principle—that is, the great principle being the right of the individual American workman to work for whomsoever he pleased without the dictation or control of labor unions, and that so far as he was concerned he was willing to spend the entire Rockefeller fortune to establish that right?

Mr. BOWERS. Whatever the letters say; I won't take your time unless you wish. I assent to all that I wrote.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you were out there as chairman of the executive board of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. BOWERS. Not at first.

Chairman WALSH. What were you at first?

Mr. BOWERS. Vice president.

Chairman WALSH. During the strike you were putting into effect the principles or the attitude that you had toward the organization of workingmen or attempting to put it into effect?

Mr. BOWERS. I had nothing whatever to do with the operation of the strike directly or indirectly.

Chairman WALSH. You had nothing to do with the operation of the strike directly or indirectly?

Mr. BOWERS. Not at all.

Chairman WALSH. You paid out all of the money for arms, ammunition, and mine guards?

Mr. BOWERS. I paid out nothing, because that was made up by a committee of operators of about 90 mines, and I was not a member of the committee and had no conversation with them directly, and some I had never seen.

Chairman WALSH. But you did pay the money that was paid by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. BOWERS. Every operator paid their proportion of whatever it was.

Chairman WALSH. But you were the individual that signed the checks, to whoever was to get it, to get the money from the bank to pay for the mine guards and the ammunition or whatever was done?

Mr. BOWERS. No, sir; our checks totaled perhaps $500 to $1,000 a day.

Chairman WALSH. And among those were the checks that you signed to pay for the ammunition and mine guards?

Mr. BOWERS. Never one of them.

Chairman WALSH. You were the treasurer, were you?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. How did they get the money out of the treasury?

Mr. BOWERS. I presume through the cashier's department, by the assistant treasurer.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have to sign the vouchers to draw the money from the treasury?

Mr. BOWERS. Never. That is, rarely, except in the absence of the assistant treasurer.

Chairman WALSH. State to the record, in detail, what your duties were in Denver as treasurer.

Mr. BOWERS. Largely, as the actual treasurer, was to sign documents that were official or legal, where it required the signature of the treasurer, that they regarded it as necessary for the signature of the treasurer rather than the signature of the assistant treasurer.

Chairman WALSH. How much money was paid out by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. for arms and ammunition prior to September 13, 1913?

Mr. BOWERS. I have not the slightest idea.

Chairman WALSH. Did you hear it stated in the office, you were there?

Mr. BOWERS. I never did.

Chairman WALSH. Were you a member of the board of directors also?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What action did the board of directors take toward buying arms and ammunition?

Mr. BOWERS. Nothing at all that I know of.

Chairman WALSH. What action was taken by the board of directors, or executive committee, with reference to paying men that acted as mine guards, or served in the militia?

Mr. BOWERS. As far as the mine guards were concerned, that was part of the machinery of the mine all of the time that I know of.

Chairman WALSH. Did you pay them?

Mr. BOWERS. I did not pay them; I presume they were authorized to be paid.

Chairman WALSH. Were they authorized to be paid by the executive committee of whom you were in charge?

Mr. BOWERS. Not at all.

Chairman WALSH. Who did actually authorize the payment of money for mine guards and ammunition?

Mr. BOWERS. They were undoubtedly presented to the auditor and indorsed by him.

Chairman WALSH. Who was that?

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. J. H. Writer was the auditor, and undoubtedly, I don't know. I can't say from personal knowledge that they went through there, but they undoubtedly did, but I never saw one of them or heard of them. If you will allow me to say a word here—

Chairman WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. BOWERS. On account of very severe illness in my family for a couple of years, I did as little as I could of the actual work, to save any nervous or actual strain. I divorced myself absolutely, as far as I could, from that strike, as far as operation and handling of the annoying things; I had nothing to do with it.

Chairman WALSH. You had nothing to do with it?

Mr. BOWERS. Nothing to do with it.

Chairman WALSH. You heard these letters read into the record from you?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir; I stand back of them.

Chairman WALSH. I might comment and say some of them sound very virile.

Mr. BOWERS. I acknowledge all those letters.

Chairman WALSH. Before I take them up?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir; before you take them up.

Chairman WALSH. Would not that first letter, wherein you state that yourself and the other officers would allow your bones to bleach in the mountains of Colorado—would at least leave the impression that you, with the officers, were taking very vigorous steps?

Mr. BOWERS. We were mighty interested, I tell you, Mr. Walsh.

Chairman WALSH. That would leave the impression that you were taking part in it?

Mr. BOWERS. Will you allow me to explain my attitude?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir; certainly.

Mr. BOWERS. They had in that section of the State about 14,000 men in the coal mining business; nonunion men, largely. I think we had in the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. perhaps 600 union men, men that had been in the unions for 10, 20, or 25 years. Never a question raised in regard to those men in the world, whether they were union or nonunion, their nationality or religion, or anything as far as I know.

Chairman WALSH. You may proceed.

Mr. BOWERS. After a year or two of agitation by speeches and gatherings, especially in southern Colorado, there were added to the 600 men perhaps four or five or six or seven hundred more; and perhaps when the strike was called ten or twelve or thirteen hundred union men were there, and there were ten or twelve or thirteen thousand nonunion men.

I want to explain my letter. I regarded that as an attempt on the part of the leaders outside of the State to come into the State and induce or persuade or possibly force the unionization of the coal mines in Colorado. My ideas of independence, of American independence, were such that I believe in individual independence in respect to labor.

Chairman WALSH. Oh, yes.

Mr. BOWERS. My letter speaks of what I would do to stand against that sort of thing, as I saw it and understood it. Let me tell you, Mr. Walsh, if there had been twelve or thirteen thousand union men employed there, and there had been ten or twelve or thirteen hundred nonunion men that went into that camp with leaders from outside of the State and attempted to drive out the union men, I would have said that I would have stood against them until my bones were bleached as white as chalk; I would have taken just the same position with union miners as with nonunion.

Chairman WALSH. So that what you did in Colorado was due to just your idea of American citizenship and your desire to see that the men that were in your mines did not have their rights as American citizens invaded by outsiders?

Mr. BOWERS. Or anybody else.

Chairman WALSH. So that it was not a partial feeling toward the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., or anything of that sort?

Mr. BOWERS. Not a particle; no more than I would in any concern I was interested in.

Chairman WALSH. I want to read you this letter, Mr. Bowers. You have had very strong notions on this question of open shop and closed shop all of your life, have you not?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And you have tried to put them into effect in the various organizations that you have managed for Mr. Rockefeller?

Mr. BOWERS. No; excuse me there. I have never interfered with any of the organizations that existed when I went there or prevented the enrollment of any individual in any organization for collective bargaining, or any number of them, or in any trade-unions. I never interfered with men joining a trade-union in my life in the slightest.

Chairman WALSH. You had many talks with Mr. Welborn as to how the thing was running out there?

Mr. BOWERS. As I said before, as little as I possibly could.

Chairman WALSH. You had many?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes; sure.

Chairman WALSH. And he told you during all the years you were away from there it was his custom to hire spies—that is, he would hire men to go in and pretend they were regular workmen, but in reality they were detectives working for the company and paid by the company—and when he found out a man was trying to organize men into the union he would report it to Mr. Welborn, and this man would be discharged. You knew that, Mr. Bowers?

Mr. BOWERS. No, sir; it is not true.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Welborn did not testify to that in Denver before this commission?

Mr. BOWERS. He may have testified to it.

Chairman WALSH. It is not true you knew it?

Mr. BOWERS. Let me explain.

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BOWERS. When I went there I found there were men employed by the coal companies—

Chairman WALSH (Interrupting). Just the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., please.

Mr. BOWERS. That were employed by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. as spotters, or whatever you call them.

Chairman WALSH. Spies.

Mr. BOWERS. I don't care what you call it; there were some there, and I took up the matter and said, "Why is that thing done?" And they give this reason and that reason and another. I said, "That is not my attitude toward this matter." I am going to be somewhat in conflict, you will observe, with the officials of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

Chairman WALSH. With the testimony of the officers of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. BOWERS. Well, yes. I do not believe in that sort of thing unless there is some reason for it, to have men in there to do violence or to mislead or try to control the miners.

Chairman WALSH. How do you mean by "mislead"? The doing or saying of something that does not contain elements of truth?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't think you want me to go into those things.

Chairman WALSH. Go ahead. I probably interrupted you.

Mr. BOWERS. These men—suppose, for instance, I was interested in a proposition, and I was very much interested in it, and I had a lot of associates, as I do, and if I thought it was a good thing for them, and if I thought it was a good thing for me, and if I thought it was a good thing for the company, and in general for the common good, I would be mightily inclined to talk about it and would not want to be interfered with; and if one of my miners thought unionism was good and the best thing, I could not allow myself to say no, if there was no viciousness.

Chairman WALSH. What would you think of the leaders of the miners' union if they got some one to go to Mr. Rockefeller and pretend that he was as loyal as you to him and held sacred the same general principles of conduct among men, and got Mr. Rockefeller to send him out to take a position on your executive board, but in reality he was employed by the Western Federation of Miners; that is the one I see by your letter—

Mr. BOWERS (interrupting). The American Federation of Miners.

Chairman WALSH. You first wrote about the Western Federation of Miners; maybe that is a mistake.

Mr. BOWERS. The United Mine Workers of America, I meant.

Chairman WALSH. Now, suppose in reality this man that went and got this employment from Mr. John D. Rockefeller, sr., was in their employ and got paid every day for what he did, and he sat on your board and reported back and forth, what would you think about it—that it was an honorable or proper proceeding?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't know that I really get the seed of your statement.

Chairman WALSH. I will try to state it again; suppose a man had gone to Mr. John D. Rockefeller, sr., and induced him to believe—

Mr. BOWERS (interrupting). A secret employee from the United Mine Workers of America?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; and assured Mr. Rockefeller that he held the same principles that you held with reference to the conduct that should exist between men working in any industry, and that he secured employment from Mr. John D. Rockefeller, sr., and got his confidence to such a great extent that he put him on the executive board with you, but in reality that man was in the employ of the United Mine Workers of America, and was just trying to find out the inside methods of your organization and trying to hurt it and wreck it in any way he could; would you think that was an honorable proceeding?

Mr. BOWERS. That would be a matter for Mr. Rockefeller and the gentlemen who had the negotiations with him and for him to settle.

Chairman WALSH. You would not think it was wrong morally or ethically?

Mr. BOWERS. He would be a deceitful trickster.

Chairman WALSH. A trickster?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes; to do that thing—to impose on Mr. Rockefeller and to work himself into a position there for the purpose of spying and doing dirty work.

Chairman WALSH. You would not approve of anything like that?

Mr. BOWERS. Not for a moment.

Chairman WALSH. Are you still on the board of directors of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. BOWERS. I am not.

Chairman WALSH. Now, the man that would get the trickster to do that dirty work he would be dirtier than the man himself, if he paid him money for doing it; if there could be degrees of that sort of thing?

Mr. BOWERS. I won't pass judgment on moral conduct.

Chairman WALSH. All right. You said it would be deceitful and tricky.

Mr. BOWERS. It would be from my standpoint; I do not like a deceiver anywhere.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I call your attention—In these corporations that you are in now, are you still working hard and aggressively to keep the workers in the organization free and independent from outside dictation?

Mr. BOWERS. I would rather that you put that free and independent from inside dictation. I certainly am.

Chairman WALSH. I will read you a letter of April 7; perhaps I had better read that in full before I interrogate you.

Mr. BOWERS. I remember that pretty well.

Chairman WALSH. I will read all of this, because I want to ask you about so many paragraphs; that was after the congressional investigation and after the horror at Ludlow, and after the conflict between the military and the strikers and their organization; you wrote this letter April 7, 1914?

Mr. BOWERS. To whom?

Chairman WALSH. This was dated April 7; this was before Ludlow, the same month that Ludlow happened. First, what were you doing in Binghamton, N. Y., then?

Mr. BOWERS. I presume I was resting.

Chairman WALSH. Were you still in the employ of the company?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Were you still chairman of the executive committee?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Perhaps I had better get that straight; what was the date of your retirement?

Mr. BOWERS. December 28.

Chairman WALSH. 1914?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Now, on April 7, I see you wrote as follows [reading]:

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., April 7, 1914.

DEAR Mr. ROCKEFELLER: You have rendered a service for the entire country in your testimony before the congressional committee that can not be over-estimated for its value just at this period in our industrial history. As the writer anticipated, these biased political wirepullers utterly failed in their attempt to trip you, and every word you said simply brought out clearer and clearer your genuine American loyalty to stand against all comers, to protect every man who seeks employment in the enterprise in which you have a commanding interest in the enjoyment under the Stars and Stripes, of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

I believe what you gave to the committee, and the position you so ruggedly maintained against the assaults of Dr. Foster, will do more for the cause of the millions of laboring men than all the efforts of social reformers, in as many years.

It will set thousands of faltering employers to thinking and inspire confidence and spur them to activity in opposing the schemes of political, social, and religious demagogues, who are in the clutches of the labor union leaders, whose aim is to shut the open shops.

I can not put into words my satisfaction, I will say boundless delight, with your magnificent and unshaken stand for principle, whatever the cost may be. Now for an aggressive warfare to 1916 and beyond for the open shop.

Sincerely, yours,

L. M. BOWERS.

Chairman WALSH. Now, were the "political wirepullers" who were trying to trap Mr. Rockefeller the Members of the Congress of the United States that were charged by the whole body with the duty of investigating the situation in Colorado?

Mr. BOWERS. I would not answer that question definitely like that. There are a great many contributing features in the political atmosphere, and so forth, not only the congressional committee, but otherwise, that undoubtedly prompted me to write a pretty strong letter.

Chairman WALSH. Well, did the "biased political"—

Mr. BOWERS (interrupting). Excuse me. His testimony before that committee is what I referred to. If I should write another letter to Mr. Rockefeller to-day, I should repeat that letter in some respects, leaving out the political aspects. I should commend his testimony on his examination here the same as I did then.

Chairman WALSH. Now, were these biased political wirepullers, as you call them, the members of the special committee on mines and mining, being a part of the Congress of the United States, and especially charged with the duty of investigating your affairs in Colorado?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't think it would be proper for a private citizen to hold up or name or select that committee, even if I thought it was that committee, as the political wirepullers. I don't think I ought to answer that question that way. I don't think I want to charge any committee directly with that.

Chairman WALSH. Would you, then, circulate a private opinion that you would not express publicly?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes. That is private correspondence after long years of intimate relations in business, and was never expected to be publicly presented here, but like any other private correspondence between gentlemen and business friends—a partnership, you might say.

Chairman WALSH. A partnership? Do you say that any correspondence is private that has to do with the conduct of a corporation operating with $35,000,000 of capital and in conflict with a great body of citizens of a sovereign State, and in respect to the investigations that are being made by the Federal Government through the representatives of the people? Do you call their correspondence that takes place between the officers of that corporation private correspondence in which the people have no interest?

Mr. BOWERS. I would not want to admit, Mr. Walsh, that we were in conflict.

Chairman WALSH. You did not think this would ever be brought out, this correspondence, at the time you wrote it?

Mr. BOWERS. I would have been—certainly I would have had sense enough if I made a public statement to leave out many things that I would not if I was writing to my own son or my own family or my own partner. I would not use the same language to Mr. Walsh as to Mrs. Bowers.

Chairman WALSH. And you would not use the same sentiments or expressions as to the public officers of the people, if you thought afterwards they were going to be shown to the people who created that officer—the people generally?

Mr. BOWERS. I certainly would not, unless I was stating it before him and about him.

Chairman WALSH. You say: "I believe the hours you gave to the committee and the position you so manfully maintained against the assaults of Dr. Foster"—Dr. Foster was the regular chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining of the House of Representatives of the United States, and presided over the committee that was investigating the Colorado situation. Do you remember that?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Dr. Foster?

Mr. BOWERS. Why, sure.

Chairman WALSH. Well, your were referring in that letter to the representatives of the people of the United States, were you not, but you did not think it would be exposed?

Mr. BOWERS. Well, I would not care to admit that.

Chairman WALSH. Well, then, you were referring to the representatives of the people of the United States?

Mr. BOWERS. I was referring to the testimony of Mr. John D. Rockefeller before that committee; and I believe the committee was biased, and I think it was made up politically in a manner that was not fair to all concerned. That is my notion and my opinion of it.

Chairman WALSH. So you believed, in cases where you think the representatives of the people do not act fairly, you believed in getting the bankers and business men and all the agencies you can and whipping them into line?

Mr. BOWERS. Oh, no; I did not.

Chairman WALSH. You did not believe that?

Mr. BOWERS. Oh, whipping in line—I do believe in a man using every possible effort in his political and social relations and as a citizen and everywhere that he can to get what is best done for the common good, and using such methods as are necessary to bring it about—by peaceful methods. I believe in using all the methods you can for the common uplift and common good.

Chairman WALSH. You believe in using all methods, whatever the methods may be?

Mr. BOWERS. As I say, if, as I recall, I wrote another letter that referred to the situation down there in southern Colorado and used some pretty vigorous language; and I stand for every jot and tittle of that letter that I wrote down there, and every one of them, the same as I will for this.

Chairman WALSH. So you believe that if you figure out yourself what is right and just industrially or financially, and the governor of a sovereign State or the Representatives of the people in Congress differ with what you think, that it is perfectly proper to organize the bankers and the financial interests and all other interests to whip into line those public officials and representatives of the people?

Mr. BOWERS. If they are wrong; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. If they are wrong?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you found them wrong, you have found them wrong many times, and you have never hesitated to go after them that way?

Mr. BOWERS. And speak good of them, too.

Chairman WALSH. After you got them into line, you call that giving them taffy, don't you?

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Walsh, I am not much of a politician, and I imagine that you are.

Chairman WALSH. Your imagination is running away with you. I am the poorest politician in America, or I would not be doing what I am doing now. Is that the way you do it—after you get the bankers and public officials to whip those people into line you talk nice to them?

Mr. BOWERS. May I ask you a personal question?

Chairman WALSH. Look out, I warn you in advance.

Mr. BOWERS. Did your mother ever spank you?

Chairman WALSH. Indeed she did.

Mr. BOWERS. All right; did she ever give you a piece of candy or some cookies afterwards?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir. Is that your attitude before the people of the United States, in your conduct of public affairs representing the Rockefeller interests, that if a public official known as the representative of the people don't do what you think is right, you spank them and then when they come around and do what you think is right, then you give them a piece of candy, just like my mother would me?

Mr. BOWERS. Sure.

Chairman WALSH. That is the way you do it?

Mr. BOWERS. Sure.

Chairman WALSH. During the process, when you are whipping them into line, how do you treat them? Do you treat them with kindness or call them names and condemn them publicly?

Mr. BOWERS. I have not anything in my mind where I have come out publicly and mistreated men, as you name.

Chairman WALSH. Do you think that the combined bankers of a community might exercise too much influence to call upon them to whip a public official into line?

Mr. BOWERS. I wish, Mr. Walsh, that you would be kind enough to me and others to state, or allow me to state, the occasion for the whipping. It would be easier for me.

Chairman WALSH. For this particular whipping?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir; of the governor.

Chairman WALSH. All right, we will get down to that, if you want to do it at this time, the particular whipping of Gov. Ammons.

Mr. BOWERS. Well, efforts were brought to bear for him to call out the militia, or take such steps as he saw fit to protect life and property, and he absolutely and flatly refused to do it for weeks and weeks, until he received the condemnation of the best citizens that we knew anything about, that had the best interests of Colorado at heart to protect the State. That was the whipping that was endeavored to be done, and Mr. Welborn and the committee in charge of the affairs in the disturbance of Colorado took such measures as they could to induce the best citizens and the best boards like the chamber of commerce and the board of trade, and I don't know but what the ministerial association took part, at least there were a great many letters written.

Chairman WALSH. Did you contribute to the churches?

Mr. BOWERS. In Colorado? I always contribute to the churches.

Chairman WALSH. Go ahead.

Mr. BOWERS. That is all I have to say. It was the best measures that we could take, by the best men.

Chairman WALSH. Did I understand you to say that you did not know that your company, after you came there, had detectives in their employ?

Mr. BOWERS. I stated that they did.

Chairman WALSH. Oh, they did?

Mr. BOWERS. I took it up very early after my connection with the company. Chairman WALSH. What did they do about it, after you took it up?

Mr. BOWERS. If I remember right they paid mighty little attention to it, and thought they knew more about it than I did; that I was a tenderfoot from the East.

Chairman WALSH. They thought that you were a tenderfoot from the East and—

Mr. BOWERS. That is about where I landed at first.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you heard what Mr. Rockefeller said here on the stand, that you were the ranking officer, and you were in command out there?

Mr. BOWERS. In the departments that I had charge of.

Chairman WALSH. You were the ranking officer, he said, above Mr. Welborn and everybody else.

Mr. BOWERS. Theoretically; yes.

Chairman WALSH. Just theoretically?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Do I understand your last question, that although you took a strong stand against these spies, when you told them about it, that they thought you were a tenderfoot from the East and didn't desist in hiring them?

Mr. BOWERS. These matters were perhaps taken up and edged along, and I think within a year or two they were almost entirely disposed of, and there was comparatively few of those fellows that you call spies. If you will allow me, I would like to tell you what I suggested.

Chairman WALSH. All right.

Mr. BOWERS. I suggested, instead of going outside of the camps and getting in spies, men that I regarded as as big rascals as you could get any place, that I would not trust any of them—

Chairman WALSH. No.

Mr. BOWERS. I said, why don't you get men in your own camps, and not get these cutthroats.

Chairman WALSH. Now, did you know about who these mine guards were that were first sworn in by Jeff Farr before there was any trouble there at all?

Mr. BOWERS. They had mine guards before I went there, years and years before this strike.

Chairman WALSH. Before the strike they had kept some of these cutthroats, and then they swore them in and your company paid them?

Mr. BOWERS. No, sir; I think not. I have a letter and a telegram in my pocket that explains that, if you care for it, from Mr. Welborn.

Chairman WALSH. I don't know what it is, but I would like to talk to Mr. Welborn a little about it on the stand.

Mr. BOWERS. Very well.

Chairman WALSH. Did you know Jeff Farr?

Mr. BOWERS. Never saw him in my life, or had a letter from him, and didn't know him at all.

Chairman WALSH. Did you hear about him?

Mr. BOWERS. I guess I did.

Chairman WALSH. He was a very strong man in Huerfano County?

Mr. BOWERS. Pretty strong.

Chairman WALSH. And they called him "King" in Huerfano County?

Mr. BOWERS. They might have called him his satanic majesty.

Chairman WALSH. And he had a way of selecting the county officers; for instance, the county commissioners?

Mr. BOWERS. I won't say about that.

Chairman WALSH. You heard about that?

Mr. BOWERS. Oh, yes.

Chairman WALSH. And if your attorney, or the attorneys of your company, were about to be put into the conduct of the prosecution of somebody by the county commissioners, that would be about the same as Jeff putting them in himself?

Mr. BOWERS. Just about the same as Tammany Hall, as Attorney General Farrar said, and I indorse that.

Chairman WALSH. And there was a connection between Jeff Farr and the company, but it is hard to tell whether the company bossed Jeff or Jeff bossed the company?

Mr. BOWERS. I won't admit that there was any connection between them after I went there.

Chairman WALSH. But the attorney general said there was up to 1913?

Mr. BOWERS. He did not know about it, after I went into office.

Chairman WALSH. You indorsed the attorney general about Jeff Farr and the conditions in Huerfano, except when you get to conditions in your own company, and as connected with you, and then you say that he was mistaken about that?

Mr. BOWERS. No; I won't deny that, but I say up to the time I went there the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. were a party to it, and were very instrumental in establishing that deplorable condition in southern Colorado. I don't exonerate the officers of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. for one minute prior to October, 1907.

Chairman WALSH. And you don't believe anything that you said in that letter about voting the mules?

Mr. BOWERS. Did I say it?

Chairman WALSH. Indeed, you did.

Mr. BOWERS. I don't say anything I don't believe.

Chairman WALSH. And you found that crimes were committed against the constitution of Colorado, and the statutes of Colorado, and free government, and it was done by your company, and I suppose you notified the company that you had discovered these crimes, and appeared before the grand jury and sought to have the men indicted?

Mr. BOWERS. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You didn't do that?

Mr. BOWERS. No.

Chairman WALSH. Just excuse me, I want to refer to one of your letters.

Mr. BOWERS. No, sir; there were other officials, and others in authority, and I had nothing to do with the operation, I simply sandwiched in my notions of right and wrong.

Chairman WALSH. As a mere agitator, is that it?

Mr. BOWERS. Very far from it; it was more than agitation.

Chairman WALSH. But you did not go so far as to take any active action of any kind?

Mr. BOWERS. I think I did.

Chairman WALSH. What officer did you talk to about the crimes that were committed there?

Mr. BOWERS. You mean the officials?

Chairman WALSH. No; I mean the State officers, charged with the apprehension of criminals and suppression of crime?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't know that I ever met them.

Chairman WALSH. The officers you talked to were the officers of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. BOWERS. Oh, yes; sure. No; I never had a word of conversation, and never saw the governor but once on the street in my life, or the attorney general.

Chairman WALSH. And what about the prosecuting attorney?

Mr. BOWERS. I never saw him in my life.

Chairman WALSH. Now, this letter of September 18. I want to ask you about this particular thing in that letter. You remember you said: "As our miners shift more or less and new men are coming all the while, about a year ago Mr. Welborn and the writer were discussing these questions, because one or two competitive companies (both of whom tried to interest Mr. Cooper in their bonds) were cheating their miners by false weights." Now, what companies were cheating them by false weights?

Mr. BOWERS. I would have to decline, to avoid prosecution, defining acts and attitudes as to that sort of thing. I don't know that there is a war in Europe to-day, but I have every reason to believe there is.

Chairman WALSH. You were satisfied they were cheating the miners?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What was the name of the company?

Mr. BOWERS. I would not say, because I could not legally name specific acts, which, as a lawyer, you understand would be necessary.

Chairman WALSH. What companies were trying to sell these bonds to Mr. Cooper? Were they big companies?

Mr. BOWERS. No; not so very big.

Chairman WALSH. They were afterwards in the operators' association?

Mr. BOWERS. Never a one of them.

Chairman WALSH. Won't you give us the names?

Mr. BOWERS. No; you will have to excuse me. I don't think you ought to ask me that. I will answer all that I can, and will be glad to, but I don't care to answer that.

Chairman WALSH. As far as that company was concerned, the miners were justified in saying that they needed a checkweighman?

Mr. BOWERS. If you will let me supplement what I said before, I think that one of these men that I had in mind, that I believe was a rascal, and cheating his miners, signed with the union, and has been signed with them since, if he is not busted.

Chairman WALSH. What about the other one?

Mr. BOWERS. They sold out.

Chairman WALSH. Then there were just two bad fellows that went in there cheating the miners, and one afterwards joined them and the other afterwards sold out?

Mr. BOWERS. I think there were quite a good many more of them.

Chairman WALSH. How do you think these miners could get justice if a lot of mine owners were cheating them in the weights of the coal that they dug out of the ground unless they had an organization powerful in number and somewhat powerful financially?

Mr. BOWERS. I had power enough to stop it.

Chairman WALSH. You think it could be left to the individual companies?

Mr. BOWERS. I had power enough to stop it in their individual case.

Chairman WALSH. Did you talk to them about it?

Mr. BOWERS. No.

Chairman WALSH. How did you have power enough to stop the other mining companies from cheating in the weights of coal?

Mr. BOWERS. You are asking me a question there that I am mighty happy to answer.

Chairman WALSH. We will all be happy, then, for once, sure.

Mr. BOWERS. Exactly. I have no sort of doubt but my associates believe that I have somewhat of a notion of my own, and one is I believe that it is the greatest folly, it is the most absolutely idiotic thing for any concern to be unfair to anybody, man, woman, or child, in anything. If I was the coldest-blooded man on earth, and didn't care a snap of my finger for God, man, or the devil, I would be as straight as one could be, absolutely beyond any question of doubt.

Chairman WALSH. Go ahead and tell what you did to fix those companies that were cheating?

Mr. BOWERS. One concern——

Chairman WALSH. Let's call it "X" concern, or give it some title; say the "X" concern.

Mr. BOWERS. Name it whatever you wish.

Chairman WALSH. All right.

Mr. BOWERS. My attention was called to it particularly by the fact that some of our friends, as you name them, our friends in the railway companies——

Chairman WALSH. Some of your railroad friends?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir; were getting cut prices on their coal, and it seemed impossible that any straight fellow could cut prices as long as there was not more than 5 cents a ton profit on railroad coal—it seemed to be particularly difficult for a company to cut prices 10 cents a ton.

Chairman WALSH. Something crooked?

Mr. BOWERS. I think so. I said to Mr. Welborn, How can we stop them stealing the coal from the miners?

Chairman WALSH. And also cutting under your prices?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir; also cutting under our prices, and we only made 5 cents a ton.

Chairman WALSH. You became convinced there was something wrong?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir; and how could we end it.

Chairman WALSH. That is, for the miners?

Mr. BOWERS. Ourselves and the miners and all concerned. The men that work for me are as much my friends as the man that I work for. You have no doubt about that, have you?

Chairman WALSH. I would not like to say. Go ahead.

Mr. BOWERS. Now, then, we talked it over, and I said, How about these checkweighmen?

Chairman WALSH. Who did you say that to?

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Welborn, and I guess to the executive board.

Chairman WALSH. You took it up before the whole executive board—the question of these mines cheating the miners?

Mr. BOWERS. I may or may not; I don't know whether I did or not. I don't assume much responsibility on the board, because I am only the chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Sometimes the chairman assumes quite a good deal.

Mr. BOWERS. Occasionally they do not. I took it up with these gentlemen—Mr. Welborn and perhaps other gentlemen—how can we stop that; put an end to it.

Chairman WALSH. Stealing from the miners?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And of cutting your prices?

Mr. BOWERS. Cutting our prices; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And stealing the coal from the miners?

Mr. BOWERS. Self-defense. In other words, they were cheating the miners and us, too. Now, I knew very well, by my own talks and interviews with our men, that the checkweighman had been optional with our miners; I had talked with superintendents in regard to it. We discussed it, and I referred to this matter in my conversation with Mr. Stewart when he visited me in Denver, stating something like this, that our own miners know that the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. are willing and desire that the miners have their own checkweighmen. The newer men were coming in, the old men knew, and the newer men might not be advised of that, so we stated in that notice that it is the desire of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. that our miners secure and have their own checkweighmen.

Chairman WALSH. Was that at the time you discovered this cheating?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir; just at that time—in April, 1912.

Chairman WALSH. All right.

Mr. BOWERS. That was the push.

Chairman WALSH. It was not an objection—no objection from your miners?

Mr. BOWERS. No, sir; not at all.

Chairman WALSH. Go ahead; I will not interrupt you.

Mr. BOWERS. No; I know what you were going to say. It was a matter of principle with me, and I would have done it the same as if I had had a sore finger, without it being called to my attention.

Chairman WALSH. You are opposed to sore fingers generally, but when yours is sore you begin to take notice?

Mr. BOWERS. Exactly. We agreed on that circular, and it was written in six languages and posted at the mines and at their working places, and some of them were posted when the strike was on.

Chairman WALSH. Still hanging there?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir; if not, it was known in a good many places, and I understood from several sources that the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. and your humble servant had been damned with great severity after we put those signs up. Of course immediately they saw that the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. had posted the notices it spread all over the camp. What could those fellows do with that kind of a circular in other camps when their miners asked for checkweighmen? It didn't cost us anything, but it did the other fellow.

Chairman WALSH. It would be all right if it cost you nothing?

Mr. BOWERS. The miners pay the checkweighmen themselves. We have our weighman, but they contribute so much a month to their checkweighman. If they are honest, it is an advantage to us. If a dispute comes up with the railroad company or anyone, we have the checkweighman's testimony besides our own recorded weights. It is really an advantage; it is no disadvantage at all, and a great advantage if they are honest, and we were attempting to whip those fellows in until they would be forced to grant their miners a checkweighman.

Chairman WALSH. So they would quit cheating?

Mr. BOWERS. I can not say; a thief is a thief, wherever you put him.

Chairman WALSH. Who demanded a checkweighman?

Mr. BOWERS. That circular.

Chairman WALSH. It did not demand it of the other companies?

Mr. BOWERS. Well.

Chairman WALSH. When that circular went out in all these different languages, that was a good hint to other companies?

Mr. BOWERS. Rather a good hint.

Chairman WALSH. Did the workmen for the other companies demand checkweighmen?

Mr. BOWERS. I think they did. Some did, I know.

Chairman WALSH. It was the laborers that demanded the checkweighman when they saw this circular in all of the different languages?

Mr. BOWERS. I think so. A good many of those fellows that were cheated, in the weights on their coal, did not know it.

Chairman WALSH. How did they do it?

Mr. BOWERS. Oh, they said there was no hurry. We will run our mines; and take a good big mine, it is as large as the city of Washington, as many streets and alleys, miles long and miles wide. Here is a branch running in here, a spud, as we call it, off from the railroad, and a man would take his car and his number; I don't know that the company is responsible, but I imagine they are; that the company is responsible for running that car, and they would put on 30 or 40 shovels more on that car, or perhaps 300 or 400 more pounds put on that car than there ought to be.

Chairman WALSH. I think Commissioner O'Connell has seen that at first-hand, and described it to a witness; that is, that an honest checkweighman that wanted to cheat would do it lightly, would take off a little and put on a little?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir; and you take Greeks and Servians and Italians—we have 26 nationalities or more in our mines, and they won't trust each other. You allow them to select, and they will select an Italian for a checkweighman, and it won't be any great length of time before they say that the man is taking weight off of their cars and putting it on the cars of his friends.

Chairman WALSH. They were cheating?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir; they were taking off 100 pounds off of one fellow's car and putting it on the other car of their nationality.

Chairman WALSH. There was no question of nationality involved when you sent out this circular, because the company was stealing from the men; you could tell that from the price?

Mr. BOWERS. Undoubtedly.

Chairman WALSH. There was no roguery going on then?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir; because they could not produce it and sell it at the price they named, that we knew, because we could produce it as cheaply as anybody in that country.

Chairman WALSH. When you got the circular out what effect did it have on the price; did they still cut under you?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't know that they did; we kept our same price.

Chairman WALSH. Did you see what effect this had?

Mr. BOWERS. The effect was that your humble servant got damned.

Chairman WALSH. Among the coal operators?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir; I understand, but I did not hear them.

Chairman WALSH. But they damned you because you gave this hint to the other companies, and they told them in their various languages about this, and they began to watch this, and they came up and accused you?

Mr. BOWERS. No, sir; they didn't come up to see me.

Chairman WALSH. Didn't even call on you?

Mr. BOWERS. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you meet them socially, around at the clubs and so forth?

Mr. BOWERS. I was not a member of a club. I was slated as the best-known and the least-known man in Colorado. I didn't mix. I was not well enough, and I had too many serious illnesses in my family.

Chairman WALSH. I didn't exactly catch the drift of what you said. After you exposed them you said they didn't come up to see you?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't think they did.

Chairman WALSH. Did any of them come up before?

Mr. BOWERS. No, sir; I didn't know a half a dozen operators in the State of Colorado.

Chairman WALSH. These particular concerns, were they cutting prices with railroads?

Mr. BOWERS. I think they cheated everybody.

Chairman WALSH. You think they cheated everybody?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes; sure. They fulfill the Scriptures; they are not respectors of persons.

Chairman WALSH. You had a way to take care of your company?

Mr. BOWERS. I did.

Chairman WALSH. And you did it?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, suppose that these men that were working for these other mines, these cheaters, suppose they had found it out through some other source, and the question of price cutting was not in it. Suppose they had stolen and still maintained prices, what chances did the Greeks and Italians and those men that were digging the coal in order to support their families, what chances did they have to make them quit cheating?

Mr. BOWERS. About the same chance that Mrs. Walsh would have in Kansas City, if she was going to a grocery and she got better weights and measures there than at any other place.

Chairman WALSH. I am going to ask you, please, not to draw your illustrations with my family, and I will not with yours; but, however, I want to get you straight, that these Greeks and Italians would have the same chance to contest against these coal companies cheating them in weights as a housewife would have that went to a store and found out a man cheated her in the weight, and then she could go to another store? You say that is a parallel case, do you?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't say it is a parallel case; it is difficult to make a parallel case.

Chairman WALSH. The truth of the matter is that some of these men that are being cheated; at first it was a sort of petty larceny proposition; they cheated a little at a time?

Mr. BOWERS. It was not large enough for the average miner to make much of a rumpus about.

Chairman WALSH. But, on the whole, it stole that much out of his labor, and out of his sweat, and off of his table, and away from his family; if it did that, he would have an awful personal grievance, would he, Mr. Bowers?

Mr. BOWERS. Why, sure; I would.

Chairman WALSH. Now, what chances would that man have, if it is not a parallel case about the housewife and the grocer; what chances would he have to keep them from stealing his labor that way?

Mr. BOWERS. I am glad that you have asked me that question. We were able to keep our mines almost entirely filled with men that would move from one mine to another because of the conditions, and because they regarded—I think I am not overjustifying ourselves—because of better treatment and honest treatment that they believed they got from the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

Chairman WALSH. Now, some of these men, as I understand you, would leave these other mines and come to you because they discovered or suspicioned that they were being cheated in weights?

Mr. BOWERS. I think so.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you read the testimony of Mr. Edward Doyle, given at Denver?

Mr. BOWERS. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You know who he is?

Mr. BOWERS. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. He was a checkweighman at—

Mr. BOWERS. I have not read his testimony.

Chairman WALSH. You know, I am not going into the truth of it, but you know that miners accused the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. of cheating them in weights?

Mr. BOWERS. Possibly; I presume so.

Chairman WALSH. And you will give them credit for having a fixed conviction about the fact that they were being cheated, just like you have a fixed conviction that the war is going on in Europe, and they had a fixed conviction that the operators were cheating them?

Mr. BOWERS. Sure.

Chairman WALSH. If that is true, it was a mighty just grievance of the miners?

Mr. BOWERS. On being cheated?

Chairman WALSH. If they believed that it was a real grievance?

Mr. BOWERS. It would be with me.

Chairman WALSH. Now, that was one of the grievances that they claimed gave them the right to go into an organization of their own, to deal with your companies collectively, was it not?

Mr. BOWERS. I presume so; I can not say.

Chairman WALSH. You saw the bulletin sent out by Mr. Ivy Lee, or his stenographer or office boy, or by the association of operators in Colorado?

Mr. BOWERS. I think I never read but one of them all through.

Chairman WALSH. You never read but one of them?

Mr. BOWERS. I never read but one, and that I criticized.

Chairman WALSH. You didn't have much use for that one yourself?

Mr. BOWERS. As I say, I kept out as far as I could.

Chairman WALSH. Was that the one that gave the supposed pay of the mining officials?

Mr. BOWERS. I can not recall; he offered me the manuscript, or brought it in to me to look it over.

Chairman WALSH. What did you think about it?

Mr. BOWERS. I read it over, and he said, "Now, I think right there at that point it would be a good idea to say," so and so, and I said, "I think it is a good thing to say just exactly the opposite right at that point."

Chairman WALSH. Was the question of fact—

Mr. BOWERS (interrupting). I don't know whether it was a question of fact or imagination or what.

Chairman WALSH. But this thing that he thought was a good thing to put in, and you thought the opposite was; was that a question of fact as to some detail that was going on in the mine?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't recall what it was.

Chairman WALSH. Was it true what he wanted to put in?

Mr. BOWERS. It was his opinion; it may have been true or not. I have my opinions and he has his, and Mr. Murphy has his, and Mr. King has his. We all have our opinions. We don't agree on all things. Adam and Eve had differences with the Almighty, as I understand it.

Chairman WALSH. You take me a little off; I am going to get back to that when we come to Mr. McCorkle's testimony, but I don't want to get to these religious subjects yet. Now, I want to ask you to look at the bulletin entitled "Facts Concerning the Struggle in Colorado for Industrial Freedom" and see if you can pick out the bulletin that Mr. Lee showed you.

Mr. BOWERS. I don't know what topic it was on, even; I couldn't do it. I only read the one, and I don't remember what topic it was on.

Chairman WALSH. Now, after all this stealing went on and after the charge that the miners made that they were being cheated, and it was a real grievance, you knew that Mr. Ivy Lee published some strong bulletins for the purpose of showing that the miners did not have any grievances?

Mr. BOWERS. That may be; I have not read them.

Chairman WALSH. But the miners surely had their grievance against these other companies?

Mr. BOWERS. I so stated; some of the other companies. I would not make that too broad.

Chairman WALSH. There was enough of them so that it was interfering with you, with your profits; they were cutting in on your business?

Mr. BOWERS. No; I don't think it cut into our business a particle. One of these men—no; I will withdraw that. I am mighty sure that the men interested in one of the companies in quite a large capacity did cheat an important railroad.

Chairman WALSH. Oh, he cheated the railroad, too?

Mr. BOWERS. He was a thief. He cheated the railroad, and I understand he was compelled to refund a large amount of money to a railroad because of his shortages.

Chairman WALSH. The railroad took after him?

Mr. BOWERS. I so understand.

Chairman WALSH. It was a good big thing?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir; and they got it back.

Chairman WALSH. Of course, no one individual miner, an Italian or Greek, could take after them that way and make them come back?

Mr. BOWERS. I would not like to have an Italian or Greek or any other fellow with a good grievance to take after me.

Chairman WALSH. But they were too ignorant to know generally that they were being cheated?

Mr. BOWERS. No, sir; I don't think so.

Chairman WALSH. But they stole it in such small amounts, it was a sort of petit larceny proposition; even if they caught them they couldn't tell what they had stolen?

Mr. BOWERS. No, sir; I suppose not. It is in fairness to these men—I won't accuse all those men of trying to cheat in overloading their cars. I don't know that all of them were dishonest, but it is not a thing of much importance to say to a fellow, "Throw on 50 shovels more coal on there," and they would rather do that than to lose their job.

Chairman WALSH. And if they lost their job they could not support their families?

Mr. BOWERS. That is it, exactly.

Chairman WALSH. But the railroad, when it found they were being cheated, it said, "Here, sir, give us back this money or we will prosecute you and not buy any more coal of you?"

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir; they surely could, but I don't know that is what occurred.

Chairman WALSH. But you believe it as firmly as you believe the war is going on in Europe?

Mr. BOWERS. I have not the slightest doubt that there was a lot of that thing going on in the coal fields there, I will say, prior to 1908.

Chairman WALSH. I will request you, Mr. Bowers, to retire from the stand for an hour or two, so that we can use another witness.

Mr. BOWERS. It is very essential, if possible, for me—I have three very important meetings in the Middle West, and I would hate very much not to be present at those meetings; and I would like very much, if I can, to get away from here this afternoon some time.

Chairman WALSH. I think we can conclude with you this afternoon.

Mr. BOWERS. All right; if you can.

Chairman WALSH. It was suggested to me that it would be best, perhaps, not to keep you too consecutively on the stand.

Mr. BOWERS. I would just as leave stay here until 12 o'clock.

Chairman WALSH. It is all right, is it, Mr. Murphy?

Mr. MURPHY. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. It was suggested to me—last week the temperature was very high, and I guess you know that Mr. Murphy spoke to me and said it might be well not to keep you too long on the stand?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir. Before I came here I was laid up for a month, and my physician did not want me to come.

Chairman WALSH. If you feel the least fatigued at any time you may retire, and we will be glad to put on another witness. We will take an adjournment here for five minutes, anyway.

(After adjournment.)

Chairman WALSH. Now, Mr. Bowers, will you resume the stand, please? Did you consider the authorities—the constituted authorities—had adequate means for protecting your people in the early days of the strike?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes; I did.

Chairman WALSH. There was never any necessity for—as near as you could observe—for your company buying revolvers or guns or rifles, or anything of that sort?

Mr. BOWERS. Not if we could have secured the cooperation or help that we thought we were entitled to from the governor; but he declined to do it for several weeks.

Chairman WALSH. Oh; and was it during the time the governor declined to give you the necessary help that the arms were purchased?

Mr. BOWERS. I think it must have been; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you felt that if the authorities did not protect your property that you would have to take your own means to do it?

Mr. BOWERS. Well, it was in defense of our miners; we never had less than 50 per cent of our men working.

Chairman WALSH. I see; and the governor would not extend you the protection that you—

Mr. BOWERS. He did not.

Chairman WALSH. He did not?

Mr. BOWERS. No.

Chairman WALSH. What means did you take to guard your own property?

Mr. BOWERS. We always have guards, as we have perhaps 25 or 30 mines, some 12 or 15 miles removed from any county seat or any civic authority, and we had to have marshals. On pay days, sometimes, these men have brawls and fights and we have to have constables and guards. We have guards in every mine, the same as the Government and all State authorities, to prevent people coming in. We could not have people coming in and running back and forth through the mines.

Chairman WALSH. You couldn't have them running through your house either?

Mr. BOWERS. No; I couldn't have them running through the house. It was simply an enlargement of that idea. We had those guards because, if you will allow me to state, we knew from past observation and from strikes elsewhere all over the country—I am pretty familiar in my business career with the strikes in Pennsylvania, and I have been called down once or twice in my life for wishing that the strikers would win.

Chairman WALSH. In Pennsylvania?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Against what company?

Mr. BOWERS. Oh, I remember what is known as the long strike—eight or nine months—away back in, I think, 1870—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Among the coal miners?

Mr. BOWERS. Coal miners in the anthracite regions. I was in the wholesale grocery business and was about 23 or 24 years old, and we went down through there selling goods; and my sympathies were entirely with the strikers. They were largely Welshmen that had come over here, and were a splendid lot of citizens and a splendid population.

Chairman WALSH. Well, they may have been splendid, wherever they come from?

Mr. BOWERS. Oh, yes.

Chairman WALSH. You think so, don't you?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes. I know they were splendid men, and I thought were unjustly treated, and I hoped they would win. My sympathies were with them, but I may have been absolutely wrong, but that was my personal feelings.

Chairman WALSH. Well, I am afraid that I have taken you away from the subject. The subject was you had had experience in other places, in Pennsylvania, or from observations, and therefore had reason to anticipate certain actions?

Mr. BOWERS. Exactly. Whenever a strike is called, if part of the men continue to work and part of them did not, we were liable to have very serious trouble.

Chairman WALSH. Now, how do you provide to protect your property to keep them from committing arson or destroying property or hurting the men?

Mr. BOWERS. Under normal conditions?

Chairman WALSH. No; under strike at any of these other places?

Mr. BOWERS. Oh, I don't know. I don't recall that. I couldn't answer that. It is too long ago.

Chairman WALSH. Well, regardless of having anything to do with it or not, you did arm them in Colorado?

Mr. BOWERS. I had nothing to do with it.

Chairman WALSH. I know, but you knew of it as a citizen of Colorado, regardless—

Mr. BOWERS (interrupting). I knew the guardsmen were increased there; yes.

Chairman WALSH. But you believe, do you not, and you did believe, that if there was danger—

Mr. BOWERS (interrupting). I certainly did.

Chairman WALSH (continuing). Of causing explosions at the mine and causing destruction of property and loss of life, and the governor would not furnish you with the necessary means of defense, that you would have to defend yourself?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You believed in your God-given right to do that, didn't you?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. That is, if you called on the governor who was—he should have done the act that was proper for actually protecting life and protecting against explosions and the like of that, and if he failed to do it, then the only thing you could do would be to defend yourselves?

Mr. BOWERS. And the property out there.

Chairman WALSH. To defend your property and your lives?

Mr. BOWERS. Surely.

Chairman WALSH. And, of course, you had to be the judge as to that, didn't you?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And that is a rule of conduct under which all just and civilized men will act anyway?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You would not take it for yourself and not give it to somebody else.

(No answer.)

Chairman WALSH. And if you had reason to believe—to put it more locally—that a group of miners were coming to your house to attempt an assault upon you and the governor refused to act and refused to give you the protection that was demanded, you would take, as a man, whatever means were necessary to defend yourself, would you not?

Mr. BOWERS. No, sir; I would not.

Chairman WALSH. What would you do?

Mr. BOWERS. I never had a gun or a revolver or any protection myself. I never had the slightest fear, personally, of any violence whatever of that kind; never.

Chairman WALSH. What would you do?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. Suppose there was a body of men—

Mr. BOWERS (interrupting). I certainly should not go—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). You would go just as far as you would to protect a mine?

Mr. BOWERS. I have never been placed in any position where I had fear of any man opposed to me at all. Of course the man might be a stranger or a crank and do me violence, but I have no fear. I don't know what I would do under certain circumstances, but apart from the proposition of my getting up a defense and fighting anybody that comes along that don't agree with me—I should not do that.

Chairman WALSH. No; but you would go as far in defending your life and the lives of your family as you would of property?

Mr. BOWERS. Oh, yes. If I had from the governor no defense, I should appeal to the officers of the law.

Chairman WALSH. And if the officers of the law did not act—

Mr. BOWERS. I suppose I might take to the woods.

Chairman WALSH. Would you run?

Mr. BOWERS. I would run.

Chairman WALSH. Suppose you family couldn't run.

Mr. BOWERS. I am something of a runner.

Chairman WALSH. You would simply go as far as you would go to get guards and arm them and tell them not to do anything unless an assault was made, but to be ready in case they intended to blow up the mine or take lives; you would go that far?

Mr. BOWERS. The same as I would on pay day to protect the citizens there and the people from drunken men. We had marshals and deputies and asked them to keep order, the same as any well-regulated community, and I would increase them if necessary.

Chairman WALSH. You would increase them if necessary?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And if they were guards you would arm them?

Mr. BOWERS. They would not be very effective without arms.

Chairman WALSH. And despite the matter of fact that you were simply chairman of the executive board and not in the operating department, you do know you did arm the guards.

Mr. BOWERS. Why, certainly.

Chairman WALSH. Did it for the purpose of protecting your property?

Mr. BOWERS. I have not the slightest doubt.

Chairman WALSH. They were their own employees, and if anybody had attempted to blow up that property, why, of course, these guards would have resisted and shot them?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't know what they would do. They were there with their guns to protect that property and meet the cases whenever they would come up—I would not cross the bridge until I came to it.

Chairman WALSH. Well, they would also protect life in case there was danger of assault?

Mr. BOWERS. That is what they are there for.

Chairman WALSH. That is what they are there for?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes; sure.

Chairman WALSH. And to protect life and property?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And they were representing the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir; and a number of other operators.

Chairman WALSH. All have their guards?

Mr. BOWERS. I think so.

Chairman WALSH. And they armed their guards?

Mr. BOWERS. It was done collectively, after the strike began.

Chairman WALSH. And collectively you made up your minds that you thought there would be some violence committed and some mines blown up, and the like of that, and you had better get ready?

Mr. BOWERS. I did not make up my mind at all or approve the judgment or discuss it or take part, directly or indirectly, or have anything to do with it.

Chairman WALSH. No; but did Mr. Welborn, the president, see you every day?

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Welborn will answer for himself. You will have him on the stand, I understand. I myself, personally, had nothing to do with it.

Chairman WALSH. You had an office in the Boston Building?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And you would see him every day?

Mr. BOWERS. A good many times a day.

Chairman WALSH. A good many times a day?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes. If you will allow me to tell, it was the understanding there that I should not be annoyed with those things, because of my physical condition and the strain I was under for various reasons, and he was very considerate of my age, if nothing else, and did not annoy me with it.

Chairman WALSH. Where did you get this information you used to send to Mr. Rockefeller and to Mr. Murphy at New York?

Mr. BOWERS. Some of it, I could not say where I did get it or who advised me; I got information from all kinds of men, politicians, and ministers, sociological workers, and doctors, and lawyers; I had a pile on my desk that high, of all kinds of suggestions as to what I should do; I did not lack anything in the way of advice.

Chairman WALSH. Leaving out the ministers and the sociological workers, and those, and getting down to the information you got from Mr. Welborn and Mr. Weitzel and the other gentlemen, you kept pretty actively informed as to what was going on in the field, did you not?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, I did.

Chairman WALSH. I notice here that on April 18 you wrote Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., and you stated to him that you had been so busy since you returned and so few matters of importance in connection with the strike had come up, that you had not written him. Since your return, where had you been?

Mr. BOWERS. On a rest, which I have been forced to take for the last couple of years, every few months, for a week or so.

Chairman WALSH. And you said so few matters of importance had come up in connection with the strike that you had not written him?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And you said, "Speaking broadly, there is a decided weakening all along the line on the part of the labor leaders."

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Everything had quieted down at that time?

Mr. BOWERS. My letter will answer that; I will admit everything in that letter.

Chairman WALSH. The letter continues, "We have reliable information that the United Mine Workers of America are pinched as never before for funds."

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. That was real information and you were transmitting it to Mr. Rockefeller?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And then the letter proceeds, "The present week in northern Colorado may cut off the relief of 140 miners?"

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. They cut that off?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. "Which has created a very bad feeling on their part"—that is, on the part of the workers to have their provender cut off?

Mr. BOWERS. It undoubtedly did.

Chairman WALSH. "And as some of them are still kept on the pay roll, say, it is only a matter of time when they will all be cut off from any funds whatever." That was reliable information you had?

Mr. BOWERS. I regarded it so.

Chairman WALSH. You regarded it as reliable enough to send to your principal, Mr. Rockefeller?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Then the letter proceeds, "In southern Colorado the labor leaders are making a thorough canvass of the strikers' camps, and a very large number are to be eliminated from the pay roll when the canvass is completed." That was your information?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Then this follows:

"A matter of more significance, in my opinion, is the change of attitude of the local representatives of the union from that of the past few months toward the miners themselves. Heretofore they have constantly endeavored to encourage the miners to hold out, as victory was sure to be won. Now, instead of encouragement they dodged the issue, and in some cases deliberately undertake to offend the miners, expecting they would quit the camps and go back to work, and thereby relieve the organization from its financial burden, knowing that the strike has been a failure and that eventually the miners will have to shift for themselves.

"A large number of the militia have been withdrawn, but Mr. Welborn and other operators believe enough are retained to protect the camps, supplemented by our own guards.

"Another favorable feature is the organization of a military company of 100 volunteers at Trinidad the present week."

If things were quieted down, and the men were being pinched for funds, and the labor leaders were trying to discourage them so they would go back to work, and that a very large number of them were about to be eliminated from their pay roll, and Mr. Welborn and other operators believed that enough were retained to protect the camps, and that these could be supplemented by their own mine guards, now, what was the favorable feature in the organization of the military company of 100 volunteers at Trinidad that week?

Mr. BOWERS. I do not recall of that; I have not read it over; it is practically new matter. I suppose there were threats going and coming, "We are going to do this" and "We are going to do that," and they were running in at that time some guns—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Running in what?

Mr. BOWERS. We had good reason to believe they were running in at that time some guns. I have not the slightest doubt that I felt at that time, from the information that I had, that there was still danger, because there was inflammable material—lots of it—and that there might be outbreaks sowewheres, and the local company had taken the place of others that had been withdrawn.

Chairman WALSH. That was what was afterwards known as "Troop A"?

Mr. BOWERS. I do not know about that.

Chairman WALSH. There was only one volunteer company organized; wasn't that all?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't know about that; I presume that is true.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you know the company that was organized a few days before the Ludlow massacre was involved in that fight, don't you?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't know; no, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You have not heard it yet?

Mr. BOWERS. I may have heard it, but I don't know what company.

Chairman WALSH. You followed by saying "They are to be armed by the State." I had better read that whole paragraph:

"They are to be armed by the State and drilled by military officials. Another squad is being organized at Walsenburg. These independent militiamen will be subject to orders of the sheriff of the county."

That was Jeff Farr, wasn't it?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't know. What county is it?

Chairman WALSH. Huerfano County.

Mr. BOWERS. I don't know whether Walsenburg is in Huerfano County or not. Trinidad is in Las Animas County, and they have different sheriffs.

Chairman WALSH. Then the letter continues: "These independent militiamen will be subject to orders of the sheriff of the county."

Mr. BOWERS. That was a sheriff, I think, by the name of Gresham?

Chairman WALSH. Was he a friend of yours? Was he a friend of the company?

Mr. BOWERS. I never saw him in my life.

Chairman WALSH. Was Jeff Farr a friend of yours?

Mr. BOWERS. Not of mine.

Chairman WALSH. Was he a friend of the company?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. Didn't the company keep in pretty close touch with this sheriff, Jeff Farr, generally? Wasn't there some connection between him and your company?

Mr. BOWERS. I am mighty sure there was.

Chairman WALSH. What kind of a connection?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't know—a political connection; I would rather say a saloon connection.

Chairman WALSH. The company and he were both in the saloon business?

Mr. BOWERS. Mighty close to it.

Chairman WALSH. They were?

Mr. BOWERS. I guess so.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you say, "As these volunteers will draw no pay from the State, this movement has the support of the governor and others in authority." Who were the volunteers to get their pay from?

Mr. BOWERS. I do not think they had any pay at all.

Chairman WALSH. The members of this Troop A did not have any pay?

Mr. BOWERS. No; I do not think so. My understanding was they were citizens that volunteered to protect the city of Trinidad against violence—bankers and clerks in stores, professional men and lawyers and doctors were joined in a militia company without any pay whatever.

Chairman WALSH. What lawyers were in it?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. Or what doctors?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't know whether there were any lawyers or doctors in it; but it was made up of citizens of the community for the purpose of protecting the city against violence.

Chairman WALSH. After the fight at Ludlow, Maj. Boughton's commission had a hearing.

Mr. BOWERS. Where?

Chairman WALSH. At Trinidad.

Mr. BOWERS. I did not read the report of that commission.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I notice you are sending a great deal of information here to the Messrs. Rockefeller?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And you would not send it and try to disseminate it unless you had the facts—as well as you could get them?

Mr. BOWERS. I did not intend to disseminate it; that is all private correspondence, every single line and word of it is private correspondence.

Chairman WALSH. Oh, is that so—just between you?

Mr. BOWERS. All those letters are.

Chairman WALSH. And the telegrams?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. It is private correspondence just like between the members of a family?

Mr. BOWERS. I would not say as private as between the members of a family.

Chairman WALSH. But very private and close. The information in them was just intended for the eyes of Mr. Rockefeller?

Mr. BOWERS. I do not assume to be on relations as intimate as family relations with Mr. Rockefeller.

Chairman WALSH. Perhaps that is putting it too strong; but it was just for his information and not intended to be published?

Mr. BOWERS. It would be made public to any bondholder or stockholder.

Chairman WALSH. But that is all?

Mr. BOWERS. It was not intended for the public.

Chairman WALSH. Now, on April 21 you sent this telegram to Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr.:

"Following withdrawal of troops by order of governor, an unprovoked attack upon small force of militia yesterday by 200 strikers. Forced fight, resulting in probable loss of 10 or 15 strikers. Only 1 militiaman killed. Ludlow tent colony of strikers totally destroyed by burning 200 tents, generally followed by explosions, showing ammunition and dynamite stored in them. Expect further fighting to-day. Militia being reinforced. Suggest your giving this information to friendly papers.

"L. M. BOWERS."

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Wasn't that intended to be disseminated?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes; that part was. I will not let my broad statement apply to that.

Chairman WALSH. Now, Mr. Rockefeller says he did not know who you meant by the friendly papers. What papers did you think were friendly to the Rockefeller interests? You had been with them 20 years and had operated this big ship-building concern and the ore business, and you referred to "friendly papers," what ones were they?

Mr. BOWERS. I could not name them. There are two sides to these questions that come up—Mr. Rockefeller's and mine. I have friends in the newspaper business who make friendly comments, and I call them friendly, and some others damn me pretty seriously, and I don't call them friendly.

Chairman WALSH. Which ones did you mean in this instance?

Mr. BOWERS. The friendly ones.

Chairman WALSH. Which were they?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't know; we have mighty few of them—some of us have.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you if you saw this in the report of the military commission—you did not read Maj. Boughton's report?

Mr. BOWERS. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did Mr. Welborn tell you what was in it?

Mr. BOWERS. I have not the slightest recollection.

Chairman WALSH. When or where did you get the information that Troop A, that we have just been talking about, contained physicians and lawyers and other residents there—these volunteers?

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Walsh, we were in war, as it was so called by a great many; they had their headquarters of war with their different officers there and the conduct of it was war; we did not call it anything else; I did not call it a strike; and all these matters were common newspaper talk; a great many people in and out of the office talked about this, and many of the reporters exaggerated it; I skimmed out what I thought was reliable, and revised the others.

Chairman WALSH. You say in this letter, speak in this letter, of the favorable feature of the organization of that military company—of this troop. You knew, did you not, that that was composed of your superintendents and foremen and clerks and storekeepers and mine guards, principally?

Mr. BOWERS. We did not have a mine in Trinidad at all, not one; we had no superintendents or stores; we did have one retail grocery.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have any in the neighborhood of Ludlow?

Mr. BOWERS. Well, in the neighborhood; we had nothing at Ludlow.

Chairman WALSH. What is Hastings?

Mr. BOWERS. That is not ours; I am not very familiar with the geography of that county.

Chairman WALSH. Could you give the names of your mines in Huerfano County?

Mr. BOWERS. I could not name them.

Chairman WALSH. Could you give the names of your mines in Las Animas County?

Mr. BOWERS. I could not.

Chairman WALSH. Do you say you did not have any in the vicinity of Trinidad?

Mr. BOWERS. I do not know just what you call "in the vicinity of Trinidad."

Chairman WALSH. What was the closest ones you had to Trinidad?

Mr. BOWERS. None of the mines are in Trinidad.

Chairman WALSH. No; but I mean in the neighborhood of Trinidad.

Mr. BOWERS. We have what is called the Trinidad district and the Walsen district.

Chairman WALSH. Have you mines in the Trinidad district?

Mr. BOWERS. Lots of them.

Chairman WALSH. I will read you now what this report states, and ask you if you were not so advised yourself, and if you did not actually pay these men money for the time they spent at Ludlow?

Mr. BOWERS. Just a moment; I will precede that with the statement that I know nothing about that, or whether a penny was paid, or how it was organized.

Chairman WALSH. Nevertheless, I am going to read it to you and ask you a question or two, and ask you whether or not the deduction is there to justify that:

"A troop of National Guards were enlisted about the middle of April among the superintendents and foremen, the clerical force, physicians, storekeepers, mine guards, and other residents of the coal camps."

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Now, that was the company that afterwards shot and killed people at Ludlow; that poured oil on the tents of those striking miners and burned them down and robbed the dead and living, and looted the camp, wasn't it?

Mr. BOWERS. I could not go into any such thing as that, for I know nothing about it.

Chairman WALSH. Didn't you inquire?

Mr. BOWERS. I inquired as I would about any war; as I would about the European war; as I have told you a number of times, with all due respect to you, I was compelled to keep out; I could not sleep; I was suffering from insomnia, and excitement of that kind would affect me, and in two or three or four nights I would be prostrated; and I kept out of it; I would not allow that sort of stuff to come into my mind.

Chairman WALSH. What sort of stuff wouldn't you allow to come into your mind?

Mr. BOWERS. Anything I could help.

Chairman WALSH. You say in this telegram, "Forced fight resulting in probable loss of 10 or 15 strikers. Only 1 militiamen killed. Ludlow tent colony of strikers totally destroyed by burning 200 tents, generally followed by explosions, showing ammunition and dynamite stored in them. Expect further fighting to-day. Militia being reinforced." It seems to me from that as though you had the detailed information that a general might have who was actually in a fight, and who was reporting it to the War Department, to draw a simile. That was a telegram from Mr. L. M. Bowers to Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr.

Mr. BOWERS. That would come from the committee that was handling the coal properties there, like any other message, and saying that those were the facts. I have not the slightest doubt that that letter may have been referred to Mr. Welborn as I outlined it, or referred it to the executive committee to pass on it; I may have taken a great deal of pains about that; but I have no recollection whatever of the letter. I could not say positively about it, but my actual knowledge of participation in that matter is simply as I say; I gave no attention to it except as hearsay and what I got in my office, and what I would inquire about in writing a letter to Mr. Rockefeller or any other stockholder.

Chairman WALSH. It was very detailed information; you told about the violence and the number killed, the property destroyed, and the rest of that detail.

Mr. BOWERS. I may have cut out newspaper articles, and I may have got the information from others. It was a friendly letter just as though I was not connected with the company.

Chairman WALSH. Just as a citizen writing to Mr. Rockefeller?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes; if you like.

Chairman WALSH. It came from you as the ranking officer, as a man who had been in their employ for almost 20 years on a letter head of this kind, "The Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., Denver, Colo.; executive department; L. M. Bowers, chairman."

Mr. BOWERS. Yes; I do not dodge a single jot or tittle of that.

Chairman WALSH. Didn't you make all these reports, Mr. Bowers, as chairman of the executive committee, and, as you put it yourself before the congressional committee, as the "hired man of Mr. Rockefeller"?

Mr. BOWERS. No; I was employed by 2,200 stockholders and the board of directors, and Mr. Rockefeller represented just one; he had only 1 director in 15 in that company when I went there.

Chairman WALSH. Did you write to any other of the stockholders except Mr. Rockefeller?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir; and bondholders, too.

Chairman WALSH. Letters of that kind?

Mr. BOWERS. Letters of inquiry; I gave them the information—all the information I could gather.

Chairman WALSH. Give us the names of any other of the stockholders you wrote letters to similar to this.

Mr. BOWERS. I would have to have my memoranda in regard to that.

Chairman WALSH. Can you think of any other person except Mr. Rockefeller to whom you wrote, giving such detailed information as you give here in these letters?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes; I can recall a gentleman in Brooklyn.

Chairman WALSH. That is good.

Mr. BOWERS. This gentleman, I think, had $100,000 invested in the company. I think his name is Streeter.

Chairman WALSH. What are his initials, his full name?

Mr. BOWERS. I can not recall.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know his address?

Mr. BOWERS. No; I think he was something of a capitalist.

Chairman WALSH. Any others?

Mr. BOWERS. Then I remember of a letter from a very old gentleman—I think he told me in one of his letters that he was between 80 and 90 years of age—that he had $100,000 or $150,000 invested in the company, and he wrote me, and I wrote to him in reply to his letters.

Chairman WALSH. Did Mr. Streeter write you also?

Mr. BOWERS. I never wrote to any of these unless they wrote me, making inquiry.

Chairman WALSH. In Mr. Rockefeller's case you wrote regular reports at stated intervals and when you were not inquired of, did you not?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. In other words, you were writing to him as the largest stockholder in this company, as the man you thought you were working for, and as the man who had a vast influence on account of the amount of his holdings in that company and other corporations—much vaster than that of any other man you knew of in this country?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. I am going to call your attention, as quick as I can, to some of these letters.

Mr. BOWERS. I would like to add right in that connection that I was still an official in other corporations and wrote once a month a detailed report of the other companies, like the Cleveland Steel Co.; I was writing constantly to him, or frequently, about the companies he was interested in.

Chairman WALSH. And that includes also the letters you wrote to Mr. Starr J. Murphy, who was a director at 26 Broadway?

Mr. BOWERS. I do not know how I happened to write him.

Chairman WALSH. Do you think it grew out of the fact that you were chairman of the executive board and he was a director of the company?

Mr. BOWERS. I am quite inclined to believe that my relation with Mr. Rockefeller's office and with Mr. Starr J. Murphy—I have been connected with them so many years that they would naturally come to me out of courtesy and perhaps because of my age in regard to matters. As you notice from the most of the correspondence, Mr. Welborn did not get into it until about the time I stopped.

Chairman WALSH. Was that information for them personally or for the office?

Mr. BOWERS. Whatever they saw fit to do with it.

Chairman WALSH. You intended it to be information for that office, did you not?

Mr. BOWERS. I left that matter for Mr. Murphy or Mr. Rockefeller to do with as they saw fit.

Chairman WALSH. Your intention was that you were forwarding it as information for that office, was it not?

Mr. BOWERS. If you will let me go back—

Chairman WALSH (Interrupting). I will read you this letter, dated September 19.

Mr. BOWERS. 1914?

Chairman WALSH. 1913. That was when Mr. Murphy wrote you that Mr. Ethelbert Stewart was coming out there. That was from you as chairman of the executive board for the information of that office.

Mr. BOWERS. I will say that Mr. Murphy was a director.

Chairman WALSH. "Mr. Starr J. Murphy, 26 Broadway, New York."

Now, you kept track of the details and what the miners were doing in their own organization, did you not; how their convention was constituted, and such matters as that, at the time the strike was called?

Mr. BOWERS. Personally I did not keep track of it.

Chairman WALSH. But you gathered the information as chairman of the executive board and transmitted it?

Mr. BOWERS. Make it as broad as you wish; I wrote that letter and you can place the absolute responsibility on me for it, if you wish.

Chairman WALSH. What I am trying to inquire of you is, is it not a fact that you went so deeply into the minutæ of this subject so as to be able to tell 26 Broadway the constituent elements that were in the convention of the miners that called the strike?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Is that right? If it is there, it is all right?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Then I will just refer to it without going into the contents of the letter.

And, then, did you receive this letter of September 24, 1913, from Mr. Rockefeller:

"DEAR MR. BOWERS: Your letter of September 4, inclosing statement for the fiscal year, was forwarded to me at Seal Harbor and read with much interest. The showing which your company has made this year is very gratifying. We are glad to have the president and vice president of the company know of our appreciation of the work which they have done, and in which we know they have been so ably seconded by the loyal organization which they have built up.

"I have delayed acknowledging the report that I might have the opportunity of sending this personal word of appreciation.

"Very sincerely,

"JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.

"Mr. I. M. BOWERS,

"Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., Denver, Colo."

That was a date after the men went out on a strike; is that right?

Mr. BOWERS. The date of it?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BOWERS. I don't remember.

Chairman WALSH. They went out on September 23, 1913, and this letter is dated September 24, 1913.

Mr. BOWERS. I do not recall it at all.

Chairman WALSH. Now—

Mr. BOWERS (interrupting). Is that Mr. Rockefeller's letter?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BOWERS. Was that letter written the day after the beginning of the strike?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BOWERS. And written in reply to a letter I wrote him?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BOWERS. That was 20 days before the strike. He refers to my letter of September 4, 20 days before, inclosing statement for the fiscal year, which was forwarded to him at Seal Harbor, Me.

Chairman WALSH. And on September 24, 1913, he sent you that letter in reply. Now, your estimate of the number of men that went out on strike was 8,000, was it not?

Mr. BOWERS. I do not recall that I made an estimate. I may have.

Chairman WALSH. Sir?

Mr. BOWERS. I think, perhaps, I may. I think, probably, about 50 per cent of the men—not 8,000—out of our camp.

Chairman WALSH. No; from 40 to 60 per cent of all went out, and went to other places, or went to live in the canyons out there?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Did the large number of them that did that make an impression on you to the effect that they had some real grievance if they would leave their employment and go out to live in that manner?

Mr. BOWERS. I do not believe I can throw any light—you have so much testimony from men that know all about the matter. It would simply be an opinion of mine, and I do not think you would regard it as very valuable.

Chairman WALSH. Yes; I do regard it as exceedingly valuable, and we have asked the opinions of many people, and consider it in many cases of more importance than the testimony of those who had actual knowledge of the circumstances.

Were you advised as to what took place in that industry in 1903 and 1904? About that strike?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes. I never got into that.

Chairman WALSH. Don't you know that many of the men were deported?

Mr. BOWERS. No; I do not. If you will allow me to state—

Chairman WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. BOWERS. One of my first interviews with Mr. Welborn and the manager then, a man named Thompson, when I first went there was this, "Have you good reason to be objecting to the unions?" I asked about that and heard the reasons they gave me, good or bad. I said, "In many of the States coal miners are unionized," and, as I say, I inquired of them what reasons they had, and they gave me their reasons pro and con, and they went into the reasons and conditions up in northern Colorado. They told me about their terms and rules and that they were impossible.

Chairman WALSH. That was when you first went there?

Mr. BOWERS. That was when I first went there.

Chairman WALSH. What date was that?

Mr. BOWERS. That was when I became officially connected with them; that was in October, 1907.

Chairman WALSH. When did they organize the northern fields?

Mr. BOWERS. I think there has been union mines in operation for a good many years. I don't know about that.

Chairman WALSH. You were in favor of the governor, after you got him rounded up in your way, were you in favor of his sending people out of the State—ordering people to the State line and not to return?

Mr. BOWERS. That was a matter of administration that I could not pass on.

Chairman WALSH. Did you ask him to?

Mr. BOWERS. I never saw him in my life but once.

Chairman WALSH. Did you send word through any of your subofficers that you thought that was a good thing?

Mr. BOWERS. I had absolutely nothing to do with it or with any officer of the State or of the city of Denver or with the governor or anybody connected with him. I had no conversation with them in connection with it or expressed an opinion except in a private way.

Chairman WALSH. How did you get the bankers rounded up?

Mr. BOWERS. Not by myself.

Chairman WALSH. By whom?

Mr. BOWERS. I think the bankers themselves—I think I recall now that some bankers—I know they came into Mr. Welborn's office and I was invited across the hall, and I think one or two of them stated that they had seen, or were going to see, the governor. I don't know the technical name they were called.

Chairman WALSH. Rounded up?

Mr. BOWERS. No; I don't mean that; but the technical name of this association, the bankers' association, or some such body, but they came to get information.

Chairman WALSH. They just rounded themselves up, as it were?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir; they did. That was their own proposition, the same as the chamber of commerce. I don't think there was a man connected with the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. that had anything to do with it directly.

Chairman WALSH. Who were your railroad friends that you referred to?

Mr. BOWERS. The men that we sell about 25,000 tons of rails to every month, and in that connection we sell rails from the Missouri River to the Pacific coast.

Chairman WALSH. The steel works of what company?

Mr. BOWERS. Of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. We intended to sell all of the rails from the Missouri River west, in all of those States, and we sold a great deal of coal to them.

Chairman WALSH. Who was the detective that you claim Mr. Hayes said, or heard say to some of the workers, "What are you hanging around Trinidad for; why don't you go out to the mines and give them hell?"

Mr. BOWERS. I expect I got it from the newspapers; I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. You said one of these men Hayes heard was one of the detectives? What detective was that?

Mr. BOWERS. I can not tell you; there were a large number employed by different operators.

Chairman WALSH. This was one of yours?

Mr. BOWERS. I should use that term detective.

Chairman WALSH. They had all joined together?

Mr. BOWERS. All in one group.

Chairman WALSH. You were a unit to fight the miners?

Mr. BOWERS. Not at all.

Chairman WALSH. To fight against what you call the dictation of the unions?

Mr. BOWERS. I would not assent to that for a second.

Chairman WALSH. They were united at least on the proposition that under no condition would they submit to what you called the dictation of the miners' union?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't know whether they were a unit or not, but I don't assent to that statement.

Chairman WALSH. Your letter of October 17 says that the coal operators were a unit and under no condition will they submit to dictation?

Mr. BOWERS. Well, they were practically a unit.

Chairman WALSH. And they would not accept the dictation of the miners' organization?

Mr. BOWERS. Not 12,000 by 1,200; no. Now, I want to repeat there, and I want it in the record, that if the matter had been reversed, and there were 12,000 union men, that I would have taken exactly the same position.

Chairman WALSH. In this individual case, there were some men, some interlopers, and some others that were trying to keep these independent workers from working?

Mr. BOWERS. I think so.

Chairman WALSH. But it did not apply to all unions, but simply this situation?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you write this to Mr. Rockefeller under date of November 22, 1913:

"From this unwise action on the part of labor leaders to force fully 90 per cent of these mines out of the open shop and into the union contrary to their wishes. They have so overreached the bounds of reason and common decency as to attract attention everywhere, and this is what is needed to awaken the men who have the good of the country at heart, to oppose and finally defeat unions of every sort from becoming dictators, to both employers and employees, with the hope that they will eventually control the affairs of the State and Nation."

That was the way you felt about it?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Fight them off?

Mr. BOWERS. No, sir; not at all. Now, I want to put it right in here, that I never raised my hand or voice or made any move in opposition to union labor.

Chairman WALSH. Not openly?

Mr. BOWERS. Not openly. I objected, and it was a serious proposition to me; there were 12,000 men not permitted to work by 1,200 others, and I say it was wrong and wicked and pernicious, and any union that will do that will hang themselves by their own rope. I say it was unwise, and I believe that a majority of the union men will say that it was unwise to do it. I never raised my voice against unions at all.

Chairman WALSH. And you thought on November 22, 1913, that it had come time for the people to awaken, and to oppose and defeat unions of every sort?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir; against the will of the men themselves.

Chairman WALSH. What other unions did you refer to?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't care what unions they are, or what they belong to or who they are, they have perfect liberty, and I have never raised my voice against any man or labor organization in my life.

Chairman WALSH. Was it reported to you, for instance, in such a place as Sunrise, Wyo., that it was ascertained that if a man belonged to a union they would tell the man to get out of the camp and go down the canyon?

Mr. BOWERS. What was that, please?

Chairman WALSH. Did you ascertain from some of these officers, like Mr. Welborn, that in a place like Sunrise that if a man belonged to a union he was told to go down the canyon, to get out of the camp?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't believe one single whisper of that statement. It was for some other reason. Any man that would do that I would discharge him in a minute.

Chairman WALSH. You would advise Mr. Rockefeller as a director to take that action?

Mr. BOWERS. No, sir; I would take it myself; he had nothing to do with it.

Chairman WALSH. Could you have discharged Mr. Welborn?

Mr. BOWERS. I think I could have made it pretty hot for him.

Chairman WALSH. And could you have discharged anybody that was up at Sunrise that was engaged in such practice?

Mr. BOWERS. I would not do it individually. We had an executive board to pass upon those matters; I was the chairman of the board. I had my voice in it and nothing more. The executive board passed upon those matters, and I had the same voice as any other man to do with it as a member of the board, but I will state now that I did a great deal less than any other member of that committee to influence their action, I think.

Chairman WALSH. So then you could not have made it hot for them or discharged them?

Mr. BOWERS. I certainly would.

Chairman WALSH. But you had so little chance.

Mr. BOWERS. I would get chance enough.

Chairman WALSH. Notwithstanding your last statement?

Mr. BOWERS. Exactly.

Chairman WALSH. How did you get the newspapers out there; how do you round up the newspapers?

Mr. BOWERS. I scarcely know a newspaper man in the State of Colorado.

Chairman WALSH. But you stated on November 18:

"Another mighty power has been rounded up in behalf of the operators by the gathering together of 14 of the editors of the most important newspapers in Denver, Pueblo, Trinidad, Walsenburg, Colorado Springs, and other of the larger places in the State."

Who rounded them up? How did you get them together?

Mr. BOWERS. As far as I know they rounded themselves up in the common cause to discuss the situation and see what should be done. I have got confidence enough and I believe in the honesty of newspaper men, and so forth, to have common sense and act for the common good, the same as any other human beings have, and they naturally would come together in the State of Colorado and see what ought to be done in such a deplorable condition, the same as I might or you might, or any other citizen in their position might.

Chairman WALSH. The Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., then, did not round them up and did not bring them together? They just acted as independent American citizens, feeling as you and I?

Mr. BOWERS. So far as I know, that is exactly what they did. I did not know they were rounded up until they had rounded themselves up and passed resolutions—I did not know they were there.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Northcutt was the editor of a newspaper?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. The owner of a newspaper?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. On November 22 you stated that the "officials representing the United Mine Workers of America were all hunting for a hole, however insignificant, through which they can crawl without disgracing themselves before the membership in their failure to make the coal miners' strike general and cause a complete tie-up." That was your opinion, was it?

Mr. BOWERS. Would you like to have me state where I got that opinion?

Chairman WALSH. Was it your opinion, first?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And where did you gather it?

Mr. BOWERS. What is the date of that?

Chairman WALSH. November 22, 1913.

Mr. BOWERS. I will pass that, if you please.

Chairman WALSH. You will pass that?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. You remember that letter? We have referred to that before. You say here that these men just rounded themselves up and that you had nothing to do with it. Perhaps you recall your letter of the 22d of December, after that, don't you, when you say, "We used every possible effort to drive him, the governor, into action, but he was hand in glove with the labor leaders and is to-day; but the big men of affairs have helped the operators in whipping the agitators, including the governor?"

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. You used that language?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And you did cooperate—big men of affairs did cooperate with your company in whipping the agitators, including the governor?

Mr. BOWERS. I am not speaking of myself individually; but I am speaking now broadly of all the coal operators.

Chairman WALSH. Well, that included your company, of course? It says "we."

Mr. BOWERS. Well, you understand that.

Chairman WALSH. Well, I understand it to have included your company?

Mr. BOWERS. Sure.

Chairman WALSH. Excuse me a moment, please; I may have finished. There may be a point or two come up later.

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Weinstock would like to ask you.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The question was put to you some time ago, Mr. Bowers, as to whether your company and the sheriff, Jeff Farr, were associated together. I did not quite understand your answer. Will you explain whether they were or were not associated together, and if they were associated together, how and when?

Mr. BOWERS. They were not associated with me, if I represent the company. I have no belief that after October 20, 1907, the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. had any association, politically or otherwise, with Jeff Farr, excepting officially.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Had no association with Jeff Farr after 1907?

Mr. BOWERS. After October 20, 1907, the day of my election to that position.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is eight years ago?

Mr. BOWERS. Eight years ago.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You say you had no association with him except officially. Will you be kind enough to explain in what way you were associated with him officially?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't know that we were. If we had any papers to serve, as sheriff of that county we were compelled, of course, to employ him.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Did you or any representatives of your company render any support or any aid in his political campaigns?

Mr. BOWERS. After that date?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes.

Mr. BOWERS. Not a penny.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Did you in any way—you made no contribution to his campaign?

Mr. BOWERS. Never a nickel been given by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. for political purposes since the 20th day of October, 1907; not one nickel.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Did you or your associates endeavor, directly or indirectly, to influence any of the employees to vote for him?

Mr. BOWERS. Not that I know of.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Did you regard him as a lick-spittle of your company?

Mr. BOWERS. Well, I would myself—if you will let me explain that—I wish you would let me do so right here—make a little explanation.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Surely.

Mr. BOWERS. Back years ago—now, I will clear this up, or throw a little bit of light on this Jeff Farr position for you. Back in the early days—I will say years ago, 10 or 12 or 15 or 16 or 18 years ago, they had an official of the company there whose idea of conducting coal camps and dealing with the foreign population there was that he must have saloons and a lot of them. He made the saloon question the very center of—an employment bureau, so to speak, and he built up saloons and mixed the company all up with them—built buildings and cooperated with Jeff Farr and others—or I won't say Jeff Farr, but with others—to open saloons, and he made the saloon business, as I say, the very center; and Jeff Farr, as I understand, became a partner, as stated in some of my letters which you may have read, in 16 saloons in the county. Well, they may not have been all in that county, but they are in that community; and he had a wholesale liquor store. Now, not only Jeff Farr, but the whole system was a saloon system in there for the one purpose to conduct the politics and control those counties. Now, they were not all made up by the C. F. & I. Co., but they were all made up in harmony with this man now dead; I am sorry to have to refer to him, but it was a most pernicious and damnable precedent. Now, I say this on my own account. They built up a system, as Attorney General Farrar says, that is second only to Taminany Hall, and I say you can not budge it. They control every man that is put up for office there, and they do it to-day, and they did at the last election. I am not dodging a single thing on that point; what we did, or what I did. The only thing we saw that would down that kind of political management was to prohibit the saloons and clean the whole thing up, and I worked to that end with all my time and power, and every other man connected with the C. F. & I., to make Colorado a dry State and to clean up that combination of rotten men and the whole thing, saloons and all, by State prohibition.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are we to understand then, Mr. Bowers, that you, as an individual, and as representing the company, of which you were the head, condemned that policy and that condition, and did all you could to uproot it?

Mr. BOWERS. Well, now, I have been accused of using pretty vigorous language in my letters. I should imagine the chairman over there was from across the water, and my ancestors were, too, which may account for it.

Chairman WALSH. I am from Missouri, locally. My ancestors——

Mr. BOWERS (interrupting). Well, I will try to show you.

Chairman WALSH. Do.

Mr. BOWERS. Those facts; and my notion of that sort of thing is so utterly contrary to that factor in political life that I thought it my duty, so I didn't hesitate at all. I turned out 150 men, out of my offices, and saw to it that they got out and worked for the going dry of the State, and turned out everybody I could; but the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. didn't pay one nickel, though, for that business—not a nickel. Some of us chipped in from our own pockets and helped carry it along.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. It has been brought out in the testimony that the operators, I think, collectively, issued bulletins at regular intervals that were widely distributed, seemingly for the purpose of influencing public opinion. Now, did the strikers, as far as you know, likewise issue bulletins——

Mr. BOWERS (interrupting). The leaders of the strike.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (continuing). Also for the purpose of influencing public opinion?

Mr. BOWERS. They did; and they came out in the same type, in the same paper, and in the same style, everything. The bulletins sent out by the strike leaders had the same outside features, so that when one got a bulletin he did not know whether it was from the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., or Mr. Lee, or sent out collectively, or came from the other side. Exactly the same; counterfeits, you might say.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. This method, then, of endeavoring to influence public opinion through the medium of bulletins having wide circulation was not confined to one side?

Mr. BOWERS. Not at all.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. But were employed by both sides?

Mr. BOWERS. By both sides.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Both sides believing it legitimate and a fair way of getting their side of the story before the public?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. It has also been brought out in the testimony that the operators exercised every privilege and every influence at their command to get the governor of Colorado, and through him, the President of the United States, to think and see things their way, in order to influence public opinion in their favor.

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Did the strikers likewise endeavor to influence the governor, and through him public opinion, to see things their way?

Mr. BOWERS. My opinion is that they did, and very thoroughly.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then that method was not confined to one side, but indulged in by both sides?

Mr. BOWERS. I think so.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You had no monopoly of it on your side?

Mr. BOWERS. I think not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you aware of the fact, Mr. Bowers, that the testimony shows that ex-United States Senator Patterson, of Colorado, a man who stands very high and who has a great deal of influence and many followers, and whose sympathies were with the strikers, used his great influence with the governor of Colorado in favor of the strikers' position?

Mr. BOWERS. His partner was representing or was attorney for the strikers, Mr. Hawkins, the partner—and had been for a great many years—of Senator Patterson.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You are familiar then with the phase of the testimony that Senator Patterson used his influence with the governor to have him act in favor of the strikers' position?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. There are only a few minutes left, and Mr. Weinstock wants to go to a new line of questions, and will not be able to finish, and we will take a recess until 2 o'clock.

Mr. BOWERS. Or, half past 1, if you like.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, say, 2 o'clock.

Chairman WALSH. Yes; 2 o'clock; that is our regular time.

Mr. BOWERS. I should appreciate it very much getting away by 3 o'clock.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What time does your train leave?

Mr. BOWERS. I would like to get away at 3 or 4 o'clock.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Better make it 4 o'clock, and I will try to get through with you by that time.

(Thereupon, at 12.30 o'clock, Monday, May 24, 1915, a recess was taken until 2 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS—2 P. M.

TESTIMONY OF REV. EUGENE S. GADDIS—Recalled.

Chairman WALSH. I want to read in the record here two telegrams that were submitted to me by Mr. Rockefeller, being the same two telegrams that were submitted to you by Mr. Manly. One is dated May 21, 1915, from Denver, Colo., at 9.55 a. m. [Reading:]

STARR J. MURPHY,

Care New Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C.:

Press reports show charge made yesterday that Willson, one of jurors in Lawson case and traveling salesman for National Biscuit Co., has exclusive selling arrangement with our stores for products of his company. Neither National Biscuit Co. nor any other company has exclusive selling privileges in our mining camps. During past year but 21 per cent of our purchases of goods of class manufactured by National Biscuit Co. were made from that concern.

J. F. WELBORN.

The other telegram being from Trinidad, Colo., 4.55 p. m.:

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,

Care New Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C.:

I read in newspapers statement made by Mr. Walsh using my name, all of which is absolutely false. Should Gaddis testify that I stated I had exclusive privileges in coal camps to sell National Biscuit Co.'s goods he will commit perjury. If he simply makes the statement to that effect, it is a villainous lie.

W. W. WILSON.

Those two telegrams were submitted to you by Mr. Manly at my request.

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I want to give you an opportunity to make any comment upon the same that you may have to make.

Dr. GADDIS. As to the Mr. Welborn letter, first, we will take that up first. Mr. Welborn made the statement that the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. have permitted no exclusive privileges in their camp stores—

Chairman WALSH. In the mining camps?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir. I can not see what that has to do with the impression and knowledge of the conversation that was had with me that made that impression upon me, which I will give. I am personally of the opinion, from observation, I was of the impression, and I am still, that there were such exclusive privileges. There was a young man in Trinidad that was constantly going to the C. F. & I. camps taking orders for gentlemen's clothes. I never saw any other firm represented in the camps. I knew this man very well. I was traveling in the camps all of the time, and I think if there had been such a representative I would have known it. Furthermore, on one occasion in Trinidad I overheard a conversation, which was not intended for me, which confirmed the impression I had that he had the exclusive privilege for selling clothes to the mines.

In regard to another part of Mr. Welborn's message, he says during the past year but 21 per cent of their goods were purchased—of goods of class manufactured by the National Biscuit Co.—from that concern. Now, I believe it is well known that they have a chain, I think, of 22 retail stores and two wholesale stores. The wholesale stores are located in Pueblo and Trinidad and do a very large business outside of the C. F. & I. camps. They can not hold their business without they carry other lines of goods manufactured by other companies making crackers and cakes. Mr. Welborn's low percentage here of 21 per cent, I infer, is computed on the basis of all the sales purchased from other companies through this wholesale department, because this wholesale department would very greatly pull down the percentage of goods put into the C. F. & I. camps by the National. In regard to further impressions that I had made upon me in going into the C. F. & I. camps, I have noticed that the National Biscuit Co. has their products on display in every store very conspicuously, and that helped to confirm me in what I said the other day. Taking Mr. Welborn's words on their face, 21 per cent of the business of 22 wholesale stores, in volume, for one year is simply enormous; would be simply enormous in its aggregate, and when I come to Mr. Wilson's telegram I will refer to that later in regard to how he had easy access there without having to urge the men to buy the goods. Now, Mr. Wilson, again, to just speak of him, this would naturally come under his message, but I have it under Mr. Welborn's. Mr. Wilson is known throughout that country as a company man. I meet him constantly on the trains. He is with the operators and is known as a man lining up with them in this struggle. He is a man that I met a number of times in different places, and from my impression of him I am very frank to say to you that I do not believe that he is a big enough man to have had this privilege that he held from the C. F. & I. and give an unbiased testimony in a case of life and death. There is another point, Mr. Chairman—

Chairman WALSH. He was a jurymen, as I understand it, in the Lawson case.

Dr. GADDIS. Did I say testimony?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir.

Dr. GADDIS. I should say his attitude on the jury.

Another thing about Mr. Wilson, he is a man of very considerable natural parts. I don't know who the foreman of that jury was, but if I knew the inside of it, I am perfectly satisfied to tell you and this commission, that he was very much active in his attitude, whatever attitude it was. There is a point that I think should not be overlooked in regard to this message of Mr. Wilson. My testimony to you, as the chairman and a representative of a Government commission, I made my testimony to the commission and to you as chairman, but Mr. Wilson comments on it and sends his message to John D. Rockefeller, jr. Now, in regard to Mr. Wilson, while the conversation referred to the other day took place—as I remember it now, and I am quite sure I am correct—on a Colorado Southern train about the middle of January, Mr. Wilson and myself were traveling from Pueblo to Trinidad. To just fix the case, we were traveling for several hours together and talking about a number of things. He mentioned purchasing a Navajo blanket at a very cheap price in Pueblo. The general manager of a very large coal company, or the general manager of the stores of a very large coal company, boarded the train at Pueblo. Mr. Wilson said he had purchased some of the wooden dummy guns from the strikers and was going to keep them as souvenirs, and he left them there, and this gentleman brought those wooden guns onto the train and sat down with us. We knew each other quite well, and the third party that I have referred to was one of the best friends I had in Colorado. I knew him quite well and was on quite intimate terms with him. In the course of the conversation—this was my impression and my recollection—that he said, "I go into the C. F. & I. camps to sell my goods, but this man will not let me into his camp," and he said it in tones and looks in referring to this manager as if he had the power right there to say that he would let him go in or would not. He was reticent and made no reply, and I inferred from that, and I think it was a natural deduction, that Mr. Wilson had the privilege of the C. F. & I. Co. for the sale of goods, which this man would not grant him, and in that regard it was a special privilege.

Now, you will notice here, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. Wilson does not deny in his testimony—in his wire—that he has the exclusive privilege of the sale of goods in the C. F. & I. camps. We may read that between the lines, but when he calls a man a villainous liar, it seems to me he ought to state specifically what he means. He simply says he has not the privilege of the sale of goods in the coal camps. He does not say the C. F. & I. camps. As soon as I read this statement of Mr. Wilson—I was in Phoenix, Ariz., and read it in the morning press dispatches—and I said to myself, "W. W. Wilson is 'Bill' Wilson." The statement that I read in the paper was that W. W. Wilson, traveling salesman—it gave all the names of the jurors and gave W. W. Wilson, traveling salesman, not of the National Biscuit Co., but traveling salesman of Trinidad. Now, Trinidad is a small place of ten or twelve thousand people and I have been there long enough to get acquainted, and I never hear of any other W. W. Wilson in Trinidad. I said to myself, "That is Bill Wilson." And never having had occasion to think of the conversation before, I said that man told me on the train he had exclusive rights; and having my own impressions of the way things had been going on in Colorado, and are going on, and will go on until something stops them that has not yet been effectual, I said to myself, "That man represented the company, evidently, on this jury." I sat right down and wrote the attorney, Mr. Clark, of Trinidad, my impressions.

That is my statement, Mr. Chairman.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes. I would like to ask him a few questions.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Weinstock would like to ask you a few questions.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You will observe, Mr. Gaddis, that Mr. Welborn is very specific in his message. He says, "Press reports show the charge made yesterday that Wilson, one of the jurors in the Lawson case and traveling salesman for the National Biscuit Co., has exclusive selling arrangements with our stores." That is quite specific. That don't mean coal mines generally; that means stores of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes; I understand that.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (reading). "Neither the National Biscuit Co. nor any other company has exclusive selling privileges in our mining camps."

Dr. GADDIS. I think it is a mistake.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (reading). "During the past year only 21 per cent of the purchases of goods of the class manufactured by the National Biscuit Co. were made from that concern."

Mr. Wilson says: "I read in the newspapers a statement made by Mr. Walsh, using my name, all of which is absolutely false. Should Gaddis testify that I stated that I had exclusive privilege in the coal camps to sell National Biscuit Co. goods he will commit perjury."

He makes it still broader; from his statement it is clear that he not only has no exclusive privilege in the stores of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., but he has no exclusive privilege in any of the coal camps.

Now, speaking for myself, Mr. Gaddis, I have never heard a whisper against the truthfulness or the integrity of either Mr. Wilson or Mr. Welborn. Now, would you have this commission then accept your impressions pure and simple with not an iota of evidence of what would be called real evidence behind them? Would you have us accept your impressions as facts against the positive denial and clear statement of these two gentlemen?

Dr. GADDIS. That is for the commission to decide; not me.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I simply ask you whether you expect us to accept your impressions as against their positive statements?

Dr. GADDIS. I do not think I am called upon to say. It would be ridiculously presumptuous for me to say what I expect this commission to do.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then what is the need for you to come here and explain unless you expect us to accept your impression?

Dr. GADDIS. I am giving you my positive impressions of facts as they came—as I recollect them, in this record.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then they are just impressions?

Dr. GADDIS. They are my knowledge and recollection of the transactions and incidents that I have recited here twice on this stand, to the best of my knowledge.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And that is all they are?

Dr. GADDIS. And that is all they are. I don't see how they could be anything else, if I am an honest man.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. That is, you gave your best recollection of the facts, and this man, by wire, undertook to this commission to call you a liar? This was submitted to you, and you came back with this further comment? You were asked to come and you asked me to read this in the record?

Dr. GADDIS. I did. I asked you at the close of the morning session—I did not know it was your intention to bring it up. I knew you had those telegrams. I said I thought they ought to be read into the record, if you remember that, Mr. Walsh; I wanted them presented.

Chairman WALSH. That is all.

Mr. Bowers.

TESTIMONY OF MR. L. M. BOWERS—Recalled.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Bowers, when we adjourned, Mr. Commissioner Weinstock was questioning you, and he may now finish.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The last several questions, Mr. Bowers, that were put to you were in relation to Sheriff Farr, if you remember. Let's make sure that we understand your statement in connection with Sheriff Farr. The impression that your answers left on my mind was this, that up to 1907 the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., in common with other coal companies in Colorado, worked jointly with Sheriff Farr with a view to controlling the political situation in that part of Colorado?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. They did it openly and aboveboard and it was notorious?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And they did rob the voters of their political freedom—

Mr. BOWERS. I could not use that expression "rob;" but my impression is that they were political wirepullers and unscrupulous politicians and did through the influence of the saloons control the politics.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. When you came into power, as I understood, you heartily disapproved of and condemned that policy?

Mr. BOWERS. I did.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And did all in your power to wipe it out?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And through the influence of the saloons, you were unable to wipe it out, but you did minimize it?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes; some.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And your impression is that the only way it can ever be wiped out is through wiping out the saloons?

Mr. BOWERS. State legislation working effectively with all the machinery of the Government there can wipe it out; that is the only thing.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And as an evidence of your good faith and the good faith of your company in earnestly endeavoring to wipe out this political bossism, you did all that was possible for you to do as a citizen and a representative of a large industry to have prohibition carry in Colorado in order that the saloon might be wiped out, and that with it the political boss might be wiped out?

Mr. BOWERS. I did.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And were those efforts successful?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And prohibition carried in Colorado?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And as soon as it goes into force, is it your opinion that political bossism will have reached an end in Colorado, so far as the saloon helps to maintain political bossism?

Mr. BOWERS. I think the citizens of Colorado are an exceptional group of people; a great many people go there on account of their health, and so forth, and there is an exceptional condition from that class. I think public sentiment, the vote and everything, will effectually wipe out the saloons, as can be done, I know. And with the saloon wiped out, Jeff Farr and all that clique will be cleaned up.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. There was some time spent this morning also, Mr. Bowers, in discussing such terms as giving the officeholders—the officials—a spanking, and then giving them candy. Now, I want to make sure I got your thought and spirit. Are we to understand by the expression that the giving of officeholders a spanking when they did not do as you wanted them to do, and giving them candy when they did do as you wanted them to do, meant that you would justify resorting to illegal or immoral or improper and unholy means to influence and control public officials when they did not want to do your bidding, and to compensate and reward them when they did do unholy, unrighteous, and illegal things, or are we to understand from what you said that you believe when public officials were derelict in their duties or did not perform their duties that you felt warranted to bring to bear on them the strongest possible public opinion in order that you might get them to perform their duties, if that influence should be needed?

Mr. BOWERS. Precisely.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is the thought you intended to convey?

Mr. BOWERS. Precisely that.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The report published—the report of the military board, consisting of Edward J. Boughton, major Second Infantry, and judge advocate; W. C. Danks, captain, First Infantry; and Philip van Cise, captain, First Infantry, and I understand this commission was appointed by the governor; was it the governor or Gen. Chase?

Chairman WALSH. Gen. Chase appointed that commission.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Appointed by Gen. Chase, brigadier general, commanding the military district of Colorado, to investigate into the Ludlow troubles. This report was quoted this morning, and as I remember the quotation it was that part of it which reads as follows:

"During the rescuing and afterwards the tent colony was invaded by the soldiers and mine guards for quite a different purpose. By this time the uniformed guardsmen had been joined by large numbers of men in civilian attire, part of whom were from Troop A and part of them mine guards, all unknown to the uniformed soldiers and their officers and all unused and unamenable to discipline.

"By this time, the time of the burning of the tents, the nondescript number of men had passed out of their officers' control, had ceased to be any army, and had become a mob. Doubtless all were seeing red on both sides of the conflict.

"This may account for the insane shooting by the strikers during the rescue of their women and children, and it may also account for what happened in the tents.

"We find that the tents were not all of them destroyed by accidental fire. Men and soldiers swarmed into the colony and deliberately assisted the conflagration by spreading the fire from tent to tent.

"Beyond a doubt, it was seen to intentionally that the fire should destroy the whole of the colony. This, too, was accompanied by the usual loot.

"Men and soldiers seized and took from the tents whatever appealed to their fancy of the moment. In this way clothes, bedding, articles of jewelry, bicycles, tools, and utensils were taken from the tents and conveyed away.

"So deliberately was this burning and looting that we find that cans of oil found in the tents were poured upon them and the tents lit with matches."

This was quoted, I assume, because this report is regarded as authentic and reliable.

Chairman WALSH calls my attention to the fact that what you did quote is the paragraph I am now about to read:

"A troop of National Guards was enlisted about the middle of April among the superintendents and foremen, the clerical force, physicians, storekeepers, mine guards, and other residents of the coal camps."

"This unit of the National Guard was designated 'Troop A,' but so recently was it recruited that at the time of the Battle of Ludlow it had not yet selected its officers nor were they supplied with uniforms, arms, or ammunition."

I take it that this quotation was offered because the report is regarded as a reliable and dependable and fair report. Now, were you on the ground at that time, Mr. Bowers?

Mr. BOWERS. I was in Denver. What date was that?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I am not speaking about the date of the report, but the date the trouble took place; were you in Colorado at that time?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And were you in touch with all that happened, more or less?

Mr. BOWERS. Somewhat.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What comments have you to make on that part of the report? Have you any facts at your command from which you could either dispute what appears in this report or corroborate it; the first part of the report is [reading]:

"The fire in the tent colony was accidental; that is to say, it was due either to an overturned stove, an explosion of some sort, or by the concentrated fire directed at one time against some of the tents. The fire began in the corner nearest the crossroads and afterwards it was deliberately spread by the combatants. During the fire the soldiers, upon learning that women and children were still in the colony, went through the tents, calling upon all the persons in the colony to come forth, and with difficulty rescuing men, women, and children to the number of some 25 or 30, including one William Snyder and his family. Then the tents were fired."

Have you any comment to make on that?

Mr. BOWERS. None at all.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Here is a previous paragraph, which I overlooked; this report goes on to say [reading]:

"The immediate cause of the battle was an attack upon the soldiers by the Greek inhabitants of the tent colony who misinterpreted a movement of troops on a neighboring hill. Thereupon the Greeks fled out of the colony to a railroad cut, and soon afterwards fired the first shots of the battle against the soldiers."

Have you any comment to make on that?

Mr. BOWERS. I think that is the impression; there are so many witnesses on both sides, with conflicting testimony on both sides, that it would be a very great task to get at the exact facts; one side will have one idea, and the other side another.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. At a later period this occurs in the report [reading]:

"After the fire started it was several minutes before the men on Water Tank Hill were directed to return to it. The enlisted men in this position we find still resentful against their officers for withholding their fire so long."

Have you any comment to make on that?

Mr. BOWERS. No.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Later it says [reading]:

"Just before dark this was accomplished, and Martin was discovered dead and mutilated."

Martin was a member of the National Guard.

"He had been shot through the mouth. Powder stains evidencing that the gun was held against his lips. His head had been caved in and his brains had exuded to the ground. His arms had been broken. In such a way does the savage blood lust of this southern European peasantry find expression.

"As we prepare this report, Canor Lester is deliberately slain at Walsenburg while attending the wounded under the protection of the Red Cross of Geneva, recognized as inviolable by civilized men the world over. It is shocking to think of our Colorado youth defending their State and exposed to practices of savagery unheard of, save in the half-believed tales of the Sicilian Camorra."

Have you any comment to make on that?

Mr. BOWERS. No.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Later it says [reading]:

"It was then that Maj. Hamrock tested his range with the machine guns on Water Tank Hill and sent them directly into the first tents of the colony itself; at the same time the strikers' fire drew a return from all combatants into the same tent. It was this concentrated fire upon the nearest tents at the south-west corner of the colony that set them on fire.

"It could not be supposed that any women, children, or other noncombatants remained in the colony itself. The women and children had been seen departing early in the morning, and it was impossible to believe that the strikers would draw the fire of their opponents from all sides into the colony if any women and children remained therein.

"Shortly after the fire started the detonation of some high explosive, like some giant powder, or dynamite, was both heard and seen. From one of its tents a shower of its contents could be seen rising high in the air, emitting a blaze of fire.

"As one tent caught after another, several other explosions occurred. During this time some of the men, having nearly reached the tent colony, heard the screams of the women, and called to men, whom they saw firing between the tents, to get their women out. The only words were 'You go to hell,' spoken with a foreign accent and accompanied by a rain of shot. The men in the colony being driven back, and the presence of the women being thus known, Capt. Carson, Lieut. Linderfelt, other officers and men made a dash in among the burning tents for the purpose of rescuing the women and children.

"At first they took several women from the tents—some of which were on fire and some not—then they discovered some subterranean pits beneath many of the tents and that some of them were stored with human occupants. The rescue work was most difficult as the women refused to accompany the soldiers and even fought against being taken away.

"They said afterwards that they believed the soldiers would kill them. They had to be dragged to places of safety. When the pits were discovered the difficulty of getting out the women and children was increased.

"Lieut. Linderfelt took a woman from one tent who could not speak English, but who made him understand that he must return. She went back with him and indicated one of these holes in the ground, from which the lieutenant took two little children just in the nick of time. He stalked from the colony with those children in his arms.

"Capt. Carson relates that when he was in an apparently open-floored tent he heard the crying or whining of something living beneath. He had to chop away the floor, which was nailed down upon these people, in order to get them out.

"These holes were so constructed as to conceal their presence, and the openings to them were usually hidden by the bed or some article of furniture being placed above them. During the whole time that this rescue work was going forward the colony was under fire from the arroyo, so that not only did the officers and men have to contend with the fire and with the reluctance of the deluded people they were rescuing, but they were taking the greatest chances of destruction by making targets of themselves in the light of the burning tents.

"We find that the work of rescuing these women and children, to the number of some 25 or 30, by Lieut. Linderfelt, Capt. Carson, and the squads at their command, was under all circumstances truly heroic, and must stand out boldly in contradistinction to the abandonment of the helpless women and children by their own people and the subsequent efforts to kill their rescuers, regardless of the safety of the rescued."

Have you any comment to make on that?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't just gather, Mr. Weinstock, what you mean by "making comment"; comment on the truthfulness of it?

Chairman WALSH. He just wants that in the record.

Mr. BOWERS. Truthfulness of the statements or what?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, you may want to add to some of the statements that are made here.

Mr. BOWERS. No, sir; I don't want to add anything to the Ludlow matter. You have evidence on both sides by the volume and volume. It was a sickening, infernal piece of work. I have no comment to make except I wish I could forget everything about it and see that justice was done to everybody, whoever it was.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Here is the final statement of the committee [reading]:

"We do not presume even to hint where the ultimate responsibility lies in the present strike. It may be that the coal operators or the union are wholly to blame for the conditions that have made such results possible. It may be that both sides are partly at fault. The conditions having been brought about and being actually existent, whatever the cause, we feel that for treason and rebellion against organized society with the horrible consequences of anarchy that followed, certain union leaders must take the responsibility before man and God."

"Respectfully submitted.

"EDWARD J. BOUGHTON,

"Major Second Infantry and Judge Advocate.

"W. C. DANKS,

"Captain First Infantry.

"PHILIP VAN CISE,

"Captain First Infantry."

Have you any comment that you care to make on that, Mr. Bowers?

Mr. BOWERS. Only early in this inquiry a question by the chairman that in my judgment that they would have escaped anything of that kind, nothing of that kind would have happened if we had had a governor and associates there, whoever was to blame for whatever did happen, if they would have seen they were protected. That is all the comment I have to make. It was war with the hatred and bitterness and all the vast complications that enter into it when you have 20 or 30 nationalities together and many can not speak English and don't understand the directions and they get to be a mob, and in that condition they are almost irresponsible, almost insane, when they get to fighting. I don't know what I would have done or where to have shot. I think I would have run if I had been there.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Were you present, Mr. Bowers, when I questioned Mr. Rockefeller Saturday afternoon?

Mr. BOWERS. Part of the afternoon.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And you heard when I questioned him?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Did you hear my preliminary statement to Mr. Rockefeller?

Mr. BOWERS. I was in here about a half an hour.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You remember my reading a statement to him and inviting answer to certain specific charges?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you familiar with that statement and the charges?

Mr. BOWERS. If it was repeated to me.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. It is brief, and I might read it to you and refresh your memory [reading]:

"Now, this is my statement, and before proceeding with my questions I want briefly to review the situation as I see it. This commission sat between 25 and 30 days in actual hearing, including the time spent in Denver, New York, and Washington, D. C., investigating the Colorado coal strikes and endeavoring to find the underlying causes and to locate the responsibility for the great loss of life and property in that Commonwealth. The cost to the Nation for such Colorado investigations through this commission, I should say, has been much over $10,000. There has accumulated a great mass of testimony, much of it more or less unavoidably nonessential to the vital point at issue.

"What I have been able to get out of it all is that the strikers and their sympathizers make these three specific charges:

"(a) That at no time after the strike could they get a hearing at the hands of the operators.

"(b) That the civil and judicial machinery for obtaining such justice as the law affords was in the hands of the operators and not available to the strikers.

"(c) That the operators, through their agents, were the first to resort to violence and that all the violence which followed was defensive on the part of the strikers and not offensive.

"If these three charges have been established, then it must be plain that the responsibility for the unfortunate happenings in Colorado must clearly be laid at the door of the operators and the strikers are entitled to all support and sympathy of the American people.

"Despite the volumes of testimony that have accumulated in the hands of the commission in this case, much of it is so befogged and so beclouded, the contradictions are so pronounced, there is so much evidence of bitterness and ill will on both sides of the controversy, that the impartial fair-minded investigator, such as I hope I am, finds himself in a mental maze and more or less at sea.

"Speaking for myself, I have entered this Colorado investigation without any preconceived judgment or prejudice. Not any of the participants on either side were known to me. I, for one, have absolutely no object other than to find the truth, whatever the truth may be, and, speaking for this commission as a whole, it is neither for nor against any witness. It is for the facts, whatever the facts may be.

"It is in this spirit, and this spirit alone then, that, in order to crystallize the issues and reduce them to their prime essentials I ask you specifically to make whatever answer you are able to make to the three foregoing charges.

"If you can show that an opportunity was afforded the strikers at some stage of the dispute to get a hearing in the presence of the representatives of the operators; if you can show that the strikers had not exhausted their constitutional rights to get justice before resorting to violence; if you can show that the strikers, and not the operators or the authorities, were the first to commit acts of violence in defiance of law, then these three charges made against the operators must, to my mind, fall to the ground and the burden of responsibility for all the consequential casualties and loss of property must then, as I see it, be placed at the door of the strikers."

Now, being on the ground, Mr. Bowers, and fully familiar with the conditions, are you in a position to answer those three specific charges?

Mr. BOWERS. Will you please read the first one?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. First, "That at no time after the strike could they get a hearing at the hands of the operators."

Mr. BOWERS. That is not correct.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What are the facts?

Mr. BOWERS. Secretary of Labor Wilson, when he was in Denver, had, I think, several interviews with the operators, both sides, and an agreement was reached, largely, I think, through the efforts of Secretary Wilson, to have a conference with three operators and three of the striking miners. I don't know whether they were union men or not, but that conference was held. It began, as I recall, in the forenoon—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Were you present?

Mr. BOWERS. No. Just the six, with the governor and Secretary of Labor Wilson. It was held, and, I think, closed after midnight the next morning. The agreement was a proposition made, I take it, and it was the governor's proposition, approved by Secretary Wilson, which was agreed to by the representatives of the operators. The striking miners declined to sign the agreement. That was an opportunity to reach a solution, I will state, as I understand it, that it had been stated to the operators' committee by Secretary Wilson and the governor that if all those points were conceded by the operators, excepting the recognition of the union, it would be agreed to by all concerned, and the disturbance ended. That is as I understand it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Your contention is that it is not true that after the strike the strikers could not get a hearing at the hands of the operators?

Mr. BOWERS. It is not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And the second is that the civil and judicial machinery for obtaining such justice as the law affords was in the hands of the operators and not available to the strikers?

Mr. BOWERS. I would hate to think that for a minute, in the great State of Colorado. I sincerely doubt the accuracy of it. Certain petty officers, and some of the large ones, might have been so lopsided and biased as not to give fair hearing, but I would not want to assent to that statement. I think there were courts open above suspicion, with the highest character of men as judges, in many of the counties. I certainly would not want to charge a man like Attorney General Farrar—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. He was the attorney general?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir. Either that he would refuse to listen to the appeals of any citizen of Colorado, miners or operators or anybody. I would not want to think that.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The third charge is that the operators, through their agents, were the first to resort to violence, and that all the violence which followed was defensive on the part of the strikers and not offensive.

Mr. BOWERS. The first violence that was committed was on, I think, September 29, when Marshal Lee was shot from his horse, in an attempt to arrest three or four Greeks, at a bridge that they were trying to destroy. His gun was strapped to his horse; he had no arms, as I understand it, in his hands, and expected that they would yield. He was shot, as I understand it, not by the men that he was trying to arrest, but the first shot was fired from behind a water tank or something of this sort. That was the first violence that occurred during the strike.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, were you present the other day, Mr. Bowers, when the Rev. Mr. Gaddis testified?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then, you will remember that he made certain clean-cut, specific charges against the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And among them he made the specific charge, which I will read to you from the record, that the feeling on the part of the company was so bitter and so intense and so unfair and so unjust toward the strikers that they even carried it to the degree of dismissing the school-teachers, because they simply sympathized with the strikers. Let me read you his statement as he gave it, and invite your answer. [Reading:]

"A principal was not reappointed last fall on the ground that he was a red neck. He took his appeal to Mr. Bowers from Mr. Welborn.

"Chairman WALSH. You had better explain what a red neck is.

"Dr. GADDIS. A red neck is a phrase in Colorado for a striker or strike sympathizer.

"He asked the assistant general manager of the fuel department for his reason, and he was supported in his position by the manager of the fuel department, or superintendent, or local superintendent, and the county superintendent of schools, what they had against the teacher. Mr. Welborn and I kept in connection with him in the matter, and demanded proof or good cause as to why the man should be removed. When I asked the assistant general manager of the fuel department for his proof, he replied to me, 'Mr. So-and-so is a g. d. red neck; when I dismiss a man working for me that settles it; I have nothing to say. If the Denver office wishes to make the appointment of school-teacher, I have nothing to say.' Later the man, who had appealed to both Bowers and Welborn, was taken care of in another camp; we helped to place him. I was instrumental in having him located at a near-by camp, at a little less salary, but he was taken care of."

That is one case; there are several that are cited here, but this is typical of the others. Now, is it a fact that your attitude, and the attitude of your company, was such that men were dismissed there because they were purely unionists, and purely for that reason, or that they were dismissed as school-teachers simply because they sympathized with strikers?

Mr. BOWERS. If you will allow me, give me a little time—Mr. Gaddis, as he has testified here, was employed by Dr. Morrill, the second man in the sociological department. The sociological department is headed by Dr. Corwin, a very noted man in the United States as a surgeon. Dr. Morrill is now the superintendent of a sanitarium at Colorado Springs, a man of extraordinary ability and fully equipped for such a position. Dr. Morrill selected Mr. Gaddis as his assistant. At first only as a man to take charge of the Sunday schools and religious department. He was afterwards invited to join Dr. Corwin and Dr. Morrill in the sociological work, traveling about. The first interview that I had with Mr. Gaddis—he was as ardent in his expression, he sympathized with the strikers. He was also as ardent in his suppression and removal of every Roman Catholic superintendent that we had in our employ. It was the first time that I ever heard a superintendent called a super. red neck, and that was by Mr. Gaddis in my office. I said, "What do you mean by a red neck super.?" and he said, "I mean a red neck superintendent"; in other words, an Irishman, who were so largely employed in our camps. I said to Mr. Gaddis, "I will not permit anything of that kind. If it is your purpose to stir up religion, and bring in Catholicism, of which our people are about two-thirds or three-fourths, I won't have it for one minute," and I took it up with Mr. Morrill, and I said, "If that man Gaddis proceeds in that manner, he will demand that we remove every Catholic school-teacher." Let me explain, that there were men grown up from the tipple to superintendent of the mines. They have their families and children, and are sending their daughters away to be educated—I will not go into that. Now, it was so unjust and un-Christian and so unfair and so cussed, to use that word, that it stirred me up, and I demanded that he be removed. He took it all in, and elaborated, and said he didn't mean it just that way, and so forth.

I want to read to you a document, a letter that I wrote to Mr. Gaddis, besides these talks that I had with him. If you were where you could, you could bring those superintendents—a great many of them are Irish, and have grown up there, and I told him it was so unjust, where a man was getting two or three thousand dollars a year, to remove him and throw him out; that it was unjust to the girls in the camp who had been raised at home and had been educated and were teaching school there. You know how I put it to him, and he qualified, and this and that and the other. It stirred my wrath so; I don't like to get stirred up like that. Now, here is something I wish to read. On January 9, 1914, I wrote this letter in reply to a letter from Mr. Gaddis, which I have not got, and, by the way, in my attempt to get the correspondence of Mr. Gaddis—almost all of his letters to me have been stolen out of my files, and all I have is copies of my letters to him.

I don't know where they are, but they are not there. They were there when I left Denver, but they can not be found now. This is a reply to a letter from Mr. Gaddis on the subject. I wrote Mr. Gaddis as follows [reading]:

"Your letters of January 21 and 29 are at hand. You evidently are not familiar with one very important fact, namely, that the schools in all our mining camps are State schools."

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Who is that letter from, and to whom?

Mr. BOWERS. A telegram from President Welborn to me since I have been here.

Chairman WALSH. Are you reading now from a telegram that was sent you by Mr. Welborn?

Mr. BOWERS. From my letter that he could not get to me.

Chairman WALSH. So he wired you, and you are quoting from that?

Mr. BOWERS. It is a telegraphic copy taken from my reply to Mr. Gaddis.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Very well, I understand it now.

Mr. BOWERS (continuing reading): "You evidently are not familiar with one very important fact, namely, that the schools in all of our mining camps are State schools, under the direct supervision and dictation of the State authorities."

I am only trying to show the facts of Mr. Gaddis's prejudices against the Catholic teachers, and I am giving you the facts. [Continues reading:]

"And we have no more right to dictate who shall be employed as teachers in our coal camps than we have to dictate as to the teachers of Denver or any other town. While men in our employ at our various camps usually are selected as commissioners they have to be elected and are responsible to the State for all of their acts."

There may be 10 or 15 such boards elected at our several camps.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. By commissioners, you mean trustees of the public schools?

Mr. BOWERS. They are elected, a storekeeper, or doctor, or anybody, according to the law of the State. They have to be elected and are responsible to the State for all their acts. [Continues reading:]

"Therefore if we should undertake to be over dictatorial and exacting, the State would be justified in ordering us to keep our hands off. While we would be glad to employ teachers whose ideas are in harmony with yours, we have no legal right whatever to dictate or interfere with the commissioners in the selection of teachers."

He wanted those teachers, every girl, about 125 or 130 that we employed, prohibited from dancing in the camps. He wanted no one employed there except a Protestant teacher, that could teach in the Sunday schools, with two-thirds or three-fourths Catholics in our camps.

"Whose ideals are in harmony with yours, but we have no legal right whatever to dictate or interfere with the commissioner in the selection of teachers. Will say that if you should stir up this matter in your territory in the interest of Protestantism"—and I want to say that some of our Catholic teachers were some of the best Sunday school teachers we had in the camps.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If it is allowable, may I ask you if you are a Catholic?

Mr. BOWERS. No, sir; I am a Presbyterian. But I never threw a stone at a Catholic or members of any other denomination, it is not my right or privilege, and I protest against it with all the vigor I can. That is my stand on that. I never did it. The first 15 or 20 men I employed were Irishmen, and Catholics, all but one, and I have no better friends on earth than they. [Reads:]

"In your territory in the interest of Protestantism in undertaking to enforce an observance of the social standard you have set up you would do an incalculable amount of mischief. It is the opinion of our official board that ministers and religious workers either directly employed by us or permitted in our camps should confine themselves solely to the presentation of the gospel, as we believe that is the work which is needed and will include all moral and social reforms. The only thing we had in mind in asking Dr. Morritt when he was at Pueblo to keep an eye on the schools and to advise with the several commissioners in the various camps was the intention of giving the commissioners the benefit of his experience and to suggest the class of teachers to employ, and that is the only thing we expect Dr. Corwin, Mr. Weltzel, and yourself to do. It is impossible to vest you with any authority whatever in connection with the schools in our camps."

The copies of letters from Mr. Gaddis to Mr. Bowers referred to, as well as correspondence with other officers of company, are missing from Gaddis's records in the Denver office.

I want to present that for a few minutes, and I want to say that in my one conversation that I protested against that. To do justice to Mr. Gaddis, I will add that in December, when I was in Denver the last time officially, Mr. Gaddis came to see me and told me that things were moving along splendidly and he was very much pleased with the progress all through the camps, and then he hinted or suggested that his salary be raised $300 and he would remain, and be happy in his work. So much for that.

In January or February he was discharged for these very things I have read here, as I understand it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Not for asking an increase in wages?

Mr. BOWERS. No; I did not increase it. I wanted to get rid of him, so far as I was concerned. I wanted him out of it, so far as I was concerned. I don't want any such mischief-maker, I don't care whether he is a minister or anybody else. I won't have him.

Now, just a word or two I would like to say further that in this it speaks of a number of books in foreign languages in the library, quite a number of them connected with the sociological department. In answer to my inquiry Mr. Welborn stated the reason Gaddis gave for taking these books out was that they treated largely of Catholicism and that he did not believe in circulating such teachings. Now, there you have it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are we to understand, then, from all that, Mr. Bowers, that Mr. Gaddis used his influence with you to take away the livelihood of men and women simply because of their faith?

Mr. BOWERS. I certainly do; and he said they were—well, I won't say.

Chairman WALSH. Just go ahead and finish.

Mr. BOWERS. No.

Chairman WALSH. Just finish your statement.

Mr. BOWERS. No; I paid my compliment to Mr. Gaddis.

Chairman WALSH. No, no; go ahead and finish.

Mr. BOWERS. He accused these men of promoting the saloons. I think there was one girl that he referred to here that he protested against her employment. Now, I want to say that this is not positive, but I think it is correct, because he brought up exactly the same thing with me. She was a young daughter who had been in the schools—I think the State schools—had graduated, and wanted a position in the schools, and her father was an Irishman and a Roman Catholic. Now, he protested against that girl being employed, and stated here, but did not give the reasons; and that girl had been educated by her father and mother and brought into their own camp and their own home, and he was dead opposed in regard to it, and he did not want that young girl, and she had gone into the schools to fit herself, more without compensation than—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (interrupting). Then, in brief, the situation is as follows: You deny the charge made by Mr. Gaddis that you dismissed men because they were unionists or because they sympathized with the strikers, and you made the counter charge that Mr. Gaddis did at various times use whatever influence he had with you and others to have men and women dismissed from your service because they belonged to a particular religious faith?

Mr. BOWERS. That was his action; and at this late date, January 14, this letter, with Mr. Welborn's statement, which I read, proves it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. What have you to say about Mr. Gaddis's charge? This is what particularly stands out in my mind about Mr. Gaddis's charge: That you allowed the cesspools to run over until the people got typhoid fever and died.

Mr. BOWERS. Now, Mr. Chairman, every full-grown man knows that up in that mountainous country any sewerage system is oftentimes almost physically impossible to have. I have lived in the country and have had cesspools to run over. I have no doubt but what half the people here, if they have lived in the country, have had cesspools run over. We don't know the cause of this one here: Maybe a flood came down the mountains and washed it out and it oozed over.

Chairman WALSH. He said he was calling the attention of the physician to it, and that the physician—or one of the heads of the departments—and he said that if the people wanted to do that they could do it themselves. Now, as I understand, your company owned the street and the water supply and charged so much a barrel to the people for their water where it was for drinking purposes.

Mr. BOWERS. At one place only, I think.

Chairman WALSH. Well, at one place; and other places where they control the water supply and controlled everything in the place.

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Now, your answer to that charge is—that you allowed the cesspools to run over and people to sicken and die—is that there were no means of cleaning it, or that the cesspools running over did not make persons ill or—

Mr. BOWERS (interrupting). I never heard of it before and should want to know the conditions.

Chairman WALSH. You have no comments to make?

Mr. BOWERS. I have comments to make upon it that it is such a common thing in country towns where there is no sewerage at all and common on farms and places where there is no sewerage that cesspools run over.

Chairman WALSH. He also mentioned the fact that the houses were allowed to drop into such a stage of decay, although they were required to pay the same rent for it, that a woman who is about to be confined with child has to be moved to keep the water from running upon her person while she was being delivered.

Mr. BOWERS. That may be true; I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have buildings there in that condition?

Mr. BOWERS. I think the buildings of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. up to date are good, are as clean, and are as well managed as in any coal-mining camps, certainly in the western country, as any I have ever known.

Chairman WALSH. One question, now, and I want to ask the pardon of Mr. O'Connell for taking part of his time, and that question is, I want to ask you, now, you turned out 150 of your men to carry the prohibition amendment to the constitution of Colorado, did you?

Mr. BOWERS. I will explain that.

Chairman WALSH. Well, did you turn them out—150 men—out of your department?

Mr. BOWERS. I did not turn them out. They volunteered, I suppose. They passed it around—

Chairman WALSH. They volunteered?

Mr. BOWERS. Let me explain. I don't mean we turned them out to carry the election. It was before election day; but we were out on the campaign and had a fight on and had practically no funds to carry on the campaign, and they wanted men to do the work, to do the ward work, and distribute literature, and all that sort of thing; and the coal operators, not only the coal operators, but everybody that was interested in the question of prohibition at the election, turned out their office men, and I had been—by the way, I had nothing to do with picking out that 150 men, and I did not know it until the next day after they had been out.

Chairman WALSH. Didn't you use the prohibition sentiment that was strong in the State to get the support for what you called the law and order platform that was for the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. and the others to aid in the ruthless prosecution of the strikers and the union officers and a relentless policy of suppressing those men?

Mr. BOWERS. It was all interlocked together.

Chairman WALSH. Now, was it due to your influence or any part of your influence—for instance, there was also a proposition submitted, or a law submitted, known as the "assumption-of-risk law"—that is, as to whether or not the law of the assumption of risks should be changed; and on the ballot it was placed in this way: "Shall the workers assume the risk of injury to their own persons and lives in the conduct of industry?" You know that, don't you?

Mr. BOWERS. I was not there during the election or for some days previous to the election.

Chairman WALSH. This was this election you were speaking of in connection with the prohibition sentiment.

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I will ask you if it is not a fact that in some of those mining camps the vote stood—in one in particular the vote stood 108 to 5? That is, that on the face of the returns 108 workmen, American citizens, with the right to vote, declared on the face of the return that they wanted to assume the risk of their own lives, of their arms and legs, and in case they were killed they wanted their wives and children to assume the risk of their own deaths rather than it should be upon your company and upon the companies engaged in industry.

Mr. BOWERS. I never heard of it and I am surprised there were five.

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Well, if you take credit for the prohibition law, will you also take corresponding credit for this?

Mr. BOWERS. I didn't take any credit, only what in my way—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Well, but didn't you—pardon me; I don't intend to interrupt you.

Mr. BOWERS. I was away during the election and some time prior to that—I would say two or three days.

Chairman WALSH. I just want to read you one other little article about what might be called the enforcement of the law. I am reading from an editorial of the New York Survey—a late editorial—referring to the conviction of Mr. Lawson. It says [reading]:

"Sending one man to prison is hardly sufficient as a deterrent, when notorious offenders against law and order walk the streets unchallenged and free. One of the witnesses for the prosecution was K. E. Linderfelt."

Do you know Mr. Linderfelt?

Mr. BOWERS. I never saw him.

Chairman WALSH. You know who he is?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH (reading:) "It was this same Linderfelt who broke his gun over the head of Louis Tikas, the Greek strike leader, and it was when a captive in the hands of Linderfelt's men that Tikas met his death. But the prison doors are not opening for Linderfelt. He has not been prosecuted 'on the theory' that he was in command. He was court-martialed and exonerated by his fellow officers. He is on hand to help send the leader of the strikers to prison. Before the strike began"—

You say, I believe, that the militia was called out September 29?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes; I think so.

Chairman WALSH (reading:) "Before the strike began, Lippiatt, a union leader, was shot dead on the streets of Trinidad by men in the employ of the Baldwin-Felts Detective Agency. Belk and Belcher were the men charged with the crime. Later Belcher was shot. Recently a striker, after a long wait in jail, has been found guilty of killing Belcher. Belk, indicted for the slaying of Lippiatt, has been at liberty and no word comes from Colorado of any move toward a trial of his case. But Baldwin-Felts detectives were on hand to testify against Lawson.

"On April 20, 1914, 2 women and 11 children were smothered in a cave in the Ludlow tent colony while the tent over their heads was burned to the ground—set on fire by the militiamen. The officers in command were tried by court-martial and acquitted by their fellow officers, regardless of the 'theory' that they were in command. And the governor approved the verdict. But the attorney general of the State took direct charge of the prosecution of strike leader Lawson, securing a verdict sending him to prison for life.

"Among civilized men there can be no two ways of looking at this matter. There must be punishment, or its modern equivalents, in order to deter crime. Law and order must be preserved. But it looks very much, at this distance, as if Lawson had been sentenced, not for counseling or participating in the committing of murder, but for being a leader of strikers.

"If his conviction is to stand, fairness and honesty require the attorney general to prosecute with equal vigor the men who served the coal companies and who are charged with crime. More than that, he must, to be consistent, ask for the indictment of the sheriffs of the counties in the coal regions, the coal mine managers in the field, and all who gave orders to men who took part in these encounters 'on the theory' that they were in command. Indeed, there is inexorable logic in the New York Call's challenge that, on the basis of the Lawson conviction, the attorney general should ask for the indictment of President Welborn of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., who testified that he purchased machine guns to be used against the strikers, and of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., who upheld the acts of the Colorado mining officials."

Now, are not the facts stated in that—I don't care about these later conclusions; I wanted to read it through. Aren't the facts stated in that correct? Isn't it a fact that Lippiatt was shot on the streets of Trinidad by a Baldwin-Felts detective and that that was the first killing in that entire trouble?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't know anything about the dates.

Chairman WALSH. Just as stated in the Survey. Did you ever hear of the killing of Lipplatt alleged to have been done by Belcher and Belk?

Mr. BOWERS. I recall the killing of some one there; I don't know who it was. I presume that is the case.

Chairman WALSH. Now Linderfelt was never tried in the civil courts, was he?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't know. Why not? I don't know why he is not. The courts are open.

Chairman WALSH. Well, the charge there made is that a new judicial district was created. Now, this is just the charge, I don't know the facts—that the bill was introduced by one of the attorneys for the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., a Mr. Hayden. Do you have such an attorney out there of that name?

Mr. BOWERS. I never heard of him.

Chairman WALSH. And that the judge appointed to fill that bench was a Mr. Hillyer, who had also been your attorney in these strike matters—that is the charge—and as this paper says they are prosecuting one side and not prosecuting the other. They are not prosecuting any of you gentlemen or any of the persons that were in your employ or engaged in any of these deplorable controversies. That is the charge.

Mr. BOWERS. The representatives of the United Mine Workers of America have as able lawyers and all the facilities—

Chairman WALSH. Well, have they a lawyer on the bench? Was one of their lawyers also put on the bench?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't know a thing about that.

Chairman WALSH. Oh! You were not speaking of lawyers in official positions?

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Hawkins is attorney for them in this prosecution. They have got, as a whole, I guess, as able men as you can find anywhere in the country and resources almost unequalled. If those men do not perform their duties to see whether those men are prosecuted, and whether Mr. Rockefeller and Mr. Welborn, or whoever it is, it is their fault or that of the courts. I don't know where the fault is.

Chairman WALSH. Suppose things were like you said they were in 1907 here when you came in; that the company had gotten control of the officials—absolute control of the officials—absolutely controlled them corruptly.

Mr. BOWERS. That is only a little part of the mining operations up there in the mountains where that group are. The whole State of Colorado is not controlled by these political saloon keepers.

Chairman WALSH. What is the vote up in that little place?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't know. I will tell you, I would like to say this: I haven't any knowledge of it, but I have no doubt 90 per cent of it is the saloon vote or the saloon influence; and these men who own the saloons and other politicians there run the election, a thing we are trying to stop, Mr. Chairman, but what you say—that the machine dictated all that business—there is not the slightest doubt about it.

Chairman WALSH. And not the coal company?

Mr. BOWERS. The coal companies had nothing to do—no, wait a minute. I want to make a line between the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. and other coal companies. These companies employed Judge Northcutt. The Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. is but one company. Judge Northcutt was employed by the group composed of about 90 companies, backed up by the others.

Chairman WALSH. I have nothing more, Mr. O'Connell.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I want to get back, Mr. Bowers, to the report of this military board. I would not have asked you this question only it has been brought up by others. In this report, which has in part already been read to you, it says: "As a result of our investigation we submit the following findings, report, and recommendations: 1. We find the remote cause of this, as of all other battles, lies with the coal operators."

What is your impression of that portion, which is the very first part of the board's report?

Mr. BOWERS. What is that?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. This is the report of the military board that Mr. Weinstein read to you a few moments ago.

Mr. BOWERS. That is their conclusions. I have nothing to say.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. It says: "We find the remote cause of this, as of all other battles, lies with the coal operators."

Mr. BOWERS. Do they state the reasons for it?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. It is just simply a finding. Now, continuing to read from the one which Mr. Weinstock has already read you a portion, speaking of the things that the military did during the camp fire at Ludlow [reading]:

"One William Snyder and his family—then the tents were fired upon. We saved one William Snyder and his family." I am not reading the whole article. "Then the tents were fired upon."

Now, I want to read you the testimony before the coroner's jury given by Mr. Snyder himself. This is testimony taken at the coroner's inquest, given by Mr. Snyder [reading]:

"William Snyder, first being duly sworn," and so forth. I am not going to read all of this to you. And where I say "blank," Mr. Stenographer, it means a bad word.

"State whether or not any of your family were killed.

"Yes, sir.

"Who?

"Frank; he was 11 years and 11 months old.

"Where was he?

"He was sitting in a rocking-chair when he was struck.

"Where was he struck?

"By the temple, and tore out the brains.

"Did it affect the brains?

"Yes, sir; tore them out.

"Broke his skull?

"Yes, sir; we haven't been able to find the pieces of the skull.

"Tell what happened from the time that he was killed until you got out of there?

"He was killed, I should judge, about 5 o'clock in the afternoon of the 20th of April. I had been outside and I heard the bullet pass by me. I had stepped out, and I heard it strike something; I heard two distinct hits of the bullet. My next boy to Frank, George, said, 'Frank is shot.' I said, 'Where?' and I jumped in the other room and caught the boy before he fell out of the chair. Just then a bullet went over my head, and so I had to let the boy down on the floor on the wounded side, and I lay down beside him. My wife was in the cave, and I said to her, 'Frank is dead.' He was still in a convulsion. I picked the boy up and put him between the beds. My wife had started to come out of the cellar, and she fell in a faint, so I grabbed her. Then I went and got some water that my wife had been preparing to wash the dishes in and tried to wash the blood off of Frank's face, but the firing came so heavy that I had to stop. Finally I went over to Toller's tent, and from what I have heard since, I must have come back in all that heavy machine firing. I got back home and I got down on the floor and took both of Frank's hands, he was just drawing up, and laid them across his chest and then went into the hole with my wife and the other children.

"When did you get out of there?

"Somewhere around 12.30 or 1 o'clock.

"Did anybody come to your tent while you were there?

"Yes, sir; the militia come there.

"Who were they?

"I don't know them.

"What did they say to you?

"They set fire to the tent and opened it and come in.

"They set fire to your tent?

"Yes, sir. My wife then said, 'For God's sake save my children.' I didn't want them to know I was there, but just about that time sister said something to me.

"What did they say to you?

"They said, 'What in hell are you doing in there?' I told them I was trying to save my wife and children, and they said, 'You son-of-a-bitch get out of there and get out God damn quick at that.' My wife was out by that time; I believe one of the officers helped her out. I told them to hold on, I had a boy killed in there, and they told me to get him out damn quick. I picked the boy up and lay him down outside so I could get a better hold of him. I asked some of those fellows to help me to carry him to the depot, and he said, 'God damn you, aren't you big enough?' I said, 'I can do it.' I took him on my shoulder and sister on the other arm, and just then some one of the militiamen stopped me and said, 'God damn you, you son-of-a-bitch, I have a notion to kill you right now.' He said, 'You red neck son-of-a-bitch, I have a notion to kill you right now.'"

Chairman WALSH. The boy was dead there?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The boy was dead. [Continuing reading:]

"Do you know who he was?

"I think I do, he is a guard in uniform.

"What is his name?

"I would rather not tell it unless I just have to.

"Will you tell it to me in private?

"Yes, sir. My wife kept on pleading. He says, 'You have done as much shooting as anyone else around here,' and I just kept on going until I got to the depot.

"Did your wife go with you?

"Yes, sir.

"Were the tents burning at that time?

"Yes, sir. While I was passing Snodgrass's store this man, that officer, Mr. Linderfelt, flashed a light and said, 'What God damn red neck have we got now?'

"Which one said that?

"The one we call Jesus Christ.

"Do you mean E. K. or K. E. Linderfelt, the man with the bull face?

"That's right; he is bullfaced.

"He is a captain?

"We used to call him lieutenant, but I think he is up in the ranks now.

"Why did you call him Jesus Christ?

"He told Mrs. Lowe that he was Jesus Christ, and that the other fellows were his Jesuses, and so we always called him Jesus."

I shall not read the rest. I simply cite that to show you the wonderful effort made by these soldiers to save these people in the burning tents, which Mr. Weinstock read to you. Now, in this letter of yours on November 18 to Mr. Rockefeller, you mentioned [reading]:

"You will be interested to know that we have been able to secure the cooperation of all the bankers of the city, who have had three or four interviews with our little cowboy governor."

Now, what was implied by the reference to the three or four interviews with our little cowboy governor?

Mr. BOWERS. On my part?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOWERS. I don't quite get your question.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Well, I get the information that the bankers when they called upon you stated that they had seen the governor three or four times, and apparently must have said we have fixed the governor up, or he is with us, or against us, or something. There was some inference in it. You had something in your mind.

Mr. BOWERS. Well, now, these bankers, as I stated this morning, acted for the common good—they are gentlemen of very high repute. They had nothing but the good of Colorado and the good of all concerned in view, and I have no doubt—I imagine, and I have reason to think that they thought that these men and the property and the lives ought to be protected. If the operators are accused and proven guilty of what they are charged with, certainly the governor should have put the militia in there to have protected the strikers from the operators as much as the other way. We only wanted peace, and I had no idea but those gentlemen there intended to use their very best efforts for all concerned to secure it, the same as the newspaper men and other men did.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Is it your impression that the governor had agreed to put the military in and that that will stop the warfare?

Mr. BOWERS. Oh, I don't think they said that. I don't think it had got along to that point. I wish it might have been. The governor, I suppose you all know by the testimony, was condemned by pretty nearly everybody on both sides because of his inactivity and various other things. I don't want to discuss Gov. Ammons; I don't know him at all.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, just a little later on you wrote Mr. Rockefeller [reading]:

"If the governor had acted on September 23 as he has been forced to act during the past five weeks, the strike would not have existed 10 days."

Mr. BOWERS. By the public sentiment of the State—the best people there insisted that the governor should act, and if he had done that at the very beginning there would not have been a particle of trouble.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That is, if the governor had done what?

Mr. BOWERS. Called out his militia.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Well, he did call the militia out.

Mr. BOWERS. Not until several weeks, until after all this miserable business—

Commissioner O'CONNELL (interrupting). Well, the Ludlow affair did not occur until after that, along in April.

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir; but if in the interim it had been called out and put the men in charge, there would not have been, I believe, a person killed, and the matter would have been adjusted very much better.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The reason I read that for you, I want to call your attention to the peculiar position of the governor being rounded up there. Commissioner Weinstock read to you a portion of a letter—probably all of it. I am not sure—that he sent to Mr. Rockefeller, which he read into the record on Saturday, and again read to you, and asked your opinion of it. I shall not read all the letter, but just the three queries. [Reads:]

"(a) That at no time after the strike could they get a hearing at the hands of the operators."

Now, you say they came, and Mr. Rockefeller said they had, and pointed out there was a committee of three men met the officials of the companies with the governor.

Mr. BOWERS. And Secretary of Labor Wilson—he was present.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That was November 26, I believe?

Mr. BOWERS. I don't remember; I was not there.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Or about two months after the strike had occurred.

Now, Commissioner Weinstock called attention to the character of Senator Patterson, his reputation, his high standing, his legal ability, and all the attainments of a high class or high type of man, and I take it when he called your attention to that that he believes that Senator Patterson was just what he asked you if he was, and therefore I take it that whatever Senator Patterson states upon this case, in his testimony given before the commission, it is given by a high type of man who would not for a moment misrepresent.

Mr. BOWERS. There would be a very great difference of opinion in Colorado about that suggestion.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Yes; I am taking Commissioner Weinstock's picture of Senator Patterson.

Mr. BOWERS. I remember it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Senator Patterson, in his testimony before this commission, found on page 539 of the hearings, speaking of the representatives of the miners who called upon him and of his effort with the governor to bring about an adjustment, says:

"Mr. White—I think it was Mr. White; it was either Mr. White or Mr. Lawson; I am quite certain it was Mr. White—made this statement, addressed to the governor and myself: He said, 'We have this to say: That if the operators will but grant us a conference we know that this strike will be settled.' He said, 'All we want to do is to have a conference with these men so that we can understand each other, and if they will but grant us a conference we know that this strike will be settled.' I said to them, 'Gentlemen, do you understand the import of your language?' I said, 'You know that the operators will not recognize the union. It is generally understood that you will insist upon recognition of the union as a sine qua non of a settlement, and that the fair inference of your language is that you are willing to reach a settlement upon some other basis than the recognition of the union.' Mr. White replied, 'Whatever the import of our language is I simply reiterate that if the operators will but confer with us we know there will be a settlement.' Gov. Ammons and I felt that in view of the statement that there was some hope, and we called up the operators very promptly, and they agreed to meet us. The same gentlemen met us, and I put the matter before them. I said, 'Gentlemen, I believe that a settlement can be reached.' I said, 'These men say that if you will but grant them a conference they know that the strike will be settled.' 'Now,' I said, 'that must mean they will surrender their demand for the recognition of the union, and I think you ought to grant them a conference. They are right out here in the adjoining room; there is but a brick wall separating the operators and the governor and myself and the miners and representatives.' They said 'No; we will not hold any conference with them.'"

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. May I ask Mr. O'Connell at this point for my information what day did Senator Patterson say that proposed conference took place or was to take place?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Why, I have been running along here quite a while and have not got the date here, but I am going back further than that, and I will get the date of the request for a conference.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. We want to remember that the date of the conference when Mr. Wilson was present was said to have been about November 23, and it is important to know whether this conference occurred before or after that.

Chairman WALSH. It occurred before.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. It occurred before, and before that still, before the strike occurred—a month before that strike occurred—a communication was addressed to the operators, not to the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., but to all the operators in the mining fields—a personal letter addressed to each one or addressed personally to the company by the officers of the miners, asking for an interview. Not even an acknowledgment was had from that letter or to that request from anybody, with the exception of two very small independent operators. The conference was not given nor was the letter acknowledged in which these men asked for the conference. Had a conference been held, taken from the testimony given by Senator Patterson in his interview with the governor and with the officials of the miners, as to their willingness to concede the question of unionizing the mines, there is not a question—the only deduction that can be made from it is that the adjustment would have been reached and the strike not called at all. Now, from the question put by Mr. Weinstock to Mr. Rockefeller, it would appear because of the word "after" being used here would lead to the inference that the request was after the strike, and that if it had been granted after the strike that the trouble would not have occurred, and that it was immediately after the strike occurred that these difficulties involving the sacrifice of life occurred; but the contrary is the truth. Before the strike occurred, even on September 14, Lipplatt was killed, and the very day after the strike, the 24th, Lee was killed.

Mr. BOWERS. The day after, was it?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The day after the strike occurred on the 23d.

Mr. BOWERS. Who was Lee?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Camp marshal that was shot.

Mr. BOWERS. I was thinking it was the day after, but I was advised it was the 29th.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. It is here in the Congressional Record; I have it here, if you please.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Is that the first volume of the Congressional Record?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Volume 1.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you using it?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I have got those two pages marked.

Now, the point I want to make, Mr. Bowers, particularly at this time, is this: There seems to be a very great effort being made a month or two months or three months after the strike occurred to bring about a settlement. The congressional committee was out there; the Secretary of Labor was out there; the principal citizens of the community, including the governor, interested themselves in trying to bring about an adjustment one, two, and three months after the strike occurred. Life was being sacrificed right along. Property was being destroyed right along. And yet, so far as I know from all the records we have and all the testimony I have heard up to this day, the officials of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., or the officials of the other two big companies that was associated with them—the Victor and the Rocky Mountain Fuel Co.—that these officials, up to this day, have not met with the officials of the miners themselves. There was a committee of three—do you know how they came to be in the governor's office—three miners?

Mr. BOWERS. They were selected.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I know how they were selected. They were selected by the coal miners themselves—so said.

Mr. BOWERS. And so said that they were not. There you have it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The fact is that they were not. Now, the miners who were on strike had their officers in the field there, they were there, and some of the citizens of Colorado—they were not interlopers, as you said in your communication, Mr. Bowers—and two of the officers were citizens of Colorado and had a right to be in the State, if you think that the nonresidents had no right to be there, and these men were not met before or after the strike?

Mr. BOWERS. I will admit all of that.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I want to get that clear, because Commissioner Weinstock has in mind that the company did meet the miners or their officers.

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. From all of the testimony that we have heard, there was nothing to indicate that.

Mr. BOWERS. My understanding of that is this, that the representative of the union selected several men, and they were submitted to, I don't know who, but finally three men of good standing, striking miners, union men, I think, perhaps, that were satisfactory; I don't know who passed upon them, but it was submitted, and I don't know whether—their representatives, as I understand, were authorized on that side in the union's interest. If I am misinformed, I may be corrected.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The point I want to bring to your attention is this, that for two months before the strike occurred, the miners' representatives were endeavoring to secure a conference with the officers of the company, the one you represented and other companies.

Mr. BOWERS. I think that is perfectly true.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. We have a copy of their letters.

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And they did not even receive an acknowledgment of their communication?

Mr. BOWERS. No.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, if that strike could have been avoided, and that great sacrifice of life could have been avoided, and the destruction of property could have been avoided by a mere meeting of a few men, Mr. Welborn or yourself, or whoever might represent your company, with recognized leaders of the men, selected by themselves, as men to represent them in conference, men with some ability—

Mr. BOWERS. Grant all that.

Commissioner O'CONNELL (continuing). And not taking a man from the bowels of the earth, as he comes up from work when he comes into daylight, and is staggered—

Mr. BOWERS. Grant all that.

Commissioner O'CONNELL (continuing). But there was no justification, morally, for you men not sitting down with those men, even though you disliked them, and everything else, if that great struggle could have been avoided, and a repetition of those former struggles, by a mere meeting of the men—

Mr. BOWERS. What is the question?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I want to know the reason why. I want to know why. You were there and ought to know. Your letters were very strong on the subject. Why didn't you meet those men before the strike occurred?

Mr. BOWERS. I was not on the committee, and was not selected by the operators to have any part or lot in that business. You ask me personally what I would have done? You put the question to me that way, and I will answer.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. What would you have done?

Mr. BOWERS. I never refused to let any man or woman with a grievance, high, rich, or poor, go away without a conference. I speak for myself. Never in my life have I refused a conference. I think it is the most foolish and ridiculous thing on the face of God's earth to refuse conferences to men, whether they are right or wrong. If they are wrong, I will try to make them right; and if I had been the man—I would go this far to avoid a very serious strike. The chairman asked if I had had a strike on the Great Lakes when I was there, and I said no; but they did have a very severe strike later, and they said that I represented the money interests. They had a great strike there, and three of the strikers came to the hotel where I was stopping and said they would submit it to me, that if I would act as the arbitrator, the other side would consent, that the strikers would submit and agree to whatever I said. I was regarded by the strikers themselves as fair on these questions, and they urged that I be selected, but I refused to do it, and I told the boys, "You are wrong in one particular, you are defeated." I stayed there a few days and I did help settle that strike peaceably and satisfactorily. That is where I stand. I had nothing to do with that, and I have no criticism for those that did have to do with it. They were men selected by 90 operators.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. If you had had to do with it, you would have met the committee?

Mr. BOWERS. You are just exactly right. I take it on general principles. I will meet a man if he is decent and he has anything that he thinks is a grievance and a matter to discuss with me; he will get into my office if he stays long enough.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. If that is your position, you must think that it was not foolish in meeting representatives, whether their grievances were wrongs or imaginary, and if they had met them there would probably have been a settlement arrived at, and the lives of these men, women, and children not have been sacrificed?

Mr. BOWERS. But that applies to somebody else; I am out of that.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But you were an officer of the company and a director?

Mr. BOWERS. I have been criticized mightily because of some of my sentiments in regard to capital and labor, but let me say this: That every drop of my blood, all of my life, has been with the common people to uplift and help them. I myself have worked 12 hours for 30 cents and got what little education I have on that kind of a basis. I know what work is, the same as any man that goes down in a coal mine.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You have nothing on me on that.

Mr. BOWERS. And I shake hands with you on it. I am no less a man for it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, the second proposition of Mr. Weinstock's proposition, which he submitted to Mr. Rockefeller and to-day to you, was that the civil and judicial machinery for obtaining such justice as the law affords was in the hands of the operators and not available to the strikers. Let me read you again—

Mr. BOWERS. I have lost my train, so you might as well go on.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. On page 9 of the digestive document No. 50, under the heading, "Political domination by operators—this is an expression before our commission by a gentleman who has been held up to you as one of the types of citizenship that might be followed; this is his opinion [reading]:

"The men employed by the large mining companies have been used to gain political power. There is no doubt that it is the deliberate purpose of these companies to control the officials of the counties in which they are operating, and to have a great influence in the selection of judges and in the constitution of the courts. In this purpose they have been successful. Election returns from the two or three counties in which the large companies operate show that in the precincts in which the mining camps are located the returns are nearly unanimous in favor of the men or measures approved by the companies, regardless of party. The companies know whom they want elected and do not hesitate, judging from the results to now."

This is the opinion of one of your reputable citizens who was interested in bringing about a settlement and he says that the courts, the ballot boxes, and the political situation were dominated entirely and in the hands of the coal companies of Colorado; that is Senator Patterson.

Mr. BOWERS. I do not think that any man in the State of Colorado knows better than Senator Patterson that Colorado has been under the domination of the Democratic Party for years and years and years, and if these scoundrels are in there, and he has been the leader of the Democratic Party for years, and help put the scoundrels in there, on whom does it rest? Not on Mr. Rockefeller or on me.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You concede that situation is true, then?

Mr. BOWERS. I have to admit that in certain counties that condition does exist; I do not dispute it. I do not dispute Senator Patterson, because he ought to know.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. In the counties where these coal companies operate they have the judges and sheriffs, and through the sheriffs can select the jurors, as was testified to in the evidence before us of Sheriff Farr himself, and by others before us as to how the juries were selected; how the election commissioners were appointed and sometimes where they did not show up at a certain precinct. Sheriff Farr said: "You and you and you act as election commissioners to-day." Under these circumstances I ask you, Mr. Bowers, as a man of great affairs and dealing with big business and big financial affairs, if you think a poor, humble miner, without any great amount of money, without any property behind him, or any influence, has any chance of getting justice in a situation of that kind?

Mr. BOWERS. Why, no; no one need to ask me that—excuse me for that. I know those poor fellows in there ought to have the support of every decent man there is to the end that their rights are protected and they will get that treatment from me.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I want to say I have given way to the public and the employers in this investigation of the Standard Oil Co.; I simply sat as arbitrator between them, and labor has taken the neutral position.

Mr. BOWERS. I want you to appreciate the fact that I have been able to uncover some facts.

Chairman WALSH. You may have to stay longer, Mr. Bowers, if you do not leave to catch your train.

Mr. BOWERS. I will be glad to stay if I can tell anything further.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I would like to ask this question: How did this governor come to be called the "little cowboy governor"?

Mr. BOWERS. He was a cowboy and herder up in northern Colorado.

Now, I would like to make a statement for myself, and I ought to beg your pardon for being so vigorous, but that is my make-up. It want to say this, and I think you will believe me, that neither John D. Rockefeller, sr., or John D. Rockefeller, jr., or anyone else connected with that office has dominated me or dictated to me one single word in 20 years as to how I should do, what I should do, or when I should do it. I never had one line, and I challenge anybody to find one line of dictation from Mr. Rockefeller's office, either senior or junior, to me; you can imagine where he would land if he tried it.

Chairman WALSH. I thought you said Mr. Rockefeller and you understood each other 20 years ago, as to where you stood.

Mr. BOWERS. He sought me for years before I accepted the place, and that is the kind of man he wanted. If I was a putty chap, I could not handle hundreds of millions as I have for years; he has to have someone to handle those things.

Chairman WALSH. You said you knew nothing about this situation in Colorado?

Mr. BOWERS. That is a little too strong. I told you the reason why I have had to be away from there. Let me tell you one thing.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I will have to take you on again, Mr. Bowers, if you are going to stay any longer.

Mr. BOWERS. I tried to get out of this position in December, 1912, and I don't work for sixpence. I tried to get out of affairs and retire and quit; I am almost 69 years old.

Chairman WALSH. You are not getting 30 cents for 12 hours now?

Mr. BOWERS. No; I am not. Now, if I can give you any further light on these matters, all right.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I have one question I want to get my mind straightened out. Mr. O'Connell has brought out in his questioning the fact that for two months before the strike efforts were made to get a hearing on the part of the men and they failed. Now, my question that I put to you—I think it was the first question—was that the charge was made—if it is not so worded, it ought to be—that at no time from start to finish could the men get a hearing.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. No; it says after the strike occurred.

Mr. BOWERS. I say, the only thing that would come up in this connection is whether those three men represented the unions; did those three men selected represent the union or not; my understanding is that they did.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then, you still contend there was an opportunity and the men did have a meeting, not as quickly as they wanted to, but they got it?

Mr. BOWERS. It would take more than 30 minutes to convince me they did not.

Chairman WALSH. You may be excused.

(Eugene S. Gaddis stands up in the audience and addresses the chairman, as follows:)

Dr. GADDIS. My reputation as a public officer is at stake.

Chairman WALSH. If you will permit me to say, we will give you an opportunity to reply, but we can not do it at this time, because it would not be following the regular order of our hearings.

Dr. GADDIS. Won't you allow me to say a word?

Chairman WALSH. Not at this time; but you will be given a chance at the proper time.

Mr. King.

TESTIMONY OF MR. W. L. MACKENZIE KING.

Chairman WALSH. Please state your name.

Mr. KING. W. L. Mackenzie King.

Chairman WALSH. I believe you testified before the commission at the inception of our hearing.

Mr. KING. In June, last year; yes.

Chairman WALSH. What connection have you with the Rockefeller Institute, or any of the Rockefeller properties?

Mr. KING. I believe my official designation is director of the industrial relations department of the Rockefeller Foundation.

Chairman WALSH. When did you first go to Colorado? I am going to try to centralize this as much as possible, Mr. King.

Mr. KING. About two months ago, or a little over.

Chairman WALSH. When did you return East?

Mr. KING. I came here when I received the request of the sergeant at arms of this commission to be present.

Chairman WALSH. What date was that, Mr. King?

Mr. KING. I returned here on Monday of last week.

Chairman WALSH. Where were you in Colorado when you were out there?

Mr. KING. I was in Denver a good part of the time; I was in Trinidad; I was through the coal camps in the southern part; I was at Boulder, and through some of the camps in the northern part. I think that covers the main part of it.

Chairman WALSH. What was your purpose in going out there and being out there?

Mr. KING. Perhaps I could give that in the form I gave it to the public, and also to the foundation. It is a matter of sufficient importance to have it correctly stated, and if I may I will just read this.

Chairman WALSH. Just read your own statement; I think that will be the best way.

Mr. KING. Before I went out I wrote a letter to the Rockefeller Foundation. I felt that I should like to put myself on record as to my purpose and motive in going, and this letter sets out the reasons I had. This was dated March 1, 1915, and is addressed to Mr. Jerome D. Greene, and is as follows [reading]:

61 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, March 1, 1915.

JEROME D. GREENE, Esq.,

Secretary the Rockefeller Foundation, New York.

DEAR MR. GREENE: In the preliminary survey I am making of the field of industrial relations, I have arrived at the point where I should like to supplement a study which is more or less abstract and theoretical by reference to concrete existing conditions, and it is therefore necessary for me to consider the particular industries and localities it may be advisable to select for this purpose. I have in mind in this connection the twofold intention of the officers of the foundation as conveyed at the time I was invited to undertake the direction of the investigation, and which has since found public expression in answer to one of the questions submitted to the foundation by the United States Commission on Industrial Relations at its recent hearings in New York.

May I, for purposes of accuracy and definiteness, quote the question and pertinent paragraphs in the answer made? These are to be found at pages 14 and 15 of the pamphlet issued by the foundation containing the information furnished by the foundation in response to questionnaires submitted by the commission.

The question reads: "What were the facts, reasons, and considerations which led to the establishment of the industrial relations division of the foundation?"

The following is contained in the reply. Then I quote what was given the commission by the foundation: "While the general subject of economic research was under consideration, the industrial disturbances in Colorado impressed the president of the foundation with the great need and public importance of finding an effective means of preventing such conflicts and caused him to urge a far-reaching study of industrial relations as the most important immediate inquiry to which the foundation could direct attention. In view of the passion aroused in Colorado, and the many divergent interests involved there, it was felt that the foundation itself should not interfere in that situation, but that it was of the utmost consequence that the root causes of that and similar disturbances should be ascertained and, if possible, removed, not only in Colorado, but elsewhere. The Rockefeller Foundation is moreover a large owner of corporate securities, and in that capacity is itself directly concerned in maintaining harmonious relations between the companies in which it is interested and their employees. It was therefore felt that if the foundation could work out on a basis compatible with sound economics a substantial improvement in the relations between capital and labor, that it would not only discharge its obligations as indirectly a large employer of labor, but would also perform for the general public a greater social service than it could render along usual philanthropic lines."

Chairman WALSH. In the quotation you just read from the reply speaks of the president of the foundation; that is, Mr. John D. Rockefeller?

Mr. KING. John D. Rockefeller, jr. Then I continue in my letter [reading]:

It has seemed to me that it will not be possible for me to fulfill the twofold purpose outlined without at some time visiting Colorado and becoming acquainted at first hand with conditions as they have existed and may be existing there. I should not desire to visit Colorado now or at any time if my purpose in so doing were liable to be misunderstood, either by the foundation, the mining companies of Colorado, or any section of the public, or if my presence there were likely to embarrass in any particular the industrial situation in that State. On the other hand, now that the strike is over, it would appear that, were I to visit Colorado in the immediate future rather than at some later time, my so doing might enhance such opportunity as my present studies may afford of ascertaining the root causes of disturbances in Colorado, and of possibly furthering in the manner indicated a permanent improvement in the relations between capital and labor.

May I, before going further in the arrangement of my plans, ask if you would kindly submit this aspect of my work to the officers of the foundation for their consideration? I shall welcome any suggestions the foundation may cure to make.

Yours, sincerely,

W. L. MACKENZIE KING.

The reply I received from the foundation was this—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). First, had you any conversation with Mr. Rockefeller before you wrote that letter? Personally, with reference to your going to Colorado?

Mr. KING. I have had a great many conversations with him, but at no conversation did he ask me to go to Colorado.

Chairman WALSH. Did you discuss the matter of your going to Colorado in any of your conversations?

Mr. KING. I think it is altogether probable I did.

Chairman WALSH. Do you recall it?

Mr. KING. I do not recall it definitely, no; I do recall that at no time did Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., ask me to go.

This reads as follows:

At a meeting of the Rockefeller Foundation held in New York, March 2, 1915.

The secretary presented a letter from Mr. W. L. Mackenzie King, director of the investigation of industrial relations, stating that he had arrived at a point in his investigations where he wished to supplement a study that was more or less abstract and theoretical, by reference to concrete existing conditions, and that it was therefore necessary for him to consider the particular industries and localities that it might be advisable to select for this purpose. Mr. King also pointed out the twofold purpose which it was hoped his investigation might serve; namely, first, the discovery of the root causes of industrial disturbances and the promotion of helpful experiments toward the amelioration of conditions; and, secondly, the assistance of the foundation, as a large owner of corporate securities, in interpreting aright its responsibilities as the holder of securities representing industrial investments. Mr. King stated that it seemed to him that a visit to the coal-mining region in Colorado would be advantageous with respect to both of the purposes had in view, and he asked that this aspect of his work be submitted to the trustees of the foundation for their consideration.

Whereupon, after discussion, it was, on motion,

Resolved, That the trustees, while recording their sympathy with the two-fold object of Mr. King's investigation as stated above, desire him to be governed by his own judgment in determining the precise fields of study which seem to him most promising, whether for the ascertainment of past experience or for the promotion of plans for the amelioration of industrial conditions.

A true copy of record.

Attest:

JEROME D. GREENE, Secretary.

When I received that communication, Mr. Chairman, I had to consider what other bodies there were that might have a right to be consulted before I made that particular move. The President of this country had appointed a commission, Mr. Seth Low's commission, to go out to Colorado, and they had decided not to go until this fall, and I felt that my going at this time might be misunderstood by them if I did not call in the first instance and intimate my intention, and I called on Mr. Low and said I had in mind going to Colorado in connection with the studies I was taking up for the foundation, and that I would like to confer with him before going. I told him that if I was likely to prejudice the work of his commission in so doing, or he thought my going would be misunderstood from his point of view, that I would not go, and he said he did not see why my going would affect his plans. I thought the Secretary of Labor of this country should be considered, and my purpose made known to him, and I made an appointment to meet Secretary of Labor Wilson; I called on Mr. Wilson and explained to him what I had in mind, and Mr. Wilson received me most courteously and intimated that so far as he was concerned he could not see any objection to my going, and expressed his appreciation of my speaking to him before I went out there.

There was one other group entitled to consideration in this matter, and they were the citizens of the State of Colorado, so, when I arrived in Colorado I gave out an interview in typewritten form to the papers there, so that they might know just what I was in Colorado for, and to prevent any subsequent misunderstanding; and if I may have the time, I shall read it.

Chairman WALSH. Can you give the substance of it, and put the balance of it in the record? If so, it might be well.

Mr. KING. The substance of it is this: I explained the purpose of my—if you have no objection, I would rather read it.

Chairman WALSH. Very well, if you wish to read it you may do so.

Mr. KING. Yes; I should like the people of this country to know my method of procedure and intentions in the matter. [Reading:]

"In June of last year I was asked by the Rockefeller Foundation if I would undertake the direction of a far-reaching study of industrial problems, with a view of making suggestions which might be constructively helpful in improving the relations of capital and labor. It was not anticipated that these studies would relate to any particular industry, locality, or dispute, nor be confined to any one country. Much less were they intended to be concerned with the merits of past or present misunderstandings, or to justify any particular point of view. In so far as the work might have to do with the industrial controversies, its purpose was to be solely that of ascertaining the nature and causes of disorder and unrest, with a view, if possible, to the discovery of effective remedies.

"When I entered upon the work in October I intimated to the officers of the foundation that I should desire at an early date to visit localities that might serve to illustrate existing needs, in order that my studies might be given that practical trend which it was the purpose of the foundation, as well as my own wish, they should have. Colorado very naturally suggested itself as one of the States to be visited. For a number of reasons it has seemed to me desirable it should be the first. The number and variety of Colorado's industries, the stage of its industrial development, and the public interest aroused in its industrial affairs have seemed to me reasons for believing that here might be afforded a ready means of ascertaining from a variety of sources and different angles many points of view as to conditions which give rise to the most difficult problems in industry, and to suggest what is likely to give most promise of practical results in the furthering of industrial peace. This being my object in coming to Colorado, I shall welcome the opportunity of being informed from any quarter of facts and circumstances calculated to throw light on existing industrial conditions and the problems which they present. Especially will I welcome the views and opinions of men and women actually engaged in industrial pursuits with regard to situations which affect their working conditions, and I shall be grateful for such cooperation as the authorities and the citizens of the State may be willing to afford.

"In connection with the direction of the investigation of industrial relations which the Rockefeller Foundation has instituted, I have from the outset indicated my desire to avoid any form of organization which might cause it even to appear that the work I have taken up was intended to rival or encroach upon the work of existing organizations, and in particular the work properly assignable to Government departments and agencies. It is not my intention, therefore, to attempt to duplicate in any particular what has already been done or may be attempted by the many public investigating or mediating bodies which have already visited or may intend to visit Colorado. Nor do I wish to encroach upon the work of any agencies at present existing or which are in contemplation by the State or local authorities. My purpose is wholly that of informing myself at first hand, by observation and personal interview, that I may the more intelligently discuss and, should occasion offer, cooperate with these and other bodies in furthering the public ends which they have been appointed to serve.

"Lest my purpose in any particular might be misunderstood, I took occasion, before leaving for Colorado, to call upon Mr. Seth Low, the chairman of the Coal Commission appointed by the President, and upon the Secretary of Labor, Hon. W. B. Wilson, at Washington, to explain the precise purport of my intended visit. Similarly, I shall take the earliest opportunity of calling upon Gov. Carlson to explain the object I have in view before proceeding to seek any of the many interviews I hope to be able to obtain.

"I shall be grateful for such cooperation as the press may be willing to give in helping to make clear the precise nature of the foundation's purpose in instituting the investigation of industrial relations, the direction of which I have undertaken, and the object I have in view in this visit. The aim is that solely of endeavoring to be constructively helpful in regard to relations in which the public, quite as much as the immediate parties to industry, have a paramount concern. The final and only test as to whether or not the study of conditions here, combined with similar studies in other parts of the United States and in other countries, may help to further the object they are intended to serve, will be the degree to which the constructive suggestions growing out of the several investigations are practically applied and serve to actually improve the relations of capital and labor."

One thing I would like to mention as a reason I went to Colorado is—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (interrupting). Give the date of that interview. Mr. KING. This was published in the Colorado papers on March 20. Then I refused to have interviews after that. I wrote this out on the train on the way out, and when I reached Colorado I typewrote it and handed it to the press the same morning.

There was one other reason. I know the public of this country and elsewhere have the impression that if a man is appointed to do a particular work that affects large interests he may be expected to work as hard as he can anywhere else but not come near the interests themselves, and I think that relates to the Rockefeller interests as well as others. I thought I should try, as far as my part of the work was concerned, to make it perfectly plain to everyone that the Rockefeller interests, or any other interests, were not influencing me one way or the other; that I should begin with the Rockefeller interests as the ones that promised, in some particulars, the greatest opportunity for research, and also the greatest opportunities for practical results.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you your opinion, at this point, without of course protesting anything you might find, or any conclusions you might make—you heard Mr. Rockefeller testify in New York, I believe, Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr.?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. As to the proposition that he could sit as a director of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. in the morning and take one course of action with reference to this matter we are talking about, that you are engaged in, and in the afternoon, as a director of the foundation, could take a position that would be entirely in conflict with the other; do you recall that?

Mr. KING. I do not recall that, Mr. Chairman; I do not think Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., stated he could take one position in the morning and another in the afternoon. I am sure he did not.

Chairman WALSH. Do you remember the statement he made at that time?

Mr. KING. Yes; I recall that you asked the question whether he could occupy two or three different positions, representing on the board one interest at one moment and another interest at another moment; and he was asked if he thought that was consistent. Do you want my view on that?

Chairman WALSH. No; but after hearing that testimony and this here do you think that after your finding is given out the working people of this country will be able to separate the Rockefeller interests—and especially if they do not find themselves in accord with your finding—if they will be able to separate your connection with them, and also in the conduct of the coal company? I want to put it to you frankly.

Mr. KING. I think about that that the working people are just like all other people; they base their judgment on facts as they see them, and I think they will judge the result of my work by the work itself.

Chairman WALSH. You do not think they will take it out of the headlines?

Mr. KING. I am not at all sure that there may not be a prejudice against this work. I believe there is a prejudice to a certain extent; I do not attempt to say whether it is justifiable or not.

Chairman WALSH. I do not either; but I am just asking you, if, in your opinion as a man that has been in industry for a long time, if that would not be the instant reaction of the workers themselves?

Mr. KING. No; I think not. I think if the result of my work leads to the improvement of industrial conditions the workers will be the first to say, "We want to see justice done to the men to whom injustice may have been done in the past." I trust public opinion and I trust particularly the discerning mind of the working class.

Chairman WALSH. Of course public opinion would have to be free and not come from influenced publications or bulletins; it would have to be free and honest.

Mr. KING. I absolutely agree with that.

Chairman WALSH. And public opinion is made by printed publications, largely, is it not?

Mr. KING. I think the public sees through printed publications. I think the public very soon, Mr. Walsh, realizes where certain things come from when they appear in the press. I think the public are right on to that kind of thing—it does not matter what the source is.

I would like, while we are speaking of that question of Mr. Rockefeller sitting on the two boards, I would like to make the same answer that I think he made, and I think it is this, that if a man can not occupy a half dozen positions, no matter what they represent, and be honest and honorable in every one of them he is not fit to act in any one of such capacities. Men are either honest or dishonest; you can not put them in trade-unions or churches or parliaments or anywhere else and make honest men out of dishonest men, or make dishonest men out of honest men.

Chairman WALSH. Now, let me see if I can bring this down a little more; this is the particular question that I asked Mr. Rockefeller. It was along this line. I will ask you a direct question, because it is hard to quote or answer for another person. But take a case where Mr. Rockefeller was called upon to sit as a member of the Rockefeller Foundation in the morning and received a report from you to this effect: Mr. King after an investigation has found that the great bulk of the coal trade, or digging the coal, is organized into one union; that they have 400,000 members and are known as the United Mine Workers of America, and after a very careful survey of the matter extending over a number of years Mr. King has reported that he does not believe that economic justice can be done without recognizing this union. It is the first one in the trade, it has 400,000 members, with coal miners from various nationalities, with solidarity of work, financially and otherwise, and he has reported that the only thing to do would be to recognize the United Mine Workers of America; we shall now appropriate $500,000 to circulate Mr. King's findings and to see whether or not we could establish his ideas in America. That he would meet in the afternoon as a director of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., and he would say, he could say, that they are such bad men, that is, because of action that perhaps has been taken, that as a member of the board of directors of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. we can not afford to deal with them at all, so I cast my vote that our bones shall bleach in the mountains before we allow them to have anything to do with us.

It is a question of whether or not a man's mentality can be brought into such a position without saying as to whether he is honest or not, whether he can take both actions?

Mr. KING. There is something deeper than a man's mentality—his conscience and his own heart. If Mr. Rockefeller got a report from me saying a thing meant social justice, I don't care what board he was on, he would stand for it.

Chairman WALSH. When did you first meet Mr. Rockefeller?

Mr. KING. Last June.

Chairman WALSH. With reference to being employed in this work?

Mr. KING. May I tell you my meeting with him and what led me to take up this work?

Chairman WALSH. If you will answer my question, you can make any explanation that you desire afterwards. Was it with reference to your employment to do this work?

Mr. KING. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Then you may state what it was.

Mr. KING. I received a communication from Mr. Greene, in Ottawa, asking me to come to New York to advise with certain interests.

Chairman WALSH. Did you know Mr. Greene before?

Mr. KING. He had been secretary to President Eliot, of Harvard University, and I was also acquainted with him through Lord Grey in Canada.

Chairman WALSH. Have the Rockefellers interests in Canada?

Mr. KING. Not that I know of.

He asked me if I could come down and advise with him with reference to certain interests in which he was connected. I think I have the precise words of the communication. First it was a telegram and was followed by a letter, and this paragraph here in the letter of June 3 was sent to me by Mr. Greene [reading:]

"Through the Rockefeller Foundation we are already planning some economic and social studies, which may have an ultimate bearing on the solution of the labor problem; but it has seemed to us that if, in our purely corporate capacity as owners or directors of large industries, we can work out, on a basis compatible with sound finance, any substantial improvements in the relation of capital and labor, we shall be, perhaps, doing a greater social service than we could render through any of our strictly philanthropic expenditures. It is with reference to a wise approach to this great problem that I am now asking your aid."

I may say that I got that from Mr. Greene.

Chairman WALSH. Read that again; I was trying to connect it in my own mind.

Mr. KING (reading): "Through the Rockefeller Foundation we are already planning some economic and social studies which may have an ultimate bearing on the solution of the labor problem; but it has seemed to us that if, in our purely corporate capacity as owners or directors of large industries, we can work out, on a basis compatible with sound finance, any substantial improvements in the relation of capital and labor, we shall, perhaps, be doing a greater social service than we could render through any of our strictly philanthropic expenditures. It is with reference to a wise approach to this great problem that I am now asking your aid."

Chairman WALSH. Now, does the middle of that paragraph mean the coal company?

Mr. KING. The Rockefeller Foundation has investments in a large number of corporations. I think they hold bonds of the coal company. I am not sure though on that point.

Chairman WALSH. Now, let's see if I understand that. Does he mean by that—do you understand him to mean in their purely corporate capacity; does that mean the foundation?

Mr. KING. I think it means the foundation specifically. I think the foundation as a corporation holds other investments. I must say in regard to this passage that it seemed to me to register about the high-water mark of a sense of responsibility on the part of large corporations.

Chairman WALSH. Now, they were speaking as a large corporation like a coal company or an oil company or anything they might be interested in?

Mr. KING. No; they were speaking as a large corporation that owned certain securities. They were stockholders and bondholders.

Chairman WALSH. So you felt what you note there, that that was the high-water mark of corporation management, that they should want to do a thing like that?

Mr. KING. No; not that. What I felt was this—and what I felt very strongly was this: That the place to begin improvement of industrial conditions is not so much on the part of the workers as on the part of the men that have capital.

Chairman WALSH. Why? And why should not the workers jump in and do something for themselves right away?

Mr. KING. They should jump in and do something for themselves; but the more a man has in the way of power the greater his responsibility; and if I am a stockholder owning a hundred thousand dollars of stock, I think I have a greater obligation to my fellow man than if I was a working man with no capital saved at all. And this seemed to me to indicate that so far as the foundation was concerned they were taking the view that as the owners of large wealth and property they hoped to be able to render a great social service by setting an example to the rest of the world by making the industries through which they could exert their influence, if any, better industries than they had been, and improve the relations of labor and capital in them.

Chairman WALSH. Now, do I understand you to say that what you drew from this was that when these gentlemen mentioned doing something in their corporate capacity, did they mean that the Rockefeller Foundation has a corporate capacity and they were speaking from that standpoint?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Chairman WALSH. Now, let's see. I want to get this straight. I do not get it exactly. Let me see, it seemed to say that if "in our purely corporate capacity as owners or directors of large industries, we can work out on a basis compatible with sound finance any substantial improvements in the relation of capital and labor we shall be perhaps doing a greater social service than we could render through any of our strictly philanthropic expenditures."

In other words, they had the foundation in which they were operating in the field of philanthropy, but that it occurred to them that in their purely corporate capacity as the owners or directors of large industries they could work out on a basis compatible with sound finance certain substantial improvements in the relations of capital and labor. Wouldn't you think from that, now, that their approach to you, now, was as managers and owners of industrial concerns?

Mr. KING. I grant you it may have been that, and probably it was.

Chairman WALSH. Don't you think it was, after we analyze it?

Mr. KING. No; as I recall it, at that time Mr. Greene was director in several corporations as well as in the Rockefeller Foundation.

Chairman WALSH. Well, don't you think he was talking from that standpoint?

Mr. KING. Well, I will say that I think he was, if—I think probably you are right; that it may have included every interest that Mr. Greene was a director of. That would include the Colorado Fuel & Iron, and I think they were quite right; that if they could improve conditions in the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. that they would be rendering a much bigger service to labor and to the public than they would by any of their philanthropic expenditures.

Chairman WALSH. They say: "If we can work out on a basis compatible with sound finance." What do you understand that to be, a sound financial basis?

Mr. KING. Well, I should feel that any improvement that is not capable of being carried on on a sound financial basis is not likely to be of service to anybody—if you can't do a thing on a basis of what is sound finance. If it can be done only on a basis of unsound finance, the thing is no good for anyone. That is all that sentence means.

Chairman WALSH. The "sound finance" means that if they could do it without—what does it mean?

Mr. KING. Well, it may mean one thing to one man, Mr. Walsh, and another to another. To me it means honorable business. That is what I understand by sound finance—honorable and intelligent business—not "high finance."

Chairman WALSH. It does not mean any ultimate financial result of any sort—"sound finance"?

Mr. KING. Well, any dividends got in an improper way I should say would be unsound finance. The only thing that would be sound finance would be finance that would stand the light of day and publicity to the fullest degree.

Chairman WALSH. And that would include proper treatment of workmen and proper discharge of all the duties that were imposed upon the owner of the industry by the responsibility which comes through the thing he undertakes?

Mr. KING. Absolutely; and I would begin with the consideration of the work-ers, for industry can not be run without labor being considered. It ought to be the first consideration and should not be the last.

Excuse me for getting off the subject. I was asked to come down in that way to advise with these interests as to whether a course of studies on these problems would likely be of any service if undertaken by the foundation. I did not know when I received the letter from Mr. Greene that it was with reference to Mr. Rockefeller's business, one way or the other. I did not know of the existence of the Rockefeller Foundation when I received this communication. When I came to New York I found it was to meet Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., Mr. Murphy, and Mr. Greene, they all being members of the Rockefeller Foundation.

We went to Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr.'s house, and Mr. Rockefeller spoke to me about the advisability of a course of studies on industrial relations; whether I thought it could lead anywhere and be helpful. I told him I most certainly thought it could. Then he asked me if I could suggest to him names of men helpful in undertaking work of that kind. As I had not known what would be talked about, I said that would have to be considered, but I mentioned several names. I mentioned, I think, six or eight names, and among others one gentleman, a member of this commission, and also, among others, Mr. Neill, former Commissioner of Labor of the United States; Sydney Webb, of the old country; and a few other persons identified prominently with the study of industrial problems. I said I thought any of those persons would be capable of undertaking work of this kind. Then Mr. Rockefeller questioned me at some length as to wherein I saw the possibilities of good resulting from impartial studies on economic questions, and I gave him my opinion. I was simply consulted as one to give an opinion. Then he spoke to me about the situation in Colorado.

Chairman WALSH. That was the first interview?

Mr. KING. The first interview, yes. He said, "I will explain to you why I am asking this question, now, and why I am asking your advice. This situation in Colorado has brought home to me"—I am not using his exact words, but this is the substance of it—"has brought home to me an aspect of the industrial trouble that I had never comprehended to the degree that I now comprehend. The situation out there where men and women have lost their lives has suggested to my mind that there should surely be some way of settling industrial differences other than by means of strife of this kind which causes loss of human life and loss of property and all this unrest." And he said, "I want to use, if I can, to use some of my wealth to make that kind of thing impossible in the future; and that is my reason for asking your advice on this matter." Perhaps I should—I suppose the reason he sent for me—one reason may have been the same reason that this commission asked me to come. As far as I know, I am the only one from Canada the commission has invited to appear before it.

Chairman WALSH. Yes; you are the only one.

Mr. KING. I was for eight years the deputy head of the department of labor and for two years minister of labor in the cabinet.

Chairman WALSH. Another reason is that you had something to do with the Canadian industrial disputes act, as the author of it, and—

Mr. KING. Yes; and with several pieces of legislation on industrial questions; and I felt that Mr. Rockefeller's purpose in asking me was to give him honest advice, so far as my experience would enable me to give it, as to the benefits that would come from studies of that kind. So, then, when he spoke of the Colorado situation he said, as nearly as I recall it, this: "The present strike, I don't see that I can ask your opinion on it. That is a matter that the operators are dealing within Colorado themselves. The question, as I understand it, is the question of the recognition of a particular union, and the operators in Colorado have taken a stand on that matter; and as long as the question remains one of union recognition, I suppose the struggle will go on." I am not giving you the exact words, but the substance.

Chairman WALSH. Yes; that you could never do anything in that line?

Mr. KING. As he understood it, the operators had made up their minds that they would not concede recognition of the organization. He said that industrial peace in Colorado might be restored if, in the industry there, some scheme were worked out whereby there could be representation by the men themselves to the higher authorities in the industry in regard to matters pertaining to their living conditions and grievances and all—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Who was it said that?

Mr. KING. Mr. Rockefeller said that.

Chairman WALSH. That is, Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr.?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Was his father there?

Mr. KING. No; his father was not there. I think he said—that may have come either after or before a remark of mine—when he asked me if I had any opinions on the Colorado situation. Well, as I remember it, I said I had not followed it closely, but that if it were like other troubles I had had to do with, I should imagine it was the result of the men not being able to find adequate expression for the grievances they had and that probably there were a number of officers who were arbitrary in their conduct, and the mass of men under them had resented treatment of that kind. Then he said, "What method would you adopt under the circumstances to try to improve those relations?"

Chairman WALSH. Then it was you suggested, and not Mr. Rockefeller?

Mr. KING. Suggested what?

Chairman WALSH. This plan you speak of. I thought you said Mr. Rockefeller asked you if such and such and such were the case, such could not be done?

Mr. KING. Well, as I say, the order of the conversation I don't exactly remember; but I was the one who developed the plan.

Chairman WALSH. Did he suggest it first?

Mr. KING. No; he did not suggest the plan first. I was the one that suggested or outlined a first plan.

Chairman WALSH. What was it you started to say that Mr. Rockefeller said, couldn't you do this and do that? Maybe I misunderstood you, I will let the stenographer read that. I thought you said Mr. Rockefeller suggested—

Mr. KING (interrupting): Well, the point of the suggestion, Mr. Chairman, is—it is perfectly clear in my mind what did take place. If I said Mr. Rockefeller suggested a particular plan, or had a particular plan, and that that was at the outset, I am wrong in that, because I made the suggestion myself.

Chairman WALSH. If you will excuse me a moment, I am going to ask the stenographer to go back and read what you said Mr. Rockefeller said to you.

(Here the stenographer read as follows:)

"He said, 'I will explain to you why I am asking this question, now, and why I am asking your advice. This situation in Colorado has brought home to me'—I am not using his exact words, but this is the substance of it—'has brought home to me an aspect of the industrial trouble that I had never comprehended to the degree I now comprehend. The situation out there where men and women have lost their lives has suggested to my mind that there should surely be some way of settling industrial differences other than by means of strife of this kind which causes loss of human life and loss of property and all this unrest.' And he said, 'I want to use, if I can, to use some of my wealth to make that kind of thing impossible in the future, and that is my reason for asking your advice on this matter.' Perhaps I should—I suppose the reason he sent for me—one reason may have been the same reason this commission asked me to come. As far as I know, I am the only one from Canada the commission has invited to appear before it.

"Chairman WALSH. Yes; you are the only one.

"Mr. KING. I was for eight years the deputy head of the department of labor and for two years minister of labor in the cabinet.

"Chairman WALSH. Another reason is that you had something to do with the Canadian industrial disputes act, as the author of it and—

"Mr. KING. Yes; and with several pieces of legislation on industrial questions; and I felt that Mr. Rockefeller's purpose in asking me was to give him honest advice, so far as my experience would enable me to give it, as to the benefits that would come from studies of that kind.

"So, then, when he spoke of the Colorado situation he said, as nearly as I recall it, this:

"The present strike—I don't see that I can ask your opinion on it. That is a matter that the operators are dealing with in Colorado themselves. The question, as I understand it, is the question of the recognition of a particular union, and the operators in Colorado have taken a stand on that matter; and as long as the question remains one of union recognition, I suppose the struggle will go on.' I am not giving you the exact words, but the substance."

Chairman WALSH. Well, unless you have not gone far enough back, Mr. Reporter, I must have been mistaken.

Mr. KING. My purpose in putting that in—there is a tendency in some of the questions to imply that there may be special reasons for people being invited and being asked questions, and I want to make it perfectly plain that there was a certain motive in Mr. Rockefeller's mind, which was to get some one of experience in these questions.

Chairman WALSH. The point was, I understood you to say, Mr. Rockefeller suggested to you to get that plan in Colorado. Now, did he?

Mr. KING. Get that plan?

Chairman WALSH. To work out a plan in Colorado that might establish industrial peace and in their own industry.

Mr. KING. Well, as I remember it, he asked me if I could suggest anything or any plan that would be helpful. Yes, he did ask me that.

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. KING. Yes; that is quite right. Then I turned to give my views, having regard for the premise he had laid down in regard to the situation there. That was the substance of the conversation in the morning. Now, if I have made myself clear, I was asked to go down simply to advise whether a course of studies might be taken—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). You came in response to this [referring to the extract of letter from Mr. Greene to witness, of date June 3, 1914, heretofore read]?

Mr. KING. Yes; it recites it there.

Chairman WALSH. And no other reason?

Mr. KING. No, sir. But you asked me at the outset whether my conversation with Mr. Rockefeller had relation to employment with the Rockefeller Foundation. My answer is, no.

Chairman WALSH. Your answer is that you came down in response to the extract from this letter?

Mr. KING. Yes; in answer to the request contained in this letter; and I gave my advice and then returned to Ottawa. I later received a communication from the Rockefeller Foundation asking me if I myself would undertake those studies. I had no more thought of having anything to do with changing the course of work I was at at the moment than I had of flying.

Chairman WALSH. Had you given your views about Colorado and how you thought the thing might be worked out?

Mr. KING. As to what plan might be adopted?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. KING. I outlined a plan there.

Chairman WALSH. Go ahead; and then they wrote to you.

Mr. KING. Yes; and asked if I might—or rather would I undertake this course of studies myself. Well, I have to insert this personal matter because it explains my actions. I was at that time connected as president of the Ontario Reform Association, a liberal political organization of Canada; and we were fighting the provincial campaign, and I had an engagement to speak every night for, I think, a month; and when I received this communication I had to reply that I could not give any thought to this matter one way or the other for a month, or until these engagements were over. I think I received another communication asking if I could not come down just for an informal conference. Well, the only arrangement I could make was to come down on a Saturday and spend Sunday and return for my meetings on Monday, which I did about the 23d of June. That was the time that I went out to Tarrytown, it being Sunday. I went out and met Mr. Rockefeller at Tarrytown. Mr. Murphy met me when I arrived at New York and we went out together—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Before we get to the Tarrytown conversation—now, in this first conversation did you make a suggestion to them that perhaps proper representation might be gotten by recognizing the union to the extent of conferring with them or even entering into contractual relations with them?

Mr. KING. As far as the union was concerned, I was told before I began to discuss that part of the situation, that the question of union recognition was a question the mine managers of Colorado had a policy on, and Mr. Rockefeller was not going to interfere.

Chairman WALSH. So whatever you did out there had to be something other than recognition of the union?

Mr. KING. No; that was not the suggestion I got; but—

Chairman WALSH. No; but any plan you might make for the situation in Colorado had to be something other than recognition of the union.

Mr. KING. Understand, what Mr. Rockefeller spoke of then was a plan that would help to bring industrial peace at that time, notwithstanding the position that the operators had taken in Colorado.

Chairman WALSH. Yes; whatever plan you got up could not include in it the recognition of the union in Colorado in this trouble.

Mr. KING. Well, it is quite conceivable that the plan that I suggested then—there was nothing in it whereby, if a company cares to grant recognition to a union, it should not be granted through this plan just as well as any other. In fact, the whole plan is a plan of representation.

Chairman WALSH. Well, but when you started on your plan it was with the understanding given you by Mr. Rockefeller that the executive officers had already passed on the question of recognition of the union, and that they would not recognize it?

Mr. KING. As far as that trouble was concerned; yes—as far as that trouble was concerned.

Chairman WALSH. Now, then, when you got to Tarrytown?

Mr. KING. Well, when I got to Tarrytown the position I took was this: I had had two or three weeks to consider the matter, and I had come to the decision that I would not accept the position that was offered to me if it meant that I would have to give up my interest in public affairs in Canada. I am not in Parliament—

Chairman WALSH. Were you holding any official position in Canada at that time?

Mr. KING. No; I was not in Parliament at that time, but I had accepted the nomination of the liberals of North York, one of the constituencies of Canada, to be their candidate at the next election.

Chairman WALSH. When was that election to be held?

Mr. KING. That is for the present Government to decide. They have not dissolved Parliament yet. As soon as they dissolve—I expected they were going to dissolve a few days ago, but they have not. They can dissolve any time, but when they do, I am going right back to contest that riding, no matter where I am.

Chairman WALSH. Proceed.

Mr. KING. I said when I came down, "There is no use of my considering this if it means my giving up my interest in public affairs in Canada."

Another thing I said was—this was in June that we had this conversation—that I could not think of entering upon the work until October. The only person I had spoken to or intimated to what had come in the way of this proposition was Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in whose cabinet I was; and when I spoke to him, he said he proposed to make a tour of the Dominion—the last political tour he probably would make through the whole of Canada, and he was kind enough to say that he would like me to be a member of his party and go with him and that he intended to make the trip during July, August, and September. And I said at once, certainly, that I would not think of taking up this work until that was over. And I mentioned those two features when I came down, that I could not consider this proposition if it meant entering upon work before October, nor could I consider it if it meant giving up my interest in political affairs in Canada. And I must say that I did not expect when I put the proposition that way that it would be accepted. So that any advice I gave, Mr. Chairman, in regard to any plan out in Colorado was not with a view of getting any position with Mr. Rockefeller or anybody else. I simply took the position that I always have taken with people.

Chairman WALSH. When you gave them the plan, did they seem to like it or assent to it or agree that it might be a pretty good thing?

Mr. KING. When I gave the plan I gave it verbally and there were no expressions of opinion one way or the other on it. And in regard to the plan I gave or suggested, nothing was said of that plan in the interview with Mr. Rockefeller, sr. That was the first interview.

Chairman WALSH. Was Mr. Rockefeller present at the first interview?

Mr. KING. No; he was not.

Chairman WALSH. Had you ever met him until you went to Tarrytown?

Mr. KING. No; I never met him until I went to Tarrytown. And I had had the offer, Mr. Chairman, as to entering upon this work before I had seen Mr. Rockefeller, sr., at all. I would like, if I might, just to place on record what I said as nearly as I can remember in regard to the plan I had in my mind.

Chairman WALSH. In the first interview?

Mr. KING. In the first interview—I was asked subsequently if I would repeat it in writing, and I did. I would like to put that plan into the record.

Chairman WALSH. I see. Proceed.

Mr. KING. Well, as nearly as I can remember, the exact words were, could I suggest the "construction of machinery which will afford opportunity of easy and constant conference between employers and employed with reference to matters of concern to both."

Chairman WALSH. Pardon me. What are you reading from?

Mr. KING. A printed document that I had printed for my own convenience.

Chairman WALSH. I know; but is it an issued or published document?

Mr. KING. No; it was not issued as a public document. I will tell you the exact nature of this, Mr. Chairman. During the hearings of the commission in New York there was a letter I had written to Mr. Rockefeller read into the testimony. I thought, as I listened to the questions there, that a very unfair inference was being drawn from a certain paragraph. I am a man in public life, and I have to protect my reputation. I do not care what any particular individual may say, but I do care as a public man what inferences are drawn from my letters and utterances. So when I thought an unfair inference was being put upon part of my letter, I had the letter printed in full with the explanation of the circumstances under which it was written.

Chairman WALSH. Were those circulated?

Mr. KING. No; not circulated; but I had them ready, because—I will explain absolutely the reason in my mind. One of the gentlemen who testified before that commission—I will not mention his name at the moment—drew inferences—there were others also who did—that I thought were unfair. Now, that part of the inference was telegraphed to Canada and published by the opposition press of that country with a view to doing me political injury. I don't know that it was so intended by anyone—any individual—but you understand when a man is in political life his enemies take advantage of anything. An unfair inference was drawn and unfair statements and false statements made concerning some part of this communication and were telegraphed and inserted in the Conservative press—a large part of it—from one end of Canada to the other.

Chairman WALSH. From New York?

Mr. KING. From New York; and when I got back from New York I was charged—it was charged that I, who had been representing labor in Canada for years, had sold out, or something to that effect; and I expect when I take up my next political contest to have to face such problems as may come from false inferences, and so I printed the documents to have them ready to circulate if that subject is brought up.

Chairman WALSH. And that is one of the documents?

Mr. KING. That is one of the documents; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You can quote from it if it is all right and does not interfere in any way. If you think it does not interfere in any way, you may quote from it.

Mr. KING. Well, I will give you my version even if it is not all right. When my contest might come on I wanted to be prepared. I did not want any man to get up and cite these false statements. I want to show the statement of the facts. Now, this is the record of the thing. I was asked—as I say, the strike was on at the time and the company had taken the position that they would not yield to the question of union recognition. The men, as I understand, had taken the position that they would not drop the strike as long as that point was not conceded. And I was asked in the interval if I would or could suggest the construction of machinery which would afford opportunity of easy and constant conference between employers and employed with reference to matters of concern to both, such machinery to be avowedly constructed as a means, on the one hand, of preventing labor from being exploited and, on the other, of insuring that cordial cooperation which is likely to further industrial efficiency. That is the substance of it.

Chairman WALSH. Wait a moment. How does that go, again?

Mr. King (reading): "The construction of machinery which will afford opportunity of easy and constant conference between employers and employed with reference to matters of concern to both, such machinery to be avowedly constructed as a means, on the one hand, of preventing labor from being exploited and, on the other, of insuring that cordial cooperation which is likely to further industrial efficiency.

"Granting the acceptance of the principle outlined, the machinery to be devised should aim primarily at securing a maximum of publicity with a minimum of interference in all that pertains to conditions of employment. By this I mean that the hope of establishing confidence between employers and employed will lie more in a known willingness on the part of each to confer frankly with the other than in anything else. Similarly the avoidance of friction likely to lead to subsequent strife is likely to be minimized by agencies which will disclose the existence of irritation and its cause at or near inception; trouble most frequently follows where ill feeling is allowed to develop unknown or unheeded.

"A board on which both employers and employed are represented and before which at stated intervals questions affecting conditions of employment can be discussed and grievances examined would appear to constitute the necessary basis of such machinery. The size of this board and whether there should be one or many such boards would depend upon the numbers employed, the nature of the industry, and whether or not the work is carried on in one or several localities."

I had not been in Colorado and did not know anything about the geography of the State nor of the mines.

Chairman WALSH. This was a plan you suggested in your first interview?

Mr. KING. Yes; and in the dark.

Chairman WALSH. At Mr. Rockefeller's house?

Mr. KING. Yes. [Continues reading:]

"Where, for example, there are different mines or refining plants as well as mines it might be that boards pertaining to each individual concern might be combined with provision for reference to a joint board covering the whole industry or group of industries to which matters not settled by smaller boards might be taken for further discussion and adjustment.

"In determining the character of representation on such boards, broadly speaking, a line might be drawn between those who are 'paid salaries,' on the one hand, and those who 'earn wages,' on the other. This is very rough and very general, for there are in some industries a class of petty bosses whose interests may appear to identify them more closely with wage earners than with salaried officials, but, broadly speaking, men who have authority to give orders and to direct operations fall into the salaried class, while men who have no authority to direct others and whose own work is subject wholly to direction fall into the category of wage earners. The selection of representatives on such boards should be made at a meeting or meetings of employees called expressly for the purpose. It might be left optional for the employees to say whether they desired a permanent form of organization of which their representatives on a board would be the officers or whether they would prefer the selection of individuals at stated periods without reference to any permanent form of organization. It could also be left optional with the workers themselves to say whether they wished to allow representatives so chosen a salary in payment of their services or whether such service would have to be voluntary. A company might, with propriety, offer to provide the place of meeting for the boards and possibly go the length of supplying the employees with permanent office accommodation for their representatives, leaving it, however, to the employees themselves to provide whatever might be necessary in the way of salaries and expenses in the keeping up of such offices.

"It would not appear desirable at the outset that these boards should have anything to do with benefit features. They should not be framed with a view of restricting through possible benefits the liberty of any man as respects the continuance of his employment, but should aim primarily at affording a guarantee of fair play in determining in the first instance the conditions under which men would be obliged to work and the remuneration to be paid and, secondly, the carrying out of these conditions in a spirit of fair play."

Chairman WALSH. Are you not reading from the letter introduced in evidence? It is familiar.

Mr. KING. It is familiar. I was asked by Mr. Rockefeller to give the substance of it in writing.

Chairman WALSH. You are reading from the letter?

Mr. KING. Yes; in the letter I give the substance of the conversation.

Chairman WALSH. The plan you proposed to Mr. Rockefeller the first time you ever had a talk with him was that the men selected to prevent the grievances should be men actually inside the industry and not called from the outside. Is that correct?

Mr. KING. No.

Chairman WALSH. Let me look at it please. [Reading:]

"This would make it an essential that all members of such boards, excepting possibly persons chosen as chairmen, referees, or umpires, should be persons actually employed in the industry or connected with it in some way, not persons chosen from outside."

Mr. KING. Yes; what is your question?

Chairman WALSH. My question is that this presupposes that very thing.

Mr. KING. What very thing?

Chairman WALSH. That it was an essential that all members of such boards, excepting possibly persons chosen as chairmen, referees, or umpires, should be persons actually employed in the industry, or connected with it in some way, not personse chosen from outside?

Mr. KING. If they were to be representatives on boards of industry, certainly.

You remember there were certain limitations laid down I tried to have regard for in giving advice, and how, within the industry itself, certain boards could be constituted.

You do me a great injustice—I want to make this plain—you do me a great injustice if you try to infer that this was any attempt not to recognize the union or any attempt to evolve machinery which would prevent the union getting recognition.

Chairman WALSH. That is what I am asking you as directly as possible; under that could these men have chosen Frank J. Hayes, or Mr. McLennan, or any other of the members of the United Mine Workers of America?

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, you are a lawyer; when you are called in to advise in regard to a particular situation, you advise with regard to the situation put before you. I was, as an expert, asked to advise as to a particular situation, and I took the situation as presented to me, and I gave advice within the restrictions placed upon me. Any attempt to construe that advice to in any way show prejudice against labor unions is something I think would be dishonorable in the highest degree, and I want to make it most emphatically plain, both for my own sake and for—for the sake of my own reputation and for the sake of the reputation of this commission, that any effort of that kind is doing one of the greatest acts of injustice to any man that can possibly be done.

Chairman WALSH. So the parallel you wish to draw is that you went into that as an expert like I should have gone into it as a lawyer, to take the conditions as presented by the directors of this Rockefeller Foundation, and give my opinion, having those conditions in mind with those limitations?

Mr. KING. The way I went into it is the way I go into anything else—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). You can answer that; you went into that as you say I should have gone into it as a lawyer, or any man should have gone into it as a lawyer; you took the limitations given by the persons employing you and gave them a plan along the lines drawn by those limitations—

Mr. KING. Let me tell you—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Listen, I am not going to infer anything, but I am going to ask you a direct question each time, and I will give you an opportunity to say yes or no, and you can make any explanation you please.

Mr. KING. I shall make my case as I think best and leave it to the public to determine between us.

Chairman WALSH. We will have to leave it to the commission to judge.

Mr. KING. No; I am speaking now in a country which I believe believes in fair play and decency, and I have seen witness after witness on this stand put in a position I think disgraceful.

Chairman WALSH. You do not like the way the hearings are conducted in this country?

Mr. KING. Not in this country, but in the interests of labor I protest against the way you carry them on. I make that very plain, and I think the other members of your commission take that stand.

Chairman WALSH. You think a mistake was made by the Government in selecting the instrumentalities they have adopted to inquire into the causes of industrial unrest, a part of which is to inquire into the relationship between the parties in Colorado?

Mr. KING. You may seek to excuse yourself in that way and make the Government—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). I am not seeking to excuse myself at all.

Mr. KING. I think this hearing should be conducted in a way to appeal to fair men, and I do not think it has been, and I protest against the unfair way in which you are conducting this hearing.

Chairman WALSH. You exclude the rest, but do not like my way?

Mr. KING. I do exclude the rest, and I think they have been put in an embarrassing position by the way you are conducting the hearings; and I protest as to the way of examination of Mr. Rockefeller with reference to his responsibility in what took place in Colorado.

Chairman WALSH. Because you heard Mr. McCorkle testify your employer should be brought back there and have a trial and go to prison?

Mr. KING. No; I have followed your questions since you started this investigation.

Chairman WALSH. Oh, you have not been satisfied from the start with the way I conducted it?

Mr. KING. I do not think it will make it any plainer to go further.

Chairman WALSH. I am following this out from the remarks you made; you did not like it from the very start the way I have conducted the hearings?

Mr. KING. I regret it deeply, from the standpoint of labor, and anybody that wishes labor as much good as possible does so. This is a commission that has a possibility of rendering one of the greatest services to industry, and I regret that it has been managed in such a way that I fear such possibilities are gone.

Chairman WALSH. What salary do they pay you?

Mr. KING. That is a matter you do not have a right to inquire into. I was asked if I would undertake this work for a period of years. I said I would not, that all I would undertake to do was to take it for a year; that I wanted to be perfectly free at the end of a year to terminate my arrangement with the Rockefeller Foundation if I did not see it was going to give the opportunity for the practical results I wanted to get. I made an undertaking with them on that basis, with that understanding, and they asked me to take it for another period of time, and I refused, and I made the further stipulation that if by any chance an election should be brought on in Canada, I should resign before that time. I think under those circumstances the public would hardly expect me to answer what particular remuneration I am receiving.

Chairman WALSH. You may decline to answer that; but we have to put that question to other witnesses. If you do not care to tell what you are getting, very well.

Mr. KING. I think it is just as well that matters that are private should be kept private, unless they throw some light on the work of this commission. If you think I am the sort of man that is going to be influenced by the salary I receive, if you will say so, I will answer the question.

Chairman WALSH. I do not know the sort of man you are, but if you ask my opinion I will say that my experience in life, covering a good many years, is that a man who accepts remuneration from another man for work to be done naturally feels very much beholden to that man.

Mr. KING. That may be your way; it is not mine.

Chairman WALSH. Let me add to show my feeling on that point; you asked me that, you know, and I only answer because you ask—

Mr. KING (interrupting). The position I take is this; if I am returned to Parliament I shall serve in Parliament without remuneration from any source for the time I am there. I give up for the time I spend in political affairs in Canada every cent I receive from the Rockefeller Foundation. I believe politics to be the noblest of all callings, but the meanest of all trades, and I think that every man should be prepared to give some of his time in that way, and the question of salary and money is not a thing that enters into my mind in dealing with the public service.

Chairman WALSH. What do you say you are going to do with the money you get from Mr. Rockefeller?

Mr. KING. I did not say anything about that; I forego what I am getting for the opportunity of public service.

Chairman WALSH. If you go back to Parliament, you do not charge the Rockefeller Foundation, or do not continue your inquiry?

Mr. KING. For such time as I give up to public life, I receive nothing from the Rockefeller Foundation. Any time I give up to the public service I voluntarily forego my income.

Chairman WALSH. I ask the question directly: Is it a fact the suggestion you made to Mr. Rockefeller at his residence on the occasion of your first interview, presupposed that these boards that you mention should not consist in any part of the members of the national labor unions in the coal industry?

Mr. KING. No, sir; it did not. Every man on those boards might be labor-union men. And let me tell you this, when I talked to Mr. Rockefeller at that time, I remember distinctly of his stating to me that he had no antagonism toward labor unions as such, and he stated, as he did on this stand, that he believed labor had a right to organize as much as capital. I made it plain to him that I am a strong believer in trade-unions. The first thesis I wrote 20 years ago was on that subject.

When I take up matters of interest to labor, and I find there are certain limitations, and I can only get so much for labor, I take that. When I see a chance anywhere to advance the interest of labor, I do not forego that chance, because I can not get all I think I ought to; I take as much as possible; and if there are limitations laid down, I work within those limitations, for I believe the only service I can render is in that way.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have something more to say on that subject?

Mr. KING. No.

Chairman WALSH. Now, then, we get to Tarrytown.

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you meet John D. Rockefeller, jr., between the time you met him in the first interview and the time you went to Tarrytown?

Mr. KING. No, sir; I never did.

Chairman WALSH. Did you communicate with any member of the Rockefeller Foundation or director of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. KING. No, sir; I did not communicate with any of them.

Chairman WALSH. What was the occasion of your going to Tarrytown?

Mr. KING. I had communicated by telegraph to try and arrange a meeting on Sunday, or something like that.

Chairman WALSH. A communication with regard to your proposed plans?

Mr. KING. No, sir; not a line.

Chairman WALSH. Now, who accompanied you to Tarrytown?

Mr. KING. Mr. Murphy met me in New York.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Starr J. Murphy?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And was he at that time a director in the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. KING. I think he was.

Chairman WALSH. You knew he was?

Mr. KING. I know now that he was; I didn't know then.

Chairman WALSH. Did he tell you at that time that he was a director?

Mr. KING. No, sir. Understand this, Mr. Walsh, that we were not discussing the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. matters. We were discussing the advisability of beginning a course of study on industrial questions, at the interview that we had in Tarrytown.

Chairman WALSH. The first interview is embodied afterwards in this letter where you were getting up a plan that might be worked out in Colorado?

Mr. KING. I am speaking of the interview when I went to see Mr. Rockefeller, jr.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have another interview with regard to your proposed work with Mr. Murphy on your way to Tarrytown?

Mr. KING. You mean this proposed plan?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. No, sir; never spoke of it. It was August before I was asked to put this plan in writing.

Chairman WALSH. But you had given in a verbal conversation that same plan in substance?

Mr. KING. This was the substance of it.

Chairman WALSH. In the first conversation you had?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, did you have any conversation with Mr. Murphy in his office, or on the way out to Tarrytown, with reference to what you were going to do?

Mr. KING. No, sir; I never talked on the way out with Mr. Murphy about that. I think I talked on the way out with him about the question of my undertaking this work, and, as near as I remember it, the impression I sought to give Mr. Murphy was the feeling I had in mind when I went out there, that I would not undertake it.

Chairman WALSH. Oh, you say the impression you gave Mr. Murphy, or the impression that you had in your mind on the way to Tarrytown was that you would not take the position?

Mr. KING. I came down not intending to take up these studies.

Chairman WALSH. And when was it you had not made up your mind?

Mr. KING. I said I am not going to give up participation in the public life of my own country, I have taken too active a part in its affairs, and I came down with the thought of saying that I would not take up this work, because I could not take it up until the middle of October, anyway, and I would not take it up at all if I had to give up my citizenship in Canada and my work there.

Chairman WALSH. We had that up earlier; now, when you were here, you were still of the opinion that you would not take up the position?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir; and I gave Mr. Murphy my reasons on the way out.

Chairman WALSH. Who did you meet there?

Mr. KING. Mr. Rockefeller, jr., first, I think, and then Mr. Rockefeller, sr.

Chairman WALSH. Was anybody present except you four at that conversation?

Mr. KING. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. At this point we will stand adjourned until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

(Thereupon, at 5 o'clock p. m., Monday, May 24, 1915, the commission took an adjournment until the following morning, Tuesday, May 25, 1915, at 10 o'clock a. m.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Tuesday, May 25, 1915—10 a. m.

Present: Chairman Walsh, Commissioner Harriman, Commissioner Weinstock, and Commissioner O'Connell.

Chairman WALSH. Will you please resume the stand, Mr. King.

TESTIMONY OF MR. W. L. MACKENZIE KING—Continued.

Chairman WALSH. Is the money that is being paid you by the Rockefeller Foundation being paid monthly or in one lump sum at the end of the year?

Mr. KING. I receive a monthly check.

Chairman WALSH. Do I understand you to say that your employment is simply for one year?

Mr. KING. That is the extent of my engagement at the present time.

Chairman WALSH. How long, now, have you been in Colorado?

Mr. KING. Let me amplify that, Mr. Chairman. The foundation expressed the hope that I would take up this work for a period of time. I was desirous of seeing what opportunities there were in it of accomplishing the practical results I hoped to be able to accomplish, and I felt it was quite as much in my interest as theirs that we should have a year's relationship before the term was made longer.

Chairman WALSH. Who proposed it should be just a year, Mr. King?

Mr. KING. I did.

Chairman WALSH. Had you inquired into any other investigations they had made in which they had undertaken studies, such as agriculture and things of that kind?

Mr. KING. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You do not know anything about it?

Mr. KING. No.

Chairman WALSH. You made some statements about the characteristics of young Mr. Rockefeller.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. I believe you stated you never met him until you went into this.

Mr. KING. Not until I met him at his house before I went into it.

Chairman WALSH. I mean when you were called down here for that purpose, was the first time you saw him?

Mr. KING. I was called down to advise with Mr. Rockefeller.

Chairman WALSH. You were called down for the purpose of seeing him in this regard?

Mr. KING. Yes; that was the first time I saw him.

Chairman WALSH. Had you made a study of the attitude of the Messrs. Rockefeller toward labor, and also their business history in the United States?

Mr. KING. No, sir; I had not.

Chairman WALSH. So all you knew about Mr. Rockefeller you gathered from the contact you had with him immediately prior to going into this work and in this work.

Mr. KING. From my personal acquaintance with him and the conversations I had with him, I formed my estimate of him.

Chairman WALSH. That was since the time you met him, and immediately prior to going into this work?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Now, have you made a study in the field any other place except in Colorado?

Mr. KING. Colorado is the first part that I have taken in that regard.

Chairman WALSH. During our hearings in New York City, do you recall the labor disturbances at Roosevelt, N. J.?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And the inquiry that was made into that—the short inquiry?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And the fact was developed there that some of the bonds in this foundation, out of which this inquiry grew, was a part of the funds of the foundation?

Mr. KING. I believe it was stated that the foundation held certain bonds in that particular industry.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. A. Barton Hepburn, who is a director for the American Agriculture & Chemical Co., you knew was a director in this foundation?

Mr. KING. I know he is a director in the foundation.

Chairman WALSH. Were you present when he was examined on the witness stand before this commission?

Mr. KING. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you make any inquiry into the conditions at Roosevelt, N. J.?

Mr. KING. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did the foundation make any inquiry into the conditions at Roosevelt, N. J.?

Mr. KING. No; not that I am aware of.

Chairman WALSH. It is within a very few miles of New York City, is it not?

Mr. KING. I believe New Jersey is; yes.

Chairman WALSH. Now, upon yesterday, you said something about it being your work to uplift the masses; was that the way you put it?

Mr. KING. No; I do not think so.

Chairman WALSH. What was your expression; what did you say about the masses?

Mr. KING. I do not think I mentioned the word.

Chairman WALSH. My recollection was you said it was part of your work to uplift the masses or uplift labor.

Mr. KING. I do not think you will find the words "uplift" or "masses" in my testimony.

Chairman WALSH. What was it you said, speaking of your general purpose?

Mr. KING. If you want to know my general purpose—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). No; I want to know what you said yesterday; I want to go back to that and examine you a little on it.

Mr. KING. I do not recall the exact words; but if I make a statement with reference to my interest and purpose in labor it would amount to this: That whenever I see an opportunity to benefit the conditions of labor in any relationship in life in which I am placed I would endeavor to take advantage of that opportunity to do the most I can.

Chairman WALSH. That is, to help labor?

Mr. KING. To help the industrial classes; I think labor needs all the friends it can get.

Chairman WALSH. Do you think it needs all the friends it can get?

Mr. KING. Yes; it has many enemies.

Chairman WALSH. Now, are you working in this matter as a friend of labor?

Mr. KING. I hope I am.

Chairman WALSH. You believe you are?

Mr. KING. I believe I am, if I did not I would not.

Chairman WALSH. Have you ever done any work for the American laboring people prior to this time?

Mr. KING. Well, I went to England one year to get the British Government to enact a law which would make it an offense for anyone in the United Kingdom to publish representations which might lead to men being taken out of the country to Canada as strike breakers, or to come in to take the place of men on strike. That law applies to the United States as well as to Canada, and when you ask if I have rendered any service to the American workman I think that, perhaps, is one service I have rendered; that to-day there is a statute in Europe, which was the result of a conversation between Mr. Lloyd George and myself, which resulted in a statute which makes it illegal for any man to publish anything in a newspaper to induce labor to leave the United Kingdom and come to another country under false representations. That was aimed at the bringing in of strike breakers.

Chairman WALSH. Any other service you have done? Any other work for the American laborer?

Mr. KING. You mean the laborers in the United States of America?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. It is my belief that the labor question is such that boundary lines are not a necessary condition; that if a man renders a service to labor in one country it is helpful in another country, and for the last 12 years I have been more or less identified with introducing measures which I think will prove beneficial to labor, not only in Canada, but elsewhere.

Chairman WALSH. Except in that indirect way, has there been any work which you have done in the line of helping laborers of the United States of America? That is, the indirect work that you have done in Canada, and the passage of the law which you referred to, which would prevent strike breakers from being brought from England?

Mr. KING. I would have to look over a part of my record.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would.

Mr. KING. That bears specifically on that. I remember one thing that comes to my mind while I am speaking here. For a great many years men in this country have been endeavoring to get an act passed, or rather were endeavoring, that would put a stop to what is popularly known as "phossy jaw," to make a match without the use of phosphorous. That is, in order to stamp out a disease known as phosphorous necrosis. I was representing the Canadian Government at a meeting of the International Association for Labor Legislation in Lugano, Italy, and was asked there if, in order to help on the enactment of legislation in the United States and elsewhere, I would help to get such legislation passed in Canada. If labor is going to be permanently benefited in any one country, it is absolutely essential to have the standard raised all along the line. In other words, it is difficult to permanently raise a standard in one particular country. It was pointed out to me very specifically that an act passed in Canada would materially help all such legislation in every other country of the world. I returned to Canada and I was minister of labor at the time, and I asked the officers of the department to help me draft an act that would stamp out this particular disease. There were several match factories in Canada and some of them were using phosphorous in the making of their matches. One of the officers brought me a report which, to my mind, was particularly shocking. It mentioned where one woman in this industry had lost her jaws from the effects of the disease, but was still living in a city not far distant from Ottawa. I said this thing is so shocking I shall verify it for myself, and I went to the homes of these people and saw the conditions. I talked with the sufferers of the disease, and I came back and insisted that the law be drafted as strongly as it was possible to have it drawn. I went into Parliament and introduced that measure and stated what I had seen myself. I pointed out the international significance of a measure of that kind, and that measure is law in Canada to-day. I got it through the first reading, through the House of Commons, and then Parliament was dissolved on account of the late reciprocity election, but my successor took the bill I had introduced and carried it through the house at a subsequent session. I contend that that measure would not have been enacted if I had not taken the position I did, and I think that American labor will be the first to say that it was a benefit to them.

Chairman WALSH. So, in that indirect manner, you think you have benefited labor?

Mr. KING. I would say in that direct manner.

Chairman WALSH. I am referring to the laborers of the United States.

Mr. KING. Yes, sir; and I think the laborers of America would be the first to say I had rendered them a service by doing that.

Chairman WALSH. But when it comes to a question of benefiting labor, would you let them say whether they were benefited or not?

Mr. KING. Most assuredly.

Chairman WALSH. You do not believe in that school of philosophy that believes in doing things for labor that they do not want to have done for them?

Mr. KING. No; but I find among men who take an interest in labor such a diversity of opinion as to what is in the interest of labor. I mean, take the labor groups themselves. You have had before this commission men who style themselves as anarchists and Socialists and trade-unionists—

Chairman WALSH. Who actually worked, outside of the doctrinaire?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir; the men that actually worked.

Chairman WALSH. Such as Mr. Johannsen?

Mr. KING. I don't wish to specify the names.

Chairman WALSH. You have heard or read about a number of them, that actually work?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir. In regard to these men that work, they hold different views; they are all equally sincere, and if there is anything in their point of view which is sound and substantial, and that will ultimately make for good, my feeling is that element will prevail.

Chairman WALSH. Take the trade-unionists alone, are you a believer in giving the organized trade-unionist movement what they want in the way of help, regardless of their own desires?

Mr. KING. Excuse me a minute; I should like to finish the question as to the service I have rendered to labor.

Chairman WALSH. All right, I will come back to that. That question would logically go first.

Mr. KING. I think I may take credit to myself for having, under the direction of the then existing postmaster general, established the department of labor in Canada. There was no such department until I suggested it, and having been the one who suggested that the Government of Canada should establish such a department, I was given the duty of establishing it. That department has been in existence for 14 years. It has published each month during that time a publication known as the Labor Gazette. I wrote every line of the first number myself, I chose the style of type, and read the proof of it, and each step of the work as it followed in that department while I was deputy minister I either directly initiated or helped to initiate it.

I take it that the statistics of one country are of service to another, to help to raise the standard of labor in one country is to help to raise it in any other, and if the department in Canada has rendered any service to the laboring people of that country, it has also helped to render service to this country and all countries. You asked my service to labor.

Chairman WALSH. What I was trying to get at was whether you had any particular job in this country, for instance, like you are doing for the Rockefeller Foundation. We have taken into account what we received from the Rockefeller Foundation in reply to an inquiry which you made, that you hold in your hand there; that is, your activity in Canada and other places, and unless you desire to do so, I would not care to have you go over it again, all that you have done in Canada. We have taken that into consideration. What I was directing your attention to was any job that you did in the United States of America to help labor—that is, the country itself?

Mr. KING. If you are prepared to concede the point that I make—

Chairman WALSH. I concede the point; that is, what was really done for labor in one country applies to all, that it is an international problem, a world-wide problem.

Mr. KING. Then I am glad to leave my record on the labor matters in Canada and to stand on that record of the 10 years I was deputy minister and in the cabinet.

Coming back to your other question of work in this country, I was at the University of Chicago in the year 1896, and in the winter of 1896 I took up postgraduate study in economics. During that time I lived at Hull House, attended the university, and spent that winter making a study of trade-unions and trades-union movements.

Chairman WALSH. What trade-union movements did you study specifically?

Mr. KING. A particular study of the International Typographical Union.

Chairman WALSH. Any other?

Mr. KING. I made some study of the bricklayers' union.

Chairman WALSH. As an expert, did you indorse their form of organization?

Mr. KING. Just a minute until I answer this other question first. These studies I subsequently drafted in the form of a thesis, which don't amount to much in the light of the knowledge I have to-day—this was 20 years ago—but I think if you will read the article that appears in the Journal of Political Economy of that year—

Chairman WALSH. What year was that?

Mr. KING. 1896, I think, or 1897.

Chairman WALSH. Just give a better reference to it. Of course, I did not notice it at the time; I was not interested in these subjects.

Mr. KING. It has been given in the record that was given to the commission; if you had read that you would have seen it.

Chairman WALSH. I did read it, but I could not carry all of the details of your activities in my mind. I can find it in there?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir; there was an article on the history of trades-unions in the United States, and a study on trades-unions in an article on International Typographical Union.

Then, the next year I went to Harvard and pursued my studies of economics, and during the summer of that year—I was working my own way through college, Mr. Chairman—I received a scholarship and fellowship which helped me, but apart from that I had to earn all I had in order to get through post-graduate studies. I put in that summer in the city of Boston preparing a report for the consumers' league on the hours of working women in the shops and stores. I understand that report was made the basis of legislation subsequently enacted by the Massachusetts Legislature.

Chairman WALSH. To whom was the report made?

Mr. KING. To the consumers' league. I was engaged by the consumers' league to make that report. I spent that summer gathering data on that subject. The report is in existence. As I say, I do not think it is an elaborate study, but I was led to believe at the time that it was of some service.

You asked me again as to American labor direct. One year I was appointed chairman of a commission to inquire into the conditions of operatives in the cotton mills.

Chairman WALSH. By whom?

Mr. KING. By the Canadian Government. During that time I visited the cotton mills in New England and studied conditions there.

Chairman WALSH. How did you find them?

Mr. KING. My report will speak for itself.

Chairman WALSH. Could you epitomize it in a broad general way?

Mr. KING. No; I could not epitomize it.

Chairman WALSH. All right; go ahead.

Mr. KING. That report that I presented to the Government of Canada was made the basis—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Is that referred to and set out in your statement?

Mr. KING. I think it is. It ought to be, if it is not. [After examining document.] Yes; it is. The result of that report was to bring about a reduction in the hours of labor of children employed in the factories in the Province of Quebec. I have been informed—I can not say whether rightly or wrongly—that the legislation of Canada in that particular has been of some service to operatives in the cotton mills in this country. That may fall within the indirect category that you speak of, but I did some of the work in connection with it in this country.

Then, as you know, we have had, in common with the people of this country, the problem of dealing with oriental labor. I was chairman of a royal commission that inquired into the conditions, or the circumstances, rather, which induced labor to come to this continent from Japan, China, and India. I was sent by the Government of Canada to India to negotiate with the Government of India an agreement which would help to put a stop to migration of Indian labor to this continent. I think the result of what was done at that time—I think the agreement made then is working out very satisfactorily. I think the migrations from India have been practically stopped so far as any have been made to Canada. Canada being a part of the British Empire, the problem was a little more delicate than the problem of legislating direct in this country would have been. Inasmuch as I think on the coast they will tell you that Chinese and Japanese and Indians try to work their way down into this country through the Dominion, if it has been possible for the Canadian Government to stop this oriental labor-coming to Canada as a part of this continent, a service has been rendered to American labor in that particular in a very direct way.

Chairman WALSH. Did you do some of the work on that in the United States, or was that under your appointment by the Canadian Government?

Mr. KING. Yes; I must thank you for reminding me of that, Mr. Chairman. I went down to California and discussed that matter with several persons there, because the problem was the same, and I do not think I violate any confidence if I say that I was invited by Mr. Roosevelt to come to Washington and confer with him in regard to that subject, and that I took up at his request certain matters pertaining to oriental immigration for this country with the British Government. More than that I am not at liberty to say just now, but I think I rendered American labor a big service in that connection.

Chairman WALSH. What was the date of that?

Mr. KING. That is not in this record, because up to a certain point I have regarded that matter as a confidential matter; but Mr. Roosevelt himself referred to it publicly in New York after the last Canadian election. He made some reference to my own position in Parliament there, and he spoke along the lines I have just mentioned in speaking of this matter, so I do not think I am betraying any confidence.

Chairman WALSH. What is the date of it?

Mr. KING. I see another matter here to which I must refer, too. That was in 1908, Mr. Chairman. It was the same year I went to England to confer with the British Government in regard to immigration from India. I notice here a reference to the opium commission that met at Shanghai in China.

Chairman WALSH. You say you would not like to go into the details of that matter with President Roosevelt any further?

Mr. KING. I will be very glad for Mr. Roosevelt to make his statement, of course.

Chairman WALSH. I thought you said he had made some statement to the public that you felt rather unsealed your lips in the matter?

Mr. KING. He has given a statement which is ampler than the one I have just made, because I have the interview myself. I saw it in the paper after it was brought to my attention.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you if that was at the time that a general order was made with reference to the getting of Asiatics into the country—

Mr. KING. Or keeping them out?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; keeping them out.

Mr. KING. That is more like it—keeping them out. It was at that time, I think. It was in 1908. You can fix it by that year.

Chairman WALSH. 1908?

Mr. KING. Yes; 1908. When I was inquiring in British Columbia into the conditions under which Japanese, Chinese, and Hindus and others had come to our country, with a view to helping to direct legislation to prevent their competition with Canadian labor and bringing down the standards of labor there, I found that the Chinese—that is another feature I should remember—there were riots in the country, and the Chinese and Japanese quarters were pretty well torn to pieces in sections. The Government appointed me commissioner to assess the losses that had taken place and to pay the Chinese and the Japanese for the damages which had been done. I had sole charge of that, and assessed the losses and made such payments as I thought proper. Then I took up the larger subject of the immigration to this continent and followed it subsequently by a visit to the Orient. While I was investigating this matter the Chinese put in a claim for loss to the opium traffic. This came somewhat as a surprise. I said, "Surely, you have not the right to produce opium here. How do you expect the Government of this country to compensate you for loss in it?"

Chairman WALSH. That is, the Canadian Government?

Mr. KING. Yes. You will see the bearing of my question in a minute. They said there was no law against it, and I found they were perfectly right; without waiting to be requested by the Government to investigate the matter I took up the subject myself. I made inquiry while I was there—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). In California?

Mr. KING. No; this was in Vancouver and Victoria. I found the opium produced there amounted to half a million dollars turned out each year. I got the evidence sufficient to base on act of Parliament upon it. I drafted an act to prevent the opium traffic completely in Canada and returned to Ottawa, and asked the prime minister if he would introduce it. There were only two or three days until the end of the session. He told me the time was short. I said I thought the opposition would not offer any opposition to a measure of that kind. I saw the leader of the opposition and got his guaranty that they would not, and they put that legislation through and it is on the statutes to-day. I have learned since that this country was interested in that same problem at the same time; that the legislation which was enacted in Canada was followed almost literally by the Government here.

I was asked by the British Government if I would represent Canada as one of the delegates to the opium commission that met at Shanghai, which I think was appointed by this country. Bishop Brent, I think, was chairman of that commission.

Chairman WALSH. Did you meet with the commission in Shanghai?

Mr. KING. I was a member of that commission.

Chairman WALSH. Did the commission meet in Shanghai?

Mr. KING. Yes; certainly.

Chairman WALSH. I want, if possible, to eliminate the details—

Mr. KING (interrupting). Yes; but I want—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Of how you went to the prime minister, and all that. What I want to get, if I can, is the particular thing, discarding the details as much as you possibly can, of what you did in this country, in the United States, in helping labor.

Mr. KING. I know, Mr. Walsh, you are anxious to discredit me as much as possible, and I am equally anxious to let my attitude—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). If you will answer my questions, Mr. King, without any explanations, and leave out your comment upon the way you think I am conducting my business, I will be obliged.

Mr. KING. I would just ask for myself the courtesy I have seen accorded to every witness here; I have seen men speak for half an hour on the stand without interruption from you, and I would like an opportunity to speak at least five minutes.

Chairman WALSH. I try to indicate when they ramble on too much into detail that I would like them to come back to the question.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. I guess I will have to do that with you and ask that you keep to the question.

Mr. KING. That is right.

Chairman WALSH. Nevertheless, if you think you should, you will be allowed to go on like the others; but I am required to attempt at least to keep this within the lines of the inquiry. And we understand each other I think perfectly, and that you think I am not conducting the matter properly.

Mr. KING. With just this further proviso, that I would like to register an objection at any point I think it is desirable to do so, where I think your attitude is unfair. I have been chairman in many commissions myself, and I know the rights a chairman has.

Chairman WALSH. You know that in a commission of this kind the power does not exist to punish for contempt?

Mr. KING. I do not think there is any question of contempt.

Chairman WALSH. Or any power to punish for refusal of a witness to answer a question?

Mr. KING. I do not know that there is not; I think there is. I think a chairman ought to take a judicial position and not that of a prosecutor.

Chairman WALSH. I know that is your point, and there is a contrariety of opinion upon that; a judicial position sometimes could be assumed that would cover up matters. Do you believe—oh, I won't go into an inquiry of that kind. Do you want to register that I am unfair along this particular line?

Mr. KING. No.

Chairman WALSH. Now, along the lines I have indicated to you, and not going into too much detail, please proceed and tell us what other work you have done to help labor in the United States of America; that is, eliminating, if you please, what has come directly from Canadian legislation, which it has been conceded, if it is beneficial to labor in Canada, would be beneficial to labor elsewhere.

Mr. KING. As I remember, the commission that met in Shanghai—Bishop Brent was the chairman; there were American and British delegates at different conferences we had there and some of us agreed in certain matters and others differed. I mean by that my sympathies in some of the cases lay with the American members of that commission in some particulars and not in regard to others. I saw certain features that had a bearing on this continent. Whenever I saw an opportunity of assisting what the American commissioners wanted done, and I thought it would be in the interest of this country to have it done, I threw my efforts in that way.

Chairman WALSH. In Shanghai, China?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Would you deem it unfair if I asked you to confine yourself, at least at this point, to the question asked, what you did in the United States of America?

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, your horizon and mine are different, and I think that is where we fall short. My point of view is that a man can render service in a very direct way to another country without residing in that country and doing the thing in that particular place. This was a commission appointed, I understand, at the instance of the United States of America; it was this country that established that commission in Shanghai, China.

Chairman WALSH. Well, conceding that, too—conceding that, would you be willing to answer my question regardless of the bearing it has on your record or anything else for that matter and just state what work you actually have done in the United States of America?

Mr. KING. That is a different question.

Chairman WALSH. That is the one I am trying to direct your attention to now.

Mr. KING. Yes; but you asked me what I had done for American labor, which is different from what I did in the United States of America.

Chairman WALSH. Very good. I told you that was conceded, what you did in Canada and other countries, Shanghai, China, or any other place, and that if it benefited labor there it would benefit labor every place. Now, with that concession, I am now asking you what else you have done actually in the United States of America like, for instance, what you are doing in Colorado or New York or any other part of this country?

Mr. KING. Do you think that will throw light on the subject of this commission?

Chairman WALSH. I do; otherwise I would not ask it.

Mr. KING. Well, would the appointment of a commission on industrial training and technical education, and which commission visited this country—would the finding of that commission have any bearing on conditions here?

Chairman WALSH. Did you visit this country with that commission?

Mr. KING. Actually come here with it?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. KING. No.

Chairman WALSH. Then it would not have a bearing on my question.

Mr. KING. On your question; I am willing to leave it, as I said.

Chairman WALSH. Can you indicate any other work that you have actually done in the United States of America?

Mr. KING. No other thing comes to my mind.

Chairman WALSH. All right.

Mr. KING. Well, a few years ago there was a strike which tied up the system of the Grand Trunk Railroad from Chicago to Portland. A part of that Grand Trunk System runs through Canada. Now, so that we can understand each other, if I helped in any way to bring about the termination of that strike, would you think I rendered any service to American labor?

Chairman WALSH. Indeed, I would; but I am not asking about that at this time. If, in anything you did in that strike, you came to America to do it, that is what I would like you to indicate at this time.

Mr. KING. Mr. Garretson, a member of this commission, representing labor, came to Canada.

Chairman WALSH. Did you come to this country?

Mr. KING. No; but I negotiated with Mr. Garretson.

Chairman WALSH. I am now asking about any case in which you actually worked in the United States of America; you did not actually come to the United States of America in that matter?

Mr. KING. No; that is quite true.

Chairman WALSH. Can you indicate any other work you did to help labor in the United States of America which required you to come to the United States yourself, other than what you have already indicated?

Mr. KING. Well, I think some years ago I attended a conference of officials of bureaus of statistics of America.

Chairman WALSH. Where was that?

Mr. KING. I think one was held in St. Louis and one in Boston.

Chairman WALSH. There were two of those?

Mr. KING. I am not sure there was not one here; I attended several. But at one of those conferences one matter considered was how the statistics of each country could be put together so that they would be of assistance to the other countries, and legislation by one country made of assistance to desired legislation in another country.

Chairman WALSH. So, in this instance, you were actually in the United States?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And dealt with conditions you thought would help labor in the United States as well as other places?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. You attended several of those?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How many were there?

Mr. KING. Three.

Chairman WALSH. Were those all appointments of the Canadian Government, or did they serve voluntarily or by some other authority?

Mr. KING. Well, I think it was on my own initiative; I was head of the department of labor in Canada, and as such I came.

Chairman WALSH. Did this conference come under the head of the department in Canada?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Was there any way in which you helped labor in the United States and came to the United States to do it?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Mr. Chairman, if it is allowable, in order that I may better appreciate the answers of the witness, may I ask the object of this line of questions?

Chairman WALSH. I would say I am not on the stand being examined, and I would not like to indicate in advance what the line is, or to be questioned at all by anyone.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I am on the stand; may I ask the question myself?

Chairman WALSH. No; you might not ask it either.

Mr. KING. All right.

Chairman WALSH. Proceed now.

Mr. KING. Well, there may be other things; if you had submitted this question to me in advance I would have tried to get the information a little more in detail; but I do not think I can give it more in detail at this time. I do not wish you to understand, however, that that is all.

Chairman WALSH. Now, going back to a former question. Do you believe—we were speaking of what might be called the organized trade-unions—do you believe that Government officials or other outsiders should give the organized trade-union movement legislation and other matters they think good for the organized trade-union movements regardless of the wishes of the organized trade-union movement?

Mr. KING. My feeling is that every man has to determine for himself whatever he thinks is right and proper to do, and I do not think that anyone is the keeper of another person's conscience, and each man has to decide for himself.

Chairman WALSH. For each group?

Mr. KING. Why, in the particular position each is in himself, his duty is to try and help men in other positions in life.

Chairman WALSH. Whether they want to be helped or not?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. As an expert, and after investigation of the bricklayers' union and printers' union, at the University of Chicago, did you approve, as an expert, of that form of organization?

Mr. KING. Do you mean by that, did I approve of trade-union organization? Chairman WALSH. No; did you approve the ones you made a particular study of, of the form of the organization of the bricklayers' union and the printers' union?

Mr. KING. The printers' union; that was put in the form of an article, and that article will speak for itself.

Chairman WALSH. How about the bricklayers' union; did you approve of that?

Mr. KING. I do not recall just at the moment what view I had of it. I think the inquiry I had on the subject of the bricklayers was more with some of the officials of the bricklayers' union with regard to the trade-union methods and trade-union organization.

Chairman WALSH. Did you write on the subject of bricklayers?

Mr. KING. No.

Chairman WALSH. Did you approve of their form of organization?

Mr. KING. I could not say whether I did or not.

Chairman WALSH. Would you be good enough to epitomize to this general extent with regard to the printers, although you say it is in documentary form; did you approve of their forming an organization after you studied it here?

Mr. KING. The article was written 20 years ago, and my impression is at the time I did. I see no reason why I should not approve of it since.

Chairman WALSH. You say when you went down to meet Mr. Rockefeller and Mr. Greene you went—as you understand it, as an expert on labor conditions?

Mr. KING. Well, I do not know that I would be justified in taking that amount of credit to myself, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. I thought you stated yesterday that you went there as an expert.

Mr. KING. If I did, I apologize, because probably I am not entitled to use that term. I had 8 or 10 or 12 years' experience in industrial problems, and used the word "expert" as it is commonly used; I presume I was asked because I had been dealing with industrial questions.

Chairman WALSH. I have heard this statement made before this commission many times, that they believed in industrial democracy, and they defined industrial democracy under the present wage system to be the absolute and inalienable rights of workers in industries to have a compelling voice in the fixing of their compensation and hours for their labor, and the conditions under which they were required to work, or under which they worked; you have heard that expression?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Do you believe in that?

Mr. KING. That represents the ideal that I should like to see achieved; certainly.

Chairman WALSH. Now, workers can not have a compelling voice in their wages unless they have some power to enforce their views upon their employers, can they?

Mr. KING. I think that is right; yes.

Chairman WALSH. Do you believe that an organization, for instance, in the industry of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., would be beneficial to enforce a compelling voice if the entire organization was inside of that industry?

Mr. KING. I think it would depend largely on the position taken by the directors of that company and the officers of the company.

Chairman WALSH. But how could they have a compelling voice, the workers themselves, if it depended on the directors and officers of the company? As I understand it, the compelling voice means they must be given the power to say their own conditions, and not take what the directors or managers might be willing to concede them.

Mr. KING. There are two parties to every industrial contract, and the strength of one party is estimated relatively on the basis of the strength of the other. I could imagine a very weak organization of labor, with employers who were desirous of doing what was fair and right, being in a very much stronger position in a matter of having a compelling voice than a strong organization with employers who were determined irrespective of what the consequences might be that they would not concede them what was right and proper and just.

Chairman WALSH. Well, if this is a matter of favor upon the part of the employers, a matter of the desire, no matter how commendable he treats the employer's right to grant him something, then you leave the idea of industrial democracy and go back to what might be called a beneficial autocracy?

Mr. KING. No; I think you have to take human nature as it is, and the fact that a man belongs to a trade-union doesn't make him a different man than he was before he joined it. The same is true of an employer of labor; because he employs labor and says a particular thing it doesn't follow that he is going to be any different than he was before he made the assertion. Back of all forms of organization lies character, and character is going to be the determining factor in the long run.

Chairman WALSH. It is going to depend upon the character of the men that operate the industry and the character of the men that are there, whether or not a democracy is established, or fair conditions?

Mr. KING. I could imagine that under the conditions of industrial democracy that you have described, and which I say I believe in, that men holding positions in that industrial democracy might become tyrants.

Chairman WALSH. That is, the worker might become a tyrant?

Mr. KING. Any man. I am not saying that workers might. I would like it distinctly understood as stated, men, when they are elevated to certain positions, or get a certain degree of authority, frequently become arbitrary in their conduct.

Chairman WALSH. Did you find any of them in the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. KING. Let me finish. And I feel that as respects any form of organization society may take, or that any institution may take, that as long as human nature is what it is those possibilities may arise, and knowing that I fall back again on what I said in the beginning—that in the last analysis the determining factor is character.

Chairman WALSH. Is not the determining factor whether or not the worker can establish the conditions? Whether or not they have the power to do it, financially and in number?

Mr. KING. I think that financial aid and numbers increase power, but if that power is in the hands of the men that are tyrannical by nature, and arbitrary, it will add so much more to tyranny and excess in their hands. If it is in the hands of men who are benevolent in their attitude toward life, and charitable in their relations, then it will be a blessing. It depends in the last analysis on the character of the men.

Chairman WALSH. Has your investigation extended to the extent in Colorado that you can say now whether there has been any of that arbitrary abuse of power which you mentioned by any of the officers or directors of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. KING. I will answer that question, but before I answer it I would like to say this: When I went to Colorado I went with a view of getting all of the light that I could on the situation.

Chairman WALSH. Might I ask, did you take into consideration the history of Colorado?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir; I have been trying to. But in order to get inside information, as thoroughly as I could, I assured everyone with whom I had an interview that I would regard the interview as confidential, that I would not disclose the names of the parties with whom I had the interviews or discuss the substance of what was given. I feel in the work that I am doing now, as a student of these problems, that the success of it will depend upon the degree to which I get actual, true, and unbiased information. And I feel that the extent to which I may succeed will depend upon the degree of confidence I can secure of men in all walks of life. So in regard to the Colorado situation, I feel that I owe it to the assurances I have given to the people in Colorado, that such information as I have on the subject at the present time I regard as confidential, and I hope you will see the reasonableness of that point of view.

Chairman WALSH. Will it ever be disclosed?

Mr. KING. I hope it will be disclosed in this way, if no other: During the last few years in Colorado some of the mining districts have been canyons of strife; I think that would describe the geography of the situation. I would like to see them changed into valleys of happy and contented homes, and if that result is achieved in the next five years, or any period, the next five months or five weeks, I would hope that some little part of it might be due to the work that I have been endeavoring to do and suggestions I have helped to make.

Chairman WALSH. But my question, when are these alleged facts that you are gathering going to be disclosed, if ever?

Mr. KING. I don't purpose making any findings on the Colorado situation.

Chairman WALSH. You don't purpose giving out any information on which you base your findings, on which you hope to get this happy solution?

Mr. KING. There are two ways of getting results; one is by antagonism, although I don't think this always brings the results, but it is sometimes attempted, and the other is by conciliation and believing in men. My method has been to believe in men.

Chairman WALSH. No matter what they do?

Mr. KING. "There is so much bad in the best of us, and so much good in the worst of us, that it hardly behooves any of us to talk about the rest of us." That is the expression of my relation to my fellow man, and I believe I can accomplish more by believing in men than disbelieving in them, whether they are agitators or capitalists or any class you like. As I said yesterday, one of the things that moved me to take up this work was that the foundation might be perfectly—

Chairman WALSH. Are you going to make your report to anybody; are you going to give anybody these facts that you are collecting, the result of these interviews?

Mr. KING. No, sir; I have not decided that, but if you mean am I going to give them to anybody connected with the foundation or Mr. Rockefeller I would say no.

Chairman WALSH. Are you going to give them to the Government?

Mr. KING. No.

Chairman WALSH. Are you going to give them to the organizations of workers?

Mr. KING. I will give them the results.

Chairman WALSH. But as far as the facts are concerned, your purpose is to keep them absolutely secret?

Mr. KING. No, sir; I would not be telling the truth to say that.

Chairman WALSH. Who are you going to tell them to?

Mr. KING. On that I shall use my own judgment.

Chairman WALSH. Who are you going to tell them to?

Mr. KING. I would like to have a chance to talk to you about it.

Chairman WALSH. Now is your chance.

Mr. KING. It is not the place.

Chairman WALSH. You mean you would like to talk to me privately about it?

Mr. KING. I should like to have a personal, intimate conversation with you about the conditions in Colorado.

Chairman WALSH. Can you think of anybody else that you would give this information to?

Mr. KING. When I was in Colorado, or rather before I went out, I was talking with Mr. Welborn, and he said he would be glad to receive any suggestions that I might make, would be glad to get suggestions respecting the conditions as I saw them.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I take it—

Mr. KING. What do you take?

Chairman WALSH. I was going to say that I take it in doing this work, as you stated, your general purpose was that you were doing it to help labor?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And you stated before you started out that you had this conversation with Messrs. Rockefeller and Greene, and the others connected with the institution for which you are doing the work, that you called upon the Department of Labor, the Secretary of Labor, and another that you mentioned?

Mr. KING. I guess the governor of Colorado, perhaps. Or was it an interview I gave to the press—Mr. Seth Low?

Chairman WALSH. And you were going right then into the Colorado field?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir; I was on my way to Colorado.

Chairman WALSH. And of course when you get these results you expect to get not only the history of Colorado, but the opinions and observations of the men that were engaged in the conflict?

Mr. KING. Oh, certainly.

Chairman WALSH. Did you call upon the secretary or president or treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America in Denver.

Mr. KING. I read yesterday a public statement I gave to the press in Colorado, which was published there.

Chairman WALSH. Did you call on them?

Mr. KING. In which I said I would welcome information from any source, and that I would keep myself open to see anyone who wished to see me. I called on no one in Colorado, but I saw a great many. I saw a great many persons representing all sides.

Chairman WALSH. Did you talk to the president or secretary or treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America in Denver?

Mr. KING. I have said already, Mr. Chairman, that I desired to have regarded as confidential the persons that I saw.

Chairman WALSH. Did you call upon the president, the secretary, or the treasurer of the State Federation of Labor of Colorado?

Mr. KING. I have already stated that I intend to regard as confidential the interviews that I had in Colorado. That is my position in regard to that. I refused to see no one in Colorado, and among the persons—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). I will just put this question directly to you, if it is not a fact that you went out there on this mission to examine into conditions in Colorado, and that you went to Mr. Welborn and officers of this company that were engaged in this conflict, and the testimony as to whose conduct you have heard detailed here and elsewhere and read about, and that you did not go near any officers of the United Mine Workers of America or any of the officers of the State Federation of Labor of Colorado?

Mr. KING. I will say that is a deliberate misrepresentation.

Chairman WALSH. I am not misrepresenting. I am asking if you did it.

Mr. KING. A mere insinuation is sufficient.

Chairman WALSH. Just answer the question, and you will clear up everything. Did you go to see any of those men on the labor side?

Mr. KING. I can not state that without betraying the general confidence referred to in the statement I have already made. If you ask me did I see labor men, did I see representatives of the United Mine Workers of America—I did; but I do not intend—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). I asked if you saw the president, the secretary, or the treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America, or the president, the secretary, or the treasurer of the State Federation of Labor of the State of Colorado?

Mr. KING. I remain just exactly where I put myself before.

Chairman WALSH. You refuse to answer that question?

Mr. KING. I refuse to disclose any of the interviews I had in Colorado; and let me make this perfectly plain, Mr. Chairman: I saw some of the persons you have mentioned—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Name them.

Mr. KING. No; I will not. I do not intend to disclose the names, and I do not intend to let the impression go abroad that I avoided seeing anyone, not for one minute. If the president and secretary and treasurer and those other men you speak of were interested in seeing me, they knew exactly where I was staying, and there was no one that was refused an interview who asked for it, and I was most anxious to see them and most solicitous. If there was any keeping away, they were the ones that kept away, and not me. I want to have it perfectly plain there was no avoiding seeing anyone.

Chairman WALSH. I want to have it perfectly plain, too.

Mr. KING. Let me state this, too: If the president or the secretary or the treasurer or any member of the United Mine Workers of America wishes to see me, I will make an appointment to see them. I will make an appointment to stay here all week in Washington, this week, if they wish it, and see every one of them here and discuss fully the matters with them. I have no desire to avoid seeing anyone.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. May I ask a question, Mr. Chairman?

Chairman WALSH. Pardon me; you will make me lose my thread. I will let you ask it in just a moment.

But you say now you did receive a call from the president or the secretary or the treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America or of the State Federation of Labor of Colorado—that some of them called on you?

Mr. KING. Is Mr. Doyle a member of one of those organizations?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. I saw him. I did not have a lengthy interview with him. The reason I did not continue my interview with him was that I got the subpoena from your sergeant at arms to come here, and I had to convey to him why I could not see him at the present time.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. May I ask a question now, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Pardon me; certainly.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did you not see the secretary and treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America and did you not also see the president of the United Mine Workers of America and have a long talk, lasting over an hour and a half—or the vice president?

Mr. KING. Mr. Hayes?

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Yes.

Mr. KING. I had a long talk with Mr. Hayes; yes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. That is what I meant.

Mr. KING. Two or three talks with Mr. Hayes. I had talks with Mr. Hayes and Mr. Lawson—two or three different gentlemen in New York.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. That is what I wanted to bring out.

Mr. KING. I do not wish to be put in the position of disclosing—you asked about calls. I did make two calls, and they were the only calls I made on anyone in Colorado. Both of these calls were on "Mother" Jones. I felt she was a woman, and it was my place to call on her, even if I was taking the position that I did not intend to make any calls on anyone. But "Mother" Jones had intimated to me in New York that she would be able to give me a good deal of information about conditions in Colorado, and I went to see her and ask her to give me the names of the people I should see in Colorado and the different camps I should visit, and places I should go to get such information as I could, because I wanted to get at the very bottom of conditions there. She will perhaps pardon my breaking the general confidence that I had given, but I want you to understand that I have had no desire other than to get right at the bottom of this whole situation.

Chairman WALSH. As suggested by Commissioner Harriman, you met Mr. Doyle and Mr. Hayes and some others at New York?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What I was asking about was when you went out to make your investigation in Colorado, and I think we got to the point where you asked if Mr. Doyle was one of those men.

Mr. KING. I say I saw Mr. Doyle.

Chairman WALSH. You say you saw him in Colorado?

Mr. KING. Yes; I did.

Chairman WALSH. I will read a telegram and ask you if you are not mistaken about that:

"LEWIS K. BROWN,

"Secretary U. S. Commission on Industrial Relations,

"Bellevue Hotel, Washington, D. C.:

"Wire relative to Mackenzie King consulting officers of United Mine Workers or State federation received. Mr. King did not call on or consult any of the officers of the United Mine Workers or the State Federation of Labor while he was in Colorado.

"E. L. DOYLE,

"Secretary United Mine Workers.

"W. T. HICKEY,

"Secretary State Federation of Labor."

Is Mr. Doyle mistaken about that?

Mr. KING. If you will wire Mr. Doyle and ask him if what I say now is not true, I shall abide by whatever he says. I met Mr. Doyle one afternoon when I was calling on "Mother" Jones. I talked with him in the same room in which I talked with "Mother" Jones. I engaged to see Mr. Doyle at a future time. My secretary, who is sitting in this room at the present time, was keeping account of the interviews I was to have, and when your communication came, or rather the communication from your sergeant at arms, obliging me to be present at this hearing, I had to shorten many of the interviews I was to have had in Colorado, and I was obliged to send word to some that I could not see them at that particular time—that I might have to defer until a later time a complete interview, for which I had already made engagement. Mr. Doyle was one of that number, and—I think I am right; my secretary can correct me if I am wrong—I asked him particularly to phone Mr. Doyle and let him know the reason that I had been called away. If you care to transmit that wire to Mr. Doyle and ask him if it is not true, I have enough faith in Mr. Doyle's integrity to believe he will wire you it is an absolute statement of fact.

Chairman WALSH. Generally speaking, did you find industrial unrest existing in America?

Mr. KING. Industrial unrest exists all over the world.

Chairman WALSH. Did you find it very bitter in Colorado?

Mr. KING. I prefer not to discuss the Colorado situation at all.

Chairman WALSH. Did you find, after you started in your work, a bitter protest on the part of the organized workers of this country against Mr. Rockefeller undertaking an investigation into the causes of industrial unrest?

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, if a man is to stop his work because certain men or any men protest against it, nothing will be accomplished in this world.

Chairman WALSH. I am just asking if it is a fact that you found a very bitter protest on the part of leaders of organized labor against Mr. Rockefeller assuming to conduct any inquiry into industrial unrest?

Mr. KING. If you will tell me who are the leaders, I will tell you whether I heard anything from their lips.

Chairman WALSH. I will read to you an article written by Samuel Gompers, as I understand it. Mr. Gompers is president—but, of course, you know who he is?

Mr. KING. I know Mr. Gompers very well.

Chairman WALSH. In his organization he has something over 2,000,000 workers allied with it, and it is a growing organization which has been built up. It represents absolutely the men that are allied with it, does it not—the American Federation of Labor?

Mr. KING. It is a representative organization; yes.

Chairman WALSH. Outside of that it has a large and influential circle that are not allied with it?

Mr. KING. I think the American Federation of Labor has a great many friends.

Chairman WALSH. I will read you this article:

"Was it a spirit of sardonic humor or failure to understand which moved John D. Rockefeller, Jr., to follow his imperious rejection to President Wilson's truce plan for the Colorado mining situation with the announcement that a commission of the Rockefeller Foundation (an institution financed by the Rockefeller millions) was to undertake an inquiry into general industrial relations between workmen and employers?

"Does Mr. Rockefeller really sense the fact that something is very wrong in the world of labor in which justice and real freedom are denied workers, or does he merely desire data to sustain the Standard Oil ideas of freedom and the economic theories he voiced before the House Committee on Mines?

"Have the American people forgotten that strange, sinister witness, his dogmatism, his absolute unyielding indifference to public sentiment, his cynical, ruthless disregard for the effects of his policies, his terrible concentration of purpose, his assumption of infallibility? This is the man who proposes to use his money to finance a world-wide quest for the truths of the causes of conflicts between 'labor and capital.' Note the abstract terms with the effect of isolating the problem from the human beings concerned. Furthermore, remember the old adage, 'He who pays the piper may call the tune.'

"This 'investigation' will be conducted by the Rockefeller Foundation. It will be remembered that this is the foundation that vainly sought a Federal charter, but was refused because Congress felt that its influence would be undemocratic and antisocial. 'In spirit and in method the investigation will be like that carried on by the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research.' That is to say, a new germ or a new form of life has been noted. Let there be an assemblage of the savants and the scientists to observe this new bug. Let them come armed with microscopes, laboratory outfits, to observe and study the reactions and the habits of this new bug. Let the phenomena be carefully noted, tabulated, compared, in order to formulate principles and rules and reduce to scientific formulae. Let the investigators be prepared to experiment. Vivisection promotes the interest of science—this new bug, the worker, may be improved by a few operations, or the removal of a few wants or aspirations. Let the investigators maintain the scientist's attitude of disinterested aloofness and they may be able to discover great possibilities for the miners of Colorado. Of course, the miners need do nothing but patiently submit to be 'investigated,' castigated, or dissected.

"If the efforts of this scientific inquiry could be turned upon the heart and the mind of John D. Rockefeller and infuse into them an understanding of the idea that if he and the other coal operators would only get off the backs of the miners and loose their strangle hold from their throats, the miners would normally and rationally work out their own welfare without outside assistance. Give the workers a chance and they will establish justice for themselves as independent, capable men should. Let them be men, not dependents. Let them conduct their own investigations if they want them.

"Mr. Rockefeller's investigation can do nothing more than produce a Standard Oil card-index system of the phenomena of industrial relations. The foundation can not accept Standard Oil money and leave out Rockefeller. Rockefeller dominates all agencies and activities with which he is associated. This fact is one of the reasons why the association between the Department of Agriculture and the Rockefeller Foundation roused public indignation. Recognition of this principle led the National Educational Association to declare for education unhampered by subsidization by private foundations to endowments. Within the recent past has come an additional verification in Dr. William H. Allen's explanation of his resignation from the New York City Bureau of Municipal Research, charging that the contributions from the Rockefeller foundations were stifling the bureau and substituting so-called 'scientific' research for municipal research.

"If Mr. Rockefeller would really do labor and all the Nation a favor, he would follow a suggestion recently made: 'The one thing that the world could gracefully accept from Mr. Rockefeller now would be the establishment of a great endowment of research and education to help other people to see in time how they can keep from being like him.'"

This appears in the American Federationist of November, 1914, and it is by Mr. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor. Do you believe that he voices the sentiment of the 2,000,000 workers and those that you say are within the sphere of his influence when he writes that editorial with regard to this inquiry into industrial unrest by the Rockefeller Foundation?

MR. KING. Mr. Chairman, I think I would rather not express any opinion in regard to the views expressed in that particular phraseology. I should be sorry if I thought the 2,000,000 that belong to the American Federation of Labor or are represented in it would denounce a man for taking the stand that you so strongly urged upon him when he was on the stand here. If I remember rightly, your last words to Mr. Rockefeller were that his great wealth brought with it great responsibility, and that he should for one seek to raise his voice to improve conditions.

CHAIRMAN WALSH. To the men that were working for him, I said—not for workers. What my suggestion for him to do was to take Mr. Welborn and these people, and if what was said about them was true, institute prosecutions. I did not ask him to do—

MR. KING (interrupting). I would say that a man with as great wealth as Mr. Rockefeller has should use it to improve conditions not only as far as his own employees are concerned, but for the benefit of his fellow men generally.

CHAIRMAN WALSH. Where should he begin?

MR. KING. Begin with his own industries. Mr. Rockefeller has done that very thing. That is the very thing he is seeking to do. He is trying to do it in all sincerity, and I humbly submit, Mr. Chairman, that no one who strives to destroy an effort of that kind, to frustrate it, is a true friend of labor, irrespective of who he may be.

CHAIRMAN WALSH. What do you think of these people who proclaim themselves friends of labor that are not laborers themselves?

MR. KING. I judge every man, Mr. Chairman, not by his words, not by his talk, not by his professions. For example, you are not a workingman, you are not a laborer, you are not tolling with your hands, but I do not question for one minute the sincerity of your desire to improve the conditions of labor.

CHAIRMAN WALSH. If you will ask me the question, you never heard me say I was a friend of labor, did you, or that I was engaged in the uplifting of the masses or of labor?

MR. KING. I think you have told me that that was your motive, yes, in a conversation we had together.

CHAIRMAN WALSH. That it was my motive to uplift labor?

MR. KING. That it was your desire to do something for labor; yes. I remember it most distinctly.

CHAIRMAN WALSH. I will not get in an argument with you about what was said in our conversation, but certainly if I ever said I was a friend of labor or that I was uplifting labor, I was certainly saying something that was—

MR. KING (interrupting). That was not true?

Chairman WALSH. That is opposed to the thought I have. You are referring to this work I am doing now?

Mr. KING. No; I am not referring to your life.

Chairman WALSH. This is just an investigation.

Mr. KING. I am referring to your life. I am not referring to this especially. I assume from your attitude in this investigation that you would never have accepted the chairmanship of this commission if you had not been a friend of labor. I think labor has had very, very much aid from men who were not in the ranks of labor itself. In fact, I think most of the unrest here to-day—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). I want to record here—

Mr. KING (interrupting). Let me answer this first.

Chairman WALSH. I want to record here that this conversation you had was in my office in New York, was it?

Mr. KING. It was a conversation we had together.

Chairman WALSH. I want to just record here that I have no recollection of having made any such statement at all.

Mr. KING. I would not have introduced it or mentioned it except you asked me what I thought your motive was.

Chairman WALSH. I was asking about the people. I never asked what my motive was.

Mr. KING. And I referred to you.

Chairman WALSH. I was asking about the people that proclaimed themselves as friends of labor.

Mr. KING. I referred to you as one belonging to that group. My feeling is this: That men, no matter what their position in life, who have opportunities for helping their fellow men, if they fail to take advantage of those opportunities to the best of their ability, are not the friends of labor, no matter who they may be. But any man who sincerely and honestly tries to do something to benefit industrial conditions, whether he is in the ranks of labor or not in the ranks of labor makes no difference at all, he is a friend of labor. You judge men by their acts and by their habits and not by their statements or clothing.

Chairman WALSH. Did you read the protests of the men directly engaged in the Colorado industries against Mr. Rockefeller assuming to conduct an investigation into the causes of industrial unrest and to suggest remedies?

Mr. KING. No; I did not.

Chairman WALSH. Did not you read the testimony of the witnesses who declared that he had better go to Colorado and attend to the demands of the people working in his own industry than to conduct any world-wide investigation generally into the industry?

Mr. KING. Yes; and the minute I act upon that myself and go to Colorado to do the very thing that those men say should be done then those same gentlemen turn around and say that there is some ulterior motive, something that is false and wrong about it. When I find a man who takes the position that no matter what another man does—whether an action of his is thus or diametrically the opposite—it is wrong, then I begin to lose confidence in the statements he makes, and I have to take with a grain of salt anything else said by that particular person.

Chairman WALSH. Do I understand you went to Colorado for the express purpose of doing something for the industry of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. with respect to these workers?

Mr. KING. I had that very much in mind.

Chairman WALSH. And you are going to make some report to Mr. Rockefeller or the officers of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. with respect to that particular situation in Colorado?

Mr. KING. I did not say I was going to make a report. I am certainly going to discuss with Mr. Rockefeller the conditions as I saw them in Colorado. I am certainly going to tell him very emphatically what I think of certain features of it, and so far as I can, as long as I am associated with Mr. Rockefeller in any capacity, my attitude toward him will be just what it is toward any other man. I shall try to influence him all I can toward doing what he can do and is willing to do to improve conditions in the industrial world.

Chairman WALSH. Please outline for this commission the policies which you consider should be put into effect in Colorado in the industry of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. KING. No, Mr. Chairman. I have said I do not desire to discuss the Colorado situation.

Chairman WALSH. Do you believe from your investigation in Colorado that a condition of industrial freedom existed in Colorado in 1913 prior to this strike?

Mr. KING. As to that I would say that the impression I gathered while I was in Colorado was that the people in that State were mostly desirous that bygones should be bygones and that men should work together constructively to build up Colorado rather than to perpetuate a memory of the strife that has been going on there. I should like for one to believe that to be the sentiment of the people of Colorado, and not in any way do I wish to antagonize that sentiment.

Chairman WALSH. That a class of people now expressed that in Colorado—

Mr. KING. I am speaking now of the sense of a community, as a man gathers it who has been in the community for a couple of months.

Chairman WALSH. In studying the history of Colorado, did you study the strike of 1903 and 1904 in the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.'s industry?

Mr. KING. I have a great deal of information on that subject.

Chairman WALSH. And you knew from the records there that the constitutional rights of a great number of miners were invaded, and were put into what were called bull pens and driven out of the State without process of law?

Mr. KING. I don't believe it would be possible to conceive a condition being worse than in Colorado in the past.

Chairman WALSH. Then do you believe that bygones should be left bygones when these men were thrown out on the prairie and nothing said about it, when a similar struggle arose 10 years thereafter, or do you believe that the conditions should be studied, the conditions of the men should be studied, the hearts of the men that controlled the situation should be studied and placed under the microscope, as it were, and studied better, and in that way get a peace that is based upon justice and an enduring one?

Mr. KING. That last phrase expresses my sentiment exactly.

Chairman WALSH. We must have the facts.

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Chairman WALSH. And the people must have the facts.

Mr. KING. Who do you mean by the people?

Chairman WALSH. Well, there are a great crowd of them here—the people of the United States.

Mr. KING. Yes, sir. Well, do you mean that everyone in the United States wants to know exactly?

Chairman WALSH. If it is possible to get it into everyone's mind.

Mr. KING. That otherwise it is impossible to remedy the situation?

Chairman WALSH. No, but they must know, in order to get behind it—the one most powerful public opinion that it is possible to get—so that these deplorable conditions will never occur again.

Mr. KING. I hope they will never occur again.

Chairman WALSH. Is that not the way to do it—to put it into the minds of the people—before the people?

Mr. KING. I do not know that that is the way to do it, and I don't know that you honestly think it is. The way to do it is to get hold of the forces controlling the situation, and if they are wrong, to remedy it.

Chairman WALSH. Is there any force in the American people—

Mr. KING. We are playing in words.

Chairman WALSH. No; I am not. Is there any force to control the Rockefeller interests in Colorado to do the right thing if they are not doing the right thing, except the ordinary people in America?

Mr. KING. If you are speaking of the immediate force and immediate influence, I think that the conscience of young Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., is more powerful on that, and will effect social justice in Colorado quicker than any other single force that you could bring to bear. I think he realizes there is a great work to do there, and he intends to have it done.

Chairman WALSH. You think that the will and conscience of Mr. Rockefeller in bringing proper conditions and enduring conditions in Colorado is more powerful than the will and conscience of all the balance of the people of the United States directed in that field?

Mr. KING. No, Mr. Chairman, I don't put it that way at all. I am speaking now of the particular question of the conditions in Colorado at the present time. You asked me what factors could do the most in Colorado.

Chairman WALSH. Pardon me; I didn't ask you that. I asked you if it was not necessary for all of the people of the country to get a knowledge of what was taking place and had taken place in 1903 and 1904 and in 1913, right down to the present time?

Mr. KING. I don't think if every man in the United States knew what took place in 1903 that that would be a factor to influence the present situation one way or the other if you had not along with it the will and intention on the part of the man that has great influence and power there.

Chairman WALSH. That is Mr. Rockefeller—

Mr. KING (continuing). To use his influence in that direction.

Chairman WALSH. That is Mr. Rockefeller?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. If the heart and will of the whole country was at work toward bringing decent and just conditions in Colorado—

Mr. KING. That is a different question.

Chairman WALSH. Well, put it yourself—put it any way you want to.

Mr. KING. I assume that the purpose of the commission is to get the truth, not to distort or pervert evidence that is given.

Chairman WALSH. Will you please answer my question? There is nothing that you can say that is going to irritate me.

Mr. KING. We are talking to-day to the American people, and it can not be made too plain that we are, and I don't intend to allow you to distort or pervert anything that I may say.

Chairman WALSH. And I don't care how insulting your attitude may be toward me; I am going to pursue the same course that I did in my examination of your employer, Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr. I am going to insist on your answers. You have given your opinion of me here, but I have not given my opinion of you.

Mr. KING. I have no doubt you will do it.

Chairman WALSH. Indeed, I will. But I would like to have you answer my questions without any further comment, if you will, with regard to how I am doing my work or personal characteristics. They have nothing to do with it. You started to explain the power that might come from Mr. Rockefeller as compared with the power that might come from the people.

Mr. KING. As a commissioner, on a work appointed by the Government, the way you put questions is entitled to consideration, and when you say to me that I am speaking as an employee of Mr. John D. Rockefeller, I say to you now you are not speaking the truth.

Chairman WALSH. I said I was going to treat you in the same way I treated Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr.

Mr. KING. He is not my employer.

Chairman WALSH. He is a director in the Rockefeller Foundation that employs you.

Mr. KING. You as chairman should be more careful in the way you state relations. If you want other people to be exact start that way yourself.

Chairman WALSH. I am going to treat you just the same as I treated Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., who is a director in the Rockefeller Foundation, he being one of the directors who controls the funds contributed by his father, John D. Rockefeller, sr., out of which you are being paid a compensation for whatever work you are doing.

Mr. KING. The Rockefeller Foundation is a trust foundation; the money in that foundation has been set apart beyond Mr. Rockefeller, jr.'s or Mr. Rockefeller, sr.'s, control. On the board of that foundation are men of the highest standing in this country, and it is a trust, and my relationship is to that trust, as a man who has been asked to do a particular work under it. There is nothing to be gained in the interest of the workers, or in the interest of anyone else, by seeking to convey impressions other than what are absolutely true or right.

Chairman WALSH. I agree with you in that. Now, if you will answer my question. I understood you to say—I will put it again—that if the hearts and wills of the entire population of America were concentrated upon the desire to establish just relationships in Colorado between the employees of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. and that corporation that the result thus desired could not be obtained unless it had the heart and will of Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., with it. Do I state that correctly?

Mr. KING. You want to know if it could be done without that?

Chairman WALSH. Is that your statement?

Mr. KING. No, sir; certainly, it was not.

Chairman WALSH. Then tell me what your statement was with respect to the necessity of having Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr.'s, will and conscience, with all the rest of the people, before proper results could be obtained?

Mr. KING. This is a practical world, Mr. Chairman, and we are trying to get practical results. If the heart and conscience and interest of every citizen of the United States could be directed to that Colorado situation, certainly there would be no need for any other force to be exerted. But it will be a long time, and you and I are going to pass off the scene before that time comes—

Chairman WALSH. Before what time comes?

Mr. KING. Before the heart and interest and conscience of every citizen is directed on Colorado, so that these questions that you ask I must feel it is a waste of time to discuss them, because we are discussing absurdities.

Chairman WALSH. Say a majority of the people, then.

Mr. KING. What my statement came to is this, if I wanted to improve conditions in Colorado to-morrow, and was looking for a force to do it, I would go after Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., and I would say if he would put his energy and time into that situation, and get men to put their time and energy into it, and let his support and purpose be known, that more will come about in Colorado than in a number of years spent in efforts trying to focus opinion on the conditions that took place in 1903.

Chairman WALSH. 1903 and 1904 and 1913 and 1914. That is your belief, that it could come from Mr. Rockefeller more readily than any other force?

Mr. KING. I think at the moment that he is a very strong factor. But mark you this, I would be entirely wrong if I assumed that he could do it, or go beyond his own company. In the company that he is interested in he can do a very great good. There are industrial conditions in Colorado outside of that company altogether, and what I would like to see, and expect to see, is the cooperation of public opinion and Mr. Rockefeller on conditions in Colorado—an example set by Mr. Rockefeller which will be so marked that every other concern will have to follow it. I don't think there is any antagonism of necessity between the two. I don't think it is helpful to industrial conditions to try to raise a gulf between them.

Chairman WALSH. I have two questions I want to ask you on that. You heard Mr. Bowers testify that they were powerful enough out there to make the companies quit cheating the miners?

Mr. KING. I don't know that he said that.

Chairman WALSH. He said that they made them quit.

Mr. KING. He said that the miners were cheated. I don't know that he said they were successful.

Chairman WALSH. We won't talk about that. Another suggestion was made—you heard Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., explain a statement made in a letter of Mr. Bowers to the effect that the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. fixed the prices and conditions for miners—that is, took the lead in fixing the prices and conditions of mining in Colorado, and that larger companies easily followed them. You heard that, did you?

Mr. KING. With this explanation, as I remember it, by Mr. Bowers, that he meant by fixing price, the prices of mining and wages paid for mining.

Chairman WALSH. But that was Mr. Rockefeller who testified to that, not Mr. Bowers. Mr. Rockefeller was testifying about Mr. Bowers's letter, and he said that that reference meant that they easily led.

Mr. KING. I don't remember that Mr. Bowers touched on that question.

Chairman WALSH. I say that he did not; that Mr. Rockefeller was the only one that testified about it here. That is a fact, is it, that they easily lead in fixing the prices?

Mr. KING. I can not tell you.

Chairman WALSH. And if they did, your last answer would not apply. If they can lead a larger one, they can bring about the results.

Mr. KING. I think their example would be very powerful.

Chairman WALSH. Now, as to the necessity of having something for Mr. Rockefeller in bringing about just conditions as distinguished possibly from what might be brought about by popular opinion, you are aware, of course, when a sufficient number of people in this country get of one mind, they can take over the mines and run them themselves?

Mr. KING. I don't see the necessity of drawing that distinction. Mr. Rockefeller is not desirous of opposing public opinion; I think he is distinctly anxious to fall in line with it.

Chairman WALSH. But you stated, as I understand it, the way this line of questioning began was, that you did not give accord to the proposition that these facts that you were developing ought to be laid out and given to the American people, all of them; all of the facts.

Mr. KING. Our discussion had reference to what could be accomplished within a certain time, practical men dealing with practical questions; nothing more than that.

Chairman WALSH. Do you consider that the miners in Colorado were justified in demanding a recognition of their national union?

Mr. KING. I have already said I don't care to discuss the merits of that strike one way or the other.

Chairman WALSH. You heard the testimony of Mr. Bowers to the effect that certain companies were cheating their miners in their weights. Would you consider that a just grievance on the part of the miners, and a justification for their demands that the mine owners treat with them collectively through their national union?

Mr. KING. You run it along a long way. I certainly would regard it a very strong grievance, and one that ought to be remedied immediately.

Chairman WALSH. Is it strong enough to demand recognition of their national union so they could force them to weigh the coal right, or if the company did not do it—

Mr. KING. I want this to be understood, I am not saying they would not be perfectly right in asking for it to be done through the organization, but to answer your question specifically, I would say, certainly; if they could not have that grievance adjusted in any other way, they would be more than justified.

Chairman WALSH. In seeking recognition by their national union?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And they would be the ones to pass on whether they were being cheated or not—that is, the miners?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And if they honestly and fairly thought they were being cheated, then they would be justified in demanding that the company should deal collectively with them through their national union?

Mr. KING. No, sir; that does not necessarily follow. They would be justified in going to the company and saying, we want this remedied at once, and if the companies did not accede to their demands, they would be justified in bringing all the pressure they could to bear on the company to have that done, and they would certainly be justified, if they thought it was necessary to go that far, in using not only the influence of their own national organization, but all of the force in the community to get the result.

Chairman WALSH. Do you consider that the national officers were justified in asking for an interview with the company officials?

Mr. KING. Certainly, I do.

Chairman WALSH. Do you consider that such an interview should properly have been granted?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Do you agree with Senator Patterson that that interview having been denied, although it should have been granted, then that the things that happened after that should be borne on the shoulders of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. KING. No, sir; I don't agree with him there.

Chairman WALSH. Do you agree with Mr. Bowers in this letter, that if that interview had been granted, that would have been the end of the strike? Do you believe that from the study you have made?

Mr. KING. I can not say that it would have, and I could not say that it would not.

Chairman WALSH. What is your opinion as a person that has studied these labor matters as an expert?

Mr. KING. I will express my opinion in this way; if there had been in the State of Colorado a law that would have compelled the employers to meet any group of men in regard to their grievances before the men were forced to take the initiative of throwing down their tools and going out on a strike, I believe the grievances under which those men were suffering at the time would have been more fully gone into and they would have been able to get a degree of redress which they have not been able to get, as the result of the strike, and the strike would not have been necessary.

Chairman WALSH. Have you read Mr. Bowers's letter to Mr. Heydt, secretary of Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., which Mr. Rockefeller testified he had read, with reference to conditions existing in southern Colorado in 1907, and prior thereto?

Mr. KING. No, sir; I have not read any letter from Mr. Bowers to Mr. Heydt.

Chairman WALSH. I believe you stated a part of your investigation included a study of the history of conditions leading up to 1913?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And going back to 1904?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Well, this letter is as follows [reading]:

MAY 13, 1913.

DEAR MR. HEYDT: Yours of the 10th, inclosing a letter of Mr. Frank S. Hoag, of the Pueblo Star-Journal, is at hand.

While I know nothing about the paper referred to as a business proposition, I think it would be undesirable for the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. to have Mr. Rockefeller interested in a newspaper at this time, in a financial or any other way.

The Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. for many years were accused of being the political dictator of southern Colorado, and in fact were a mighty power in the entire State. When I came here it was said that the C. F. & I. Co. voted every man and woman in their employ without any regard to their being naturalized or not; and even their mules, it used to be remarked, were registered if they were fortunate enough to possess names. Anyhow, a political department was maintained at a heavy expense. I had before me the contributions of the C. F. & I. Co. for the campaign of 1904, amounting to $80,650, paid out personally by President Hearne. All the vouchers and checks I have examined personally, all of which were payable to Albert A. Miller, upon which he drew the currency and, it is said, handed the money over to Mr. Hearne, who paid it out. So far as I can discover, not one particle of good was accomplished for the company; but Mr. Hearne was an aspirant for the position of United States Senator and devoted a vast amount of time and money with this end in view, I have no doubt.

The company became notorious in many sections for their support of the liquor interests. They established saloons everywhere they possibly could. This department was managed by one John Kebler, a brother of the one-time president of the company, who died about the time I came here, a victim of his own intemperate habits. A sheriff elected by the votes of the C. F. & I. Co. employees, and who has been kept in office a great many years, established himself or became a partner in 16 liquor stores in our coal mines. To clean up the saloons and with them the gambling hells and houses of prostitution, has been one of the things that Mr. Welborn and I have devoted an enormous amount of time to during the past five years. The decent newspapers everlastingly lampooned the C. F. & I. Co. at every election, and I am forced to say the company merited, from a moral standpoint, every shot that was fired into their camp.

Since I came here not a nickel has been paid to any politician or political party. We have fought the saloons with all the power we possess. We have forbidden any politician from going into our camps, and every subordinate official connected with the company has been forbidden to influence our men to vote for any particular candidate. We have not lobbied in the legislature, but have gone directly to the governor and other able men and have demanded fair treatment.

We have secured the past winter a mining law almost entirely written by our own superintendent, E. H. Weitzel, with four other men appointed by the Senate committee, including representatives of labor, a capable engineer, and two representatives of the operators. It is just and fair to all concerned and meets every requirement of the labor organizations, excepting that there are no special privileges granted to labor unions.

We have now reached the point where we have the respect of the prominent men as well as the common laborers of Colorado, because of our fair treatment and continual efforts to improve the conditions of mining. Even the old-time bitter political enemies of the company now say they have not one word of criticism to offer against the company from a political standpoint. The newspapers, for the most part, are courteous, and it is not often we see an article upbraiding our company or its employees.

If you should become financially interested in the newspaper referred to, the C. F. & I. Co. would be immediately accused by the other newspapers of Pueblo and of the southern counties of the State as having taken a new tack in the control of politics, and we would be upbraided just the same as if we were backing the paper, because it is well known that the Rockefeller interests are managing the affairs of the C. F. & I. Co. Therefore, I think it would be a very serious matter to the company if you should take any interest in Mr. Hong's enterprise.

I think I have never written a letter along this line, and I am doing so now for your files.

Yours, very truly,

L. M. BOWERS.

Now, assuming that that was all true at the time Mr. Bowers came there in 1907—this was written May 13, 1913—now, assuming that all that is true and following it up by the further assumption that the sheriff elected by the votes of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.'s employees was still the sheriff at the time this letter was written and at the time the strike of the men was had; assume that 90 men consecutively had been killed, many of them by the alleged negligence of the company; that this sheriff selected the coroner's jury; and that even dead men were found to be at fault themselves; assume that in that county for 23 years there had been no verdict against the company in personal-injury cases or for the death of an employee by negligence; assuming that when men had their limbs crushed so that they lost legs or arms or lost their lives that the amounts paid in settlement by the company ranged between $100 and $900, the highest being $900, and perhaps but $100 or $200 to some, that they averaged about $300 for lives and limbs; assume that there was still a connection between the company and this sheriff through the liquor business right down to this time in this wise; that he sold liquor to the liquor dealers that were at the company's camps; that the companies either adopted a method of this kind, that they charged a rental based on a per capita of the employees for liquor privileges; that was the Victor-American Fuel Co. and not the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., but the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. was connected with it to the extent that they charged large sums for rental of their buildings; assume also—and for the purpose of this question I will leave the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. out—that some of the companies made it a practice to cheat their men on weights. Now, after hearing this letter and hearing the assumptions that have been made—and I have tried to take the uncontradicted ones—would you say the miners were justified in using every lawful means at that time to free themselves from such conditions?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know now from your investigation and from your research whether or not they had any organization to look to that could give them the moral and financial support that the United Mine Workers of America could give them?

Mr. KING. Well, I would rather not discuss the Colorado situation, Mr. Chairman, but I do not want to evade your question. I think they could have received more financial support from the United Mine Workers of America than anything they had within themselves; certainly.

Chairman WALSH. And was it not, therefore, a sensible and just demand that these men should want to relieve themselves of these conditions by dealing with the United Mine Workers of America?

Mr. KING. I think they were fully justified in presenting the demand on any grounds they cared to present it on, and I should think they would be justified in presenting the point of view you have just given.

Chairman WALSH. Have you read the report of the United States Commissioner of Labor, Mr. Carroll D. Wright, in regard to the deportation of men during the Colorado strike of 1904?

Mr. KING. I have not read it yet, but I have it noted among the documents I intend to read.

Chairman WALSH. I believe you stated you had information generally of what took place in that strike of 1904?

Mr. KING. I have some information.

Chairman WALSH. Do you consider that those men who were driven from the State were justified in taking up arms to resist such an invasion of their constitutional rights?

Mr. KING. I do not believe that usurpation of rights should be tolerated for one moment, no matter who is responsible for it. I feel pretty strongly that the best way to prevent a recurrence is not always to resort to unlawful acts—to resort to what might be construed as unlawful acts. I do not like the idea of trying to take the law into one's own hands, so to speak, although there may be times when it is pretty difficult to keep from doing it. I would not for a second, however, justify deportation.

Chairman WALSH. When those men were being deported violently and without regard for the constitution and without regard for their rights as citizens and without regard to their property rights, illegally; in other words, would you consider they were justified in taking up arms to resist that violence?

Mr. KING. I would have gone about it, I think, in a different way if I had been their adviser in the matter, or if it was in my own case I would not have tried to resist with arms; I do not think I would have shouldered a musket in that way.

Chairman WALSH. What would you have done?

Mr. KING. I would have brought up the matter in every public assembly in the United States, and I would have sought to bring to bear this public opinion you speak of on a condition that was wholly wrong.

Chairman WALSH. If you were one of the men?

Mr. KING. If I had been one interested in that particular situation—toward improving it—

Chairman WALSH. If you were one of the miners and a man came to you armed with a club and just undertook to drive you across the lines.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. To another State line.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And you were weak and you were not fed on the way?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And you were struck with a club on the way over.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. That you were driven on over, and when you got to the place he was willing to let you go then you would begin agitation in all public assemblages rather than resist the man with a club?

Mr. KING. I would want everyone to know of the injustice in order to help arouse the resentment of the people against the injustice.

Chairman WALSH. If you were only one man under those circumstances, what would you do if you were a laborer? This was in Utah, but they did not drive them all the way?

Mr. KING. I would hide my time and try to prevent further injustice in the future. If I was weak, I would not try to fight back with a club.

Chairman WALSH. If you were not weak, but strong muscled and had access to arms, and if the constitution of the State allowed you to bear arms, would you fight back or let them drive you that way and then depend on an agitation afterwards?

Mr. KING. I think, if I were the type of man you describe now, I would test the strength of my muscles.

Chairman WALSH. And your weapons, if you had weapons?

Mr. KING. And the law of the State allowed me to carry them, I would be sorely tempted to do it.

Chairman WALSH. You would do it, would you not?

Mr. KING. I will not say that, but I might do it. Looking at the question particularly as to what would be most in the interests of ultimate justice, I would say I would be much wiser if, for the moment, I could bear with the condition and then make an effort to make the whole condition known, so that a recurrence of it would be impossible for myself or other men.

Chairman WALSH. You knew, did you not, that Mr. Bowers was in favor of driving agitators out of the State?

Mr. KING. I did not know that thing.

Chairman WALSH. You read his letter here?

Mr. KING. I heard what you read here.

Chairman WALSH. "We hope to be able to drive these agitators from the State."

Mr. KING. I guess that would express his idea.

Chairman WALSH. What would be your opinion of the method you would pursue, after you got loose from this man that drove you from Utah, if you came back and started this agitation and would not allow it and drove you out again?

Mr. KING. I would come back again.

Chairman WALSH. You would keep on coming back?

Mr. KING. I certainly would.

Chairman WALSH. Upon whom do you consider that the responsibility for labor conditions in any given industry, under our present system, must rest in the final analysis?

Mr. KING. Well, there are a great many points that would have to be considered there. For example, industrial conditions are dependent in part upon geographical conditions; they are dependent in part upon social conditions; and they are dependent in part upon the stage of industrial development. They are also dependent upon the amount of capital available for investment, and the men controlling that capital, and what they are prepared to do with it. I do not think one could definitely lay down one single circumstance that could account for the responsibility in toto; it is a distributed responsibility, I think.

Chairman WALSH. Who was responsible for the conditions in Colorado?

Mr. KING. I could not and would not attempt to fix the responsibility. The conditions in Colorado, Mr. Chairman, in my mind—in attempting to fix the responsibility a great many things must be considered. The whole question of the way in which government has been carried on; the different features pertaining to the administration of justice; the matters that relate to legislation; all of these factors; these circumstances are factors that help to account for the present responsibility. I think you can not to-day say that any one particular person or group are responsible for conditions; the whole community, to some extent, must share that responsibility. If there had been an appreciation of citizenship on the part of all of the citizens of Colorado, this trouble could not have assumed the proportion it did. And in fixing responsibility you have to take the past into consideration. Just here, in answer to a question, when I said I could not imagine conditions worse than in Colorado, I meant the early conditions and not as they are to-day, and I wish the reporter to make a note of that.

Chairman WALSH. Mention the time specifically you mean.

Mr. KING. We were speaking of conditions of 1913, in the early part, and I am speaking of the opinions I formed from the early conditions in Colorado.

Chairman WALSH. You did not mean the conditions leading up to the strike in 1912 and 1913?

Mr. KING. No.

Chairman WALSH. What about those conditions; were those bad?

Mr. KING. I think in many particulars they were.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask the specific question: Outside of the question of the invasion of the constitutional rights of the workers—that is, their deportation—weren't conditions worse in the last strike than in the strike of 1904?

Mr. KING. I do not know enough of the strike of 1904 to make comparisons; I could not speak with knowledge.

Chairman WALSH. Whom, in your opinion, was responsible for the condition of affairs in the industry of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. leading up to the strike?

Mr. KING. Well, I do not know that I would fix the responsibility on any one person. There are a great many circumstances that account for conditions in the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. being what they are.

Chairman WALSH. You said yesterday that in drafting the original plan for the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. you were limited in certain respects through the attitude of the Colorado officials. What were the limitations?

Mr. KING. I was limited in regard to the situation in this way; the position was this. The strike was actually on at the time, and the question, as it was stated to me, was a question of the recognition of the union. It was assumed at the time I had this interview that that strike might run on for a number of years; it was not thought the strike was going to end immediately, and the question put up to me was, How can men working in an industry at the present time and feeling that they had not proper representation get that representation in the light of circumstances as they are at the present time in Colorado? In other words, Mr. Rockefeller—and I think the statement he has given the commission will show it—was trying method after method to make suggestions to the officials out in Colorado that would tend to improve the conditions out there, and they said, "Wait until the strike is over and we will take this up," and Mr. Rockefeller did not intend to wait until the strike was over.

Chairman WALSH. That was stated in correspondence?

Mr. KING. I think it was the general tenor of the correspondence.

Chairman WALSH. Produced before this commission?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. They said to wait until after the strike?

Mr. KING. I gather their answer was to wait until this strike was over.

Now, the limitations that I had to consider were these limitations, both in the length of time the strike was running, and that this was a plan to be put in operation notwithstanding the strike was on, and the operators had taken a definite stand toward the question of recognition.

Chairman WALSH. If you had been free of such limitations what recommendations would you have made?

Mr. KING. I can not say at the moment, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. In your testimony yesterday, you referred to a paragraph in your letter of August 6, 1914, which you stated had been incorrectly reported; which paragraph was that?

Mr. KING. Which was that?

Chairman WALSH. The letter of August 6, 1914.

Mr. KING. It was the general use that was made of that letter.

Chairman WALSH. Have you the letter here?

Mr. KING. Yes; here it is. [Witness hands letter in question to Chairman Walsh.]

Chairman WALSH. If I got your answer correctly, it was that a paragraph in that letter had been incorrectly quoted?

Mr. KING. It was not merely that letter, Mr. Chairman, but it was the examination wherever it touched myself in particular I had reference to.

Chairman WALSH. But you referred yesterday to the testimony of a witness respecting a certain paragraph in your letter as having been incorrectly interpreted. Which paragraph was that?

Mr. KING. Did I confine it to the letter?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. Because, if I did, I should have made it broader than that and should have stated that the testimony with reference, for example, to the legislation that I had introduced and the nature of it and the service I had rendered to labor through that legislation—that is part of the thing I had in mind.

Chairman WALSH. Have you a copy of the letter there?

Mr. KING. Yes; I have it here.

Chairman WALSH. Is this the paragraph you referred to upon yesterday:

"It may be, however, that organized labor in the United States will realize the opportunities and handicaps likely to come to certain industries through the changed conditions of Europe, and will be prepared to cease hostilities where industrial strife at present exists, in order that on the one hand labor may reap with capital a fuller measure of the harvest or, in industries that may be differently affected, protect itself against consequences that are certain to arise. I fear that the view likely to be taken by some of the leaders may, at the outset, be the shortsighted one of endeavoring to persuade their followers that the opportunities which may come to American capital through the crippled conditions of industries elsewhere will induce a recognition which under less favorable circumstances might not be granted. This is almost certain to be the immediate effect, and I think you are wise, therefore, in dismissing altogether from your mind the possibility of the United Mine Workers calling off the present strike, even if under any circumstances short of recognition they would likely so to do. It will not be very long, however, before the inevitable effects of the European war on American labor conditions are certain to make themselves felt, both because of the scarcity of capital available for investment, and the crippled condition of industry on the other side, and once this becomes apparent, the unions will have to revise considerably some of their present policies.

"Having regard to the more cordial relations between labor and capital which, it is hoped, the foundation may be able to effect, it would be fortunate, indeed, if you could, out of the changed conditions which this European war is certain to produce, find a means of restoring industrial peace in the United States in industries such as coal and fuel where there is a certainty of a direct bearing. It may be that among those who are embarrassing the situation in Colorado, there are many foreigners who may feel compelled to return to Europe, and that may prove an immediate factor of importance. Looking at the ultimate, rather than the immediate effect, there is, speaking generally, going to be a large amount of unemployment as a consequence of this war, and, once the war is over, thousands of men and their families in the Old World are going to seek future employment in the New World. In certain industries it is going to be easy for employers to find all the labor they desire, and unions will be confronted with a new problem. Recognition simply for the sake of recognition, is going to be seen to be less pressing as an immediate end, than that of maintaining standards already existing, and unions may rightly come to regard as their friends and allies companies and corporations large enough and fair enough to desire to maintain these standards of their own accord. For the unions to take a different view will certainly mean to lose the substance of fair conditions while wasting resources in fighting for the shadow of recognition. Here, it seems to me, lies a possible avenue of approach toward restoring normal conditions in Colorado."

What did you mean by "the shadow of recognition"?

MR. KING. I am greatly obliged to you for reading the entire paragraph. If these paragraphs had been read in that way in New York, I would not have had a word of exception to take to the use that was made of this letter.

Chairman WALSH. Is it one of the paragraphs which you said was misinterpreted?

MR. KING. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Which one?

MR. KING. It is not the particular paragraph; it is the use that was made of a certain construction which was put upon certain sentences.

Chairman WALSH. By witnesses in New York?

MR. KING. To be perfectly frank, by yourself.

Chairman WALSH. By the way I read that to the witness in New York?

MR. KING. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Then it was not the witness, but it was the part of the letter that I read to the witness.

MR. KING. I think, perhaps, I unduly condemned the witness.

Chairman WALSH. Then read me the part of the letter I read there.

MR. KING. Let me explain. If you will look over the questions that were asked at that time you will see that an effort was made to have it appear that I had been trying to show Mr. Rockefeller how he could defeat labor unions and such like. This letter is a reply to a letter from Mr. Rockefeller to me, in which letter Mr. Rockefeller said—

Chairman WALSH. Have you that letter there?

MR. KING. No; I haven't it.

Chairman WALSH. Has it been introduced in our record?

MR. KING. I think so; yes. In that letter Mr. Rockefeller said he thought the strike would run on indefinitely—that is as I remember it—he said there are only two ways in which it will appear that industrial peace will be restored in Colorado. One is giving up the strike for recognition by the United Mine Workers of America; the other is by the establishment of some machinery which will secure ready means of redress of grievances within the company itself. I was replying to that.

The first statement he made about the strike probably running on a long time I thought was right. I did not think the United Mine Workers of America would call off the strike for recognition as soon as they did. I do not believe they would have called it off if they had not been restricted in their finances.

I have a very strong feeling—I may be wrong in this—that labor makes a mistake sometimes in these long strikes for union recognition. There had been at that time a strike pending in northern Colorado for some four years for recognition. I think, if emphasis were laid upon conditions and injustice that labor is trying to remedy, rather than upon that abstract term "union recognition," the unions would receive more support, and understanding support, from the general public than they sometimes do. I think to carry on a fight for four or five years simply on the question of recognition, and leave the actual conditions out of account altogether, is losing the substance while you are chasing the shadow. What I mean to say is this: Unions need every cent they can get for the work they are trying to do. For laboring men out in the West to be using up their resources in fighting for recognition—the United Mine Workers have had within the last two years several strikes on the question of recognition, which have cost them a good deal in the way of finances. When this war came on in Europe, by the way, that is a circumstance that accounts for that reference—the war had just started a day or two before and I had it in mind in speaking of this. My feeling was that for the unions to go ahead and use their funds to fight for recognition in Colorado, or anywhere else, was simply a throwing away of the thing they needed to back them in the kind of a situation with which they will be face to face when this war is over. Labor will have a hard time in America, as elsewhere, between two things—between the competition of European labor and the competition of labor in the Orient. My feeling is that true unionism is not an end in itself; it is a means to an end. It is a means of obtaining and improving standards for the working classes.

I was expressing an opinion there as to in what way trade-unionism, in my opinion, could best carry out what was the real objective of its aim. My feeling is, and I think it is shared by some men of the United Mine Workers—in fact, I will go so far as to say that an officer, a very prominent officer, of the United Mine Workers told me himself—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Who was that?

Mr. KING. I will not disclose it, but I will state that he was a very prominent officer. He told me that he thought it was a great mistake to have this long fight for recognition; that they had made a mistake in carrying on that part of it. He was not saying he did not think they had a perfectly good cause, but I think he felt if they had concentrated on the grievances they had out there and said, "These are the things we want changed, and if you do not change them we will keep these men out until they are changed," instead of fighting on that one word "recognition," conditions and results might have been achieved sooner. That is what I mean by labor having to revise some of its politics. If labor is going to fight simply for recognition, it may be that while that fight goes on the capitalists will take their capital and invest it elsewhere. They may be chasing a shadow and losing the substance.

I am looking now—I may be wrong, and it is quite probable that a great many labor men will think I am wrong, and I will admit that their point of view is entitled to just as much consideration, I should think probably more consideration in speaking upon the matters that pertain to themselves; but when speaking of policy my feeling is, and I had that idea of Mr. Rockefeller's in my mind when I wrote this letter—he made it plain to me that he did not wish to be associated with an industry that had not high standards, and what I felt was, when this war came on, if Mr. Rockefeller can do what he has indicated to me it is his wish to do—raise the status and standards of labor that he has to do with—he is an ally of the labor-union cause, because he is helping to do the very thing the labor union stands for, namely, a means to a particular end; and I should hope the day will come, and I think it is here now in the minds of a great many workers, that any man who will help to improve the standard of labor, whether he does it in parliament by introducing an eight-hour law or whether as an employer by insisting upon certain conditions being maintained in his own industry, is a true ally of trade-unionism.

Chairman WALSH. You say there were several strikes brought on by the United Mine Workers of America merely for recognition. What were those strikes?

Mr. KING. I have not any exactly in mind.

Chairman WALSH. What States were they in?

Mr. KING. I have not any exactly in mind at the moment.

Chairman WALSH. What strikes were you referring to when you said they had had several strikes merely for union recognition?

Mr. KING. I have in mind particularly the strikes taking place in Canada in the last 8 or 10 years. They spent a great deal of time—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Name any of the United States of America.

Mr. KING. I did not have any in mind when I spoke at the moment. There were strikes in Nova Scotia and in British Columbia. They ran on for months and months and months, and what was the result? They were beaten every time. To my mind there is a wrong judgment in the man who brings on a strike and who can not pull it off successfully. I think strike leaders ought to be just in the position of generals in an army. If a general brings his whole forces into the arena and they are destroyed and swept out, the public will soon tell him his judgment was pretty poor. I think labor has probably a feeling of that same sort toward its leaders who precipitate them into long struggles which they can not successfully pull off. I do not say they are not right to go ahead and try to fight, but you have to judge everything by its results.

Chairman WALSH. Let us see about that. The statement has been made before this commission of a concrete case. First, the general statement was made that there was no big strike, no great strike in America that was wholly lost by the workmen, and a particular instance was given of the southwestern strike, the railroad strike. It distinctly and only involved the question primarily of the recognition of the union. They started an organization, the Knights of Labor, and they demanded of the presidents of certain railroads that they should meet with their committees and recognize their unions, they intending to put in unions and make certain demands. The question arose as to whether or not the president of one of the railroads would receive a committee. It is like they did out in Colorado. The president refused to receive the committee. A strike was called. A man named Martin Irons was at the head of it. It was called the Irons strike. It was accompanied with all the very worst details of a strike. Life was lost, property was destroyed, neighbors were set against each other, civil processes broken down. The forces of the State were threatened, and many injustices claimed to have come out of the situation. Afterwards the companies were active in prosecuting the workers that they claimed took part in the violence, the workers claiming that the ones that took part in the violence for the employers were allowed to go scot free—all those deplorable details.

After many weeks of struggle, after the companies were tied up, covering thousands of miles of territory, the men were required to give in—that is, the strike was lost. It had to be called off. As this witness says, at that time the pay, for the same hours, a switchman received was about $60 a month as against $120 now; that that ran all through that industry; that while Martin Irons, as you suggest here, was destroyed—they said he would not do—and he was blacklisted and compelled to go into other business; but while the leaders of that strike did suffer, just as you suggested they might suffer in losing a strike, nevertheless the president of that railroad or of any of the railroads involved in it have never since that time refused to meet a committee of any organization that wanted to call upon them in that southwestern district—that is, organizations such as that organization of labor.

In addition to that the hours of labor have been lessened in many instances. Mechanics in many instances earn three times what they did before that strike began. This man testified, with that backing, that there had been none of these great strikes lost.

Do you believe that when a strike is compelled to be called off for lack of funds, and the leaders are discredited, that the strike is lost?

Mr. KING. Not necessarily; no, certainly not.

Chairman WALSH. Is it not a fact further, and have not you found it, as an expert, further, as has been testified here, that even though the industry is not unionized itself that those that do deal collectively with the organization make the standard which the unorganized industries are compelled to follow?

Mr. KING. Your last statement I agree with very largely—that I think the standards would not be what they are to-day but for the part organized labor has played. But I do not agree with the point of view that was just stated, of anyone who says that no strike was ever lost. I think some strikes have been most deplorably lost and should never have taken place at all, and that no good has come of them, but great harm has come of them. I think the union movement has been impeded to a very large extent by many foolish strikes.

Chairman WALSH. Name the larger ones.

Mr. KING. I will name a large one, one that I have personal knowledge of. In 1903, I think it was, an organization was formed known as the United Brotherhood of Railway Employees—you spoke of a railway, and I will speak of a railway strike, too—on the Canadian Pacific Railway in Canada. This organization had its lodges from Vancouver to Montreal. It was an attempt to bring into the unions some labor not already organized. These men made demands on the Canadian Pacific Railway Co. for an increase in wages. There was a strike on the road. It was not successful. After that strike took place an effort was made to close up the coal mines on Vancouver Island so the company could not get coal to run its trains, because the company had overcome the men in the fight so far as the railway was concerned. I investigated these strikes myself, and what did I find? I found that the man who was the leader of that strike was in the pay of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Chairman WALSH. A corrupt man?

Mr. KING. Yes; I received—in fact, it was under royal commission, just as this is, and the commission had the power to compel the production of documents. We compelled the Canadian Pacific to produce documents in its possession. Among other things were a bundle of secret-service reports, and the secret-service man was the organizer of the United Brotherhood of Railway Employees. While that inquiry was going on, the men who had belonged to that union brought a charter into the court room. They exhibited it draped with crêpe, and they were asked "What is this crêpe for?" They replied "It is for the murder of Brother So-and-so." "Who was he murdered by?" "By the C. P. R." "How is that?" "The C. P. R. knows that he organized this brotherhood, and they have pursued him, and the man became so distracted that he was taken ill and had to go to the hospital. The brotherhood made some payments to his family while he was in the hospital, but he then died." The C. P. R. at the same time was paying him. These facts all came out. I myself showed this man's report to these very union men. I showed them in his own handwriting how he had been telling the Canadian Pacific Railroad the different things they were doing. When these men saw those reports they asked for transportation on the Canadian Pacific Railroad and went over that road, and they threw the charters—I am speaking metaphorically, of course—literally out of the windows. The union went to pieces.

There was a strike that was thoroughly corrupt and thoroughly bad and brought discredit on the unions and unionism. That strike was lost, and no good ever came of it.

There is an instance of where you may have a union, you may have union methods adopted, you may have the ideals of unionism in the first place, but if your men are corrupt you can not get any good out of it one way or the other; and the unions would be the very first—the unions that respect their own reputation—to denounce that kind of thing.

Chairman WALSH. Who was the president of the C. P. R. at the time?

Mr. KING. I don't know who was the president, but at that time——

Chairman WALSH. You said that the president bribed a man?

Mr. KING. I don't say that the president bribed a man.

Chairman WALSH. I thought you said he was in the pay of the president of the C. P. R.

Mr. KING. I don't say that he was.

Chairman WALSH. Who was the officer that bribed him?

Mr. KING. I don't say that an officer bribed him.

Chairman WALSH. What was done with the officer?

Mr. KING. I don't know who he was, but I do say that kind of a thing was contemptible.

Chairman WALSH. Was he put out of the organization by the railroad officials or did they retain him in his position after the Government discovered it?

Mr. KING. I don't know what was done with him.

Chairman WALSH. Was there any law in the Dominion of Canada at that time that could reach him under prosecution?

Mr. KING. I think that the law is broad enough to cover that.

Chairman WALSH. Was he prosecuted?

Mr. KING. I can not tell you what was done with him.

Chairman WALSH. The officer that brought on the whole strike, the labor leader that was bribed, and it was uncovered, and there was a law on the statute book plainly covering it, but still he was not prosecuted by the Government?

Mr. KING. The Government does not begin prosecutions.

Chairman WALSH. Did anybody prosecute him?

Mr. KING. I can not tell you.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have any official position at that time in Canada?

Mr. KING. I think I was deputy minister of the department of labor.

Chairman WALSH. Would the department of labor be the proper department to commence a prosecution against a man of that kind?

Mr. KING. I think it is the same there as the Department of Labor is here; the department does not interfere with the course of justice one way or the other.

Chairman WALSH. I have been asked to ask you a question that sounds very sensible to me, and I will ask it: Why, if you consider union recognition an unimportant abstract concession, was it so stubbornly refused by the Colorado coal operators?

Mr. KING. I don't say that union recognition is not a thing worth fighting for at times. I say it depends on the conditions. You have to consider each demand in the light of conditions as they are. A union may make a fight for recognition while there is a good chance of getting it, but it may take a very foolish course if it takes several years' fighting for recognition with no hope for it.

Chairman WALSH. At this point we will stand adjourned until 2 o'clock. (Thereupon, at 12.30 o'clock p. m., Tuesday, May 25, 1915, the commission took a recess until 2 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS—2 P. M.

Chairman WALSH. You may resume the stand, please, Mr. King.

Are you making memoranda, or keeping notes of the interviews you are having in Colorado?

Mr. KING. Does that affect the matters this commission is inquiring into, Mr. Chairman?

Chairman WALSH. I think so.

Mr. KING. In what way?

Chairman WALSH. I do not care to answer, and if you do not care to answer, say so. Are you keeping notes of the data you are getting in Colorado?

Mr. KING. I have no objection to making answer, but I do object to answering questions that have no bearing on the questions this commission is inquiring into.

Chairman WALSH. I will allow you to be the judge of that, and if you do not care to answer, you need not.

Mr. KING. I am making notes.

Chairman WALSH. Where do you keep them?

Mr. KING. I am not going any further in my answer.

Chairman WALSH. Think again, and maybe you will go further.

Mr. KING. No; I won't.

Chairman WALSH. Are they in charge of anyone else, or in your possession?

Mr. KING. That is my affair, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Are they kept in New York or Washington, or at your home?

Mr. KING. They are not kept either in New York, Colorado, or at my home at this moment.

Chairman WALSH. In Washington?

Mr. KING. I have nothing further to say.

Chairman WALSH. It is a State secret?

Mr. KING. Yes; a State secret.

Chairman WALSH. That is all.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. For my information, Mr. King, as well as for the information of the commission, I want to find out just how and where you stand in labor matters; do you stand with organized labor, right or wrong?

Mr. KING. Right or wrong?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes.

Mr. KING. Certainly not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you against organized labor, right or wrong?

Mr. KING. Certainly not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you with organized labor when it is right, and against it when it is wrong?

Mr. KING. I am with organized labor when it is right, yes. And I am against it when it is wrong. But, Mr. Weinstock, one would want to study very carefully—one would have to consider just what is meant by your question—some of the actions I might think were right others might think were wrong, and I would want to be the judge of what I thought was right.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Exactly; then I take it your answer would be that you were with organized labor when you believed it was right, and that you were against organized labor when you believed it was wrong.

Mr. KING. Yes. But understand this, too, that one may, in answering a question, unconsciously convey a wrong impression, and when I say I am with organized labor when it is right I mean to say that in studying the history of organized labor, organization has been one of the factors that has greatly helped to improve labor and the conditions of labor, and I believe in the right of labor to organize, and when organization of labor is carried on intelligently and fairly and with judgment, it is a very great service to labor.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, I would like to get your attitude also, for the information of the commission, on the matter of the closed shop. Are you for the closed shop, right or wrong?

Mr. KING. I am not for anything right or wrong.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you against the closed shop, right or wrong?

Mr. KING. I am not against anything right or wrong.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you for the closed shop when it is established under the proper conditions, and against it when it is established, in your opinion, under improper conditions?

Mr. KING. If you mean by the "closed shop" that no one shall have the right to be employed by another, I would say that each man ought to be the judge for himself as to whether he wishes to be a member of a group that will exclude other men, or a member of a group that will include others that think differently from themselves.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. My conception of the closed shop, and I think it is a common acceptance of the closed shop, is a shop where only union men are employed?

Mr. KING. I have had some employers tell me they preferred to deal only with union men, and I have had other employers tell me that they preferred to deal only with nonunion men, and I am sure the men who told me they preferred to deal with union men were as sincere as the others; and I think everything depends on the nature of the union and its status and the service it is capable of rendering, both to itself and the company it is doing business with.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, now, if a body of workers engaged in any particular industry should, of their own volition, organize and practically establish a monopoly of the business by having all of the workers in that industry in that organization, and did it simply by peaceable persuasive methods, could you find any fault with them for doing it?

Mr. KING. Certainly not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then, under those conditions, you would not object to what is called the closed shop?

Mr. KING. Following your statement that the means adopted would be perfectly legitimate and proper, and that the exercise of their individual liberty would not be interfered with, and would not interfere with the individual liberty of others.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I say whatever part of their liberties they would see fit to give up they would give up voluntarily under those conditions.

Mr. KING. Every man should have that privilege.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Would you favor the closed shop for the workers in that industry if it should be brought about by coercion and intimidation and violence to force other workers into the organization?

Mr. KING. I do not think that coercion or intimidation are instruments that are calculated to render permanent service to those who employ them, or do their cause any good.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then, do I interpret your position correctly when I say I understand your position to be that you are in favor of the closed shop where it can be done by persuasion and peaceable methods, and that you are against the closed shop when it can only be established by resort to intimidation, coercion, and violence?

Mr. KING. I am in favor of allowing men, if they desire to be members of a closed shop, to do so, provided that they are able to persuade their fellows that that is the best means of preserving a standard which they are anxious to maintain and can persuade their employers that that is also to the mutual interest of the parties.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The question was brought up in this morning's examination as to what you would do as a worker under certain conditions. The picture was drawn of your being a worker, for example, that was alone and helpless and that you were picked up by a group of men in the name of the law and deported and thrown out on a desert, and you gave your answer—

Mr. KING (interrupting). Excuse me, Mr. Weinstock, just before you give that case. I am conscious of how a phrase is sometimes used. I would not like anyone to assume that in listening to my evidence they would be justified in saying that Mr. King stated on the stand that he was in favor of the closed shop. What I have stated, I hope clearly, is that there are circumstances which would make me opposed to the closed shop, and there are circumstances which would make me feel it was perfectly legitimate and desirable, but I do not want to convey the impression to anyone that I am giving evidence for the closed shop or against it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Coming back to the point that I had later taken up, Mr. King; the conditions under which individuals, or collective resistance to authorities, would be warranted and justifiable; if you were a labor leader, what would you advise your followers, if you thought that their political right and their civil liberties were being denied; would you advise them to arm themselves and resist the constituted authorities, even though you knew the constituted authorities in your opinion were exceeding their authority?

Mr. KING. No; I should not; having reference to this country and this period of the history—of political development. You have got to take the element of time into consideration. There have been times in the history of this continent when I think revolution was absolutely justified both for political and industrial reasons, but I think we have worked through that stage, and I hope we have got to a point where men to-day do not need to resort to violence in order to be sure of having justice done their case.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You believe, then, that it is entirely possible in this country and under our political system for us to have revolutions overnight, but without a resort to violence?

Mr. KING. Well, I don't think "revolution" comes overnight, Mr. Weinstock.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Is it not a fact, Mr. King, that you have seen it time and again—

Mr. KING (interrupting). An explosion may come overnight.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes; seemingly overnight. You have seen one Government turned out overnight—

Mr. KING (interrupting). I am sorry to say I have; yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (continuing). And another different Government with different policies and different aims and different objectives taking its place on the following morning?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That that has been a complete revolution.

Mr. KING. I think "revolution" is the right word for it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And without resort to violence?

Mr. KING. Absolutely.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And done through legitimate channels and through the ballot and through education.

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Coming back to my question—

Mr. KING (interrupting). In regard to that "revolution" we are talking about of Governments, I have no reference to any Government in this country, but to the last election in Canada.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Does not the same thing apply here?

Mr. KING. No; I would not say anything about the Governments of this country.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I am not asking your opinion, but if you do not know it as a fact that revolutions have taken place in this country politically—

Mr. KING (interrupting). Well, there have been political revolutions; yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Isn't the last presidential election an illustration of that where the policy was completely changed?

Mr. KING. I don't think that "revolution" would be the right word to describe it. When I was commenting on the word a moment ago it was with reference—I thought you would understand the "revolution" I had in mind.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No; I did not.

Mr. KING. Well, I meant by that I was in the government that was defeated, and it seemed to me like a revolution.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Exactly; well, does not the fact remain, Mr. King, that what we call political revolutions, the complete change of policies, complete change of officials have come under your notice time and again in this country?

Mr. KING. Oh, yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And in the Commonwealth and in the municipalities and in the country at large as well?

Mr. KING. Oh, yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And doesn't that prove the fact that it is entirely possible to have a political revolution?

Mr. KING. Yes; in that sense; yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And without resort to violence?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Simply through the use of the ballot, the outcome of education?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. So, coming back to my question, if you found yourself at the head of a large organization of labor and you felt that the constituted authorities were going beyond their legal rights, beyond their legal duties, and were oppressive, and let us even go so far as to say persecuting your followers, what would be the advice you would give your followers under those circumstances?

Mr. KING. Well, I should advise them to do nothing that would put them in the same position as the men persecuting them, so their case would be very strong when they came to take action against their persecutors, and to seek the redress which the courts and the ballot and legislature and constitutional means would afford them—the press and—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (interrupting). Am I to infer from that that if you should advise them to do anything other than that you would be playing into the hands of the opposition?

Mr. KING. I should be inclined to think I was; yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Would it be in the nature of sedition and rebellion to the constituted Government if you were to buy arms and ammunition and arm your men and encourage them to resist the constituted authorities simply because you thought, and perhaps some of your followers thought, the authorities were going beyond their legal bounds?

Mr. KING. Well, that would depend, I think, on the law of the State and the law of the country. Certainly in my own country I should feel it was.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes. I take it you are sufficiently familiar with the laws of this country to know whether that would be in the nature of sedition in this country?

Mr. KING. Well, I have heard witnesses state here what I had not known before, that there was a law which made it an offense for anyone to carry arms in a certain State. I think if the statutes permitted men to carry arms, I might be inclined to take a different view about the ownership of firearms than I otherwise would.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, admitting that it may be legal to carry arms, would or would not it be seditious to use those arms collectively—

Mr. KING (interrupting). Against the constituted authority?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Against the constituted authority?

Mr. KING. I think that as long as the constituted authorities were in a position to maintain authority, it certainly would be—and were discharging their duties.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, do you think you would be justified in becoming judge and jury and determining in your own mind whether the constituted authorities were keeping within their legal bounds or going beyond their legal bounds?

Mr. KING. Why, I should not think I was.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You would feel that if you did constitute yourself sole judge of that, that you would be usurping the powers of the courts?

Mr. KING. And a function of the State.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And a function of the State?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Would that, then, make you a desirable citizen if you did that?

Mr. KING. Well, that particular act would be undesirable.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. From the study you have made of the labor problem, is it your opinion, Mr. KING, that favorable public opinion is of value to organized labor?

Mr. KING. Emphatically so.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You say it is?

Mr. KING. Yes; favorable, you say?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes.

Mr. KING. Yes; it is, certainly.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you think that organized labor can hope to accomplish anything of any consequence unless it has behind it the support of public opinion?

Mr. KING. I think in the long run it has to rely on public opinion. There may be temporary opposition, but any cause that has not got in it what will bring to it the support of the general consensus of the public won't last very long.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you believe, then, that even in such a matter as a strike, that the chances of the strike being successful are remote unless public sentiment is with it?

Mr. KING. Well, I think industry to-day is so interdependent, the lives in a community are so more or less related industrially that public sentiment is a very pronounced factor; that whereas in the early days public opinion might have been a small factor and they could have a strike and not affect more than the few people concerned, to-day it becomes more and more difficult to have a strike without affecting everybody; that people are more apt to be stirred to action and to thought when they themselves are affected; and so public opinion is, to-day, I think, more important than it has ever been in the past and will be increasingly so in the future.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, under what circumstances can organized labor hope to win and retain favorable opinion and under what circumstances is organized labor likely to lose favorable public opinion?

Mr. KING. Well, organized labor in that respect is in the same position as any other movement that is seeking the support of popular opinion. It must strive to commend itself to the public in its actions and in its methods, as well as in its aims.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, if you have followed these hearings, Mr. King, and have kept in touch with the testimony you are probably aware of the fact that these things have been brought out: That organized labor has elected to positions of trust and honor and responsibility in its ranks and has retained in positions of trust and honor and responsibility within its ranks men tried and convicted of high crimes. What effect is that likely to have upon public opinion?

Mr. KING. Well, Mr. Weinstock, at the moment I haven't in mind anyone who has been convicted of crime and has been retained in office.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Let me cite some cases that have been cited here at the hearings. Mr. Frank D. Ryan, president of the structural iron workers, one of the McNamaras, who is the secretary-treasurer of the structural iron workers—men convicted of crime and retained in high places.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. He has not been retained in office.

Mr. KING. I would not want to pass judgment on any man, but I would say, speaking generally, that I think organized labor is just as quick to appreciate as any other part of the public the wisdom of not having criminals hold positions, and if I did not think they would take that view I should feel that they were very shortsighted.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Who would you regard, then, as the greatest enemy of organized labor? Would you say that the greatest enemy that organized labor has was the hostile press, or the manufacturers' association, or those that oppose the closed shop, or are the greatest enemies of labor really within its own ranks—those that commit crimes and violence in the name of organized labor?

Mr. KING. I have asked myself that question a good many times, Mr. Weinstock; I am not sure that the greatest enemies are within the ranks of labor itself. I think any man who in the name of labor, assumedly in the interest of labor, advocates measures that are contrary to public policy, is an enemy of labor, and whether he belongs to a union or not, and whether he is a working-man or not does not matter. I imagine the worst enemy of any cause is the man who is purporting to espouse a cause and in reality is serving other ends. I say that, and I don't want to be misunderstood in saying it—it is my view of life generally—that there are people who appear to be advocates of certain causes, and if their motives are sincere I believe in them strongly, but if their motives are insincere I think no good can come, because the motive is the first thing, I think, that is the determining factor.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If as a member of society, outside of the ranks of labor, Mr. King, you should criticize the mistakes of labor organizations and do it, not to hurt, but to help organized labor, would it be fair to regard you as an enemy of organized labor simply because you had criticized its weaknesses and failings and shortcomings, or would you really be one of its best friends?

Mr. KING. I think any man is a poor friend to anything, or to a cause, who will see mistakes and try to justify them. I am not so sure that more is not accomplished sometimes by overlooking mistakes and seeking to see the virtue underlying men rather than their limitations, rather than pointing out mistakes all of the time and omitting everything else. I think the more we learn of life and men the more charitable we become, and I think that a cause is furthered by seeking what is best in it and bringing it out, rather than concentrating upon its limitations or errors.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You said a while ago you stood with organized labor when it was right and against organized labor when organized labor was wrong. Now, as a friend of organized labor, when you see that organized labor is wrong, and being its friend I take it that you are desirous of helping it, do you then think you can help it most by remaining silent or by calling organized labor's attention to its error?

Mr. KING. Sometimes I think I can help it most by being silent. And other times I think one can do most by speaking out. I don't think that a man who spends his time preaching to others how they ought to conduct themselves is always a man who is serving the cause or the interest. I think the one who can go quietly to another and persuade him that a different attitude would probably be better and overlook for the time being and hide from the world at large what he is doing, is of greater service than the other. You say when organized labor is wrong, and I think that is putting it too strongly. I would not be against organized labor when it is wrong; I would be against the wrong, but would still be for organized labor. I think we have to be careful in the use of words, and when I say I would be for organized labor, I don't mean by that to have it inferred I have no interest in the men that are not organized. I think they deserve as much consideration as those that are. The question of whether a man is or is not a member of an organization does not change my estimate of him one way or the other.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You are the author, are you not, of what is commonly known as the Lemieux Act?

Mr. KING. I was deputy minister of the department of labor when Mr. Rudolph Lemieux was minister of labor and introduced in Parliament an act known as the industrial disputes investigation act. I drafted it, and he introduced it in Parliament, and we divide the honors between us.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That act, or a corresponding act, has been adopted by the State of Colorado about a month or two ago—

Mr. KING. I can not say as to that. I did not see what legislation was passed, and I purposely avoided studying it at the time I was there, because when I reached Denver I was asked by one or two men if I would interest myself in legislation in the State, and I said I could not imagine doing anything that would be more justly offensive, and I was very careful in having nothing to do with legislation in that State for that reason. I have not studied it, but I intend to do so and go over the laws of Colorado very carefully.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The Canadian act, of which you are the author, in brief, if I recall it rightly, stands for the theory that there shall be no legal strike, there shall be no legal lockout in public utility enterprises until the State has had an opportunity of intervening in the hope of adjusting the difference, and if after such intervention either side, or neither side, is willing to accept the recommendation of the board of inquiry, then a strike might be called, or a lockout; that they are both made legal. In brief, that is the law, is it not?

Mr. KING. I would prefer to put it this way as respects the strike or the lockout—there is no law against the strike or lockout in Canada. An effort has been made to make it appear there is. The act has been interpreted in that way, but to be strictly accurate and tell the truth, it is illegal to have a strike or lockout until a certain step has been taken; that step being a public investigation in which both sides to the dispute are represented. We would say that the act in Canada restrains. In other words, labor says we believe in a strike only as the last resort. Well, as long as the State is willing to provide the machinery whereby a grievance can be investigated at the expense of the State, and by means participated in by the workers, as well as the other side, and conducted in a way that affords to both parties the amplest opportunity for full investigation, you have what would appear to most people a process that should prove most beneficial in what is a just cause, and a very proper course, before the extreme step of a strike or a lockout takes place. If labor says it doesn't believe in the strike until the last resort—I may be mistaken and I would be glad to be shown if I am—where the State provides machinery of that kind, and it is at the expense of the State, the last resort does not come until that step has been taken. If labor is sincere in that view, then the Canadian act takes away no right from labor that it desires to have. Laboring men, as I understand it, don't strike for the fun of it; they strike for justice when other means have failed. Canada has provided one other means of obtaining justice, and says until this means has been taken advantage of you can not precipitate an industrial contest until after that step has been taken, but after that you can do as you please.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Commissioner Garretson, of this commission, who is the president of the railway conductors of America, and whose opinion I think you in common with myself view very highly—

Mr. KING. I don't know any man anywhere that I regard more highly than I do Mr. Garretson.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, Commissioner Garretson in open meeting at other sessions here has made the statement which left on my mind at least the impression that the act had partially failed in Canada; that organized labor was opposed to it; that the railway men were opposed to it; that it had broken down by virtue of the fact that where the law was violated by large bodies of workers that it was impossible for the authorities to penalize them, and that hence it had not achieved the desired end. Now, you being an authority on the subject, what we would be very glad indeed to have is your views as you know the facts.

Mr. KING. Did I understand you to say that he left that impression?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. He left that impression on my mind.

Mr. KING. I question, if you ask him about it, that he would convey that impression that way. The facts are these: The act has been on the statutes for nearly eight years, or seven years—no; eight years—and during that time there have been two different political parties in power. I think, if the act had in it elements which were against public policy, an effort would have been made by Parliament to repeal it before this. No effort has been made to repeal the act. We have in the Dominion of Canada the Dominion Trades and Labor Congress, which corresponds, I suppose, to a certain extent, to the federation of labor of this country. The act has been the subject of discussion there, and there have been groups of men who have suggested that it might be wise to repeal it and change it, but during the course of debates in the meetings of the federation of labor itself, the Dominion Trades and Labor Congress, I should say, they have hesitated to pass any resolution asking Parliament to withdraw that act. They asked for one or two amendments when I was minister of labor, and I conceded them, and put them in the act, but there has been no request from the organized workers, as such, to repeal that act, and I should feel that that was one evidence, at least, that Canadian labor felt the act was satisfactory. Perhaps not in all of the details, but some. I have here last year's report of the department of labor on that act, and I notice that the summary given here is that during seven years 161 cases were referred under boards appointed under this act. Out of the 161 of strikes that were not averted or ended there were only 18—that is, there were only 18 that were not averted or ended out of 161 in seven years. I can not feel that in cases where there were no strikes injustice was done, and I can not help but feel that labor found in these cases some other more effective thing than the strike.

In 1913 and 1914, I see that the report gives 19 disputes, referred to boards, that affected coal mines, street railways, railroads, shipping, civic employees, and other public utilities. There were 19 cases, and no strike whatever.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In those cases, both sides accepted the decision of the board?

Mr. KING. It happens—

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Am I not right in stating that the board does not render a decision?

Mr. KING. In some cases they do not.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The law does not require a decision to be rendered?

Mr. KING. I was just coming to that.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Mr. Weinstock has a wrong impression. They simply publish the results of their investigations without findings?

Mr. KING. That is right; what happens frequently, I think, is that when the parties meet together, in this way, that a settlement is effected as a result of the negotiations that go on.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The bringing of the people together?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir; and as a result of that the board issues a statement that the grievance is at an end, that they have settled it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I want to make sure on one point here, as I understand, if this board can not agree among themselves while the inquiry is going on—

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (continuing). Does this board, or does it not, under the law, prepare a basis of settlement which in its judgment would be fair to each side?

Mr. KING. If no agreement is reached, then the board issues a report saying what in its opinion under the facts would be the fair thing to do.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then it does render a recommendation?

Mr. KING. It is not in the shape of a definite finding. Some of the reports are a little indefinite in that way. They don't decide a case as a board of arbitration would decide it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Have you a typical report you could read, a sort of index of the usual mode?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Have you the law there?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir. For example, here is one with reference to a report, it states "the matters were presented to the board and an amicable settlement was effected."

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I am not interested in that, but where they were not able to agree.

Mr. KING. Here is a report by the board, and a minority report. Each member of that board gave his own opinion. Let me explain how the boards are chosen. The workmen are invited to name their own member of the board, and the company to name their own member. Each side may choose anyone they wish, and their representatives are given an opportunity to agree on a chairman, and if they can't agree the Government appoints a chairman. A different board is chosen for each dispute, so that the men can choose the men they have the most confidence in, in each particular dispute. The three persons chosen have all the powers that this commission has here. They may bring before them the parties to the dispute, and examine witnesses under oath, compel the production of documents, and so forth, and they then submit a report as to what, in their opinion, should be done. If they all agree, well and good. If not, each man expresses his own views. After the board reports, the parties are allowed to strike, or lockout, as they please. One can not judge of the service of the measure by the number of boards or decisions that come under it. My own opinion is that the act renders its greatest service in preventing situations developing to the point where a strike is likely to take place, or a lockout. Employers know that if labor presents its case and it is fair and they refuse it, it is liable under that act to be brought to public observation and the facts brought in the shape of an investigation.

Had the Canadian statute been on the books in Colorado, in the phraseology that it is in to-day, it would have been illegal for any strike to have taken place until an investigation had been held, and the parties would have been compelled to come together. In other words, the employers, as I understand it, took the position in Colorado that they would not meet the men; that position would have been knocked in the head by this act, because it would have given the men who were instrumental in trying to present the grievances to the employers, it would have given them the right to name a member of the board and to choose anyone they wished, and also the company the right to choose anyone they wished, and then the two of them would choose a chairman. They would also have had the right to appear personally there, whether members of labor unions or not, before that board, and they would have had the right to bring every member of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. before that board. There was not a condition in the mines, checkweighmen, or conditions of living, or anything else, that they could not have had fully investigated, and the act would have said, until that investigation is over and the public is fully acquainted with what the conditions are, and can understand them in an intelligent way, you can not strike. I understand there have been 200 persons killed outright in Colorado; those persons would have been living to-day if that law had been on the statute book. There are men under serious criminal indictments. None of these indictments would have been made. The State of Colorado has suffered a great loss to its mining industry and to other industries, and men that had nothing to do with the dispute have had to suffer for a year or more. None of those things would have occurred if that statute had been on the book; and my feeling is that labor, instead of being deprived of any liberty because of the penalty, which says you must postpone your strike until this step is taken, would have been in a much stronger position in Colorado to-day, and in this country, with the force of public opinion behind it than it can hope to be in view of the confusion that has taken place there.

If industrial statistics prove anything, they prove what has taken place in the past, say 10 or 15 or 20 years, is going to take place in the next 10, 15, or 20 years, and we can say as certain as we are sitting here to-day that before another year goes by men, women, and children in this country are going to be killed on account of industrial strife. There is a way of preventing that, and that is to have labor grievances investigated by the State before a strike is occasioned, and things of that kind take place, and I submit for your action, in the interest of labor and the public—I think you should consider it carefully—whether a great responsibility doesn't rest upon you, appointed by the Government of this country, to frame a measure that will help prevent industrial strife and bring justice to the parties, to see whether there is not in the Canadian act, and what it has done in the last seven years, something that is very deserving of consideration at your hands.

Let me add this: It may be that this act, which works so well in Canada, might not work as well under the Constitution and laws of this country, and that would have to be considered in the light of legislation here. In one particular I can see where it would not be as effective. Under our system of Government a cabinet is responsible to Parliament, and every cabinet minister is responsible for the appointments he makes; and if a man is appointed by a minister, the minister has to consider how that appointment is going to be viewed by the entire public, and, in making it, has to consider that he involves his cabinet as well as himself in the consequences of the acts of the particular man he may appoint. And in that there is a safeguard against anything which may not be in the public interest on the part of the appointees. Whether the same thing would be true in the case where there was not that responsibility on the part of the minister, to be questioned in Parliament or Congress on the acts of everyone connected with his office or appointed by him, is a matter that would have to be considered in that relation. There may be other features as well.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I gather from the figures you read that there have been 161 disputes submitted to these various boards within eight years?

Mr. KING. Within the last seven years.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And out of that number but 18 strikes?

Mr. KING. But 18 strikes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. So there would be nearly 90 per cent of the cases in which strikes were avoided?

Mr. KING. This act is limited to industries in the nature of public-service utilities—coal mines, railways, telegraphs, and so forth—and not to others.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Have you any figures, Mr. King, that would go to show the number of strikes that have occurred in the same industries for the eight years prior to the enactment of this law?

Mr. KING. I have not got them here, but can get them, and would be glad to supply them.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know from memory how they compare?

Mr. KING. No; I do not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Anyway, there were just 18 strikes?

Mr. KING. I think the strikes before would correspond in numbers much more nearly to what the number of investigations has been under the act than to the number of instances in which the strike occurred.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then approximately—there had been approximately 161 strikes in the preceding eight years?

Mr. KING. I think the act in the industries to which it applies has cut down the strikes in Canada pretty nearly 80 or 90 per cent; that would be my estimate of it. But, Mr. Weinstock, let me illustrate further. You can not say from statistics how far-reaching that law may be, but I should like to illustrate it by a concrete example. In January of this year the Grand Trunk Railway Co. served notice on its employees that it was about to introduce a new wage scale. Under this act no company to which its provisions apply is allowed to change conditions with respect to the hours or wages of its employees without giving 30 days' notice, and if the employees object then the company has no right to put that change into effect until there has been an investigation.

The minute the company served notice on its employees of its contemplated change of wages, which meant a reduction, that minute the employees called attention to the act, and the fact that a company making the change without such notice would be liable to a penalty of $1,000 per day. The company urged that the war conditions had made it necessary to reduce wages, but when brought face to face with having an investigation the question of cutting wages was dropped, and the parties got together and they settled the matter in a manner satisfactory to each, and there was no reduction.

Now, I may be wrong, and I don't want to do the Grand Trunk Railway Co. an injustice, but I do believe that if that statute had not been on the books the chances are that those men, seeing that a plausible case might be made out and that owing to the war conditions it was difficult to go on paying the same rate of wages, they might have had to resort to a strike to hold their position, and to that extent I think a case like that helps to illustrate the service a measure of that kind renders. The parties have got to be pretty sure they have a case they can make out before the public before they throw the whole of society into the possible confusion that may result from a strike.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The prime objection that has been raised to the Canadian law by organized labor is that it robs the worker of the right to strike.

Mr. KING. I want to explain that it does not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Let me finish. They admit it does not rob the worker of the permanent right to strike, but it robs the worker of the right to strike pending the investigation, and that organized labor feels that it is not right to deprive labor of the right to strike; as one of the representatives of organized labor said, occupying the very chair you are occupying now, "Not even for one moment." Now, what is the answer to that objection to the law, in your opinion, as a result of your experience?

Mr. KING. Well, you understand that when the State says to labor, "We ask you to postpone your right to strike," the State does not confine its request to those terms; under this act it says, "We will give you something more effective than the strike as a weapon wherewith to get justice, and we ask you to use that instrument before you use the other," and the penalty, so far as it is a matter of concern one way or the other, is simply a means whereby the use of this very effective instrument is insured; it is to prevent hasty action on the part of persons who possibly have not the fullest sense of responsibility from taking a hasty step.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You believe, then, that the cost to organized labor would be postponing their right to strike and that the compensation they get in return far outweighs that cost?

Mr. KING. Most emphatically I do, Mr. Weinstock. I can not see for the life of me any reason why labor would want to strike if it can gain its ends without a strike. What does a strike mean? That they give up for the time all their earnings, their income; they begin to accumulate debt; it makes all kinds of unhappiness possible. Labor is not interested in creating that condition for itself, except for one reason, and that is that it can find no other way of getting what it believes to be just. I would be the last one in the world to take away from labor any means it has to get justice, for I think labor needs all the help it can get; but I do not like to see labor get in wrong with the general public by precipitating hasty action that may not land them anywhere in the end when I can give to labor an instrument for getting justice that will avoid the possible losses which a strike will incur and which will put them in a position, if they do strike, that they will be much stronger.

My contention is that if the men out in Colorado whom we have been talking about had had an investigation and that there had been brought out some of the features brought out here, and the employers had not changed those features, and the men had struck, they would have had the support of the country from one end to the other; they would have had the people back of them and been in a position to fight; but when they are put in the unfortunate position that they have been that is impossible. I think if they had this law in Colorado they would have had this investigation, and the strikers themselves would have wished it; but they did not have it, and went out and had the strike, and what compensation conceivable can they have for the loss of life? What compensation can the State or Government give to a man who has lost a life that is dear to him?

It is the duty of the State to seek to preserve individuals from incurring sacrifices of that kind, if the means can be found to do it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The next objection that has been raised against that act is that, assuming it takes from 30 to 40 days to make the inquiry, in the interval it affords the employer an opportunity to get ready to meet the strike, should the workers not be willing to accept the recommendations made by the board of inquiry. What answer have you to that objection?

Mr. KING. Well, there is this answer: That this act is full of penalties, some of them pretty severe, one clause—I remember of writing this myself [reading]: “If in the opinion of the board either party uses this”—that is, the provision which requires them to submit their difference and have it investigated—“if either party uses this or any other provision of this act for the purpose of unjustly maintaining a given condition of affairs through delay, and the board so reports to the minister, such party shall be guilty of an offense and liable to the same penalties as are imposed for violation of the next preceding section.”

Now, let me add this, further, that a minister is responsible for the carrying out of that act—not merely the letter of it but the spirit of it. If a similar measure were enacted in this country, it would be under the administration of the Department of Labor, and, I presume, of the Secretary of Labor. When I held the position of secretary of labor in Canada I never allowed the board to wait longer than 15 days on any single dispute that it had before it without the written consent of both parties to the further delay; and during that couple of years it was possible to have that law administered in that way. It is all a matter of the sincerity and purpose of the men who are administering a measure and who are in harmony with it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Did any instance come under your notice of employers taking advantage of the intervening period and getting ready to meet the strike?

Mr. KING. I do not think there is anything in that, one way or the other, Mr. Weinstock. There may be a reason for employers to get ready for a strike if they can keep secret conditions that precipitate a strike—in ignorance, so far as the public is concerned—public ignorance of general conditions. But what is the use of getting ready for anything if all along the way you are being exposed by a board that has at every moment the right to bring in and put before it every single member of a company or person concerned with it and find out whether they are taking any step that is prejudicial to the other side. And I am sure that if any gentleman on this commission were on a board of this kind it would be the very thing he would do if he thought there were unfair actions of any kind. You see you have to read the act in the light of every circumstance and the light of the means that it affords.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know of any case—

Mr. KING (interrupting). No; not a single case.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Since this act has been enforced—

Mr. KING (interrupting). No.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (continuing). Where the following has happened?

Mr. KING. Oh, I thought you had gone back.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That during the intervening period from the time the investigation began until it ended employers did prepare themselves for a strike, that the workers refused to abide by the recommendations made by the board, that they did go on strike, and that they lost the strike by virtue of the fact of the employers having employed the opportunity to prepare for it? Do you know of any such case?

Mr. KING. No such case; no.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know of any good reasons, then, why the same law should not operate reasonably well in this country?

Mr. KING. Well, I have mentioned to you one or two considerations that I think ought to be taken into account, and I think they are very material and important considerations.

Another thing that I think is important: This illustrates where the labor problem is such a difficult one. It is bound up with a mass of other considerations. The judicial system of a country has a good deal to do with the way in which the laws are administered. Personally I believe in appointing judges, the entire judiciary, and magistrates, sheriffs, and officials of that kind for life, so that when a man gets office he will administer the law in such a way that—well, make him subject to removal only for malfeasance in office. Then when a man is appointed to a judicial position his aim is so to conduct himself that he will inspire confidence in himself, in the law, and the country. Now, where you have a system of electing judges every two years, and magistrates and others are subject to popular vote, and the administration is in the hands of men who are thinking about whether they will be returned to office again in the next two years, you do not have the solid foundation for law and order which you get under the other system. And an act that might work very well under a system such as I have outlined, that exists in the Dominion, might not work with equal effectiveness where the system is different. You have to take all the institutions of a country into account. You can not say that any one piece of legislation will suit anywhere else; but the principle, I think, is absolutely sound.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. But, if such an act should be established for interstate commerce, for example, the adjudication would all be brought into the Federal courts, where the judges are appointed for life?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Should it not work out under those circumstances?

Mr. KING. So far as the judicial factor was a consideration, that feature would be removed as a possible consideration or objection.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You pointed out what might have been saved to Colorado and the people if this law had been in operation prior to the 1913 strike. Now, that the law has gone into operation in Colorado, is it not likely then to tend to prevent a repetition of these unfortunate circumstances there even though nothing more were done?

Mr. KING. Tend to, I think; yes. But let me say this, Mr. Weinstock: I have not read the Colorado act, and I would not know until I saw its provisions whether they were so framed as to meet all the points that I have in my mind. Calling an act by the same name does not make it the same act.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I have read it rather hurriedly, and as nearly as I can recall I think the salient points there are in harmony with and modeled after the Canadian act.

Mr. KING. Well, I think in one salient point it is not, if what I have been told about the act is correct. In Colorado the board is a permanent board, and that one board does the investigating. I may be wrong in that. Under the Canadian act for each dispute there is a separate board. That is a very different thing. For example, in Canada, where the dispute is a dispute between the miners and the coal companies, the miners themselves would choose their own representative on the board and choose whomever they wished to go and represent them before the board. Now, if in Colorado it is a permanent board, that is a very, very different thing. I do not say that it may not be equally as good a thing if the men on that board are men that inspire confidence. It may be very helpful. But confidence lies at the very basis of helpful work.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You know in the case of our mediation board which acts under the law relative to railroads it is a permanent board, and has worked out well.

Mr. KING. I believe so.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then the fact of being a permanent board don't necessarily mean failure?

Mr. KING. No; it depends on the character of the men and the degree of confidence they inspire.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. O'Connell desires to question you.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you know of the compulsory features connected with the Colorado law?

Mr. KING. No, sir; I do not.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you know whether there are any compulsory features in connection with it?

Mr. KING. No; I have not seen its provisions.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I think if you get the law and read it, it has no analogy whatever with the Canadian Lemieux Act—the compulsory features.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Which law are you speaking of?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The Colorado law. Now, while we have had discussed this bill or the Lemieux Act lots of times before us very thoroughly—

Mr. KING. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. It seems like reiterating, and I do not want to go over it again excepting these one or two questions that I want to ask. I do not think they were brought out before. Why did not the Lemieux Act apply to all industrial institutions in Canada?

Mr. KING. Well—

Commissioner O'CONNELL (interrupting). If it was good for the railroads and street cars and gas companies and electric light companies and all other commonly so-called public utilities why was it not good for the Federal and commercial business?

Mr. KING. Well, there are two reasons, as I remember it: One is in enacting legislation which introduces a new feature sometimes it is just as well to make the field limited rather than comprehensive at the outset, to give the parties a chance to see how a measure is going to work in actual practice. There was an obvious reason why in limiting it it should be limited to industries in the nature of public utilities that these were industries that affected the general community to a greater degree than other industries. That is, a strike on a railroad is much more of an inconvenience to the public than a strike in a blacksmith's shop or a tin shop or printing shop. That is one reason.

Then another reason was this, and here again you have a feature that has to be considered. This act was to be administered by the Federal Government in Canada, and not by the Provincial governments. And when it came to administering an act that applied from the Atlantic to the Pacific it seemed on the whole wise not to make it too wide in extent or scope at the outset. We thought that if we could make it successful in regard to the industries to which it applied under the Federal Government, perhaps the Provinces might then see fit at some time, in regard to local industries, to bring the same system into use, if necessary.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. For eight years you say the act has been applied there successfully, and has prevented about 90 per cent of possible strikes—

Mr. KING (interrupting). Between 80 and 90 per cent.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Per cent of strikes that have been prevented. With that experience, has there been any effort to extend the law?

Mr. KING. There have been different applications come before the Government to extend the law, but none of them have been acted upon up to the present time.

In regard to the other strikes, Mr. O'Connell, my feeling is—if you will look at the record of the strikes, the other strikes are not, for the most part, of much significance in the Dominion; they are very local. They have not affected industry to any great extent or embarrassed anyone. If there were a great, big strike in some local industry, I should not be surprised—

Commissioner O'CONNELL (interrupting). Yes. Now, it is easy to say that there have been perhaps 126 strikes, or 1,000 strikes or cases that were brought before the board and 900 of them were settled.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That does not mean anything unless you told us whether 90,000 or 100,000 men were engaged in them, or whether 1,000 men were engaged in them. There may have been more men involved in one strike that was investigated and did occur, or where the men violated the law and went on strike, than all the others that were settled.

Mr. KING. Quite right.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You must have something on which to base not only the number of occurrences that came before the board, but also what number of people.

Mr. KING. Well, I will take one other thing with which I think you will agree clearly, namely, the result in the other cases.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Yes.

Mr. KING. So far as I know, in Canada every single strike that has taken place, either in violation of the act or of terms of settlement recommended after investigation, there has not been one in which a single condition was secured that was an improvement upon what the board itself had recommended; and I think in nearly all cases the strikes were lost.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Take, for instance, the strike of miners that occurred in British Columbia—

Mr. KING (interrupting). A complete failure.

Commissioner O'CONNELL (continuing). Say it was a failure; but I think since that time the thing has been adjusted—since the time it was declared a failure; but regardless of that, what was the number of people involved in the violation of that law—of the workmen that declined to go along with the law?

Mr. KING. Oh, quite a number.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Were not there a number of thousands engaged in that?

Mr. KING. I should think there might have been 2,000. I don't think there were more than that.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Yes; there were so many engaged in it that there was no attempt on the part of the Government to put the law into effect.

Mr. KING. Well, there has never been—

Commissioner O'CONNELL (interrupting). In so far as punishing people or locking them up is concerned.

Mr. KING. Well, there has never been any attempt on the part of the Government to take the initiative in prosecutions under this act. It has not been necessary, for two reasons: For the reason that labor has not sought deliberately to violate the act. In one or two instances where it violated the act the Government has taken the position that if the parties to the industry are not sufficiently interested to try to enforce the provisions of the law, so far as the penalty is concerned, or the community is not sufficiently interested, it would not be rendering a public service to prosecute the offending men; and for that reason, I say, the penalty feature of the act, excepting for the service it may render in preventing extreme men from taking extreme actions sometimes, is quite a secondary feature.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, Commissioner Weinstock said there were several reasons why labor objected to this law; but he has not given you the main reason. The main reason is that labor is opposed to the position of being placed in subjection to compulsory—either compulsory mediation, compulsory conciliation, or compulsory arbitration, or compulsory anything. Labor does not believe in the word "compulsion" in the law. Now, that is the main thing that labor objects to in the Lemieux Act.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, you do not find that in this country for many, many years. He has been speaking of compulsory ways of doing things—compulsory arbitration, compulsory conciliation, compulsory investigations, and all that sort of thing. I think the public mind in the United States has been cleansed from ideas of compulsory arbitration or compulsory settlements, believing that compulsion does no good to amount to anything, because if you compel men to do this or that they will break over. Now, labor objects to the Lemieux Act because of its compulsory features, and, in addition, I want to state the reason why.

Now, we have in the United States what is now known as the Newlands Act, which was formerly the Erdman Act, under which all railroads come. It is not compulsory. They don't even go to a railroad or an employer and say you must come before us under any circumstances. Both parties must come to this board here and say, "We want you," or they can not interfere. There is not a thing compulsory about it. Yet since this board has been in existence there has not been, I venture to say, actually to my knowledge of the situation there has not been over two or three very small strikes since the Erdman Act went into effect in this country without the word "compulsory" attached to it at all. Now, that is the thing, and the opposition of labor makes that without compulsory investigation or arbitration or without this board being in the position to say to railroad men on any system or to railroad employers on any system, "You must appear before us and try and adjust this thing." They have not got a scintilla of compulsion in connection with the make-up of that law. Yet they have been able to avoid practically all railroad strikes in our country for a great number of years, as you know. Well, there have been—actually been one or two break-overs—but they have been very small. It has been almost so small as scarcely to be worth speaking about.

Mr. KING. Well, I concur—

Commissioner O'CONNELL (interrupting). Now, labor objects to the compulsory feature, not only in that law, but in any other law.

Mr. KING. Let me explain. I agree with you, naturally, if you can get an act that will give you the same result without a compulsory feature it is desirable not to have that feature. I think in the case of railroads there have been few strikes. Why? Because the parties have brought their disputes before this board in a voluntary way. With the railway labor is well organized. The men who are at the head of the railway brotherhoods are extremely able men, men seized very strongly with a sense of the responsibility they have, and these men see the wisdom both for themselves and their fellows of trying to get matters settled by investigation in the first instance, and they set the example and do that, and I think they are men that understand the wisdom of negotiations and of taking advantage of the laws of this country. But when you come to some other industries in this country the same can not be said. Think of the condition of labor and of the experience of the men who lead it and you see why, while one result may obtain in the case of the railroad, it is questionable whether it would in some other instances.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. We have had in this country some of the most disastrous strikes, some of the greatest destruction of property in our railroad affairs that we have had in our entire industries, our entire industrial strikes in the United States.

Mr. KING. But the destruction of property has not been—

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That is, in years gone by.

Mr. KING. That has not been the thing that has gained for labor the advances that they have made. They have made their advances in spite of destruction. In regard to compulsion, every man gives up a certain amount of his rights for the good of society as a whole. If a man slanders me in the press, my feeling is to go and smash his head, but I don't take that action. I have to go to the law. I have surrendered my right to society. It is true of all law; you can not justify restraint unless you gain a wider measure of liberty from and for society as a whole, and wherever you have that by restraining men for a time the amount that is lost is insignificant compared with the great gain.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Labor's first objection to the Lemieux Act is its compulsion. If you succeed, as you say, then you have succeeded by this compulsory primary negotiation of stopping them, and it is only a question of time until your legislatures or those that have the enforcement in Canada will succeed in making it compulsory on them that you must adjust it under the law, and that becomes repugnant to American workmen.

Mr. KING. And also to each British workman. But instead of putting it as the entering wedge I should be inclined to put it as the widening of the horizon or the extension of area over which you give the laborer a new instrument in securing justice. Take to-day, in your civil rights, a man can go to court and get his rights adjusted without resorting to violence. Up to the present time labor has not had that right with respect to the one commodity it has to sell—its labor—and I would put it, extending the bounds of liberty to a man, rather than a restriction or an entering wedge in the direction of compulsion.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I think I understand it, and we have discussed that so many times before that we will leave that subject.

I want to go back a little to the question of sedition that Commissioner Weinstock discussed with you, as to whether the workmen who armed themselves—and if that did not mean sedition. Have you heard the testimony of the officers of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. before the commission at this hearing here?

Mr. KING. No, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The testimony before this commission by the highest officials of the company—at least the general manager and vice president and others—was that they had stored at their Philadelphia headquarters several thousand firearms, many thousand rounds of ammunition, police clubs, and all characters and kinds of instruments for the destruction of a human body that you come in contact with; that they were kept there for the purpose of immediate use—of using in any means whereby they would keep the trains of that road running. It meant if a man tried to prevent a train running, they had a perfect right to shoot him and get him out of the way so that it could run; that that right was claimed for the purpose of getting the trains over the road and in the interest of the stockholders.

Now, would you call it sedition for a corporation so great as the Pennsylvania Railway system, traversing through a number of our States, storing and turning a portion of its great Union Station in Philadelphia into a public arsenal for the purpose of holding their firearms there, and all kinds of ammunition, and all instruments for the destruction of human life and property, prepared to go into war of any kind or character to keep their trains running, regardless of what human it was necessary to put out of existence?

Mr. KING. My opinion is that in properly constituted, organized society no one except the public authorities should be permitted to either carry or store arms. The law itself should be administered by the officers of the law, and no individual or corporation, whether they be organizations of labor or organizations of capital, should be permitted to equip themselves with any outfit which implied that they were going to take the administration of the law into their own hands. A large railroad company may find it necessary to keep on hand a few rifles or give a few revolvers to their men that are running the trains to protect them from highway robbery and of train holdups. There may be justification for a thing of that kind, but as to storing arms to fight labor organizations, it is a thing that ought to be made a criminal offense and the whole spy business with it. I think it begets no end of trouble. I think that they would not have had a war in Europe to-day if it had not been for the spy system.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Commissioner Weinstock asked you if you believed in labor, right or wrong; or the closed shop, right or wrong; and two or three other questions regarding the right and wrong thing that I don't just now recall. The implication is, or the impression conveyed to me was, labor right or wrong. That the mere fact that an individual laborer committed an act in violation of law does not mean that labor was wrong?

Mr. KING. Certainly not.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. It does not mean, for instance, that if a member of a trade-union during the time of strike or strife—that if he happened to get drunk and locked up that the whole trade-union was drunk and locked up?

Mr. KING. Certainly not.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. It does not imply that simply because a few individuals of a trade-union or labor do something wrong that the whole proposition is wrong or that a local union or number of men of a union make a mistake in their demands upon employers and make radical and outlandish demands that labor is wrong?

Mr. KING. Certainly not.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The laborer, or a number of laborers or union men, are liable to have a wrong conception of the purpose for which they are organized? They organize rapidly at times, and many have no knowledge or conception of organization. Only overnight they are organized and come into the field of organized labor, and the next morning they start out to revolutionize modern society simply because they have organized. They do wrong and commit crimes and break laws, and life and property is sacrificed, but that does not convey the idea to you that labor is wrong?

Mr. KING. Certainly not. These individual acts are wrong, and would be wrong if committed by a party of persons. I would not condemn the church because there are some scoundrels in it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. We do not have laws on the statute books to make people do right.

Mr. KING. Certainly not.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. We do have them there to punish those that do wrong?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. If they had the effect of making us do right, we would be making many more laws than we are?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That is my conception of right and wrong, and the right and wrong of the closed shop, as the employer calls it, the open and closed shop; the union man calls it the union and nonunion shop. The evidence before this commission indicates a very large number of the most radical advocates of the open shop are operating nonunion shops; absolutely closed to union men. Now, the corporation that you are now employed by—

Mr. KING. Excuse me, I am not employed by any corporation.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I will withdraw that. The Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., which you are acquainted with?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. At its four mines in Sunrise, Wyo., it operates not an open shop so-called, but an absolutely nonunion shop, and it is a shop that is closed absolutely to union men. You can not work there if it is known you belong to a union. In the Colorado field they talk about the open shop. If they practice the open shop at one portion of their employment, they certainly must mean the same thing at another point of employment, if their men are truthful at all. Can you see it in any other light?

Mr. KING. I don't quite understand the question you ask me.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I asked you if the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. can operate publicly in one of their camps in Sunrise, Wyo., what they do as an absolutely closed shop to union men, and in Colorado bringing on a great struggle between thousands of workmen and a great number of corporations in that State, in which lives are lost and property destroyed, in what they are pleased to call the open shop—if there is any way to modify or bring those two things together?

Mr. KING. I would not like to acquiesce in the statement that they brought on that struggle.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. They claim they resisted it because the men wanted a closed camp, or closed mine, where only union men were employed?

Mr. KING. That may be the argument that was urged by the men.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Not by the men, but by the company. They say, "The men demanded of us an absolutely closed shop where only union men could be employed, and that we declared to be un-American, and all that goes with being un-American, and we won't stand for it, and we will fight first." And they did fight; the result of which you know was the horrible picture that has been painted, not of imagination, either, but things that did occur for this principle of open shop, the right of American people to work under what conditions they pleased, for whomever they pleased, and wherever they pleased, and whenever they pleased. A few miles from there they are operating an ore mine where they say no union men can be employed, it is not a place where any man can be employed, and I say to you, is that a consistent situation?

Mr. KING. It would not be consistent to say they are favorable to the open shop under the conditions that you cite.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You have heard all of the testimony here?

Mr. KING. I have answered your question about consistency; I have not heard all of the testimony.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I want to straighten out the record on this question that Mr. Commissioner Weinstock asked you, if you thought labor was justified in retaining in office men who were found guilty and convicted of crime, and cited to you the case of Mr. Frank Ryan, president of the structural iron workers, and who is now in the penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., I believe. The fact is that Mr. Frank Ryan has not been retained in office, and is not the president of the structural iron workers at this time; he was retained as president of that association up until the time his case went as far as it could be carried to justify all as to whether his conviction was justifiable or not. It was carried to the courts, the Supreme Court, and he was decided against. At the next election of that organization another man was elected president of the International Structural Iron Workers, and Mr. Ryan has not continued in office. Now, Mr. King, would you give labor the same right to organize as capital enjoys?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir; I would.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you think anybody questions that seriously now? We recognize that capital will make mistakes. Great organizations of capital are brought before the courts and punished for various offenses. We have heard of the Standard Oil Co. being fined many million dollars by a judge in Chicago, and all that sort of thing, but, of course, it was never collected, but they committed the same offense and are brought up before the courts—

Mr. KING. Human nature is the same.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Whether it is the employer or employee?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. So that even if labor does commit, in the name of labor, if you will, violence, human life is sacrificed for what they believe to be an elevating purpose—there has no great struggle taken place in the interest of humanity or in the interest of the world in which life has not been sacrificed for the uplifting of humanity. History repeats that thousands of times, over and over, and so with all its frailties and weaknesses, it has the same right to organize as capital has?

Mr. KING. I think so.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. For its own protection for whatever it thinks best to do?

Mr. KING. I think so.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you think that there is a possibility of labor unorganized protecting its interests in this modern, humdrum of society and industrial world in which we are now living—and the small employer has almost disappeared?

Mr. KING. I think it is distinctly difficult; yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. It is impossible for him to reduce his hours of labor, increase his wage, and better his condition of employment. A man, for instance, employed—I do not cite the case, there may be causes for it, but the name appeals to me, the United States Steel Corporation, employs 250,000 people; do you think that one man or a few men, or unorganized men, could improve their conditions in that great army of men?

Mr. KING. I think you have to always take into account the strength of the force that we are seeking to uplift and the force opposed to it. If the force that is opposed to the other is distinctly trying to crush it down, certainly the lack of organization is a terrible handicap, but I would not like to imagine that the employers who have not seen their way to have organizations among their own workmen have had in mind the crushing of labor as the particular motive. I think as far as their motives are concerned—

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I am not speaking of it because the employer does not want it. I am speaking of the laborer, the man himself. I do not hold him responsible personally.

Mr. KING. The attitude of the employer toward labor—I could conceive of a humane employer, a man who had a sense of justice and right, refusing to draw any dividend from an industry that was sweating it from labor, or doing anything other than letting labor have all the advantages it could, and I would think in a case like that that the organization would be quite secondary. Unfortunately there are not many that are that way.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you think the hundreds of stockholders of the United States Steel Co. care how they get their dividends?

Mr. KING. I think some of them care and some do not care. I think there are some drawing dividends in the steel industry who would much prefer to get a less dividend if they thought they were getting the particular dividend that they are at the expense of the men that are working.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I never heard of but one stockholder that returned her dividend, and that was a lady in a large mill at Boston, who did return her dividend and told them to give it to the strikers. Now, as a result of your long experience, your personal investigations in all the affairs of labor, your great travel all over this country and Canada and Europe and in the Asiatic Continent, your investigations as a student in colleges, of the general knowledge that you have accumulated in all of these years that you have been associated in this work as an investigator and as an official in Canada, do you believe that the wage earners in their organized capacity, with all that has been charged against them, have done more to elevate and bring about a better standard of manhood and womanhood, to build up a higher standard of opportunity, to build up a higher standard of citizenship, that it could possibly have been done by the men in an unorganized capacity?

Mr. KING. To answer that question I would have to imagine what would have been the condition of labor to-day if they had not been organized, and I would have to say unhesitatingly that labor would not have had the standing to-day that they have had they not been organized.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you believe that the organization of wage-workers has had to do with the building up of the moral standard of citizenship of not only its own membership but its influence upon the nonmembership, and its influence upon the community has been for the uplift of humanity?

Mr. KING. I don't think you can better a man in any condition without that having its effect on those that are brought into relations with his life and bettering his own life.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. If organized labor was all that it is charged with by its opponents, being law violators, criminals, property destroyers, evaders of the law, criminals in the sight of the law, and the worst that has been charged against it were true, do you believe that they ought to be disbanded?

Mr. KING. Well, I would never judge a movement by what its opponents say; and if it were all true, I can not imagine society existing. I think the opposition has been so much overdone.

Chairman WALSH. Mrs. Harriman wishes to ask you a few questions.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Mr. King, I would like to know what is the effect of labor, the concentration of an industry in a few hands? Do you think it makes conditions for the worker better or worse?

Mr. KING. It depends on the few hands. I can imagine it being possible to hand them a good deal better conditions if you have a few people with certain ideas, than a great many with many, and it comes back to the old question of personality of the individuals concerned.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Well, from your experience and what you have seen of industries?

Mr. KING. I don't believe I can answer that question without considering it more fully than I have had an opportunity to do.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. I will put it this way: What is your attitude toward industrial trusts?

Mr. KING. Toward trusts?

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Toward industrial trusts, such as the Standard Oil Co.?

Mr. KING. My attitude is best expressed probably in the bill I introduced in Canada for the investigations of trusts and combines and mergers. When I was minister of labor I introduced a bill that is now a law in Canada. Under it, if any six persons think that a combine or trust is increasing prices unduly, or taking any action against the public interest, they may go before any judge from one end of the country to the other, and if they make out a prima facie case of enhancement of prices, or a case on any other ground, the judge may give an order for an investigation, and it then becomes the duty of the Government to order an investigation into that trust or combine. When that investigation is ordered each of the parties is entitled to appoint its own investigator on the board. The persons complaining choose their own investigator, and the trust its own, and those two agree on a chairman, just as under the industrial-disputes act, and those three have the power to investigate a trust; to state what, in their opinion, is the effect of its action. If it happens to be an industry that is receiving protection from the Government, the law provides that the tariff may be immediately reduced, and the industry be denied the protection it is getting; if it is taking an unfair advantage of the public through a patent, the patent may be revoked. If the board recommends that a certain course of action is contrary to the public interest, and that in 90 days it is to be discontinued, and if it is not, the trust becomes liable to a penalty for every day it continues. So my attitude toward trusts and combines is that the extent and size of the industry does not make it a criminal organization, but the things that it does. The larger the concern is, the greater the reason why the Government of the country should at all times, in the interest of its citizens, be able to see that no unfair advantage is taken because of the size. I am not against organizations on a big scale. I think there was a time when industrial competition was between industries and industries and localities and localities, but it is now between continents and continents, and to save an industry to a continent it may be necessary to organize it on a big scale. But that is more reason why the laws should make it impossible for an organization to do things contrary to public interest. Publicity is the first thing. There is nothing like the searchlight of publicity as an instrument for focusing intelligent public opinion.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Really, then, in the right hands you think it is all right?

Mr. KING. It would depend entirely—I would judge everything by its act. If an industry is in the right hands, administered all right, in the right way, it will be carried on all right. You can judge whether it is in the right hands or not by the things it does.

Chairman WALSH. When you went to Tarrytown that night with Mr. Greene, did you take up the subject of the situation in Colorado with Mr. John D. Rockefeller, sr.?

Mr. KING. I never discussed it with him.

Chairman WALSH. Nothing said about the Colorado situation at all?

Mr. KING. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Nothing said about the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. KING. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You had never met Mr. John D. Rockefeller, sr., before?

Mr. KING. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Have you ever met him since?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir; twice since.

Chairman WALSH. Where?

Mr. KING. Both times at his house in Tarrytown.

Chairman WALSH. At either of these meetings was the Colorado situation discussed?

Mr. KING. Not with me.

Chairman WALSH. In your presence?

Mr. KING. I may have overheard one or two things said. I remember one evening I went out with Mr. Welborn—

Chairman WALSH. President of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir. Mr. Rockefeller, jr., asked me to come out and spend the night at his house, and Mr. Welborn went out at the same time, and I think

Mr. Rockefeller, sr., and Mr. Welborn had some conversation together. I was on the other side of the table and didn't hear what they were discussing; I was talking with somebody else.

Chairman WALSH. Who else was there?

Mr. KING. Mrs. Rockefeller, jr., was there.

Chairman WALSH. Was the subject of getting up a letter for use in Colorado discussed in your presence?

Mr. KING. Never mentioned.

Chairman WALSH. Do you recall anything that was said in your presence and Mr. John D. Rockefeller, sr.'s, presence with reference to the situation in Colorado?

Mr. KING. I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. It was a matter that was up at the time very acutely?

Mr. KING. It has been up for the last two years.

Chairman WALSH. And nothing was said about it that you recall?

Mr. KING. No, sir; I think we talked about the war in Europe mostly. I don't think I said a word about Colorado.

Chairman WALSH. And he never said a thing about it?

Mr. KING. No, sir; never spoke to me about it.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know whether or not Mr. Rockefeller, sr., from anything he has stated, knows what your activities are in Colorado with respect to this matter?

Mr. KING. I don't think he does; I don't think he knew I was going there when I went, and I have not reported to anybody since what I did.

Chairman WALSH. And, as far as you know, Mr. John D. Rockefeller, sr., has no information whatsoever on the work you are doing?

Mr. KING. As far as I know, he has absolutely none.

Chairman WALSH. And it is not your intention to make a report to him or give him this information?

Mr. KING. It is not my intention to make a report to him, but if I have the opportunity and pleasure of meeting him in the future I may discuss with him the conditions as I saw them. I may or I may not.

Chairman WALSH. When does your employment end with the Rockefeller Foundation?

Mr. KING. The 1st of October.

Chairman WALSH. 1915?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir; this year.

Chairman WALSH. And is it your intention then to make findings as to the conditions you found in Colorado?

Mr. KING. No, sir; it is not.

Chairman WALSH. I believe you said you were going to stand for Parliament in the North York riding?

Mr. KING. Constituency of North York.

Chairman WALSH. Where is that in Canada?

Mr. KING. Toronto is the county seat of it.

Chairman WALSH. It takes in all of Toronto?

Mr. KING. No, sir; the northern part of the county.

Chairman WALSH. Does it take in any part of the city?

Mr. KING. No.

Chairman WALSH. That is all, Mr. King.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, just one word before I conclude. The commission has been asking different witnesses their views of the cause of industrial unrest. Not very long ago I happened to be reading the life of Pasteur and I came across a passage that seemed to me to throw a flood of light on this industrial question, and I should like to put this passage before the commission, because I think it has in it something that it is well to present. This was Pasteur, who spent his life working on the theory of germs and found that many of our ills come from a conflict between certain forces that are making for destruction and others contending against them for the making of life and health. Mr. Pasteur turned from the microscope to look out on the world, and found two similar forces at work there to-day. I have seen no similar statement that seemed to be more enlightening. It is from an address delivered on the occasion of the inauguration of the Pasteur Institute, November, 1888. I am taking it from the book entitled "The Life of Pasteur," by R. Vallery-Radot:

"Two contrary laws seem to be wrestling with each other nowadays; the one, a law of blood and of death, ever imagining new means of destruction and forcing nations to be constantly ready for the battle field; the other, a law of peace, work, and health, ever evolving new means of delivering man from the scourges which beset him. The one seeks violent conquests, the other the relief of humanity. The latter places one human life above any victory; while the former would sacrifice hundreds and thousands of lives to the ambition of one. * * * Which of those two laws will ultimately prevail, God alone knows."

What Pasteur said of the international situation, as he saw it in 1888, we have ample evidence, is being fulfilled in a terrific scale at the present time. I think what he has said in regard to contrary laws wrestling with each other applies to the industrial world as well as to all the other relations of life; and when you ask me who the friends of labor are and who the enemies of labor are, I want to say that the men who are seeking the law of blood and death, whether it arises from viciousness or covetousness or any other cause, those men are the enemies of labor. But that the person, whether he be associated with the press, helping to give the public information, whether he be a teacher instructing, whether he be a student, whether he be an investor, whether he be a laborer, or whether he be a professional man—no matter what his capacity, or whether man or woman—if in his life a person is trying by his act to further the law of peace and work and health and to deliver man from the scourges that beset him, that person, in my opinion, is a friend of labor.

Chairman WALSH. You may be excused.

Mr. Ivy Lee.

TESTIMONY OF MR. IVY L. LEE—Recalled.

Chairman WALSH. I believe, Mr. Lee, when you were excused Saturday evening you were being asked about your conferences with Mr. Wheeler in regard to the publication of the National Chamber of Commerce entitled "The Nation's Business." Where were you having that conference with Mr. Wheeler?

Mr. LEE. I think I saw Mr. Wheeler at the Belmont Hotel in New York City.

Chairman WALSH. What connection did he have with the National Chamber of Commerce at that time?

Mr. LEE. I am not sure, Mr. Chairman, what his titular relationship was; it was quite well known that he was one of the moving spirits in that organization.

Chairman WALSH. Well, now, he had been the president of it; was he the president of it at that time?

Mr. LEE. I do not think so.

Chairman WALSH. Now, in a general way, what was the chamber of commerce, an organization of chambers of commerce, a national organization of chambers or commerce; that is, this particular one, throughout the United States?

Mr. LEE. I think that is a fairly accurate description.

Chairman WALSH. You say the proposition was as to whether or not Mr. Rockefeller should finance their publication called the Nation's Business?

Mr. LEE. That, in a general way, is correct.

Chairman WALSH. What was the proposition put up to you by Mr. Wheeler?

Mr. LEE. There was no specific proposition, Mr. Chairman. The question was as to whether it would be feasible to enlarge a publication issued by the chamber, and issue it weekly, and whether a fund of working capital could be obtained to see it through the experimental period.

Chairman WALSH. Was the paper called the Nation's Business running at the time?

Mr. LEE. Yes; it was in the experimental period.

Chairman WALSH. It was in the experimental period?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And it disseminates information with regard to business and industries throughout the United States to its members?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Did you supply the working capital?

Mr. LEE. We did not.

Chairman WALSH. Did you make any sort of arrangement by which the Rockefeller interests or the Rockefeller group was to take a certain number of the papers or render them assistance?

Mr. LEE. No; we made no arrangement of any kind.

Chairman WALSH. Are you rendering them assistance?

Mr. LEE. None whatever.

Chairman WALSH. Why didn't you go into the matter?

Mr. LEE. Well, I did not think it was practical myself, and I never made any report to Mr. Rockefeller, except to the effect that I had not yet been able to see that the scheme was practicable.

Chairman WALSH. Supposing the scheme had been practicable, would you have advised Mr. Rockefeller to go into it?

Mr. LEE. Certainly.

Chairman WALSH. And that would have been as a matter of getting publicity?

Mr. LEE. The proposition was this, Mr. Chairman: It would have been obviously undesirable that Mr. Rockefeller should finance the publication of an independent organization of that sort permanently. The theory we proceeded on from the first was, that if Mr. Rockefeller rendered any such assistance the fact should be made public at the time the assistance was rendered; consequently that such assistance, even if made public, should not be rendered unless we felt that as a practical business proposition this paper would very quickly get on its feet and be able to pay back its debts and thus be absolved from any obligations to Mr. Rockefeller. It was largely because of our feeling—I would not say the feeling, but rather the doubt as to the practicability of the idea as a business proposition, that caused me to feel that I was unable to recommend the plan.

Chairman WALSH. I received a letter from a president of the board of trade, a gentleman who says he is president of a board of trade, and is also president of a very large company, one of the largest concerns in a certain line in the United States, who asks to have his name kept a secret, and he says—he puts it this way; I will read it to you:

“In relation to current report of Rockefeller’s alleged domination of the chamber of commerce, I would say that, as president of the board of trade last year, a representative of the United States Chamber of Commerce called to further interest me in obtaining membership from the board of trade, and in the course of a long conversation he made a statement, the point of which was in substance as follows: That Rockefeller had asked how much the chamber could use from him, and that the reply was that all his millions could not buy the influence of the chamber, etc. But he was quite at liberty to indicate desirable members and in that way could be of great assistance, and in that way the chamber had a great many very strong men, presumably thus selected.”

Did you suggest in that meeting you had that the Rockefeller interests could supply any members for the chamber of commerce?

Mr. LEE. No, Mr. Chairman; and that suggestion—it seems to me the insinuation of that question—is very unfair to the chamber of commerce, aside from any unfairness to Mr. Rockefeller. The chamber of commerce, to my mind, has performed a remarkable public service in a most independent way. Its records are all open to inspection, and I am sure you would not have the slightest difficulty in finding out every contributor to its funds. It is not fair to that organization to make a suggestion of that kind. I told you the entire story with reference to this publication.

Chairman WALSH. I will finish the letter.

Mr. LEE. I beg your pardon.

Chairman WALSH. That is all right; I stopped to give you a chance to answer, but I want to give you what this gentleman says about this:

“The plain implication was that by indirection the chamber was very strongly backed by Rockefeller, which apparently was thought to be a recommendation to myself and my organization.”

Mr. LEE. Mr. Chairman, I think it is hardly incumbent on me, but I happen to know something about the chamber of commerce. When the plan was first developed—

Chairman WALSH. Go ahead.

Mr. LEE. I am not disposed to go into this matter unless you think there is some possible doubt about the bona fide intention of the organization.

Chairman WALSH. No; I just want you to answer following this suggestion.

Mr. LEE. I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that Mr. Rockefeller is thoroughly in sympathy with the purpose of the chamber, and as a business man he would do anything in his power to promote it, as I have no doubt a good many other business men would; but his relationship to it is well known.

Chairman WALSH. Does he suggest members for it?

Mr. LEE. He does not, so far as I know.

Chairman WALSH. The chamber of commerce really has a sort of connection with the Government, has it not?

Mr. LEE. Why, I do not think it has any organic relation to the Government. I think it has placed its facilities at the disposal of the Government, and is eager to; but, Mr. Chairman, the offices of the chamber are in this city, and their officers ought certainly in fairness to be the ones to relate its activities.

Chairman WALSH. I am just asking about the connection of Mr. Rockefeller with it, if there is any, so far as you know. I will ask the question directly, and if there is any further inquiry to make, we will make it.

Mr. LEE. Mr. Rockefeller's relation to the chamber I have entirely related to you, as far as I know it.

Chairman WALSH. Is it not a fact that the chamber of commerce was founded on a call from the President of the United States?

Mr. LEE. I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. President Taft?

Mr. LEE. I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. Did you read the report of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor for 1912?

Mr. LEE. I don't recall.

Chairman WALSH. It reads as follows:

"This bureau, at my direction, in April, 1912, transmitted to over 1,100 commercial organizations in the United States an invitation to send representatives to a conference by the President to consider the establishment of a national commercial organization broadly representative of all the commercial interests of the United States.

"The need for coordination of the unrelated efforts of chambers of commerce, boards of trade, and similar associations in the field of trade promotion has long been recognized, and the time seemed opportune to aid the founding of such a national body.

"As a result of the very successful meeting, which was held in Washington on April 22 and 23 and attended by 700 delegates from 400 commercial associations in every part of the United States, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America was organized."

Is that your recollection of the information in regard to these men in that concern?

Mr. LEE. I only know of the organization in a very general way, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Did you go there at the request of Mr. Rockefeller; did you go to meet Mr. Wheeler?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Do I recollect it right that Mr. Wheeler wrote to Mr. Rockefeller, as shown by some of this correspondence here?

Mr. LEE. I think so.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have more than one conference with Mr. Wheeler?

Mr. LEE. No; Mr. Wheeler went to Europe the next day, I think, after I saw him.

Chairman WALSH. Has he returned?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. You have not taken it up at any time since?

Mr. LEE. Not with Mr. Wheeler.

Chairman WALSH. Have you with anyone else?

Mr. LEE. Yes; Mr. Fahey, the present head of the chamber.

Chairman WALSH. When was that?

Mr. LEE. Well, I talked to him within the last three months.

Chairman WALSH. Now, with reference to financing this paper called the Nation's Business.

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And loaning them money.

Mr. LEE. I ought to make that entirely clear, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. LEE. Mr. Fahey became the chief executive of the organization the 1st of January. At any rate Mr. Wheeler had brought this matter up to us or in Mr. Rockefeller's office. Nothing had been done about it, and Mr. Rockefeller, shortly after I came into the office, spoke to me about it and asked if I did not think we ought to have the matter closed up. I then asked Mr. Fahey, the then president of the organization, if he would come to see me, and I discussed the matter with him, I told him of my doubt as to the impracticability of the publication scheme and asked if he saw any reason why my doubts were ill founded, and he agreed with me that the scheme was not a practical one.

Chairman WALSH. Who was that?

Mr. LEE. Mr. Fahey; and, therefore, the proposition was left in that state.

Chairman WALSH. The matter, then, has dropped through?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have a personal acquaintance with Mr. Fahey?

Mr. LEE. Well, I have known Mr. Fahey casually for a good many years; yes.

Chairman WALSH. Did you communicate with him during the time you were employed by the Rockefeller investments or companies in regard to anything except this proposed loaning of money to the Nation's Business?

Mr. LEE. No.

Chairman WALSH. Is Business America something or the same thing as the Nation's Business?

Mr. LEE. No.

Chairman WALSH. What is Business America?

Mr. LEE. All I know of that is that it is a magazine that one sees.

Chairman WALSH. Maybe you remember—was the correspondence that you had with the National Chamber of Commerce, with Mr. Fahey, or with Mr. Wheeler among that which you consider privileged on account of being private, the reason that you did not furnish it to the commission?

Mr. LEE. I had no correspondence with Mr. Wheeler or with Mr. Fahey. There were two letters from Mr. Wheeler to Mr. Rockefeller, which were referred to in one of my letters as having been returned to Mr. Rockefeller. Your commission asked me to produce that letter referred to as an inclosure, and that is the letter we felt was privileged.

Chairman WALSH. That is the letter from Mr. Wheeler, of the National Chamber of Commerce, to Mr. Rockefeller?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And you considered that privileged and did not produce it?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Would you care to state as to the substance of it, whether it referred to Mr. Rockefeller putting money into the Nation's Business?

Mr. LEE. It did not refer to the question of putting money into it at all—I say "at all," it may have referred to that indirectly, but the general subject dealt in in those letters was in reference to the general plan of enlarging the scope of the publication. It was discussed as a publication enterprise, rather than with reference to the financial features of it. Of course, the fact that if the scheme as a publication enterprise was undertaken Mr. Rockefeller would finance it was implied, but I do not think the letters dealt with that phase of the subject.

Chairman WALSH. Was any suggestion made in the letters as to matters of publicity that might be published in the Nation's Business?

Mr. LEE. I do not think so.

Chairman WALSH. Was any reference made to the situation in Colorado with reference to the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. LEE. None whatever.

Chairman WALSH. Was any reference made in the letters to any other industry in which Mr. Rockefeller was an investor or stockholder or bondholder?

Mr. LEE. Not the remotest, Mr. Chairman. With reference to those letters, I am not authorized to speak, but I am very sure you would have no difficulty in seeing them privately if you cared to do so.

Chairman WALSH. Then I will ask you to let Mr. Manly see them.

Mr. LEE. If he will come to our office in New York, I will be glad to show them to him.

Chairman WALSH. Then let Mr. Manly look at them.

Mr. LEE. I want to make the reservation that they are not to go into the record.

Chairman WALSH. Now, how much did you think might be necessary in money to put up as a loan for the Nation's Business to get upon its feet?

Mr. LEE. The proposition, as it was suggested, was that it would require about $250,000.

Chairman WALSH. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Was that amount suggested by Mr. Rockefeller, or yourself, or by Mr. Wheeler?

Mr. LEE. That was suggested by the gentleman whom Mr. Wheeler had asked to work up a prospectus for a working scheme, for the purposes of consideration. His name, I think, if you want it, was Mr. Weldon. He had this plan in order to insure the success of which he felt would require a guaranty fund of about $250,000.

Chairman WALSH. Was the proposition that you should extend the loan to that full amount?

Mr. LEE. Yes; that is, you could hardly call it a "proposition," Mr. Chairman. That was the prospectus discussed.

Chairman WALSH. You say it was a "prospectus"; that was the suggestion, that you should put up $250,000?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know whether or not the money was raised from any other sources?

Mr. LEE. I think not.

Chairman WALSH. When was the last time you talked to Mr. Fahey about it?

Mr. LEE. Since the 1st of January—I do not recall the date.

Chairman WALSH. Have you had any correspondence with him since you talked to him about it?

Mr. LEE. No.

Chairman WALSH. Did Mr. Rockefeller, to your knowledge, have any conversation with him, since you talked to him?

Mr. LEE. Not that I know of.

Chairman WALSH. You stated the other day with reference to conducting a union educational campaign—first, what reason did you have for turning down the proposition? Why did you say it was not practicable to put up the $250,000?

Mr. LEE. Well, I did not believe that, as a publication enterprise, it would be a success; I did not believe it would pay its way.

Chairman WALSH. You did not think, in other words, you would get the results from the $250,000?

Mr. LEE. That is not a fair way to put it.

Chairman WALSH. You put it your way.

Mr. LEE. I did not believe the scheme would be self-supporting, and I did not feel that Mr. Rockefeller should underwrite a scheme which would not be self-supporting; that it was not for the purpose of promoting Mr. Rockefeller's interests that this plan was proposed, but it was simply for the purpose of the general business interests of the country, and it did not seem to me, and I know Mr. Rockefeller felt the same way, that any such institution should be beholden to him or to his interests in the slightest particular.

Chairman WALSH. Why? That they might be influenced?

Mr. LEE. Because of the obvious impropriety of it. As I said, the feeling was from the outset that if he advanced this money it should be announced at the time it was done, and that the publication of the chamber of commerce should not be underwritten by any individual of large interests without everybody knowing all about it, and the whole plan being made known; and, assuring that should be done, it should not be entered upon unless it was considered a sound business proposition. I did not think, after analyzing it, that it was sound.

Chairman WALSH. Have you underwritten any other publication?

Mr. LEE. None.

Chairman WALSH. Leslie's Weekly?

Mr. LEE. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Have you agreed to take any particular number of any publication?

Mr. LEE. No; except the Masses.

Chairman WALSH. How many of those do you take?

Mr. LEE. I think we take about half a dozen now.

Chairman WALSH. Do you take them for general circulation?

Mr. LEE. I would be glad to give them to anybody who wanted them.

Chairman WALSH. What was the subscription price of the Nation's Business, if it had one?

Mr. LEE. I do not know, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Did it have any subscription price? Didn't it go free to the members of the chamber of commerce?

Mr. LEE. I really do not know.

Chairman WALSH. How could it be self-supporting if it did go free to the members of the chamber of commerce?

Mr. LEE. Obviously, if the scheme talked of had been worked out, there would have to be a subscription price, and the basis on which I turned it down in my mind—and I do not want to use that word in any invidious sense—was that I could not see where it could pay its way through subscriptions and the advertisements which it would get.

Chairman WALSH. Well, now, when you and Mr. Wheeler were talking this over, what was the proposed subscription price? What was said about putting the subscription price, and from what facts, if any, did you gather the fact that it would not be a paying proposition, and therefore not worth putting the money in and taking that chance?

Mr. LEE. I don't recall that detail, Mr. Walsh.

Chairman WALSH. Did you discuss the details again with Mr. Fahey?

Mr. LEE. No; I only discussed the general policy with him.

Chairman WALSH. I wish now that you would state finally and concisely, sum it up, your various activities in reference to getting out publicity for the concerns with which you are engaged connected with Mr. Rockefeller.

Mr. LEE. I get out very little, if any, publicity, Mr. Chairman. The institutions with which Mr. Rockefeller is connected get out their own publicity. I advise with them somewhat in the preparation of it.

Chairman WALSH. Very well. Now, tell what you advised with them about in the preparation of.

Mr. LEE. Well, I advised with the Rockefeller Foundation as to some matters and as to the best form in which to issue their pamphlets, but they issue a good many statements about which I do not confer with them.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you advise with them about the foundation and the foundation publications?

Mr. LEE. About the form in which they should issue some of their publications.

Chairman WALSH. And the matter that should be issued?

Mr. LEE. No.

Chairman WALSH. You advise with them about that?

Mr. LEE. I may make some suggestions with reference to some publications.

Chairman WALSH. Now, as I understand it, you do not draw any of your salary, or any part of it, from the foundation.

Mr. LEE. Quite true.

Chairman WALSH. Just connected with private interests?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Just throw that in, do you?

Mr. LEE. You must remember, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. Rockefeller, jr., is the president of the foundation, and I am a member of his staff, and I assist him as president of the foundation in any way I can, and necessarily that matter would come under his supervision.

Chairman WALSH. That is, Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr.?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And what you did for the foundation—how was that, now, again, please?

Mr. LEE. Anything I do for the foundation is in my capacity as one of Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr.'s, associates and assistants.

Chairman WALSH. And not in your capacity as a director in any of his companies?

Mr. LEE. Not in the capacity of director of the Rockefeller Foundation.

Chairman WALSH. Now, the publicity that you have gotten out with reference, say, to the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.—any publicity you have gotten out, and I have closed with the bulletins—after the bulletins you got out after conference with Mr. Rockefeller—or did you confer with him?

Mr. LEE. About the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Chairman WALSH. Any publicity you got out with reference to that.

Mr. LEE. The Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. LEE. No. I have gotten out no publicity for the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. since I have come with Mr. Rockefeller.

Chairman WALSH. Which was the last article which you gave to the newspapers yourself with reference, of course, to the Rockefeller interests or investments?

Mr. LEE. I don't recall, Mr. Chairman. It has been a long time since I have had any articles to give to the newspapers.

Chairman WALSH. Please describe your duties in connection with publicity for the Rockefeller interests.

Mr. LEE. When my opinion is asked I give it as to the most effective way to secure publicity for a particular idea or suggestion. That is then carried out by the institution itself.

Chairman WALSH. What are your duties as a member of the personal staff of John D. Rockefeller, sr.?

Mr. LEE. I represent Mr. Rockefeller on various boards of directors and have intrusted to me various confidential matters relating to a great many of his interests, as much as my time will allow me to take care of. I have very little to do with publicity, as a matter of fact.

Chairman WALSH. Well, have you given up the publicity idea altogether? That is, as to circulating alleged facts with reference to their industries, and all that.

Mr. LEE. I have not given up the idea of publicity, because I believe that publicity is the biggest idea that we can develop. I believe that the great fault committed by the Rockefeller interests in the past has been the absence of publicity.

Chairman WALSH. So you are an advocate of their giving everything the widest publicity?

Mr. LEE. Absolutely; every chance that develops. I believe that they ought to make known to the public their business and feelings and any facts about their affairs that they feel the public would be interested in.

Chairman WALSH. Now, then, is your duty—when the common mind of the Rockefeller interests is made up, is it your duty to see that the publicity gets out in proper shape?

Mr. LEE. When they consult with me with reference to any proposition, I make suggestions, and I do everything I can to secure their ends.

Chairman WALSH. Well, is the publicity department, you might say, or the publicity matter in your specific charge?

Mr. LEE. I want to be as frank with you as I can naturally from my point of view, Mr. Chairman. That subject would fall to me very frequently, and I want you to know that I do and will do everything I can suggest in that direction.

Chairman WALSH. Now, what piece of publicity have you gotten out for the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. since the publication of the last bulletin or that book of bulletins?

Mr. LEE. None, that I recall.

Chairman WALSH. That is the very last, is it?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Is there any in contemplation now?

Mr. LEE. No; except that I have urged Mr. Welborn to follow a policy of the greatest possible publicity on his own account; but I have not made any concrete suggestions as to particular things he should do.

Chairman WALSH. What piece of publicity affecting any corporation connected with the Rockefeller group has been gotten out since the last bulletin as a publication? I suppose the last publication was the book containing all the bulletins, was it?

Mr. LEE. With reference to Colorado?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. LEE. Well, the foundation, of course, is a corporation, and they have gotten out certain—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Yes; and did you have to do with the publicity that the Rockefeller Foundation got out—

Mr. LEE (interrupting). No.

Chairman WALSH (continuing). Since you have been with them?

Mr. LEE. No.

Chairman WALSH. Well, now, what publicity with regard to any other corporation connected with the Rockefeller investments?

Mr. LEE. You mean any other industrial corporation?

Chairman WALSH. Any other industrial corporation.

Mr. LEE. I have had no relation of any kind.

Chairman WALSH. You say you represent Mr. Rockefeller on other boards. What are the other boards?

Mr. LEE. I am on the board of the Equitable Trust Co. of New York, the Western Maryland Railway, and various subsidiaries of Western Maryland Railway. I don't recall their various names.

Chairman WALSH. Any other?

Mr. LEE. No.

Chairman WALSH. Are you on the Standard Oil directory?

Mr. LEE. No.

Chairman WALSH. Are you connected with the Standard Oil?

Mr. LEE. In no way whatever.

Chairman WALSH. Does any publicity you get out have to do with the Standard Oil Co.?

Mr. LEE. None whatever.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Weinstock would like to ask you some questions.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You are a director, are you not, in the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. So to that degree you are an employer of labor?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I should like to put to you substantially the same questions that I put to Mr. Mackenzie King along certain lines in order to find out what is your attitude personally toward labor. My first question was, Are you for organized labor, right or wrong? But I will ask you, at the suggestion of one of the commissioners, when did you go on the directory, Mr. Lee, of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. LEE. Some time in January.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, did you get my question?

Mr. LEE. I did. Certainly not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is, you do not stand for organized labor, right or wrong?

Mr. LEE. No.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you against it, right or wrong?

Mr. LEE. No.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you for organized labor when you believe it is in the right and against organized labor when you believe it is in the wrong?

Mr. LEE. I am.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. On the question of the closed shop, are you for the closed shop, right or wrong?

Mr. LEE. Well, I don't know that I can associate the two ideas of the closed shop and right or wrong. I am opposed to the closed shop in the sense that it forbids any man who is willing to work from taking a job which an employer wants to give him. I believe that a man who—if I want to employ a man and he wants to work for me that I should have the right to employ him.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then, to make myself a little clearer, Mr. Lee, suppose all the employees of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. should quit of their own volition, possibly through the persuasion of some of their fellows, but peacefully and voluntarily, unite in organization and act as a unit, would you be opposed to that organization?

Mr. LEE. No, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then you are not opposed to closed shop when it is established through peaceful measures and purely as the result of persuasion?

Mr. LEE. No.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Would you be opposed to it if it was the result of coercion and force and intimidation?

Mr. LEE. I should.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Under those circumstances you would object to it as strenuously as you knew how?

Mr. LEE. I would.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you believe that men have the right and should organize for their betterment?

Mr. LEE. I do. I believe that laboring men should do that whenever the circumstances permit.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Would you, as a director of the company, refuse to meet with or listen to the grievances, real or fancied, of the workers?

Mr. LEE. I would not. I think that the employer should always meet with his men or meet with their representatives if necessary.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And if occasion should arise, when those in the service of the company in which you are a director should have grievances and want a hearing, you would be ready, so far as your voice would go, to grant such a hearing?

Mr. LEE. I certainly would.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. You would be willing to call a meeting of the board of directors, would you, to meet with Mr. Hayes and these gentlemen now, if they should want to present a fancied or real grievance of those in their organization, if it be situated in Colorado; you would be willing to call a meeting of the board of directors and hear their presentation?

Mr. LEE. But it would not be within my power to call a meeting of the board of directors, but so far as my personal influence went I should be in favor of listening to the grievances of anyone.

Chairman WALSH. Technically, how do you get a special meeting of the board of directors of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. LEE. I don't recall the by-law on that subject, Mr. Chairman; but I would like to state just as clearly as I can that I believe thoroughly in the principle of meeting with the men or with their representatives; and if Mr. Hayes wanted to meet with me—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). No; with the board of directors that could act.

Mr. LEE. Well that would be a very unusual way of acting in a matter of that sort.

Chairman WALSH. It is a personal matter—a personal belief with you?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Sort of a yearning?

(No answer.)

Chairman WALSH. Mrs. Harriman would like to ask you some questions?

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Mr. Lee, I would like to know what your relation was with the railroad brotherhood while you were in connection with the Pennsylvania Railroad. Did you come in contact with them at all?

Mr. LEE. I did not.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. The officers of all the brotherhoods?

Mr. LEE. I have met some of them, but that is all.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Yes. Did you give out any publicity relating to them?

Mr. LEE. I did not. I think you have confused me with the conference committee of managers which had two Lees connected with it.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. No; I am told I have not confused you at all.

Mr. LEE. Well, I have got out no publicity with reference to the railroad brotherhoods.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Well, I never was told that you did. I simply want to know if you had, or what your connection with them was.

Mr. LEE. No; I did not come in contact with them. What I started to say was that the railroad brotherhoods had a contest with the conference committee of managers in New York, and the chairman of that conference committee of railroad managers was named Lee, and their publicity man's name was Lee; but I had nothing to do with the campaign.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. May I ask what you did do in connection with the Pennsylvania Railroad?

Mr. LEE. Well, I was in charge of publicity, among other things.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. But had no connection with the employees at all—I mean in the case of a strike. Wouldn't you give out publicity as to the railway side of the matter?

Mr. LEE. Well, it so happens that I don't recall having given out any publicity relating to a strike while I was associated with the road.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. That is all, Mr. Lee.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I have a question.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Commissioner O'Connell will inquire of you?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Just this question, Mr. Lee, in further connection with a question put to you in regard to your position in the matter of meeting with men in their organized capacity, or whether they were right or wrong; and you answered that you would, or their representatives.

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I take it from that that had you been in control in Colorado prior to the time the strike occurred, and had these men asked and requested by communication that they be given a hearing, whether their grievances were real or imaginary, you would have met them.

Mr. LEE. Certainly.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then, I take it from your position the officials out there in Colorado, not particularly the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., but all of them that were requested to meet the men before the strike occurred, in your opinion make a mistake in not entering into a meeting with them.

Mr. LEE. I think they did.

Chairman WALSH. Now, if it was a mistake, that had very grave consequences with reference to the loss of lives and the destruction of property, have you formulated any plan now in your own mind as to what action you will take with the board of directors the next time you meet?

Mr. LEE. I do not quite catch the meaning of your question.

Chairman WALSH. I say, if you have concluded now that the operators were wrong in refusing to grant this interview with the representatives of the mine workers, what have you formulated in your own mind with reference to the action you will take the next time the board of directors meet?

Mr. LEE. I have not formulated any thoughts, Mr. Chairman. I am quite sure that in so far as the officers of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. took that policy they felt they were doing the right and wise thing. It may be, if I had been in their position at the time, surrounded by all the influences as they were, I might have done the same thing; but looking at it all from this point and my own feelings with reference to such matters, I think it is eminently desirable always to meet your men, and meet them in any way they want to be met; and that does not commit you to anything.

Chairman WALSH. You mean the meeting does not commit you to anything?

Mr. LEE. No; it does not commit you to anything beyond hearing what their grievance is and talking it over with them. I think that is one of the most important things of all in avoiding serious disputes.

Chairman WALSH. I think so, too, probably. Now, then, that being the case, and after you have heard here from so many quarters about the sad results, perhaps, of the failure to have that hearing, haven't you been giving some thought as to what you should do, as a member of the board of directors in the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., with reference to the situation?

Mr. LEE. No; I have not. I believe if that situation should ever arise again the officers would meet the men.

Chairman WALSH. Are you a stockholder in the company, or just have enough stock to represent—

Mr. LEE (interrupting). I have qualifying stock.

Chairman WALSH. Just qualifying stock?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And do you feel, simply being a qualified stockholder, that you could vote on that board with reference to the matter of removing an executive officer any way other than that which Mr. Rockefeller desired?

Mr. LEE. I feel that I could.

Chairman WALSH. Well, what would happen to you, do you think, if you did?

Mr. LEE. I don't think anything would happen to me.

Chairman WALSH. Do you think that you could vote to remove Mr. Welborn and that if Mr. Rockefeller desired his retention, nevertheless, it would be all right?

Mr. LEE. Of course, Mr. Chairman, such a supposition is absurd.

Chairman WALSH. Why?

Mr. LEE. Well, things are not done that way. Matters of that sort are always discussed in advance and a general policy arrived at before they are ever submitted to formal board action. I want to be just as clear as words can make it that I believe absolutely in the sincerity, the honesty of purpose, and the wisdom of Mr. Welborn. As I say, if I had been in his place, under the same conditions I might have done the same thing.

Chairman WALSH. Would anything make you change your opinion of the wisdom of all Mr. Welborn's acts there so that in a conference held ahead of a meeting of the board of directors of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. with Mr. Rockefeller you would vote to discharge Mr. Welborn, or would announce your decision to vote to discharge him, even though Mr. Rockefeller did not want him discharged?

Mr. LEE. I am very sure that Mr. Rockefeller and I would never have any difference of opinion with reference to Mr. Welborn's character.

Chairman WALSH. Or his conduct or acts in the Colorado matter?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Whatever they are, you are sure you and Mr. Rockefeller would agree that he had acted as wisely as he could under the circumstances?

Mr. LEE. That is my feeling about it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Just one further question. The chairman asked you, in reply to which you said if a similar situation arose in Colorado you were sure the officials of the company would meet their workers or their representatives before the trouble occurred.

Mr. LEE. I did not say I was sure. I said I believed they would.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And to that extent, then, the strike of the Colorado miners was not a failure? But brought about some change in the hearts of some people, at least—

Mr. LEE (interrupting). No question, Mr. O'Connell, but what mistakes were made in that strike. I think Mr. Rockefeller has pointed out that if the history of events was to be lived over again that a good many people would do differently.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you aware of the fact, Mr. Lee, that it was brought out in the testimony here that the operators did meet with representatives of the strikers in the office of the governor some two months after the strike took place?

Mr. LEE. Yes; that has been brought out, Mr. Weinstock; but I can not say that I have been impressed with the fact that the representatives of the men who met the operators were truly representative.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, will you explain in what way they did and did not represent the men?

Mr. LEE. Well, I just give you my impression. I have not been impressed with the representative character of that committee.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you recall who the members were?

Mr. LEE. I do not. I simply give you a general impression. My feeling is that that was one serious mistake.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Meeting these men in the office of the governor?

Mr. LEE. It was the failure to meet the real representatives and talk it over with them.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You don't know how these men were chosen that met in the governor's office?

Mr. LEE. No; I simply give you my impression as to their general standing.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Will you permit me to read into the record just exactly what did occur?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes; very glad to.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. This is a letter addressed by President Welborn to Mr. McClement, dated December 4, 1913. [Reading:]

"DECEMBER 4, 1913.

"MY DEAR MR. MCCLEMENT: We feel that we have made substantial progress in the conduct of the strike since I last wrote you, although the increase in output during the three weeks has not been large.

"At the urgent request of the governor and under some newspaper pressure, we met three of our striking miners in conference with the governor November 26. There has never been any substantial objection to meeting our own employees or our former employees for the purpose of discussing proper matters, yet we have felt that such a meeting might be construed as an indirect recognition of the officers of the union.

"We succeeded, however, in yielding to the requested meeting in such manner as to have the selection of the men, nominally at least, in the hands of the governor."

Do you get the idea? The governor selected the committee, not the men. [Continues reading:]

"And when the meeting was called to order by the governor, who acted as chairman"—

The governor acted as chairman of the committee. [Reads:]

"The miners in answer to questions stated that they represented only themselves directly, and would be obliged to take back to the miners for their ap-approval or disapproval whatever understandings, if any, might be reached. We reached no direct understanding; in fact, we wanted none, as we were almost sure that had an understanding between the miners and ourselves been reached it would have received the stamp of approval of the officers of the organization and in that way been twisted into an arrangement between us and the organization."

Now, there are a lot of other things, but I think nothing relevant to this matter.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Any thing further on that?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Oh, yes; there are several pages in the letter.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Just read it all. I think it is important to know it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL (reading). "Nevertheless the conference accomplished a great deal of good, as it convinced the governor that the grievances of the men were of a trivial character and that we had already granted, even before demanded and before the strike was called, everything that the men had a right to ask or strike for, and as a result the governor issued a statement, addressed jointly to the miners and ourselves, recommending termination of the strike. I am inclosing a copy of this for your information."

I don't think there is much else in it on the point, but I would be glad—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. May I look at it?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Yes. I read to the end of the second paragraph. The sense of that is that the three men were, on Mr. Welborn's own statement, practically selected by the governor.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I think that which follows is very significant, Mr. O'Connell.

Chairman WALSH. Do you want to ask the witness some questions on that?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I want to after reading it—

Chairman WALSH. Well, but do you want to ask the witness some questions?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Very well.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I did not read it all through.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I want to call attention to his very significant statement here [reading]:

"Our letter was answered by the withdrawal of the arbitration request, and a pretense of submitting the matter to vote was made, with the result that the governor's proposition was unanimously voted down by the miners. We are, however, beginning to receive reports of the manner in which the voting at the meetings was conducted. These reports show that the proposition was railroaded through and not fully explained to the men. Had a secret ballot been taken, we believe the majority of the men would have voted to return to work, as we have the best of reason for believing that most of the men now on strike are staying away from the mines only through fear of attack from the organization's agents."

Now, doesn't this make it plain, Mr. Lee, that while these three men were there without authority to bind the union—the strikers—they were representing the strikers, and they took back to the strikers the proposition that had been made to the governor, and the strikers unanimously, as stated here, voted the proposition down?

Mr. LEE. That is the record, Mr. Weinstock, but I can only repeat my impression, that that committee was not truly representative.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I think the letter of Mr. Welborn states that the governor had selected the three men. The men themselves had no chance or opportunity in selecting who should be in the number.

Mr. LEE. My impression may be wrong, but that is the feeling I have about it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is all I see in here that touches upon that point.

Chairman WALSH. That is all, then, Mr. Lee. You may be excused permanently, and we thank you for your attendance.

Dr. Gaddis.

TESTIMONY OF REV. EUGENE S. GADDIS—Recalled.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Gaddis, I understand that you have a statement that you think you can present in a comparatively few moments?

Dr. GADDIS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You see we are crowded for time. Well, as concisely as you can, make any statement you desire to make. I understand you have communicated to Mr. Manly the fact that you would like to make a further statement in reply to certain matters.

Dr. GADDIS. I certainly apologize, Mr. Chairman, for appearing before you again, but there were such strong statements made here yesterday that I should be given a chance to reply. I attribute Mr. Bowers's statement yesterday to the infirmities of age, or the befogging of vision, or else he has taken as prima facie evidence what has come from his mercenaries in the Rockies, and from my close-range vision of them, most of them say or do anything that would make it look like they were right. That it may be thoroughly understood, the spirit of the man with whom we had to deal, ponder well. I appealed to him, Bowers, to cooperate with me for the erection of camp chapels in which to worship God. He replied, "They need more jails down there."

Before I went into his office the first time, I was warned not to oppose him, and to permit him to do all of the talking if he seemed so disposed.

He convinced me then and there that he considered his attitude and utterances as unassailable. As he did not know more than one-half of what he thought he knew of affairs afield, his poses and poises were enough to make a burro laugh.

I remember distinctly of how he told me how he issued an ex-cathedra order to the manager of the fuel department. He told Weltzel that that was the way it would go in the future, regardless of what argument he presented.

His Louis the Fourteenth airs were a topic of conversation throughout the camp, often provoking smiles. He "drives the peg," is the way one of the petty bosses put it.

The local Denver manager of one of the largest commercial enterprises in the United States told me this. New bids were to be submitted for his line of material. His company was awarded the previous contract. Mr. Bowers was just leaving the city, and left instructions with the C. F. & I. purchasing agent not even to wait to receive the bids of aforesaid company, and when it did arrive it was not to be considered.

Centuries ago heathen China had an established principle for Government officers: "Whenever a ruler behaves unjustly or unmercifully, remove him." Colorado has been considerably behind China on this line.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Mr. Gaddis, is that all of the way through that general topic?

Dr. GADDIS. No, sir. I will get down to the matter.

The notice, in 26 languages, posted in the camps that the men could have the privilege of checkweighmen was completely nullified by the company refusing to check off for the payment of such an officer.

Chairman WALSH. One thing that I wish to say: Anything that referred to you will be all right, but characterizations or those general statements we do not care for.

Dr. GADDIS. All right; I have it right here.

Regarding my request that all Roman Catholic "supers" be dismissed, Mr. Bowers's assertion of it was the first time I had ever heard it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Is there any truth in it?

Dr. GADDIS. There is not. I heard it for the first time from Mr. Bowers's lips yesterday, that I proposed to discharge the men because they were Roman Catholics. There are only two Roman Catholic superintendents in the entire system that I know of, and I held very cordial relations with each of them. Mr. E. G. Morrand, principal of the school at Sopris, a Roman Catholic, was my choice for my assistant in the sociological department, in organizing Boy Scout patrols in the camps. We were also working on a plan together to make an exhibit of the sociological work at the Panama Exposition in San Francisco. I will not go over all of these charges that Mr. Bowers made here yesterday. The story that I requested the discharge of a teacher because she was a Catholic—I never heard of it before until yesterday.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Was there any truth in it, even if you never heard it before? Did you make any such effort?

Dr. GADDIS. I did not.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Was there such a girl school-teacher removed?

Dr. GADDIS. Not for a cause of that kind.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Was there any removed there?

Dr. GADDIS. In connection with my work?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Yes, sir.

Dr. GADDIS. A number of them.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Might the implication be that she was removed because of religious preferences?

Dr. GADDIS. An implication and a fact are entirely different. That is the reason I wanted to make a statement that it was not so. At Primero the company owns a church—an ideal building of the kind—in which both Protestant and Catholic services are held. I advocated to the company that this kind of a building be duplicated in their other camps.

When I took charge of the circulating library I found several boxes of books in the Italian language, teaching the principles of the Catholic religion. I gave them to the priests working in the camps of the Trinidad district and for the San Rafael Hospital. In the purchase of an invoice of new books I found a volume called "The Shonberg-Cotta Family," which gives an account of the Protestant reformation under Luther. I would not allow the book to be sent out through the camps. I canceled the order for the Christian Endeavor World, one of the largest organs of Protestant young people in America, also the Christian Herald, of which Talmage used to be the editor, and would not allow them to be placed in the public-school reading circle at Berwind because they taught the principles of Protestantism.

Mr. Bowers intimated that an increase of $300 in salary and I would consider all sociological matters in a fine condition. In my reports to the company, for very good reasons, I brought to their attention improvements which were being effected. I also presented subjects which were quite distasteful to them, and this was one of the principal reasons for my discharge.

I believe that is all, Mr. Chairman.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Mr. Bowers in his testimony yesterday, Mr. Gaddis, spoke about having sent you a letter, a copy of which he had, in the form of a telegram, a letter to you of January 9, 1914. Do you recall having received that letter?

Dr. GADDIS. I do, Mr. Weinstock, and it was very wide of the mark of the letter I sent Mr. Bowers, and I was astonished at the contents of the letter that he sent me in reply.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. This is what that letter is said to have contained.

Dr. GADDIS. I am very familiar with it, and you can refer to any part of it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I want to refresh my own memory on it as well. He said that he wrote this letter in reply to Dr. Gaddis [reading]:

"Your letters of January 21 and 29 are at hand. You evidently are familiar with one very important fact, namely, that the schools in all our mining camps are State schools."

"Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Who is that letter from, and to whom?"

"Mr. BOWERS. A telegram from President Welborn to me, since I have been here."

"Chairman WALSH. Are you reading now from a telegram that was sent you by Mr. Welborn?"

"Mr. BOWERS. From my letter, that he could not get to me."

"Chairman WALSH. So he wired you and you are quoting from that?"

"Mr. BOWERS. It is a telegraphic copy taken from my reply to Mr. Gaddis."

"Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Very well, I understand it now."

"Mr. BOWERS (continuing reading): 'You evidently are not familiar with one very important fact, namely, that the schools in all of our mining camps are State schools, under the direct supervision and dictation of the State authorities. I am only trying to show the facts, and so forth, of Mr. Gaddis, and I am giving you the facts. And we have no more right to dictate who shall be employed as teachers in our coal camps than we have to dictate as to the teachers of Denver or any other town. While men in our employ at our various camps usually are selected as commissioners they have to be elected, and are responsible to the State for all of their acts.'

"Therefore, if we should undertake to be overdictatorial and exacting, the State would be justified in ordering us to keep our hands off. While we would be glad to employ teachers whose ideas are in harmony with ours, we have no legal right whatever to dictate or interfere with the commissioners in the selection of teachers. Will say that if you should stir up this matter in your territory in the interest of Protestantism—and I want to say that some of our Catholic teachers were some of the best Sunday-school teachers we had in the camp."

"Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If it is allowable, may I ask you if you are a Catholic?"

"Mr. BOWERS. No, sir; I am a Presbyterian. But I never threw a stone at a Catholic or any other denomination. It is not my right or privilege, and I protest against it with all the vigor I can. That is my stand on that. I never did it. The first 15 or 20 men I employed were Irishmen, all but one, and I have no better friends on earth than them.

"In your territory in the interest of Protestantism an undertaking to force an observance of the social standard you have set up would do an incalculable amount of mischief. It is the opinion of our official board that ministers and religious workers either directly employed by us or permitted in our camps should confine themselves solely to the presentation of the gospel, as we believe that is the work which is needed and will include all moral and social reform. The only thing we had in mind in asking Dr. Morrill when he was at Pueblo to keep an eye on the schools and to advise with the several commissioners in the various camps was the intention of giving the commissioners the benefit of his experience and to suggest the class of teachers to employ, and that is the only thing we expect Dr. Corwin, Mr. Weitzel, and yourself to do. It is impossible to vest you with any authority whatever in connection with the schools in our camps."

"The copies of letters from Mr. Gaddis to Mr. Bowers referred to, as well as connection with other officers of the company, are missing from Gaddis records."

Now, what was the occasion of Mr. Bowers sending you that letter?

Dr. GADDIS. I wrote him, Mr. Weinstock, that I wanted, if possible, to correct conditions in the camps, which to me were almost intolerable, in regard to these dances and licentious gatherings, which I considered were being carried on way into Sabbath morning; and the thing that Mr. Bowers stated, that I wanted to stop the dancing, I never proposed that, because I knew it would be impossible, but I did want to elevate them in tone and correct things that I knew were very bad going on and demoralizing the young people of the camp. Now, the letter that Mr. Bowers wrote me in regard to my relations to schools was amusing to me, knowing the situation as I did—the employees of camps, not only in the closed camps, but many of the open camps. The men, or the directors of the school boards, in open and closed camps, many of them—and, by the way, there are some 65 teachers, I believe. He said yesterday that I wanted the resignation of a hundred Roman Catholic teachers, and there are only 65 that they have any authority over. To give you an idea of how that letter appeals to me: There was a man discharged from the principalship, as he believed, unjustly. The division superintendent simply told one or two of the directors if he was not discharged they would be canned. The man appealed to Mr. Bowers, and he was reinstated over their heads. Bowers said if the man was not put back that he would see their heads dropped off. That was the man who I referred to that they went after the second time. I received a long-distance telephone from Mr. Welborn to come to Denver to confer on it, and it was taken up with Mr. Bowers and Welborn both, and for Mr. Bowers to make out that they did not exercise their influence in that way to me was absurd, because I knew that they did, and it was part of my business to know. The camp superintendents were notified that that was part of my work, and when I went to Sunrise they were notified there that that was part of my work, to help select teachers.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do we understand when Mr. Bowers made this statement on the witness stand yesterday he was not speaking the truth? He said the first interview that he had with Mr. Gaddis he was as ardent in his expression of sympathy for the strikers as—

Dr. GADDIS. That is absolutely untrue.

Chairman WALSH. We will now stand adjourned until 9.30 in the morning instead of 10.

(Thereupon, at 5 o'clock p. m., Tuesday, May 25, 1915, the commission took an adjournment until the following morning, Wednesday, May 26, 1915, at 9.30 o'clock a. m.)

EXHIBITS.

McCORKLE EXHIBIT.

To the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. (in care of the Rev. E. S. Gaddis, superintendent of the department of sociology):

The people of Sunrise feel that a new hall could be made to add greatly to their convenience and pleasure. Following the suggestion of the Rev. E. S. Gaddis, the undersigned organizations express the desire of their members in the following petition or request, namely:

That the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. erect a new hall at Sunrise, Wyo., giving place therein to as many of the following suggestions as are found advisable:

I. A motion-picture auditorium, to seat at least 500 persons; such auditorium to be equipped with a stage for dramatic recitals and dressing rooms on each side of the stage equipped with lavatories.

II. A large assembly room for lodges; in connection therewith (1) a room for paraphernalia, with separate accommodations for each fraternal order; (2) an anteroom large enough to accommodate about 30 persons; (3) a kitchen, supplied with range, etc. (Such lodge room to be on the top floor of the hall.)

III. A dancing floor.

IV. (1) A pool room, a bowling alley, shower baths, and a barber shop. (2) A small gymnasium, for boxing and other vigorous exercise. (3) A literature room, from which books and magazines may be distributed, together with a room for reading and for the use of clubs, as Boy Scouts, Camp Fire Girls, etc.

A NEW HALL FOR SUNRISE.

It has been suggested by Rev. E. S. Gaddis, superintendent of the department of sociology of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., that gratification of the desire of the people of Sunrise for a new hall is possible, and perhaps probable. If such a hall is to be built, it should be planned so as to satisfy the needs of all the people as far as possible, and especially their social and fraternal needs. The request for its erection, therefore, can come very properly, Mr. Gaddis believes, from the various fraternal orders of the community.

In order to know how the hall should be planned that it may reach the fullest measure of usefulness, the ideas of the people who are to use it are important. Each fraternal organization, therefore, is requested to send some one of its members to confer on the formulation of the request. Those so sent, and all others who are interested, will kindly meet at the home of D. S. McCorkle on Thursday evening, January 21, 1915, at 7.30 o'clock. Any who can not meet at that time please speak to McCorkle and arrange to meet and consider the question at some earlier time.

The request for a hall, in whatever form and with whatever specifications decided upon at this preliminary meeting, will be referred to each organization for its official approval before being sent to Rev. Gaddis.

The chief object, indeed, of this preliminary meeting is to decide what accommodations the hall ought to afford. For instance, the following suggestions as to what the hall ought to provide have been made already by various persons:

I. An auditorium for motion pictures, large enough to seat at least 500 persons. Same to be supplied with movable seats, permitting the room to be used in other ways, as for dances, socials, Boy Scout meetings, etc.

II. A kitchen, where food may be prepared for suppers given by the various organizations of Sunrise.

III. Assembly rooms, special rooms for storing paraphernalia, and other accommodations for such fraternal orders of Sunrise as wish to avail themselves of the opportunity.

IV. A gymnasium.

V. A library or reading room.

VI. Shower baths, available at the lowest possible cost to the families of Sunrise.

VII. Small clubrooms, for the use of organizations among the children et al.

COMMITTEE ON FORMULATION OF A REQUEST FOR A NEW HALL AT SUNRISE, WYO.

Called to order at 8 p. m. January 21, 1915; D. S. McCorkle, temporary chairman.

Those present and fraternal orders represented were as follows: Harrop Corkill and C. M. Morgan, of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows; John Pollard and C. W. Smith, of the Eagles; S. H. Whitney, of the Woodmen of the World; George Skeltsas, of the Socrates; D. S. McCorkle; Mrs. Chloe Hamilton and Mrs. Gilberta Weed, of the Ladies' Club; Mrs. M. V. Robertson, of the Ladies' Aid; Mrs. Thomas Carbis and Mrs. Laura Wilson, of the Royal Neighbors; and Mrs. John Harris, of the Rebeccas.

Officers elected were: D. S. McCorkle, chairman, and S. H. Whitney, secretary.

The purpose of the meeting was stated by the chairman, namely, to formulate a request for a new hall to be built at Sunrise, Wyo., and to submit same to each social and fraternal organization of the people of Sunrise for official approval, preparatory to its presentation to the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. through the company's superintendent of its department of sociology, the Rev. E. S. Gaddis. More specifically, in its formulation of such a request the purpose of the committee is to come to a common agreement regarding such needs of the people of Sunrise as it would be desirable and practicable for a new hall to satisfy, and thereupon to embody in the request for the hall suitable provisions to meet these needs.

The committee decided to specify the following provisions for inclusion in the request for a new hall:

I. A motion-picture auditorium, to seat at least 500 persons; such auditorium to be equipped with a stage for dramatic recitals, and dressing rooms on each side of the stage, equipped with lavatories.

II. A large assembly room for lodges; in connection therewith (1) a room for paraphernalia, with separate accommodations ample for each fraternal order; (2) an anteroom large enough to accommodate about 20 persons; (3) a kitchen, supplied with range, etc. (Such lodge room to be on the top floor of the hall.)

III. A dancing floor.

IV. A pool room, a bowling alley, shower baths, and a barber shop; a small gymnasium for boxing and other vigorous exercise; and a literature room, from which books and magazines may be distributed, together with a small room for reading and for the use of clubs, as Boy Scouts, Camp Fire Girls, etc.

Resolved, That it is the desire of this committee that the different departments of the building be so run that they yield sufficient revenue to be self-sustaining.

A subcommittee of five was elected from among those present, to convene at 7.30 p. m. January 22, at the home of Mrs. Weed, to decide upon a proper wording of the request, such request, in duplicate copies, thereupon to be presented to the various orders and other organizations of Sunrise for their official approval.

Members of this subcommittee were the chairman, and S. H. Whitney, C. W. Smith, Mrs. Chloe Hamilton, and Mrs. Gilberta Weed.

LEE EXHIBIT.

26 BROADWAY,
New York, June 1, 1914.

DEAR MR. LEE: I am sending you herewith a number of newspaper clippings, which I think it would be worth your while to read before our next talk. Be good enough to see that they are all returned to me when you are through with them.

Very truly,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.

MR. IVY L. LEE,
*Assistant to the President,
Pennsylvania Railroad Co., Philadelphia, Pa.*

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD CO.,
OFFICE OF EXECUTIVE ASSISTANT,
Philadelphia, June 3, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: Mr. Rea is quite agreeable, in view of the important questions involved, to my undertaking the plan along the lines we discussed.

I shall be happy to see you in a few days, to take up plans somewhat definitely, but in the meantime I will go ahead with such tentative arrangements as it will be possible to make.

I should be glad to have a talk with Mr. Bowers. Will you be kind enough to advise as to when and where it will be best for me to see him? I should think that a few hours' talk would give me all the information I require at the moment.

I inclose a copy of a pamphlet I spoke to you about yesterday which we issued last year with reference to the floods in the Middle West. We distributed some ten or fifteen thousand copies of this to very good advantage, in my opinion.

Very truly, yours,

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,
26 Broadway, New York City.

JUNE 5, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: You will find herewith most of the newspaper clippings you sent me. A few I have retained, as they contain suggestions which I hope later to utilize.

Attached hereto you will find a proof of a sample leaflet of a proposed series to be issued by the operators at Denver, together with the manuscript copy of a slip which should be sent out with the leaflets. It is the idea that all of these shall be called "The Struggle in Colorado for Industrial Freedom," though, of course, you may suggest a better title. I think the pages should be somewhat shorter than these galleys indicate.

It is the thought that by sending these leaflets to a large number of leaders of public opinion throughout the country you will be able to get certain ideas before the makers of that public opinion which will be of value.

In order that you may see clearly the thought I have in mind, I am sending herewith a bound volume containing a set of the leaflets we issued in connection with the recent campaign to increase freight rates 5 per cent.

These bulletins were sent out to the press and printed on one side of the sheet, and were also sent to Members of Congress, governors of States, etc., in pamphlet form printed on both sides of the sheet. They were usually accompanied by a loose note, such as that inclosed, in order to show the authority back of them. I inclose a sample of each of the forms in which the bulletins were sent to the press and that in which Members of Congress, etc., received them.

In his speech in Congress on Tuesday, May 5, in speaking of these leaflets, Senator La Follette said:

"The Baltimore & Ohio, New York Central, and Pennsylvania Railroads conducted a publicity campaign through the publicity agent of the Pennsylvania Railroad. Thirty-two anonymous, ex parte bulletins, reprinted below, have been issued and scattered broadcast over the country. They have formed the basis of thousands of news items, editorials, and addresses. They played no small part in influencing a large proportion of the upward of 22,000 newspapers in the United States."

I have in mind that perhaps through the issuance from Denver of a series of such bulletins we can do a great deal to clarify the public mind. As bulletin No. 2, I would suggest that we utilize those portions of the report of the military occupation of the strike zone dealing with the question of disarmament, preceding what is said on that subject with this introduction:

"In order that the people of Colorado and the public generally might understand conditions with which the militia and the mine operators were confronted in the strike zone of Colorado, Brig. Gen. John Chase, commanding the military district of Colorado, has submitted a comprehensive report to the governor, giving a full account of the military occupation of the strike zone. In that report Gen. Chase has this to say with reference to his efforts to disarm the strikers and the mine guards."

I would follow this leaflet with a considerable number of such leaflets, the idea being to make them all dignified, free from rancor, and based as far as possible upon documentary or other evidence susceptible of proof, if need be. The distribution of these through an extended period will, I am quite sure, create a great deal of discussion.

I am going to Binghamton to-night to see Mr. Bowers, and will take along this draft and explain these ideas to him. It may be that he can give me additional suggestions for further bulletins. I already have enough material right here, however, to get a number of them started. They can, at any rate at first, be printed and addressed in Philadelphia, and then be sent out to Denver to be mailed.

I have heard from Mr. Bigelow that he is prepared to go to Colorado early next week and start preparation of the booklet we have talked of. Will it be sufficient if I address a note of introduction to Mr. Welborn asking him to extend all facilities to Mr. Bigelow?

With reference to the other matters we discussed, they are all under way, and I shall doubtless have definite advices to give early next week.

Very truly, yours,

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,
26 Broadway, New York City.

26 BROADWAY,
New York, June 5, 1914.

DEAR MR. LEE: I am sending you herewith further literature on Colorado, all of which kindly return to me, with the other clippings and documents, when you have finished with them. The article from the Evening Post of June 3, which is excellent, is written by the manager of the coal mines of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., a man of the highest standing and very generally liked in the coal fields. The editorial from the New York Times of June 3 indicates the vacillation of the papers in their attitude toward this question. The article in the Pueblo Chieftain of May 31, written by the wife of one of the miners, is excellent, as also the article in the same paper by a small operator. I am sending, in addition, a copy of the Home Defender for June, which gives on the first and last pages the statement of Mrs. Helen Grenfell and the Colorado Masons' resolution, both of which you may have already seen. I also inclose letters and clippings sent to Mr. McClement, one of the directors of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., by Mr. Welborn, the president.

Since writing the above, I have received this file from Mr. Bowers, which is worth reading. Also an excellent article from the Coal Age, which outlines a plan for a broad, educative campaign of publicity, such as you and I have talked of.

Very truly,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.

Mr. IVY L. LEE,

26 BROADWAY,
New York, June 8, 1914.

DEAR MR. LEE: Your letter of June 5, with its inclosures, is received. I authorize the publication and distribution of the sample leaflet No. 1, of which you inclose a galley proof. We can not think of a better title for the series than that which you have selected. The foreword which you propose to mail with the leaflet covers the ground.

I note that you have arranged with Mr. Bigelow to go to Denver at once to prepare the booklet on the sociological and welfare work which the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. does among its employees. This I authorize, and am writing Mr. Welborn that you will send Mr. Bigelow to him for such suggestion and cooperation as Mr. Welborn can give him.

Very truly,

DEAR MR. LEE: I think I have sent you a copy of Mr. Brisbane's article on Colorado from the American Press of May 9. To make sure I am inclosing an additional copy.

I am wondering whether any portion of this editorial could be used in a bulletin. Please return this copy to me if you have others.

Mr. Greene tells me of your letter in answer to President Elliot's suggestion of names for the bulletins. I certainly think that all college and university presidents should be on the list.

Very truly,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.

JULY 8, 1914.

DEAR MR. LEE: Your letter of July 6 is received. I am much gratified at Mr. Welborn's expressions of appreciation of your work.

The various newspaper clippings referring to the Johns Hopkins gift are excellent.

I am sending you the March copy of the monthly bulletin of the American Iron and Steel Institute. I wonder whether anything of this kind would be valuable in connection with the fuel company.

The inclosure need not be returned.

Very truly,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.

JUNE 10, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: For your information, I inclose herewith copy of a letter which I am to-day writing to Mr. Welborn.

Would it not be desirable that I meet Maj. Boughton before he returns to the West?

If you agree in this, I will be glad to arrange a meeting at his convenience.

Very truly, yours,

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,

26 Broadway, New York City.

26 BROADWAY,

New York, June 10, 1914.

DEAR MR. LEE: I am sending you herewith a copy of Business America for June, in which you will see articles by Upton Sinclair and Prof. John Bates Clark. This article of Sinclair's and his letter to me of May 26, a newspaper copy of which I gave you the other day, has made me wonder whether it would be wise for me to make some indirect reply in the papers which would correct some of the glaring and false statements contained in the magazine article and letter. With that in view, I have dictated the memorandum which I inclose. It is rough and incomplete and only suggestive. After further reflection and conference with my colleagues here, we have agreed that it is best for me not to make any publication at this time. Several points in my memorandum, however, could well, even more appropriately, be used in the letter from Gov. Ammons to President Wilson which you are proposing to prepare as soon as the major's memorandum reaches you, which I hope will be very shortly.

I am also sending you several pages from the Black Diamond of May 9 and May 16. The former gives an excellent history of the situation and conditions leading up to the strike, an extended statement by Mr. Welborn covering the situation, also an editorial, which is good. The latter deals more particularly with the Ludlow battle. You will find both informing.

For you to glance through, I am sending you the Rockefeller number of the Christian Socialist and a copy of the Longmont Ledger from Boulder, Colo., issued May 27. Also E. W. Howe's Monthly for June, which has a pretty strong article regarding the unbridled license of the press and the necessity for some offsetting force. Please return all of these publications when you have finished with them.

Very truly,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.

Mr. IVY L. LEE,

DEAR MR. LEE: Inclosed please find check to your order for two thousand dollars ($2,000) as a personal loan applicable to the initial expense of organizing the publicity campaign which you are undertaking on behalf of the coal operators in Denver. So soon as your statements of account begin to be sent in and checks in payment thereof from the operators' committee to reach you, this money may be returned to us.

As I said to you yesterday, I should be glad to have you spend any night next week, up to Friday night, with me in New York that we may discuss the philanthropic and educational work which this office has been doing. Please advise me at your convenience what night will suit you best.

Very truly,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.

Mr. IVY L. LEE,
Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Pa.

JUNE 13, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: The various documents you have sent me have been received and I am giving them careful consideration. I have not received the series of articles by your father, published in the World's Work. I remember reading them at the time, but shall be glad to read them again, as I would of course now go over them much more carefully.

The information from Mr. Easley is most interesting. I feel that about the third bulletin we should get out would be one summarizing the present strike situation in Colorado. It was with that idea in mind that I wrote the letter to Mr. Welborn.

The printing of the bulletins is going ahead and we expect to get the first bulletin out next week. There has been some delay owing to the fact that I want to get a typographical arrangement which is exactly as I think it should be. After the first one is gotten exactly as we want it, the following ones can go ahead on just the same lines. My plan is that after we get this started, to get one out about twice a week for some months. The cumulative effect of this should be valuable.

I have written Mr. Greene asking him to make an appointment for me to see Maj. Boughton next Tuesday afternoon, and I shall be glad to communicate with you upon my arrival in New York and arrange as to when and where I shall meet you. I am looking forward with pleasure to spending Tuesday night at your home.

Very truly, yours

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,
28 Broadway, New York City.

JUNE 11, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: I acknowledge with interest yours of June 10, inclosing a copy of Business America and other publications, together with a draft of memorandum which you had dictated. I feel that the time will soon be ripe for you to say something on this subject, and, in regard to that, I hope to talk to you when I see you next Tuesday night. I am inclined to think that at the moment the best thing we can do would be to give the letter from

Gov. Ammons to President Wilson our attention, and I hope that we can accomplish something very soon.

The other document you inclose I shall examine with care. Meanwhile, I am working up various leaflets, with a view to their being sent out to Denver.

I also acknowledge receipt of check for $2,000, applicable to expense of organizing the publicity campaign. I understand that this is to be utilized as working capital and to be returned at your pleasure or when the scheme reaches a point where such working capital is not required.

As advised you this morning, I shall be glad to come over next Tuesday night, if that is agreeable to you, and wish to thank you for your proffered hospitality.

Very truly, yours,

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,
26 Broadway, New York City.

JUNE 11, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: I do not know to what extent you are able to read newspaper clippings such as the inclosed. They take a good deal of time and I do not want to burden you with things of this sort, but these two clippings are rather significant along the lines of the general question we have talked of and concerning which I am giving a good deal of thought.

Desiring as I do that you should understand some of the ideals by which I work, I am venturing to inclose you a manuscript copy of an address I delivered before the American Railway Guild in New York some weeks ago. Perhaps Mr. Murphy and Mr. Greene might also be interested to read this. Also, I might add, this address was published in the Railway Age Gazette last week and I notice has been reprinted in the New York Journal of Commerce of yesterday. The American Railway Guild plans to print it and to send it to every railroad officer in the United States. I tell you these facts in order that I may justify my suggesting that you take the time to read it.

Very truly, yours,

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,

DEAR MR. LEE: I am sending you herewith, from the June number of Everybody's Magazine, an article on Colorado, by George Creel, which I think you should read, in order to know what infamous statements are being made.

I am also sending you a copy of a series of articles written by my father several years ago and published in the World's Work, which will give you a little insight into his life and character and work. This background will be helpful to you.

Very truly,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.

26 BROADWAY,
New York, June 18, 1914.

DEAR MR. LEE: In line with what Mr. Brown said about the method which he has pursued with the harvester company wherever any articles unfavorable to the company have been written, we are wondering whether it might not be well to make a reply to all the papers which have printed misstatements of fact regarding the fuel company. This would be quite an arduous task, and of course a good deal of time has passed since many of the articles were written. On the other hand, we are inclined to believe that it is well worth considering. If you should agree, it would be possible for some one whom you might appoint to go through our scrapbook of clippings, make a note of all the different statements contained in the various articles, which, after the first few articles have been studied, would be very generally repeated, and send such a list to Denver to have the answers prepared. You would then have the misstatements and the facts in each instance before you and would probably be in a position to take the clippings one by one and write an individual letter to each which would cover fully the situation.

We can discuss this matter when you come here on Monday.

Wheeler, setting forth the project rather more fully than I was able to.

I have written Mr. Wheeler of my talk with you about this matter and have told him that you are soon to be in Chicago and asked him if he would arrange to talk the matter over with you.

Mr. IVY L. LEE,
Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Pa.

JUNE 19, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: Your various letters of June 17 and 18 to hand. As per your request, I send you herewith a half dozen copies of Bulletin No. 21, with the inclosing sheet. I will hereafter send you a dozen copies of these bulletins as issued. Would it be desirable to send copies of these bulletins, also, to each member of the board of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

In accordance with your kind suggestion, I am planning to leave here at 10 o'clock Monday morning and will call at your office immediately upon arrival. That should put me at your office at about 12.15, and I shall be very happy to lunch with you, should that be entirely convenient to you. As you will no doubt have many demands upon your time that day, do not hesitate to withdraw from this plan if it is more convenient.

I think Mr. Brown's suggestion as to writing letters to people who have printed misstatements of fact is excellent and that we should follow it. We have always done something of this kind in the railroad, although not quite as comprehensively as Mr. Brown has done. Our feeling has been that constructive, positive publicity was of more importance, but I was much impressed with the possibilities of further development along the lines suggested by Mr. Brown. Assuming your approval, therefore, I am arranging at once to have some one go over your scrapbooks and follow out your suggestion. In the meantime, I am making arrangements to go over every clipping that appears on this subject, or with reference to your own interests, in order that we may follow them up.

The suggestion in the letter to you from Mr. Murphy that we should reach the farmers' organizations is first rate, and we shall make plans to do so.

I return herewith the letter to you from Mr. Galt. As you say, I am in entire agreement with you that the method suggested is not a wise one. I am inclosing some correspondence from the Chicago Examiner, which is indirectly aimed at the new management of the combined Chicago Inter-Ocean and Record-Herald. As I understand it, this paper has been financed by about $1,500,000 of money supplied by the leading financial interests of Chicago. You will see the kind of criticism which it has immediately called forth.

Thank you for the letter from Mr. Wheeler, which I have read with interest. I shall take advantage of the first opportunity to call on Mr. Wheeler when I am in Chicago, which I hope will be within the next two weeks. There is no doubt that something can be done along these lines. The subject is so vast, however, that I want to consider it very carefully before submitting to you a definite recommendation. I have many thoughts in mind, but feel that I should consider them from every angle before presenting them to you as worthy of the consideration of yourself and friends. I do not believe, however, that I will ever come to a point of thinking that you should establish and become responsible for a string of daily newspapers.

Very truly, yours,

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,
26 Broadway, New York City.

THE EYRIE,
Seal Harbor, Me., June 26, 1914.

DEAR MR. LEE: I am sending the following inclosures:

No. 1. Tarrytown Daily News, June 22, recounting Upton Sinclair's speech at Tarrytown Sunday last.

No. 2. The Tarrytown Argus of June 19, containing Sinclair's last open letter to me, Mrs. Charles Gould's letter to the Times (and, by the way, might it be worth while to put her on your bulletin mailing list?), and several other items on the Tarrytown agitation. These may be helpful in preparing an article for the Tarrytown papers.

No. 3. A letter from Australia with a clipping comparing father to Mr. Ford; the letter may be destroyed.

No. 4. A clipping from the Daily Camera entitled "What is a tent colony?"

No. 5. An editorial from the Nashville Banner regarding an act of Congress refusing further financial cooperation of the General Education Board in farm demonstration work.

No. 6. A letter from Grand Rapids, Mich., with clippings attached chiefly from the publication An Appeal to Reason.

Please return all of these things to Mr. C. O. Heydt, my secretary, at 26 Broadway, New York, for the scrapbook when you have finished with them.

Very truly,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.

Mr. IVY LEE,
Philadelphia, Pa.

THE EYRIE,
Seal Harbor, Me., June 29, 1914.

DEAR MR. LEE: I am sending you herewith copies of letters written to various Senators and Congressmen in regard to Senator Kenyon's bill for the termination of the partnership between the Government and the General Education Board in the conduct of farm demonstration work in the South. As showing how this work is regarded by some who know, I believe these letters will be of interest to you.

The letter of Dr. Albert W. Shaw to Senator Kenyon will be valuable because it gives so full and clear a history of the organization and development of the work of the board.

These letters need not be returned.

Very truly,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.

Mr. IVY LEE,
The Pennsylvania Railroad Co.,
Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE EYRIE,
Seal Harbor, Me., June 29, 1914.

DEAR MR. LEE: Please send a half dozen copies of the bulletins, commencing with the first and going through the series, to Judge John A. Peters, Ellsworth, Me.; also the same number to him currently at Washington, D. C. He is a Congressman.

Please send a half dozen copies from the beginning and currently to Mr. George L. Stebbins, Seal Harbor, Me., and add the following names to your list for a copy each: Harry H. Lynam, Esq., Bar Harbor, Me.; Elliot N. Benson, Esq., Bar Harbor, Me.; James N. Emery, Esq., Bar Harbor, Me.

I shall be interested to see the letter from Gov. Ammons to the governors, and also the Tarrytown article which you are preparing.

Very truly,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.

Mr. IVY LEE,
The Pennsylvania Railroad Co.,
Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

JUNE 29, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: Your telegram of Saturday came duly to hand. I am sending you to-day by parcel post 50 copies each of Bulletins Nos. 1 and 2 and shall take pleasure in sending you a like number of copies of future issues as they appear.

I also have your letter of June 26 and have duly noted its contents. Will forward them to Mr. Heydt. You will understand that I had already prepared the article for the Tarrytown papers.

Yours, very truly,

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,
The Eyrie, Seal Harbor, Me.

JUNE 29, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: Your telegram of Saturday came duly to hand. I am sending you to-day by parcel post 50 copies each of Bulletins Nos. 1 and 2 and shall take pleasure in sending you a like number of copies of future issues as they appear.

May I venture to express the hope that you are having a pleasant and healthful sojourn at Seal Harbor, and remain,

Yours, very truly,

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,
The Eyrie, Seal Harbor, Me.

THE EYRIE,
Seal Harbor, Me., June 30, 1914.

DEAR MR. LEE: I inclose a memorandum and a clipping just received from Mr. Brown. It is splendid material for use in a campaign of enlightenment regarding some phases of unionism. The inclosure need not be returned.

Please add to your bulletin mailing list the following: Hon. Everett Colby, Llewellyn Park, Orange, N. J.; Mr. E. L. Ballard, No. 2 Liberty Street, New York; Mr. David C. Link, Produce Exchange Building, New York; Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin, 123 West Fifty-seventh Street, New York; the Bangor Daily Commercial, Bangor, Me.; Hon. J. P. Bass, Bangor, Me.

Yours, very truly,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.

Mr. IVY LEE,
*The Pennsylvania Railroad Co.,
Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Pa.*

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD CO.,
OFFICE OF EXECUTIVE ASSISTANT,
Philadelphia, June 30, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: I beg to advise that I am sending you to-day, under separate parcel-post cover, 50 copies of Bulletin No. 3.

Very truly, yours,

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,
The Eyrie, Seal Harbor, Me.

JULY 2, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: The inclosures with your letter of June 29, with reference to the General Education Board, have come to hand, and I shall read them with keen interest. We are carefully noting your instructions as to additions to our mailing list.

The memorandum from Mr. Brown is very interesting, and we shall retain it for possible future use.

The Tarrytown article, I understand, is to be published as an editorial in one of the Tarrytown papers within the next day or so. I inclose an extra copy of the manuscript for your information.

With reference to the letter for Gov. Ammons, I am not entirely satisfied with the draft I prepared, and I am making certain amendments to it. I send out a draft for discussion, but will get it into shape in a day or so and then send you a copy. The idea is—and it is a difficult idea to execute—to prepare a very brief statement of the case which will command public attention rather than to make any very comprehensive statement of the situation.

No doubt you have seen the article in the North American Review for July. Col. Harvey is coming over to lunch with me to-morrow, and I am going to talk with him about Mr. Harry Wheeler's scheme.

You have doubtless seen Congressman Kindel's speech. At the suggestion of Mr. Bowers, we are going to arrange to have Mr. Kindel distribute some 20,000 or 30,000 copies of his speech to a mailing list which we will supply. I took this up with Mr. Murphy.

I inclose a draft of proposed statement to be made in Baltimore next Monday regarding the putting of Johns Hopkins University on full time.

Though we did not ask nor expect that our bulletins be reprinted, you will observe from the inclosed clipping from the Cattanooga (Tenn.) News that the heaven is beginning to work.

Very truly, yours,

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER,
The Eyrie, Seal Harbor, Me.

JULY 3, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: I hesitate to bother you with letters, and I want you to understand that I won't write any letters to you while you are away which call for an answer. I will simply keep you supplied with information from time to time, feeling that this is simply by the way and does not eliminate the necessity for advising fully with your New York office concerning everything. I am keeping up my relations with them precisely as if you were there. Knowing your interest, however, I am venturing to send you certain matters for your information. If you don't want to read it, why, of course, I hope you will not trouble yourself with it, because there is no occasion for acknowledging or retaining any of these letters which I am writing you while you are away.

I inclose an article from the Northampton (Mass.) Herald, which you will see uses as an editorial the first page of our first bulletin. I am also sending you an editorial from the Boston (Mass.) Post, the Newark (N. J.) Star, and the New Meridan (Conn.) Record, concerning the Rockefeller Institute gift, and in order that you may have the other side of the picture I am sending you a copy of the New York Call editorial, which paper is, as you know, the organ of the militant labor lights of New York. May I also inclose a copy of a statement which we are putting out for the General Education Board in the form in which it has been approved by Dr. Buttrick?

Very truly, yours,

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,
Seal Harbor, Me.

JULY 6, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: In order that you may see how the bulletin scheme is affecting your people in Denver, I send you herewith two letters from Mr. Welborn which are self-explanatory. Bulletin No. 6 is going to press to-day, and will, I think, be apt to attract more attention from the newspapers. It is a statement by the operators of the actual conditions in Colorado to-day.

For your information I inclose herewith a number of clippings showing the manner in which the newspapers used the announcement concerning Johns Hopkins full-time scheme. In view of the fact that this was not really news, and that the newspapers gave so much attention to it, it would seem that this was wholly due to the manner in which the material was "dressed up" for newspaper consumption. It seems to suggest very considerable possibilities along this line.

Very truly, yours,

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,
Seal Harbor, Me.

THE EYRIE,

Seal Harbor, Me., July 6, 1914.

DEAR MR. LEE: I have your letter of July 1. I had seen the article on the two and a half million gift to the Rockefeller Institute, but did not know whence it originated. Thank you for sending me the comments which it elicited; they were generally excellent, particularly Mr. Brisbane's editorial, for which I have just written him a letter of appreciation.

Let the good work go on. Mr. Welborn's telegram is interesting. I return it herewith.

Very truly,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, JR.

MR. IVY LEE,
Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

THE EYRIE,

Seal Harbor, Me., July 7, 1914.

DEAR MR. LEE: I am sending you a copy of The Daily Camera from Boulder, Colo., which gives an excellent account of the labor war.

Please return this paper to my office for file when you have finished with it.

I am wondering whether it would be worth while to correct by letter to the editor, the statement marked in pencil which you sent me from the Chattanooga News.

Very truly,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, JR.

MR. IVY LEE,
Broad Street, Philadelphia.
The Penn. R. R. Co.

JULY 10, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: I have to advise that I am sending you to-day, under another cover, fifty (50) copies of Bulletin No. 6.

Very truly, yours,

MR. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, JR.,
The Eyrie, Seal Harbor, Me.

JULY 11, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: Here is an editorial from the St. Louis Star based on the article we gave out concerning the Rockefeller Institute. You will, I think, be interested to read it. The editor of this paper, Mr. Edward S. Lewis, is a very intimate friend of mine, and, if you feel so disposed, I am sure that Mr. Lewis would appreciate a letter from you acknowledging the courtesy of their publishing this editorial.

I have this morning your letter inclosing the bulletin of the American Iron and Steel Institute, and I am taking up with Mr. Bigelow the question as to whether or not we could utilize something of this kind with reference to the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

Here is a clipping from the Wall Street Journal of to-day with reference to the Westinghouse strike, which is of interest in connection with the general labor situation.

You will be interested to know that I had a talk a day of two ago with Mr. F. A. Delano, who is a member of the Industrial Relations Commission, which is now investigating labor questions. There had been a report in the papers that that commission was to go to Denver and hold hearings there. Mr. Delano assured me that the commission had decided not to go to Denver until the pending difficulty was over. That will prevent a reopening of the floodgates on this subject.

We are glad to take care of the various requests you make to put names on our mailing list. We are expanding this mailing list slowly, and I trust effectively. You will understand that the whole purpose we have in mind in these bulletins is to get abroad certain elemental truths on which we can build an even more aggressive superstructure of activity.

Mr. Rea told me that he had said something to you about my intention to go to Europe with my family August 1. I have decided, however, that in view of the acuteness of the situation concerning your interests that I will not accompany my family on this trip. I have about decided, in fact, that I will postpone any vacation at any rate until sometime in the autumn. I have been staying here expecting the rate decision to come out any date, and I did not want to go to Colorado until that was out. As the decision has been postponed so long, and as my family will be sailing for Europe on the 31st of July, I shall postpone going to Colorado until they go away. I will then be free to go out there and perhaps stay longer than I otherwise would.

Very truly, yours,

IVY L. LEE.

P. S.—This delay in my going to Colorado will enable me, I hope, to go over Mr. Bigelow's material and get it into shape promptly for publication. Mr. Bigelow has returned with a large amount of interesting material, much of it quite outside of the scope of the subject which I had him primarily to take up. He is now working on it at his home in Massachusetts, and I hope to have some of the results here early next week.

Your suggestion that we utilize, if possible, a portion of the editorial in the American Press in the form of a bulletin, is at hand, and I will be glad to work it up.

I. L. L.

THE EYRIE,

Seal Harbor, Me., July 13, 1914.

DEAR SIR: Will you please add to your mailing list, commencing with Bulletin No. 7, the following:

New York State.—Mr. Robert A. Patterson, No. 44 Croton Avenue, Tarrytown; Mr. Fred J. Hall, No. 4 Benedict Avenue, Tarrytown; Mr. Robert E. Hopkins, commissioner of police, South Broadway, Tarrytown; Mr. William J. Bowles, chief of police, Tarrytown; Mr. Milton Minnerly, chief of police, North Tarrytown.

State of Maine.—Mr. B. L. Hadley, Ledgelawn Avenue, Bar Harbor; Mr. John S. Lynam, Ledgelawn Avenue, Bar Harbor.

Yours, very truly,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.

Mr. IVY LEE,

Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE EYRIE,

Seal Harbor, Me., July 13, 1914.

DEAR MR. LEE: Your letter of July 11 is received. I have read the news article and the editorial from the St. Louis Star with interest, and will gladly write Mr. Lewis.

Let us hope the Colorado situation may terminate as satisfactorily as the Westinghouse strike.

I do not recollect that Mr. Rea mentioned your vacation to me, although he may have done so. I am sorry that you can not go abroad with your family as planned, but greatly appreciate your following our matters so aggressively.

I inclose herein a copy of my letter to Mr. Lewis written at your suggestion.

Very truly,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.

Mr. IVY LEE,

Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Pa.

JULY 20, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: Yours of July 17, inclosing letter from Mr. Charles Frederick Carter, is at hand. I will look up Mr. Carter and see who he is. I have not yet quite made up my mind as to who is the man for this purpose, though I am giving it a great deal of thought.

I had seen the editorial in the Springfield Republican and am arranging to reprint some portions of it in one of our bulletins. I am returning herewith the clipping, in the thought that you may want to use it in other ways.

I have read with a great deal of interest the article on "Labor and capital," by Prof. Stevenson. It is, as you say, excellent, and we shall want to use it in our general campaign.

Perhaps you will be interested to read the inclosed letter from Congressman Kindel, which I shall ask you to be kind enough to return to me.

I send herewith a number of newspaper editorials, which may perhaps be of interest to you. Do not take the trouble to return them.

Very truly, yours,

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,
Seal Harbor, Me.

JULY 21, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: Copies of Bulletins Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, and copies of the explanatory statement first issued, have been sent to Mr. Wallace Heckman, as you requested.

I am sending you to-day, by parcel post, 50 copies of Bulletin No. 7.

Very truly, yours,

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,
The Eyrie, Seal Harbor, Me.

JULY 24, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: Your letter of the 20th of July, in regard to the Pennsylvania Railroad bulletins, is received. I shall be very glad to take up with Mr. Welborn the question you suggest. I think it would be a most excellent plan to develop some scheme of this sort to cultivate a better understanding between the management and the men. I am asking Mr. Welborn to consider the matter, and then we can talk it over as regards details and concrete ideas when we get together in Denver.

It is my plan to leave for Denver about Tuesday, August 4. I would go before that (upon the assumption that the Interstate Commerce Commission issues its decision in the pending rate case before that time), but for the fact that I feel that it is desirable that I should have a talk with you. There is nothing especially that I feel it necessary to take up directly with you, but as otherwise I probably would not see you until after the 1st of September, it seems to me that good purposes would be served if we had a conference. With that in mind, I am wondering if you could make it convenient to have a talk with me in New York on either the 3rd or 4th of August?

You ask in your letter if the editors to whom I had suggested that Mr. Welborn write should not receive the bulletins currently. We had been sending the bulletins to these newspapers from the beginning, but the feeling was that a personal letter from Mr. Welborn, accompanied by two or three of the bulletins specifically, might reinforce our more general distribution.

I have read the Jim Jam Jems article with much interest and am sending it to your New York office, as you suggest, for filing.

Very truly, yours,

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,
The Eyrie, Seal Harbor, Me.

JULY 24, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: Yours of July 21, inclosing the correspondence with Mr. Brisbane:

I return herewith the two files of correspondence which you sent. I concur entire in the view you have taken that this is not quite the time for you to write the kind of article which Mr. Brisbane wants. I have watched the publications with reference to the New York meeting very carefully, and it does not seem to me that that meeting created a ripple on the surface.

Your suggestion that bulletins be sent to the representative men on the list is excellent. We shall see to it that that is done.

I have been very much interested in reading these papers, and thank you for giving me the opportunity of doing so.

I had quite a talk with Mr. Brisbane yesterday, and I am inclined to think that it would be a good opportunity for you to write a personal letter to Mr. Brisbane suggesting to him the wisdom of publishing a statement of facts regarding the Colorado situation. I would suggest that you devote your whole letter on this subject to inclosing a copy of Congressman Kindel's speech and saying to Mr. Brisbane that in the event that he desires additional information, you would be glad to have it furnished him. The speech you inclosed from Mr. Pinchot is full of so many misstatements that it seems almost hopeless to assume to answer it other than by putting his name on our mailing list and giving him the facts.

Very truly, yours,

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,
The Eyrie, Seal Harbor, Me.

JULY 24, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: We are sending you to-day by parcel post 50 copies of Bulletin No. 8 and 50 copies of Bulletin No. 9.

Very truly, yours.

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,
The Eyrie, Seal Harbor, Me.

JULY 30, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: We are sending you to-day by parcel post 10 copies of Bulletin No. 10.

I shall be very glad to take lunch with you on Tuesday, as you suggest.

Yours, very truly,

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,
26 Broadway, New York City.

AUGUST 5, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: I am just off for Denver, where I will be at the Brown Palace Hotel.

I will send you to-night or to-morrow the letter from Mr. Welborn, which you gave me and which has gotten mixed up with some of my papers, which I am taking along with me.

In the event you wish to communicate with me while I am away I would suggest that you write to my Philadelphia office, who will forward mail to me.

Yours, very truly,

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,
26 Broadway, New York City.

THE EYRIE,
Seal Harbor, Me., July 17, 1914.

DEAR MR. LEE: I inclose herewith a letter just received from Mr. Charles Frederick Carter. I know nothing of Mr. Carter, but thought it might be worth while to look him up, unless you already have in mind just the man for this purpose.

In any event perhaps you will be good enough to reply to Mr. Carter's letter on my behalf on the ground that his letter has been referred to you, since you are cooperating with the mine operators in the matter of publicity.

Very truly,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.

Mr. IVY LEE,
Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

Have you seen this article from the Springfield Republican?

NEW YORK, July 13, 1914.

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,
26 Broadway, New York City.

DEAR SIR: I should like to write and publish for you and for others interested in coal mining in Colorado a book telling the truth about the coal insurrection in that State, exposing the criminal acts of the United Mine Workers there and elsewhere, with evidence that these outrages were planned and perpetrated to facilitate blackmail and graft, along the lines indicated in my article in the New York Sun of July 5, with a summary of mining conditions elsewhere as a basis of comparison for conditions in Colorado.

Such a book would be an illustrated volume of about 400 pages, well printed and bound, to be published and distributed through customary trade channels by a first-class firm. In addition to the trade distribution free copies would be sent to the following:

To all public libraries in the United States and Canada;

To editors of all daily papers, the important weeklies, and trade papers, instead of to the limited list to which books are ordinarily sent for review;

To the President, his Cabinet, and Members of Congress;

To governors, their heads of departments, and members of legislatures;

To college professors;

To persons named in "Who's Who," not included in the foregoing;

To mailing lists furnished by yourself and others interested in Colorado coal mining.

This plan would enable you and others interested to lay before a large number of persons, at least presumably, influential in forming public opinion, a full, truthful statement regarding the insurrection and the organization that instigated and conducted it. The statement would be in a permanent form which would command attention, as contrasted with incomplete newspaper statements, usually condensed by editors and garbled in the process, or with pamphlets which are rarely read.

This plan for publicity is suggested on its own merits; but a fact further commending it is that ordinary news channels failed so completely to give even an approximation of the truth that the operators had to appeal to various secret societies to send out a statement in their behalf—a striking commentary on the necessity for some effective publicity to counteract the effects of the malevolent mendacity of the United Mine Workers, their associates, and sympathizers.

In making this proposal to you I am assuming that you are especially interested because of the extraordinary campaign of vituperation and threats directed against you by the anarchists and others of addled brains. A truthful account of the insurrection would necessarily throw your own relation thereto into its proper perspective.

From my own point of view it would simplify matters to deal with you personally instead of with the operators collectively, since it would be necessary to submit the manuscript only to you or your attorney, instead of to a number of persons whose views might be divergent, if not irreconcilable. Also, if desired to distribute the cost among several firms or individuals I would be relieved of this detail and so be able to give undivided attention to the book itself.

I believe myself qualified to write such a book because of my special knowledge of the United Mine Workers, gained in six months' work as publicity representative of the coal operators of West Virginia, backed by 25 years' experience as journalist and author. In the last eight years I have written and sold to periodicals 800,000 words of popular articles, chiefly on industrial, technical, and economic subjects, have published a railroad history (my third book), and have contributed 800,000 words to an encyclopedia, including articles on coal and coal mining.

Trusting that I may have an opportunity of taking up this proposal with you, I am,

Very truly, yours,

C. F. CARTER.

JULY 16, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: Thank you very much for yours of July 13, which is just to hand. I am delighted with the letter which you have written to Mr. Lewis. It will do good.

Very truly, yours,

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,
The Eyrie, Seal Harbor, Me.

THE EYRIE, Seal Harbor, Me., July 17, 1914.

DEAR MR. LEE: I inclose herewith an article by Prof. John J. Stevenson, of the New York University, on "Capital and labor," from the Popular Science Monthly of May. This seems to me one of the soundest, clearest, most forcible pronouncements on this subject I have ever read. I am wondering whether there may not be a stage in our publicity campaign, either connected with the Colorado situation or the union educational campaign, in which portions of this article might be effectively used.

I also inclose an editorial from the American Federationist of July for your information. Please send this to my New York office for filing when you have finished with it.

If you have not seen in our scrapbook the inclosed editorial from the Boston Herald of May 28, I think it will interest you. This inclosure need not be returned.

Very truly,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.

Mr. IVY LEE,
Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

JULY 17, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: Yours of July 15, inclosing copy of Elbert Hubbard's article, just at hand. I will go over the article and see if we can not make something out of it for a bulletin. You will realize that up to the present time it has been the theory of the bulletins that they be confined to statements of fact from sources or people of standing in Colorado itself. We have been seeking to lay a foundation of fact on which perhaps later we can follow with such things as Dr. Hilles's sermon, this article of Hubbard's and perhaps other publications on the subject. It has been my hope, however, to get the basic facts stated in these earlier bulletins. I feel that we still have a little distance to go in that direction.

Bulletin No. 8 is to consist of quotations from Mrs. Helen Grenfell's statement to President Wilson regarding the battle of Ludlow. It seems to me that a statement from an organization of women was the most effective thing we could present on this subject.

The next following bulletin will deal with the question of the wages actually paid to the miners. Mr. Welborn has sent me some interesting and suggestive figures dealing with the wages paid a large number of men for an entire year.

Mr. Murphy sent me a copy of the article in the Popular Science Monthly, which concerns the subjects of labor and capital. I am going to arrange to have it widely distributed, as you suggest.

Very truly, yours,

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,
The Eyrie, Seal Harbor, Me.

26 BROADWAY,
New York, June 17, 1914.

DEAR MR. LEE: Will you be good enough to send me half a dozen copies of Bulletin No. 1, with the inclosing sheet?

I shall expect to hear from you on Monday morning by telephone and to see you at your convenience around noon. Perhaps we can lunch together, since that will be the last opportunity I shall have of seeing you before my departure.

Very truly,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.

Mr. IVY L. LEE,
Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Pa.

JUNE 1, 1915.

Mr. IVY L. LEE,
26 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: I have to acknowledge receipt of copies of documents inclosed in an undated letter from your secretary, as stated in the letter, same being: "Copy of letter to Maj. E. J. Boughton, dated June 24, 1914, inclosing draft of suggested statement; copy of the only statement sent for the consideration of Maj. Boughton (as testified to by Mr. Lee on the 22d instant); statements of expenses, as rendered currently to the operators"; for which please accept my thanks. The duplicate copies were received by me in Washington, during the hearing, but under stress of the work did not receive acknowledgment.

Very truly, yours,

_____, Secretary.

26 BROADWAY,
New York, May 25, 1915.

Mr. LEWIS K. BROWN,
Secretary Industrial Relations Commission,
Shoreham Hotel, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am requested by Mr. Ivy L. Lee to send the commission the unmentioned documents, which I have pleasure in handing you herewith: Copy of letter to Maj. E. J. Boughton, dated June 24, 1914, inclosing draft of suggested statement; copy of the only statement sent for the consideration of Maj. Boughton (as testified to by Mr. Lee on the 22d instant); statements of expenses, as rendered currently to the operators.

Yours, very truly,

H. W. DENGLE, Jr.,
Secretary to Mr. Lee.

Copy of this letter and inclosures forwarded to Transportation Building, Chicago, Ill.

JUNE 24, 1914.

Mr. E. J. BOUGHTON,
Symmes Building, Denver, Colo.

MY DEAR MAJOR: I inclose herewith copy of a statement which I hope will form the basis for a statement by the governor. My suggestion is that the statement be addressed, "To the American People," and that the governor write a personal letter to the governor of each State, inclosing this statement and asking their cooperation in seeing to it that the people are duly informed as to the situation existing in Colorado. The statement might very properly be printed and copies also sent to Members of Congress.

I would suggest that when the statement is given out that the governor send for the correspondents of the press in Colorado and tell them that he had addressed this statement "To the American People" with a view to having the position of the State of Colorado set aright.

Kindly note that the statement does not go into great detail, but is merely to give an impression—which is all one can expect to result from a statement of this kind—that the situation in Colorado is not so simple as it looks, and that the strike leaders are not true representatives of the best class of union labor.

My feeling is that it would be well worth while to see to it that some such statement as this was distributed broadcast all over the United States. Of course, you will want to amend portions of it, but I would urge that amendment be rather in the direction of reducing its length than of increasing it. Every word you save in a matter of this kind is so much to the good.

I shall be interested to know the developments with reference to this suggestion.

It was a great pleasure to have had the privilege of meeting you and I hope to renew that pleasure in the near future.

With kind regards,
Sincerely, yours,

IVY L. LEE.

DRAFT OF SUGGESTED STATEMENT SENT TO MAJ. BOUGHTON FOR HIS CONSIDERATION, ACCOMPANYING MR. IVY L. LEE'S LETTER OF JUNE 24, 1914.

Some 2,000 Federal troops are maintaining peace in the coal mining area of Colorado. It is important that the American people should understand what is really going on.

The situation in Colorado is not so much one of strike as of insurrection. Ten thousand men—out of a full quota of 14,000—are at work in the coal mines. I am advised that the coal companies are mining all the coal for which there is now a market.

Yet if the troops were withdrawn, the coal mining sections would be immediately aflame with violence. Why? Because a few thousand men, some of them formerly employed in the mines but now supported by funds sent in from outside the State, are prodded by a few desperate leaders who feel justified in accomplishing their ends by any means whatever which may be available.

Personally, I have always believed in labor unions, and I do still. But both labor unions and corporations should be made to understand that a crime is an offense against society, and that the authority of the State can not be defied with impunity.

Before this strike there had been no serious trouble in our southern coal mines for 10 years. The terms and conditions under which Colorado miners are employed are far more advantageous than those existing in the eastern coal fields. The average daily earnings at five typical mines for the month immediately preceding the strike were, respectively, $4.41, $4.27, $4.98, $4.67, and $4.90.

Only 2,048 men out of a total of 23,000 miners in Colorado, New Mexico, and Utah were at that time members of the United Mine Workers of America. This strike was due primarily to agitation by men sent into the State from outside to stir up strife.

The complexity of the case is enhanced by the fact that but few of the miners are American citizens. Of the 14,000 at work last summer, probably not 2,000 were qualified voters. Of the 2,000 men now technically on strike and defying the authority of the State, only a negligible percentage are American citizens and understand the spirit of our institutions.

After the violence at the Oak Creek mines one of the strike leaders, a man named Steinhard, in the presence of a number of witness, made this statement: "I am not an American citizen. I owe allegiance to no government. The United States is the worst country on earth, and I would not wipe my shoes on the American flag." I give his exact statement, in so far as it is printable.

It has been stated that mine guards were enlisted as militiamen to the needless irritation of the strikers. The facts are that out of some 2,000 State troops located in the strike zone, no more than 12 of those who bore arms as militiamen had been mine guards. Our militia are a brave force of men, and they patriotically served in the strike area three months longer than the financial resources of the State made it possible to pay them for their time and effort. Not a scintilla of evidence supports the horrible suggestion that women and children have been ruthlessly killed by our State militia and the mine guards.

What then is the present situation? The men's leaders assert they will not surrender until the union is recognized. The coal operators claim they are fighting for a principle. They declare they do not oppose labor unions as such, but that they will not negotiate with the United Mine Workers of America for an agreement with them means that they must enter into a written contract with this organization and thereby agree, in effect, to employ only members of that union, and to deduct from the pay rolls of every such person all union dues, fines, and assessments for which the member may be indebted, and then remit this sum to union headquarters.

The coal operators are not now permitted to import strike breakers. All that the companies ask is that order be kept. Certainly, therefore, the authority of the State and the Nation can do no less than to say to both sides:

"Regardless of the merits of the controversy, you must obey the law."

The authority of society itself is at bay. The State of Colorado appeals to the people of the Nation to assist it in maintaining a principle fundamental to the very existence of our Republic.

JUNE 10, 1914.

Mr. J. F. WELBORN,
President Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.,
Denver, Colo.

MY DEAR SIR: Would it be possible to give me a summary of the strike situation in Colorado, covering the following points:

Number of mines in operation before September 23; number in operation to-day; amount of coal produced before that date; amount after (average per month); number of men employed before and number to-day; number of men who went out on strike; number who have returned.

Could you also give me an analysis of the inclosed newspaper article and let me know to what extent it is correct?

I am eager to get out to the press an article showing, in the first place, that the companies are now mining all the coal that the market can absorb, and, secondly, that there has been no ruthless destruction of life by either the mine guards or the militia.

As you are doubtless aware, one of the most serious ideas with which we have to contend in this whole matter is that the operators in Colorado have been killing women and children. We ought to meet that proposition quite specifically.

Of course, I shall be only too happy to have your advice as to how any of this data should be treated.

Very truly, yours,

IVY L. LEE

JULY 1, 1914.

DEAR MR. ROCKEFELLER: I have your letter of June 27 and shall take pleasure in placing upon our mailing list the names you suggest.

The sermon of Dr. Hillis I am delighted to have and shall want to make use of it.

I have had two long interviews with Mr. Harry Wheeler and his friends with reference to the publication they have in mind. I am to see another gentleman on the subject in Philadelphia this afternoon and am to have another interview relating to it in New York possibly on Friday. I shall have occasion to report on this subject, I trust, within the next week or so.

Mr. Bigelow has returned from Colorado and is now putting his material into shape. The preparation and issuance of the bulletins is going right along. We have also had the scrapbooks gone over and will in a day or two have the preparation of the proposed letters under way.

You doubtless saw the announcement we made Saturday relating to the Rockefeller Institute. I inclose a copy of it for your information, together with a number of newspaper clippings showing the way in which it was handled. You need not take the trouble to return these.

I had a long talk with Dr. Buttrick and Mr. Flexner yesterday, and we are planning to make an appropriate announcement next Monday regarding the transfer of the money to Johns Hopkins University. I am making a study of the work of the General Education Board, as well as that of the Rockefeller Institute, and will no doubt be able to formulate, a little later, more detailed plans for continued publicity for the Institute.

From the inclosed telegram received from Mr. Welborn it would appear that he is finding some special use for the bulletins in his own territory. I am sending you to-day by parcel post 50 copies of Bulletin No. 4.

Very truly, yours,

IVY L. LEE

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,
Seal Harbor, Me.

[Copy of telegram.]

DENVER, COLO., June 30, 1915,

IVY L. LEE,
Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Pa.

If you have them, please send me 500 extra copies Bulletin No. 1 without envelopes.

J. F. WELBORN.

JULY 2, 1914.

Mr. IVY L. LEE,
Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR SIR: I am sure it will be of interest to you to know that we have had requests from some chambers of commerce and other bodies for extra copies of the bulletins you are sending out.

We are taking care of these requests from the stock of bulletins that you have sent to me.

Yours, very truly,

J. F. WELBORN.

JULY 3, 1914.

Mr. IVY L. LEE,
Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of yours of the 30th ultimo, and have also received to-day copies of your Bulletin No. 4, which will go out on July 6. In accordance with your suggestion, we will see that copies of these reach the Denver papers.

I am very much pleased with the manner in which you are handling our subject, and sincerely hope that we will have the pleasure of seeing you here in the near future.

Yours, very truly,

J. F. WELBORN.

JULY 14, 1914.

MY DEAR SIR: My attention has been called to the news item and the editorial in the St. Louis Star of July 6, regarding the Rockefeller Institute and my father's recent gifts to it. Since I had the privilege of participating in the organization of this institute and have been associated ever since with its management, such intelligent appreciation of the institute, what it has accomplished, and the possibilities which lie before it, as the article referred to evinces, leads me to write this personal word of thanks.

Some time when you are in New York if you should be interested to visit the institute, it would give me great pleasure to so arrange.

Very sincerely,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.

Mr. EDWARD S. LEWIS,
Editor St. Louis Star, St. Louis Mo.

JULY 15, 1914.

DEAR MR. LEE: I am sending you herewith proof sheets of Elbert Hubbard's article on the Colorado situation, written for the Fra.

I learned through Mr. Welborn that some Colorado man had agreed in advance to buy a certain number of copies of the article for distribution. Do you think it of sufficient value to be used as one of your bulletins, should Mr. Hubbard so consent.

The article need not be returned.

Very truly,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.

Mr. IVY LEE,

JULY 20, 1914.

DEAR MR. LEE: I am in receipt of your two letters of July 17, with their inclosures. I have read the bulletin which the Pennsylvania Railroad issues to its employees and a certain section of the public with much interest. Will you be good enough to send a set of those issued for employees to Mr. Welborn, raising the question with him, on my behalf, as to whether the fuel company might not wisely send bulletins in the several languages to all of its employees, stating clearly certain facts with reference to the relation of the officers and their employees, the relation of the owners to the properties, and other matters which would tend to bring about better understanding between the officers and the men. We are told, for instance, that many of the foreign employees are informed by the agitators that the mines rightly belong to the laborers, and that the owners are setting up unjust claims to them. To present in a simple way the facts like this to all the employees would be valuable. These bulletins could be distributed monthly with the pay envelopes or in some other way. I should be glad to have Mr. Welborn give the idea consideration, and when you go west you could discuss it with him more fully.

I note your proposed letter from Mr. Welborn to certain editors. Should not all of these editors receive these bulletins currently?

I inclose a copy of Jim Jam Jems for July; there is much of value and interest in the article therein contained on Colorado. Please send it to the office for filing when you have finished with it.

Very truly,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.

JULY 21, 1914.

DEAR MR. LEE: I inclose herewith a correspondence which I have had with Mr. Brisbane, including my letter to him which called it forth. I was surprised to learn that Mr. Brisbane favors Government ownership. Please return this correspondence when you have read it.

I also inclose a letter from Mr. Brisbane of July 16, with certain data attached. I do not desire to write anything for publication with reference to Government ownership myself. Do you think this a good opportunity for us, in reply to Mr. Brisbane's inquiry, to undertake to get him to publish some statements regarding the Colorado situation, utter ignorance of, or, rather, willful disregard of, facts in which situation underlies the address of Mr. Pinchot and the printed resolution herewith? Has the time come for us to try to get the papers to publish a statement pointing out the inopportune and folly of an effort like that made by this meeting to pass on the question of rights in the Colorado controversy? It may be inexpedient to do anything but other than for me to courteously decline Mr. Brisbane's invitation to reply. I will say nothing to him, however, until after hearing from you. Would it not be wise to send bulletins to the representative men on the list whose names are printed at the beginning of the resolutions, such as Dr. Moskowitz, Rabbi Wise, John Murphy, and Calvin Tompkins; perhaps others?

I am writing to Mr. Malone, whom I know, asking about his relations to the meeting, and will send him the bulletins. Please return Mr. Brisbane's letter, with the inclosures, at your early convenience. If you think it desirable to have copies made before returning them, I see no objections.

Very truly,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, JR.

MAY 27, 1914.

HON. THOMAS S. MARTIN,
The Bendick, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I notice from the Associated Press account that there has been introduced a measure in the United States Senate depriving the South of the services of the General Education Board in respect to farm demonstration work; also another measure has been introduced endeavoring to revoke the charter of the General Education Board.

I have been most intimately connected with the work of the General Education Board in the South for the past 10 years, and I wish to bear testimony that no organization, no individual, has done as much for the building up of our higher education, of our secondary school systems, for the improvement of rural education, for the wonderful advancement of improved methods of agriculture in the South as has this organization and its representatives.

Many of them are southern men, and I wish to assert, without fear of successful contradiction, that they have worked through our southern people exclusively, have not even imposed their own suggestions, except when requested to do so, and have left it to the wisdom and good sense of our good people to spend for social uplift any donations made.

Furthermore, there have been literally thousands of boys and girls in the Boys' Corn Clubs and the Girls' Canning Clubs whose lives have been made richer, whose earning capacity has been increased, whose outlook upon their own futures has become more thrilling because of the work carried on by the southern people, whose salaries have been paid and whose traveling expenses have been furnished by the General Education Board. The southern representatives of this board created our high-school systems.

No greater calamity could happen to the educational interests of the South and the 148,000 teachers engaged therein than the revoking of the charter of the General Education Board. It will be a great calamity if these men should be divorced from the farm demonstration work, which they inaugurated on their own free will and accord, without the assistance (and sometimes without the encouragement) of the Government. Their accumulated experience can not be duplicated by others. Their personal interest in our people is a matter of tender regard.

Every man and woman in the South and every representative of the best interests of our people owes a debt of deep gratitude and sincere appreciation to the General Education Board and its representatives. Whatever is done in this matter should be done in a spirit of gratitude. But I hope that nothing will be done that will deprive the 8,000,000 children of the South, the citizens of to-morrow, of the services of these men who have given so much of their lives and of their time.

I beg, therefore, to urge upon you, in representing us, the grateful beneficiaries of the first and greatest and most liberal philanthropical organization in America, not to interfere with their endeavors, for in so doing you will throw the most appalling hindrance before us who are fighting on the firing line for the economic, intellectual, and moral freedom of the South.

Sincerely yours,

BRUCE R. PAYNE.

26 BROADWAY,
New York, May 12, 1915.

Mr. LEWIS K. BROWN,

Secretary U. S. Commission on Industrial Relations.

Hotel Shoreham, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The delay in sending you the material asked for in your letter of April 24 has been due to the fact that some of the data requested is not available in our office and I have been trying to locate it. You will appreciate that, having moved from Philadelphia to New York the 1st of January last and not having anticipated that any such request as yours would be made, I had not made any effort to have the material filed with care. We have, however, made a diligent search to obtain all the information requested, and I am sending you herewith the following, as requested by you:

Letter of June 10 to Mr. Welborn, referred to in my letter to Mr. Rockefeller of the same date; letters to various Senators and Congressmen in regard to Senator Kenyon's bill, including copy of a letter from Dr. Albert Shaw; letter of July 1 to Mr. Rockefeller, as well as a copy of Mr. Welborn's telegram, therein referred to; two letters from Mr. Welborn, referred to in my letter of July 16; Mr. Rockefeller's letter to the St. Louis Star; Mr. Rockefeller's letter to me, dated July 15; also his letters of July 20 and 21 to me.

For the reason that I have not been able to find them, I am not sending you:

Letter from Mr. Murphy to Mr. Rockefeller, referred to in my letter of June 29 to him; "telegram of Saturday" from Mr. Rockefeller to me, referred to in my letter of June 29 to him; memorandum from Mr. Brown which Mr. Rockefeller sent me with his letter of June 30; my "letter to President Elliot, referred to in Mr. Rockefeller's letter of July 8."

I presume the letter of Mr. Murphy to Mr. Rockefeller referred to the letter from Mr. Galt, but I have no clear recollection on that subject. As to the memorandum from Mr. Brown to Mr. Rockefeller, that also has been lost. Personally, I do not recall the exact nature of the memorandum. There was no letter written to President Elliot, as you suggest. You have probably misinterpreted the correspondence.

The letters listed below are not inclosed. Though their subject matter is not such as would have any objections to giving the commission full information about, they are private letters from individuals not associated with us in business or in any of the companies with which we are related. Their letters dealt in the main with matters concerning which these people would feel entirely free to write to us in the confidence of private correspondence. It would not be fair to them, therefore, to make their letters public without their permission. I feel, therefore, that the commission will appreciate the delicacy of our position in this matter and, under the circumstances, I hope the commission will not press its request that we should submit these letters to become a part of the record in this case. The letters to which I refer are as follows:

"Information from Mr. Easley," referred to in my letter of June 13 to Mr. Rockefeller; two letters from Mr. Harry A. Wheeler, mentioned in Mr. Rockefeller's letter of June 18; letter from Mr. Galt, referred to in my letter of June 19; letter from Congressman Kindel to me, referred to in my letter of July 20; correspondence with Mr. Brisbane, referred to in my letter to Mr. Rockefeller under date of July 24.

Assuring you of our desire to do everything we can to assist the commission in carrying out the work for which it was created, I am,

Yours, very truly,

IVY L. LEE.

P. S.—The attached are copies of the original documents, which latter, if desired, may be examined here at your pleasure.

MAY 28, 1914.

Senator ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR LA FOLLETTE: Of course, you know that, although I have been in Washington much of the time for several years, I have kept entirely out of anything which looked like political activity strictly because my work has been scientific or technical, and I feel I could do much better by not interfering in any way with anything that even approached political considerations. Although I have watched the papers with interest and have also watched the Congressional Record, I have intended to refrain from writing on the subject now in mind, but after thinking the matter over, and particularly in view of the fact that I have now moved away from Washington, I decided it was proper for me to write this letter. I am writing to you principally because of your very close political relations with Senator Kenyon of Iowa, as well as others who have taken an interest in the subject which I am about to mention. I have in mind the activities in the past of the General Education Board, which, as you know, has received amounts of money from Mr. Rockefeller. I have in the past felt about the same as you have, so far as big business organizations are concerned. Indeed, I have on thousands of occasions spoken very vigorously and written in the same way with reference to the position you have taken. I believe, however, that, inasmuch as we have allowed such accumulations of wealth as we have, we can not now to any material advantage prohibit the expenditure of such accumulations of wealth, especially when this wealth is expended to such a good purpose as it is in the case of the moneys turned over to the General Education Board.

Of course you know much better than practically any other representative of the people in Congress that throughout the last century it has been left for private citizens or individuals in a more or less private way to start practically all of the new and beneficial movements which we are now interested in. Even the kindergarten in this country was launched by philanthropists in a large number of private nurseries before it was taken up by the public schools. You know of the magnificent work which has been done with funds of that organization in connection with the cooperative demonstration work in the Southern States carried on through the late Mr. Knapp.

I thoroughly agree with all who are in favor of having the National Government now take over that work. It has reached a point where it has thoroughly proved its efficiency and desirability. It is a line of activity for a National Government to finance. I hope that the National Government will appropriate the necessary amount of money to take care of it, but I must confess that in taking over this work and making the appropriation I think it shows very great lack of appreciation when the very body which has demonstrated this wonderful system should be condemned. The General Education Board should rather be given a written vote of thanks by Congress, and they should be wished Godspeed in the use of the money which they have now saved. In this source they should be publicly asked to use this money to try out new possible movements for the general benefit of humanity. The principal reason, indeed, that I would be in favor of having Congress take over this extensive demonstration work is that this will leave a large amount of money available for other purposes. I believe it would be a very unfortunate thing for Congress to go further than take over this work. It has come to me from various directions that there are some who think it would be wise to take away the charter from the General Education Board. I must confess that I can see only one reason for this step, and that is a desire to have some political effect, and I must say I do not believe it to be the act of the statesman, but rather of the politician seeking some way to stir up support from a class who are unable to understand the importance of economic and political movements.

I am speaking my mind thus freely to you because I feel sure you have personally looked into this matter very carefully. If you agree with the position I take I hope you will use your influence with such Senators as Senator Kenyon and others who may have taken a different position. I feel rather confident that they have taken the position before having looked into the entire subject and without appreciating the great value to this country of ours of an organization, such as the General Education Board, which can start such movements as, for instance, the cooperative demonstration work.

Assuring you of my very great admiration for the extraordinary work which you have been doing ever since I heard your name, and ever since my years at Wisconsin University, I am,

Very sincerely, yours,

JOHN LEE COULTER.

MAY 29, 1914.

Mr. B. W. HUNT, Eatonton, Ga.

DEAR MR. HUNT: The newspapers have been filled recently with severe criticisms of the General Education Board and all those responsible for its activities. I have seen the interview with Senator Kenyon in a recent Washington paper accusing in very bitter terms Mr. Rockefeller, and others like him, of trying to set up a silent empire, an invisible government, through gifts to education. I have no doubt that there is a good deal of astute Republican shrewdness in the attacks now being made in Congress. I think you know that the General Education Board has undoubtedly done great work in the South, and has done it in a broadly philanthropic way that ought not to provoke even criticism, to say nothing of the vengeance that seems aimed at it now by some members of our National Congress.

Is it possible that these charges are being made for the purpose of frightening the Democrats into sitting quiet instead of coming to the defense of a genuinely useful and unselfish board, for fear that they will be accused of coming to the defense of the money devil? It seems rather clear to me, from what I gather at this distance, that the Democrats are feeling themselves pretty severely clubbed and are very much bewildered over how to prevent the unjust measures proposed. As a citizen and as an educator who has known the work of the General Education Board in the South, I wish to urge upon you to throw your weight on the side of equity and fairness.

Everybody knows the immense advantage which has come from the farm demonstration work in the South. This was inaugurated by Dr. Knapp and paid for by the General Education Board. The large sums which this board has put into the demonstration work have done more good than almost any sums that could be mentioned. Of course, if the Government wishes to put more money into this work or to take it over entirely, there is no reason why this should not be done. But there is every reason why the Government should thank the General Education Board for starting such a tremendously important undertaking, for putting so much of its far-reaching wisdom and money into it, and for demonstrating so triumphantly its great value to southern farmers.

You doubtless know that this value has been so completely demonstrated that now all parts of the country are clamoring to have similar methods extended over the United States. I hope, therefore, if you agree with my views as expressed above, that you will write to all the Congressmen and Senators with whom you have influence and urge upon them to take a firm stand against any injustice. And I hope you will express your views as to make it impossible for any ungenerous vengeance to be wreaked upon the General Education Board, when this board has been a true benefactor to our section.

With high esteem, I beg to remain,

Yours, sincerely,

CHARLES E. LITTLE,
Nashville, Tenn.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C.

Dr. WALLACE BUTTRICK,
17 Battery Place, New York.

DEAR DR. BUTTRICK: I have seen Representative Lee and some other Congressmen relative to the proviso in the Agricultural bill. They all agree to aid in striking it out. Mr. Lever was not in town, so I wrote him a letter, a copy of which I inclose. I leave to-night for Birmingham.

Sincerely, yours,

SYDNEY J. BOWIE.

MAY 30, 1914.

HON. A. F. LEVER,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR LEVER: I called to see you this morning and was much disappointed to know that you would probably not be in your office to-day. I go out this afternoon on the Birmingham special, and I am availing myself of this opportunity to write to you in regard to a matter which has doubtless already been called to your attention. In the Senate the usual appropriation for farm demonstration work was increased by the sum of $250,000 and a proviso was added as follows: "That no part of this sum of $678,240 shall be used in connection with any money contributed or tendered by the General Education Board or any like organization." As you are no doubt well aware, the General Education Board has already expended in the Southern States for work of this kind almost a million dollars. This has been used as a supplement to the funds annually appropriated by Congress. Every dollar that has gone into the Boys' Corn Club and Girls' Tomato and Canning Club work has come from this fund. It has been expended by the Department of Agriculture, which has employed and dealt exclusively with the men in the field. The only connection the General Education Board has had with it has been to contribute a stated sum annually.

The idea must be of the amendment that in some occult and hidden manner the General Education Board, and through them Mr. Rockefeller, will acquire a dangerous hold upon the minds of the people. This idea seems so far-fetched and so absurd that I hesitate to attribute any such belief to any intelligent person, and yet I have been told that some Senators probably were influenced to vote for it in the fear that some such thing might happen. If the true basis of it is not in the fear that it will happen but the fear that the people might think it would happen, I must insist that this is an unnecessary and undeserved reflection on the intelligence of the people. We have educated constituencies in the South and they are far beyond small demagoguery of that kind, at least the far majority of them are. I have always found that any man of clean mind and honest purpose would fare better and last longer at the hands of the people than the average demagogue. In fact, I have never known a pure demagogue to last long under any circumstances anywhere. The truth is that this farm demonstration work under the leadership of the Department of Agriculture and aided by the General Education Board has been of very great value to the farming interests of the Southern States, and I do not think it just or fair to impute unjust and improper motives to the private donors of this fund. I do not believe Mr. Rockefeller could have put the money to a better use than to have given it to the General Education Board, and I do not know how the board could have put it to a better use than in this work in collaboration with the Department of Agriculture. About one-half of the entire income of the board is spent in the South, the remainder being spent in the North and West. Instead of giving unnecessary offense to these people by the insertion of a provision of this character, it seems to me that we should rather commend this use of the money than otherwise. It is not necessary, however, for Congress to say anything about it. If Congress wants to take over the entire work, let it do so, but let it not at the same time take an unnecessary slap at a most worthy and deserving act which has been of untold benefit to our southern people. In other words, it seems to me that the conference committee, even if it consented to increase the appropriation, should at least strike out the words which I have quoted in the opening paragraph of this letter.

The fact is that I do not think there can be any valid objection to governmental bodies cooperating with private individuals in charitable or semi-charitable work. While we usually do not denominate this as charity yet it is a matter of public service, and a like principle should, and I believe does, obtain. I do not believe, therefore, that any harm has or could have come through governmental authorities handling and using this money in the manner pursued by them. At the same time if the Government thinks it ought to take over the work, let it do so, but it surely is not necessary to insert a provision in a public act under circumstances of this kind. I believe that far from our people approving such a provision, those of them who are informed upon the subject would rather resent it as being an unjust slap at men who have done a worthy deed and who should be commended rather than censured therefor. If it is thought desirable to discontinue the acceptance of similar contributions in the future, the department can be tipped off as to the will of Congress without unnecessarily putting it into the act.

I am very sorry I could not see you, as I would have been very glad to have talked with you of other matters and of other times.

With best wishes and highest regards personally, I am,

Sincerely,

SYDNEY J. BOWIE.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., June 4, 1914.

HON. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR OSCAR: I am inclosing you copy of letter which I have written to Congressman Lever, which explains itself.

Further explaining the matter, I will say that the General Education Board having expended with the Government's knowledge and consent and through its own agencies practically a million dollars in this work, and the work having been of untold benefit to the farmers of the South, it seems to me that if the Government intends to discontinue accepting future gifts for political reasons it might at least say nothing about it. There is no necessity for adding insult to injury by the implied reflection which is contained in the proviso quoted in my letter to Lever. You know I can not think that our party has anything to gain by cheap peanut politics of that kind. Mr. Rockefeller has given about $43,000,000 to the General Education Board. He really wanted to give a great deal more. About half of the income from this large sum has been annually appropriated in the South. They never give a dollar unless the community will give from $3 to $5. They have therefore immensely stimulated the work of giving to colleges throughout the country, and in no instance have they ever sought in any way to influence the political thought of these colleges. The whole idea that they could do so is preposterous under the circumstances. Mr. Rockefeller is simply trying to have his money given to the best advantage, and it is a spirit which needs commendation. It seems to me that this is a matter entirely beyond cheap politics, and if we can not express appreciation of gifts received under circumstances of this kind we should at least forego public criticism. At all events, the thousands and hundreds of thousand of southern farmers who have been benefited by the Boys' Corn Clubs and the Girls' Tomato and Canning Clubs and by the demonstration farms would, I believe, resent it if it was generally known that Congress had inserted such a provision in the bill. Congress undoubtedly has the right to take the whole work over, but they might at least stop at that. I wish you would speak to the conferees and see if they would not agree to drop out the proviso quoted in my letter to Lever. Sincerely,

Your friend,

SYDNEY J. BOWIE.

MAY 5, 1914.

DEAR SENATOR KENYON: Thank you very much for your letter. I wish that I might long ago have had a full talk with you about the General Education Board from every standpoint. I could have told you many things that it seems to me it is proper for you to understand in view of the fact that you are now put in the position throughout the United States of making attacks upon this board and of intimating that its gifts to educational objects have not been made wisely or with good motives.

I had long ago become interested in the great need of the South for educational advancement in all directions, and had therefore attended the earliest of the now famous yearly conferences on education in the South. Out of those early conferences grew the Southern Education Board, of which the late Robert C. Ogden, of New York, and the late Hon. J. L. M. Curry, for many years the chief agent of the Peabody Fund in the South, were the most conspicuous founders. Mr. Ogden remained president of this board until his death last year. I was made a member of the board at the beginning and am still one of its members. I have never been associated with a more able, a more unselfish, or a more statesmanlike group of educational leaders than the men who have belonged to the Southern Education Board.

The work of this board obtained the recognition and support of various men who were interested in the cause of education, and among them, in particular, was Mr. Rockefeller, who had for a long time been a large supporter of various schools and educational enterprises in the South. Among the most active members of the Southern Education Board were the late William H. Baldwin (president of the Long Island Railroad), who had lived for years in the South as a railroad official; Mr. George Foster Peabody, who had originally come to New York from Georgia; Mr. Walter Page, originally from North Carolina; and various others. The Southern Education Board had demonstrated the educational opportunities and needs in the South and had enlisted the hearty good will of the friends and leaders of the education of both races, as well as the support of State officials and the heads of institutions.

The idea of another board, which should have a large income at its disposal and be able at once to help supply some of the most urgent educational needs of the South, as well as those of other parts of the country, became impressed upon the minds of those who were influential with Mr. Rockefeller and were his advisers in matters of education and philanthropy. When it was decided to form such a board, Mr. Rockefeller offered an initial support, which assured it a considerable income for a brief term of years; and its members were appointed largely from the membership of the Southern Education Board, Mr. Baldwin becoming the first chairman. Since the board in its ultimate purposes was to be national in its scope, it was thought desirable to obtain for it a congressional charter. It could, indeed, have done its work just as well under a State charter, but there seemed reasons why it would be desirable to obtain a charter at Washington.

Among the men brought into the new board were the late Daniel C. Gilman (president of Johns Hopkins University); Mr. Morris K. Jesup, of New York; Mr. Frederick T. Gates; and Mr. E. Benjamin Andrews (chancellor of the University of Nebraska). Dr. Wallace Buttrick was at once made secretary and chief executive officer of the board.

After several years' observation of the board's methods and achievements, Mr. Rockefeller felt that he could trust it with increasing sums; and as a result of several successive gifts, the board came into the control of the large funds now intrusted to it, due report of which is made annually to the Secretary of the Interior.

The board has helped to advance educational progress in so many ways, particularly in the South, that I could hardly enumerate them to you in a letter. It has succeeded in strengthening a number of the best colleges and universities, and it has been active in helping to establish high schools throughout the South and to give better training to the teachers needed for the rural common schools. This work has been done always in cooperation and harmony with the educational forces of the States where money has been contributed. There has never, anywhere in the South, been the slightest thought of spending any of the money of the General Education Board with a view to political influence or to creating any kind of tendency as respects public opinion upon economic or social questions.

The board became interested in agricultural progress very largely through its deep perception of the fact that in the Southern States it was almost impossible to secure proper local support of common schools until neighborhoods had become sufficiently prosperous to pay school taxes. Agricultural prosperity seemed even more urgent than improved schools; or, rather, each of these reforms needed the help of the other, and both problems were to be considered as phases of a single larger one—that of the real progress and prosperity of the people.

The late Dr. Seaman Knapp, formerly president of the Iowa State Agricultural College, had been brought to Washington by Secretary Wilson of the Department of Agriculture, and placed at the head of a Government farm demonstration service in the Bureau of Plant Industry. Dr. Knapp's methods with the cotton growers, who had suffered such great losses through the ravages of the boll weevil, had been of great value as showing not only how to raise more and better cotton, but also how to diversify southern crops and improve local conditions.

This work of Dr. Knapp under the guidance of Secretary Wilson had greatly appealed to the General Education Board as of immense value and importance. Mr. Baldwin meanwhile had died, and Mr. Gates had become chairman of the board. Mr. Gates and Dr. Buttrick (as also Mr. Page, who served on the Country Life Commission with your distinguished veteran farm editor of Iowa, Henry Wallace) had become so greatly impressed with Dr. Knapp's work that they wished to see it largely applied in the South. The whole board was unanimous in adopting their views. But the appropriations made by the Government for the farm demonstration work were not large enough to extend that work very rapidly, or to carry it at all outside of the districts infected by the boll weevil.

The General Education Board proposed to have the farm demonstration methods extended, in advance of the boll weevil, to the South Atlantic States, and to be tried here and there farther north than the cotton belt. Secretary Wilson and Dr. Knapp were prepared to appoint additional local farm demonstration agents in the South, and to supervise the work, with the General Education Board appropriating such sums from year to year as were agreed upon. These appropriations grew larger, because the department felt great interest in the spread of the work under Dr. Knapp's direction, and because the General Education Board was so well pleased on its part with the kind of supervision and direction that the Government was giving.

There was no interference upon the part of the General Education Board at any point. There was, on the contrary, entire harmony between the officers of the board on the one hand and the Secretary of Agriculture upon the other. We in New York had regarded it as perfectly well understood by the agricultural committees of both Houses of Congress, just as it was understood throughout the South, that the General Education Board was cooperating in this work of extending farm demonstration quite rapidly.

It would, indeed, have been quite possible for the board to have carried on this work under its own direct management; and at all times it would have been possible to have it directed by the State authorities and the local agricultural colleges, which looked upon it at first with indifference but afterwards with convinced admiration.

But the most efficient way to secure results, and to convince localities of the worth of this method of practical farm demonstration, seemed to be to have the work directed from Washington and carried on in a unified way under the direction of Dr. Seaman Knapp, and afterwards—Dr. Knapp having died at a great age, with his energy and his power unabated until the end—under the direction of his son, Mr. Bradford Knapp, who now directs the work efficiently under the present administration.

It had not been expected by the General Education Board that this cooperation with the department for the sake of farm demonstration in the South was to be other than a comparatively temporary arrangement. The boll weevil and other conditions created something like a great sectional emergency. The Government constantly cooperates with private donors to Red Cross funds in times of great public calamity involving loss of life and suffering—as floods, fires, and so on.

I am in a position to know the spirit of the General Education Board in its relation to this farm demonstration work, and I can assure you it has been patriotic in the truest sense.

There were certain reasons why this farm demonstration work was more immediately necessary in the South than in other parts of the country; but the General Education Board has already, in the course of a number of years, contributed toward that work a million dollars or more, and it is probably true that the time has come when the board's funds ought to be made free for other forms of effort.

If Congress is so convinced of the value of this work that it is ready to carry it on, as you now propose, it would seem to me that this is a substantial tribute to a kind of work that the board has done so much to encourage and develop.

I can hardly believe, however, that if you had really understood the intelligent enthusiasm and the perfectly unselfish zeal with which the board has cooperated in all this business, you would not have wished to stand before the country as disparaging the board. Nor, indeed, as a Senator from the State of Iowa, would you wish to attack a work which had been carried on under the full direction of two such distinguished Iowa statesmen and veteran farmers as Secretary Wilson and Dr. Knapp. It was largely because of the value of this work, and their appreciation of it, that the farmers of the South clamored for the retention of Secretary Wilson when Mr. Taft formed his cabinet. It was wholly on account of the value of this work that in its great new teachers' college at Nashville, which bears the name of George Peabody, there will be a department forever known as "The Seaman A. Knapp School of Country Life," thus perpetuating the memory of the man who was president of Iowa's State College of Agriculture.

You are quoted in the newspapers as having reflected by inference upon the colleges and educational institutions throughout the United States that have been helped in their endowments by the General Education Board. It is true that this board has given a great deal of money to colleges and universities. I should think the amount of such gifts must by this time be $12,000,000, or thereabouts, but in no case has the amount given to an institution been large enough to carry with it any suspicion of an endeavor to obtain any influence over the management or the teaching of the institution. For example, five colleges in your own State have had a share in these appropriations. The college in your State that has received most aid from the General Education Board is your own college (as it is also mine), namely, the institution at Grinnell; but whereas the General Education Board has helped Grinnell College in three successive campaigns for funds, its subscriptions have amounted only to a total of $200,000, as against about four times as much contributed by the friends and supporters of the college.

It is always the aim of the General Education Board to help those who help themselves, and to do it in such a way as to stimulate and strengthen each college's proper and natural constituency. For instance, your college at Grinnell has just completed a new campaign to raise $500,000 for necessary objects (chiefly endowment), and the General Education Board has subscribed one dollar in five. There is no college in the country which is regarded as more independent in its spirit or more wholly free from undue influence in its teaching and in its control than the college at Grinnell, which has pride in you as one of its students and in your colleague, Senator Cummins, as one of its trustees. You, I am sure, know well that neither the trustees on the one hand nor the president and faculty on the other hand could be persuaded to give up any degree of the full measure of freedom that Grinnell has always enjoyed. And what you know in this regard is also well known by the General Education Board.

I can assure you, from my own constant observation, that the General Education Board, in its subscriptions to colleges and universities throughout the United States has shown no motive except that of promoting and strengthening the cause of education. If I could have discovered in the board any other motive or tendency, I could not with good conscience have remained a member.

It would seem to me impossible to attempt to discuss the General Education Board's work except as its membership has managed its affairs and appropriated its income.

The board believes that the investment, and from time to time reinvestment, of its funds have been managed with due regard to the safety of the principal and the yielding of a proper average percentage of income in order that it might have resources with which to promote the carefully selected objects of its support or aid. I have not served on its finance committee, but each member of the board has been duly informed from time to time of the status of the board's investments. It is natural that business men in New York should invest educational and trust funds in the securities of railroads and industrial enterprises with which they are acquainted.

The work of this board has become well known to the educational people of the country. The board has been brought into close relationship with the presidents of colleges and universities and the other leaders in the cause of education. There is hardly any university or college in the country, great or small, which has not come into relationship with this board, either through application for a subscription to some endowment effort or in some other way.

The board has made it its business to encourage good standards and careful management wherever its influence extended. I do not believe any college president or educational leader in the United States will come forward to say that the board has ever, to his knowledge, tried to exert any kind of influence except a wise and helpful one, as respects, for example, good business management, avoidance of improper diversion of permanent funds to current expenses, thorough educational standards, and truth instead of fiction in college statistics.

The good opinion the board has earned among the educational men of the country is the more remarkable because it has steadfastly refused to buy popularity by distributing doles to all seekers. While it has helped many colleges, it has refused to help vastly more because it had rules and standards to which they could not conform. Yet even these hundreds of institutions which have not secured aid from the board have seldom failed to appreciate the impartiality and sincerity of the motives governing the board's decisions.

As the board is now constituted, its chairman is Mr. Frederick T. Gates, and its secretary and chief executive officer is Mr. Wallace Buttrick, with Drs. E. O. Sage and Abraham Flexner as his assistants—these secretaries all three being educational experts of rare ability, and two of them are members of the board. Besides these officers, the board includes, in the order of seniority of membership, the following names: John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Walter H. Page (now ambassador, etc.), Albert Shaw, Starr J. Murphy, Edwin A. Alderman (president of the University of Virginia), Hollis B. Frissell (president of Hampton Institute), Harry Pratt Judson (president of the University of Chicago), Charles W. Eliot (president emeritus of Harvard University), Andrew Carnegie, Edgar L. Marston (New York financier), Wickliffe Rose, Jerome D. Greene, and Anson Phelps Stokes.

Messrs. Rose, Greene, and Stokes are educational experts of great ability and experience—the first chiefly identified with southern educational work, the second formerly with Harvard, and the third with Yale.

The entire board is keenly interested in all the work that is carried on. Members like Dr. Elliot, for instance, are not merely nominal or perfunctory members, but give long days and their most thorough attention to the board's work. In this regard, indeed, there has perhaps never been an educational board having large funds to expend which has been made up of men so minutely intelligent about all of its efforts, and so keenly alive to the opportunities and responsibilities of the trust reposed in them. The board has done its work in harmony—not the harmony of mere acquiescence, but that of intelligence and of conviction after free and full discussion.

Since I am writing this long letter to you entirely of my own accord, and without consultation with anyone whatsoever, I believe that my statements must, to some extent, result in your obtaining a new and better light upon the spirit and methods of this board. I could have had no reason, through all these years, for remaining a member of the General Educational Board if I had not been fully and at all times convinced of the value of its work. I have felt that as a member of the board I was connected with an enterprise that was performing a noble public service with freshness of ideas, with immense vitality, and under guidance and direction that has always surprised and delighted me by its sagacity as well as by its energy.

I can not feel that your attacks upon the board are just to us who have through these years constituted its membership, and have thus been responsible for its actions. It is true that the funds directed by the board are considerable excepting for those very great gifts received from Mr. John D. Rockefeller, although the board has at all times been prepared to receive and to administer money put in its hands for educational purposes by other donors. Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., has from the beginning been a member of the board. I am sure that everyone who has served with him on this board would testify to Mr. Rockefeller's conscientiousness as a member, and to the qualities, both of mind and of character, exhibited by him in the board, which would have made him a most desirable member quite apart from the fact that the board was dispensing the income of funds contributed by his father.

I must not for a moment question your intention in a matter of this kind, as in all other things that affect your action as a Senator, to be guided by a sense of public duty. I must ask you to be equally careful not to reflect upon the motives or the labors of those of us who have given of our time and effort as members of this board, impelled by a great sense of the opportunity given us to serve the best ends of American progress.

I believe that this board has made a remarkable record for usefulness and efficiency. I believe that if you could have known the spirit of its members, the thoroughness with which they have studied the educational needs of the country, and the considerations that have actuated them in their different undertakings, you would wish to compliment the board, because you also are a man who, by nature and by training, is in full sympathy with all the different things that this board has tried to do or to help others in doing.

This letter, long as it is, merely summarizes what I should like to have said to you in conversation some time ago, in order that you might at least have had the advantage of my point of view and of my information.

I, for my part, am quite willing to have the board's support of farm demonstration entirely taken over by the Government. But if you had known, as fully as I have known, the history of this cooperation, I think that you would have been glad to pay the board a generous compliment for its timely helpfulness in this field, while proposing to relieve its funds and to take over the work as worthy of full governmental support.

As for the character of the board, I am inclined to hold strongly to the view that an organization of this kind, not having a local object in view, but dispensing its educational funds throughout all portions of the country, may better operate under a congressional charter than under that of an individual State. You might, indeed, find it desirable to prepare and introduce a bill providing a wise and well-restricted form of Federal charter for educational funds and endowments of this character, rather than to have such enterprises incorporated singly and under separate and special forms.

Believe me, with great regard,

Sincerely, yours,

ALBERT SHAW.

JUNE 1, 1914.

Senator LUKE LEA,
Washington, D. C.:

It appears that the Agricultural appropriation bill contains language reflecting on the General Education Board in a most offensive manner. As I have a good deal of personal knowledge of the workings of that board, and an acquaintance with the men directing its affairs, I am in position to know that it is not deserving of any sort of censure, but, on the contrary, so far as Nashville and Tennessee in particular, and the whole South in general, are concerned, there is every reason to be under lasting obligations, and should be deeply grateful for the favors which that board has shown.

The George Peabody College for Teachers, at Nashville, owes its very existence to the General Education Board, which has rendered it most valuable assistance in every way, and responds to its needs promptly and unhesitatingly.

It would be nothing short of a crime for Congress to use any language reflecting on the General Education Board, or any of the people connected therewith, and I sincerely trust that you will exert yourself to the utmost to prevent any such outrage being done.

JAMES E. CALDWELL.

MAY 23, 1914.

Hon. A. F. LEVER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LEVER: I note from the press that a resolution has been passed by the United States Senate which will make it impossible for the General Education Board to make further contributions to the support of the farm demonstration work in the South, and that another resolution has been introduced into the Senate revoking the charter of the General Education Board.

For the last four years I have had excellent opportunities to observe the farm demonstration work and other activities to which the General Education Board has contributed. As I understand it, the farm demonstration work was begun by the General Education Board as an experiment, with the hope that it would so commend itself that the General Government would take over its activities when the work was well established. I am surprised to see a disposition to condemn the General Education Board for initiating and supporting an activity which the Government has now determined to assume. The work of the General Education Board has been performed in the Southern States. I do not believe that it is in accordance with our courtesy and our traditions that we should sit still and allow people from other sections to put us in a position which would seem discourteous and ungrateful.

If the demonstration work, assisted by private agencies, has done its work, and the Government is now willing to assume the whole burden, would it not be better to relieve the private agency with a vote of thanks and words of commendation and not merely to kick it out unceremoniously?

The position which I have until recently held in South Carolina has not been supported by the General Education Board, but it has been my privilege to work with the Farm Demonstration Agency, the Canning Club, and with Mr. Hand. No one will deny that these have been effective forces in the agricultural and educational development of South Carolina. I do not believe that the appointment of a single one of these workers has been dictated by Dr. Buttrick or the General Education Board.

I was once offered the position in Arkansas corresponding to that now held by Mr. Hand in South Carolina. The tender came from the president of the university. Dr. Buttrick would take no responsibility in the nomination of the officer.

I believe that the resolution to revoke the charter of the General Education Board is a shortsighted political move. I do not think any law should be passed which will make it impossible for citizens of the United States, with patriotic impulses, to cooperate with their Government toward right ends. If there is any danger in the contributions of the wealthy to benevolent purposes, this danger would certainly be minimized by the supervision of the National Government. The General Education Board has thus far shown great wisdom in its selection of lines of activity. I see no reason why we should anticipate a reversal of its beneficent policies.

I trust that Congress will soon adjourn and that you will get a much-needed rest. We all appreciate your magnificent work as chairman of the Agricultural Committee.

Yours, sincerely,

W. K. TATE.

STEAMBOAT SPRINGS, COLO.

Congressman EDW. KEATING,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR KEATING: I came into possession of the inclosed piece of correspondence while in Oak Creek the other day, and I thought it worthy of notice by the committee of investigation of industrial matters appointed by Congress which investigated, among other troubles, the Colorado strike of a year ago.

You will notice the date, January 2, 1915, which is later than the time when the fight was at fever heat, yet at such late date the wholesale dealers were yet sensitive.

Oak Creek, as you will know, is a mining town in Routt County, where the threatened deportation was to take place and where the detachment of State troops sent into this part of the State were quartered.

The K. Clemens to whom the letter is addressed is and was throughout the strike a friend of the strikers, and because of ability to speak several languages and his activity in holding the strikers together by his being of Polish or Slavonic nativity he was a subject of much abuse from the faction endeavoring to break the strike.

The Jas. A. Brobeck of the letter is a salesman of the J. S. Brown Wholesale Grocery Co., who works this part of the State for that firm.

Trusting that you will direct this inclosed letter into the proper hands, I remain,

Yours,

ALBERT A. MANN.

THE J. S. BROWN MERCANTILE CO.,
Steamboat Springs, Colo., January 2, 1915.

MR. K. CLEMENS, Oak Creek, Colo.

DEAR SIR: Regarding the orders for 30 cases Tall Columbine, which you gave me order for some short time ago, to be included in my car of milk, will say that I think it best to use a little diplomacy in connection with this sale for our own protection.

While nothing has been said recently regarding our selling you, we have had protests from some of the merchants in Oak Creek, and you understand that we can not afford to jeopardize the nice business which we have there by selling anyone that is objectionable to any of our customers. However, Sam Loomis is a good friend of mine and not a bad one of yours, and I have explained this to him and asked him for permission to bill these 30 cases of milk to him, and he will give the drayman an order to deliver it to you. As I will not be there at that time, I will have the house send Loomis a bill for the same, and then he is to make collection, as the transaction will be cash.

The car will be shipped Monday or Tuesday, and I might as well say right here that this will be a very profitable purchase for you, as milk will advance again just as soon as the present fight is off, which every merchant in your district has taken advantage of.

Yours, very truly,

JAS. A. BROBECK.

DEAR SIR: Please accept my thanks for your kindness, but I will not need your milk in above transaction.

Yours, truly,

K. CLEMENS.

THE ROCKEFELLERS IN THE ROCKIES.

By E. S. Gaddis, late superintendent of the sociological department of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT.

The United States is the largest coal-producing country in the world, exceeding England's annual output over 200,000,000 tons.

In 1864, the virgin year for the Colorado collieries, 500 tons was the yield; in 1910 over 12,000,000 tons were dug; last year a tonnage of some 8,000,000 was recorded, giving the State the ninth place among the 28 coal-mining States of the Union. The Centennial State is destined to take much higher rank than previous ratings, as the United States Geological Survey estimates her workable coal fields at 10,130 square miles.

The Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. mine 85 per cent of the State's total output of coal and are the largest company loading the black diamonds.

COMPONENT PARTS.

This corporation was formed in 1892 by a coalition of the Colorado Fuel Co. and the Colorado Coal & Iron Co. The following subsidiary branches were subsequently acquired or developed: The Colorado Coal & Iron Co., the Colorado Supply Co., the Colorado & Wyoming Railway, the Crystal River Railway, the Grand River Coal & Coke Co., the Rocky Mountain Timber Co., the Colorado Industrial Co., the Mountain Telegraph Co. (part owners), the Minnequa Town Co., the Pueblo Realty Co., the Hospital Association Co., the Red Stone Improvement Co. (part owners), and the Minnequa Cooperage Co.

The fourteenth auxiliary has lately been made an adjunct to the Rocky Mountain Timber Co. Cattle raising on a large scale will soon be tried. Expiring leases on the Maxwell land grant are not being renewed, the acreage to be reserved for coming herds of beef on the hoof.

The purchase of between 250,000 and 300,000 acres of the above-mentioned territory deprived many ranchers of what they had concluded was their inalienable property rights. A representative of the company, accompanied by a band of hair-trigger cowboy desperadoes, clothed with the dignity of a deputy sheriff's commission, proceeded to settle disputed claims. At Stonewall one man was shot down in cold blood; all enemies were put to flight; and the raid guaranteed clear titles to vast regions of coal and timber land. The leader of these bandits was lately eulogized by one of the board of directors in saying: "They don't make 'em much better than the old man."

STOCKHOLDERS.

In October, 1914, the twenty-second annual exhibit came from the press in pamphlet form: "Capitalization, $36,325,000; bonded debt, $45,158,000; summary of total assets over $101,000,000."

Rockefellers own 40 per cent of the preferred and 40 per cent of the common stock; also 64 per cent of the "general five" bonds. There are 2,000 other stockholders.

In the early days of the strike agitation, the newspapers boldly affirmed that the company had accumulated a $5,000,000 reserve fund, with which to defeat the efforts of the United Mine Workers. The allegation was denied, but the snug sum furnished the foundation for a serene complacency, and a course of tactics otherwise impossible. Often heavy drafts on this reserve fund for "strike expenses"; cash on hand in the financial report is tabulated at over four million.

Six years ago Welborn was not regarded as a man of large enough caliber to properly conserve the allied interests of which he had been made president. He "was not trained as an operator of a large corporation." Bowers clothed with authority from 26 Wall Street and sufficient proxies to constitute him sole arbitrator in all minor and major matters to which he might address his attention began to put into telling effect his former "experience in organization and management." "It is true I represent the Rockefeller interests," is his asseveration. The Damocles sword that Bowers suspended over the heads of the officers in the Boston Building in Denver reduced them to manikins and office boys.

Testimony was given before the Federal Commission on Industrial Relations, sitting in Denver last December, that Bowers was still a resident of Denver. Absentee landlordism was not a palatable phrase for the operators. Months before this statement was made Bowers had sold his Denver property and removed his family to the East. He had fully determined to "turn things over to the boys" and there was much rejoicing at the prospect that he would be content to give them chiefly "absent treatment" in the future.

At 68 years of age Bowers was wearied with carrying the rasping details of a large business; and while the case of industrial malpractice was being adjudicated in the court of public opinion, he retired to his eastern home.

About 25 years ago four-fifths of the men in the Colorado collieries spoke the English language. The Welsh, English, Scotch, and Irish were the predominating races. To-day the ratio has been exactly reversed, and the English-speaking employees average about one-fifth of the people in the camps.

Aliens in the fullest sense of the word have been encouraged to crowd out the higher grade immigrant. To lower the scale of those living in the cottages raises the total footing of the scales on the tippie. The less it costs to keep camp citizens satisfied the less danger there is of public sentiment forcing expenditures for improvements. The camp that can mine the largest amount of coal at the lowest possible figure carries the banner.

In 1913 some 200 coal miners were operating in the State. Twenty of these represented the Rockefeller holdings. Without being too technical the coal deposits are divided into the northern, southern, and western sections. The C. F. & I. Co. are working in the southern and western areas.

In July and August of 1914 the company had on their pay rolls 7,786 manual laborers, representing 32 different nationalities, principally from southern Europe. The heavy percentage of illiteracy fixed their rating as low almost as present conditions in old Mexico. Many of them could neither read nor write their own language. A few years ago in Las Animas County, which produces 50 per cent of the coal of the State, there was found 18 per cent of the population and one-third of the State's illiteracy. Some of the strikers thought Rockefeller was the President of the United States.

The following table indicates the quota contributed by the Rockefeller system to the modern Tower of Babel that has given the civil and commercial interests of the Commonwealth so much concern:

LOCATING RESPONSIBILITY.

Rockefeller has not been in Colorado for 10 years and seldom attends a meeting of the C. F. & I. board of directors. His ignorance of real conditions in the camp villages enable him to testify under oath: "I should not have known how more conscientiously to carry out my full duty toward them than I have. The fact that they brought no complaints at all would indicate to me that they had no grievances."

For several years prior to the 15 months' war in Colorado, which aroused the whole Nation, neither Bowers nor Welborn were cognizant of policies and practices in dealing with the miners except as represented to them by inferior officers. Bowers took the position that to grant the right of appeal with the type of characters with whom they had to deal was to invite chaos—appeals to Welborn, if they were considered at all, would only emphasize the severity of the régime. A "down-the-canyon" verdict was not likely to be reversed at the office of the general boss, for he is the kingbolt of the machine that must be kept running smoothly. The super can easily erect a wall between himself and the division manager, which only calloused temerity would tackle. At the bottom of the pit with pick and shovel the miner frequently found a grafting pit boss on his back. The Federal grand jury which sat in Pueblo during the strike trouble thus pictures the situation: "Miners generally fear to complain of real grievances, because of the danger of being discharged or placed in inferior positions in the mines. Many miners apparently believe that employees have been discharged because they have made a request for a check-weighman."

The responsibility for about 50 per cent of all the miners of the State laying down their tools lies at the door of the local camp officials, supported by those immediately over them in office, the division and general manager.

When ex-mine mule drivers and rope riders are given the arbitrary authority of a provost marshal in communities varying in size from 200 to 1,000 souls, an individual has been evolved which can only be found in the closed camps of the coal barons—or other mines so controlled.

On the day of the great walkout a super ordered his gunmen to drive the red necks (strikers or their sympathizers) off the company property. The zealous deputies refused to permit men to assist their families to pack their household goods. They were not allowed to stop at the railroad station, not located on C. F. & I. territory. Only after telegraphic remonstrance from railway officials were the men allowed to wait for the trains.

After the famous battle of the "Hogback," where incessant firing for 50 consecutive hours occurred, a super from that neighborhood was drunk on the streets of Walsenburg.

For years a super has been retained in one of the largest camps, whose drunken exploits are a disgrace to the whole county.

About a year ago a super was let out whose notorious camp recourse became unendurable. He soon afterwards opened a saloon in Denver.

Men who don't know how to speak emphatically without blasphemy, or to enforce discipline without brutality, are quite likely to have their efforts seconded by camp marshals whose appointment and salaries are controlled by local companies, and who have exercised a system of espionage, and have resorted to arbitrary powers of police control. These, taken with brutal assaults upon the miners, have produced a general dissatisfaction.

VIOLENT DEATHS.

Geological formations in the Rocky Mountain region make mining peculiarly hazardous. There are two deaths here for every one in all other coal fields in the United States. The Rockefeller company have made a heavy contribution to this mortality.

The following explosions in recent years have occurred in the Rockefeller mines: April 2, 1906, Quattro, 19 killed; January 23, 1907, Primero, 22 killed; May 5, 1907, Engleville, 5 killed; January 31, 1910, Primero, 78 killed; October 8, 1910, Starkville, 56 killed. Total, 178 in five years.

When the second Primero explosion occurred, the leading pastor of Denver from his pulpit declared the lives had been sacrificed on the altar of corporation cupidity. By telephone the Rockefeller representative said he wished to make explanation; to which the good man replied, there is nothing to be explained. For these utterances he was blacklisted along with the muckraking magazines, socialistic preachers, trust-busting political shysters, and their bedfellows—the agitators and anarchists.

During a recent period of little over two years there were nearly 180 violent deaths in mines in Las Animas County. Within a period of eight years and a radius of some 150 miles of Trinidad, 564 lives were crushed out. In 1914 statistics presented by the United States Bureau of Mines, charges 106 deaths to Colorado. More than two human lives a week was the toll exacted. For three years past the number of violent deaths for every 1,000 employees has increased. Fifty per cent of these fatal accidents are preventable, and yet an adverse deliverance of a coroner's jury was but once levied against the company during this time.

That perjury before the coroner is common no one will deny that has serious regard for a breach of the ninth commandment.

A few weeks ago a pit boss and colored miner were killed by two runaway cars. It was a topic of conversation among the men of this camp that the cars had not a double coupling as required. The company was exculpated, the State mine inspector said "the men stepped from a place of safety into a place of danger."

Coal at any cost seems the avowed policy of not a few of the petty bosses. That a drunken spree is really a good thing, for the miner will work harder to make up for loss of time when he is able to reach the face of his room again, is the opinion of one of them.

King coal!
And who is the baster?
King coal!
The modern world's master—
Through triumph or blackened disaster,
King coal!

A CENTRIFUGAL FIASCO.

The much-advertised appointment of a welfare agent, "as a mediator between the company and its employees," will only tend to intensify the despicable oppressiveness of the past few years. One super at least has already been informed, sub rosa, that there need be no undue concern about this new officer limiting their suzerainty. He had been in the field but a few weeks when he effected the discharge of a man with a family to support, on the word of a woman of questionable character. The evicted employee was given no opportunity to present his side of the case.

It is a farce to presume that a pet appointee would fearlessly and impartially bring things to the surface that would disturb the imperturbable equanimity of the one who must O. K. his monthly salary account.

The assembling of camp delegates in Bowers's old office on January 19, in which complaints were solicited, and a generally bumptious good time, with free auto rides, banquet, and theater party as a part of the program, in addition, all expenses being paid to and from their respective camps, was a decided hit; "and many of them showed a freedom such as one might expect from them in a meeting exclusively of their immediate associates." If two of the members of this Denver convention represented the rank and file of the body, the norm of the past years will not be altered. One of their said members has for some time made more money in his camp than the super himself.

Another son of Ham, who sat in this first assembly of coal camp patricians and plebeians, owed the company store a bill of over $80, which the manager had almost despaired of collecting; and for more than a year this same accredited subject had been paying back the store on $100 advanced for his wife's funeral expenses. A good square kick would hardly be expected from such sources.

Again the remembrance of so many of their former comrades being "canned" for squealing would not be forgotten amidst the grandeur and informality of their temporary environment.

A few weeks after this meeting a representative from headquarters inquired of a super if "the men thought we were trying to put one over on them." There is room for suspicion that "one is being put over" on the public and that the various investigating committees are having dust thrown into their eyes; for, presto, the lion has been changed into the lamb.

POLITICAL MANEUVERS.

In the fall of 1912, the present brightest star in Rockefeller's Colorado legal galaxy publicly attacked the corporations in the following language: "You who have been attending conventions for the last 10 years in Colorado know very well, if you are honest with yourselves, your neighbors, that you can not put your finger on a single item of convention legislation in the way of platform or nomination in which you were instrumental. They have probably given the local superintendent of the mine the number of delegates to which the community is entitled. He knows he is to select a certain number of men who are to come in and follow the dictation of a single man whose name is given them before they leave. Candidates are selected not with a view of their fitness, not with a view of their ability to discharge their duty, not with a view of their integrity, but 'are they satisfactory to the company?'" This man was too formidable an antagonist to be at large. Last year no more doughty champion than he defended the Rockefeller interests. The Chronicle-News, the Trinidad evening paper which he owns and controls, went beyond all limits to out-Herod Herod in their fight against the miners. The city editor of this paper so exasperated the strikers that he apparently considered it the part of wisdom to seek employment in another city.

The frequent number of conferences the manager of the Trinidad Morning Advertiser had with the local and Denver office would justify the opinion that the nature of the many columns of the advertising he was carrying needed particular attention.

The deliverance of the ex-judge was by no means an anachronism. The company camp delegates to the Las Animas Republican convention in Trinidad last spring, 1914, were closeted with the general boss of the fuel department just before they went to the convention hall.

"If the Republican ticket is not elected some one will be out of a job," was a threat made to an employee.

In the battle at the polls November 3, 1914, the company store manager and mine weigh boss served as camp election judges, while the super and marshal lined things up on the outside. Returns from this camp were quite satisfactory.

On this same day the clerks in the Denver office were so moved by patriotic principles as to almost desert their desks to a man for efforts in and about the polls.

In the last legislature a company store manager sat as a member of the lower house who is said to have blandly asserted that he was a corporation man.

Several years ago the State legislature found the large corporations so sensitive to restrictive measures that they put up dummy bills as scarecrows; and the fear of obnoxious laws subsided, as the State lawmakers were reduced to a set of blackmailers.

From a high tribunal the charge is hurled, "The coal companies are sufficiently influential to nominate, elect, and control many county officers, and have done so with the result of complicating the industrial situation by arousing political prejudices."

In 1912 a notice was posted in the camps of the company that "every one of its employees shall be free to vote as he sees fit." A hard-working company railway man who dared to be a Democrat was decapitated a few months ago in spite of the declaration of political independence above quoted.

SOCIOLOGICAL FEATURES.

The propaganda for social welfare work was first introduced by making the surgeon general the superintendent of the department. The casa vivienda (living house) of the hospital medical staff at Pueblo is a commodious structure, which modern science and a liberal amount of money have made a place of beauty and luxury. It is situated in a 20-acre cultivated wooded campus, with the hospital buildings in the same inclosure.

The surroundings at Minnequa have had the same effect upon the sensibilities of the leaders there as the anesthetics they administer to patients in the operating room. The lack of comforts, the squalor and filth of the camps is so far removed from these gentlemen that they are little touched "with the feeling of infirmity" for those who must endure the hardships of camp life. An appeal to the surgeon general for relief of some despicable situation seldom meets a prompt and adequate response.

"We are not engaged in the philanthropic business," was the deliverance of the head of the medical department when solicited to assist those near the hospital who were voluntarily supporting a work that Rockefeller's millions should have long ago put on a firm footing.

After a few years' trial of the above plan, a minister was employed to act as superintendent of the department of sociology, and also business manager of Minnequa Hospital. To advance the religious, educational, and social work of 25 or 30 camps, necessitating the travel of over 1,000 miles to complete the circuit, is a full complement of labor for any one man. To give one-fifth time afield and four-fifths at home was to allow pressing matters to go by default along progressive welfare lines. After a somewhat lengthy tenure of office, the second superintendent retired with very meager results as the sum total of his efforts.

At this period, about two years ago, there was but one small clubhouse in the Trinidad district of nine (C. F. & I. Co.) camps; one also in the Walsenburg district of six camps, that was not cursed by saloon associations; one in a rock quarry, but so far removed from where the men lived as to be little used by them.

At Red Stone, on the western slope, a large amount of money was expended in improvements of all kinds. It is the show place of the two largest coal companies in the State. But for a number of years neither coal nor coke has been shipped from this point, and as a sociological asset for employees the whole plant is a negligible quantity.

At the Pueblo Steel Works, which employs from 4,000 to 6,000 men, there is not a semblance of social-welfare advantages.

Mr. Bigelow, a well-known eastern sociologist, came to Colorado last summer to take notes of the work of the department now being considered. After a visit to a few camps he concluded there was nothing to investigate, and returned home.

One of the board of directors living in Denver candidly admitted, "We might as well confess it, we have not given them anything but the saloon for the past 25 years."

In contrast to the magnificence at casa vivienda, many of the miners' families are living in hovels, box-car shacks, and adobe sheds that are not fit for the habitation of human beings. But this does not interrupt the deduction of rent from the pay check.

A camp physician thus describes a certain Italian quarter: "There are houses up the canyon, so called, of which 8 are habitable and 46 simply awful; they are disreputably disgraceful. I have had to remove a mother in labor from one part of the shack to another to keep dry."

Frequently the population is so congested that whole families are crowded into one room; eight persons in one small room was reported during the past year.

In one of the best-paying camps the hotel is such a dilapidated, ramshackle trap that the boarders are driven from the place offering such accommodations.

At an altitude of 10,000 feet, where the thermometer drops to an extremely low register, there is not a plastered house to be found. The man intrusted to answer the questionnaire sent out from Washington was instructed to fill out the blank forms so as not to arouse suspicion that conditions would fall below the standard suggested by the interrogations.

The average underground workman must make the following monthly payments before the credit side of his account is needed: Powder, caps, and fuses, $5; electric lamp, $1; oil lamp, $1.50; medical dues, $1; water, per month, in Frederick or Segundo, $1; blacksmith, 50 cents; house of four rooms, $8; men's clubs (voluntary), $1; water at Lester (35 cents per barrel), $1.40; electric lights, 35 cents per room, $1.40; company store, about 35 per cent of his pay check, $42. At $4 per day, 30 days, $120, less $62.30, or 50 per cent of the man's earnings, back into the company coffers.

The present status quo of sociological work makes the best showing in the history of the Rockefeller controlled mines. But it is so far below what a pure humanitarian basis demands, with but one or two exceptions there is not a camp where the charge, "On the ground where the corporations make their money there is the least evidence of it," would not be literally true.

Religious work is especially in need of attention and new methods. A preaching service once a month, a Sabbath school each week, led frequently by those quite unfit for such work, does not meet the needs of a society where the downward immoral pull is never slackened.

The various home-missionary societies should place men among these responsive settlements, untrammelled by the dictation of mercenary officials, who are now quite sufficiently obsessed with present range of rule.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

For 10 years a camp was operated without a public school, the nearest one being 4½ miles, or a 9-mile walk each day. Families with children moved away in order to find school privileges. A girl 13 years old lived in this camp who had not been to school.

"The school facilities in our camps are the very best," was the word given under oath to the investigating committee authorized by Congress. In a district under the company school directors, and where prior to the strike nearly every man in the village worked for the company, an old leaky roof adobe building has been used for a school for several years. The use of this property gave rent to a former camp marshal. It is situated between the coke-oven washer and a stable, is overcrowded with children, and at times is filled with smoke from the company plant.

Up to last fall a building in a closed camp had been utilized for school purposes, located on the second floor of a hotel building owned by the company; to reach it a dark stairway must be ascended; the small windows in the room were on a level with the floor; and in dark days the children had to take their books to the window in order to read.

In another community the windows and doors of the schoolhouse had become so loose that on windy days, of which there were many, one was reminded of a ride on a motor cycle. A teacher in this building said that sessions of her school were interfered with because the room could not be warmed on cold days. For making this statement she was informed by the superintendent that her appointment as teacher for the coming year would not have been approved had he known of her course a little earlier.

A State statute at least 20 years old requires fireproof fire escapes on all two-story school buildings. The company has at least six such buildings, and not one of them was protected according to law at the beginning of 1914. The threat of a penitentiary sentence which the law imposes caused activity in some quarters, but was ineffectual with others.

A young married man was suddenly deprived of his position as principal and a local official's daughter given the place. A store manager director wished to remove a lady teacher because she did not trade with him. A principal was not reappointed last fall on the ground that he was a "redneck." When the assistant general boss of the coal camps was asked for the proof of the charge, he answered: "So-and-so is a G. D. red neck. When I dismiss a man working for me that settles it. If the Denver office wishes to make the appointment of school teachers, I have nothing to say."

Later the man, who had appealed to both Bowers and Welborn, was taken care of in another camp.

For being instrumental in having an inefficient neice removed from a position that was paying her $80 per month, one was threatened with physical violence by the camp superintendent.

A young man that insisted his lady teachers conduct themselves properly, and that dances in the schoolhouse close at 12 o'clock Saturday night instead of 4 a. m. Sunday, was called "too religious" and informed that had he conducted himself as other men in the camp he would not have lost his position.

A store manager's daughter below legal age, and without any teacher's certificate, was made a teacher against the protest of the county superintendent and the people of the camp.

Whenever there is danger that the company clique may lose control of the school board directorship, the indefeasible right of the electors is denied them, and an obsequious county superintendent makes a favorable appointment.

In many camps a large portion or all of the school tax is levied on company property. This, together with the school directors being hirelings, has led to surprising liberties with this public fund. A $6,000 building was erected, the company carpenters doing all the work. With the building still unpaid for, no indebtedness was recorded in the county treasurer's office against the district. The mine clerk was receiving notices from company headquarters and to the amount of the debt still due the company.

The president of one of the boards stated his district had paid the company enough interest on their debt to pay for the school building. The company advances money for the proposed improvements and seems to collect the principal on the terms to suit themselves.

In order to put some additional equipment in one of the schools, inquiry was made as to the amount of money the district would have to use for the current year. The clerk of the board gave it as less than $3,000, while the county treasurer said warrants to the extent of $9,000 would be honored from that district.

The law of the State permits schools of the camp grade to fix the salary of the clerk of the board. It would be an interesting item to know the exact amount of money this scribe receives.

SANITARY SITUATION.

The insanitary plight of large portions of company property is due very largely to the fact that the hands of the camp physician are tied by the superintendent. For a man who has made hygienic science a special study to have his recommendations thwarted by a blockheaded superintendent make the general boss of the coal regions supreme in his realm; but it is little less than a crime against the camp population. For a superintendent to tell a doctor who has made a request for the protection of the health of a neighborhood, "Now, you are knocking me," all but makes one feel they would like to have a virile pugilist handy to place some real knocks.

Here is an example of the way the present plan works: A physician asked the superintendent to have the camp cleaned up, and no time should have been lost in ridding the place of its malady-breeding spots. The doctor was told: "I have no men for that work; let the people clean up their own yards. If you want the camp cleaned, do it yourself." With his own hands the scavenger alley surface refuse was removed by the petitioner.

As a fruit of such folly, the medical report for all camps and plants for 1912-13 gave 151 cases of typhoid, or nearly 3 a week for the entire year.

For more than a year a cesspool within a few feet of the company store regularly relieved itself by overflowing and running down across the principal thoroughfare of the camp. Both the store manager and his wife had been down with typhoid. This Stygian situation and others almost as offensive were reported to the head of the medical work, and was passed over by a reply to the "kicker"—"Better be careful or you will step on some one's toes."

The mountainous situation of many camps fairly well takes care of the otherwise miserable drainage. The surface debris was allowed to collect so heavily in one camp as to appear as if the place had never been properly cleaned. The closets and public washhouses are permitted to be in degrees of unhealthiness that were it not for the pure mountain air and its unequalled aridity in great abundance sickness and death would run riot.

The water in most of the camps is very good, but there are some notable exceptions. The intake of a water supply from a so-called "mountain stream" was the favorite standing ground for cattle.

Hydrant water at the door was found to be so chemically unfit for general use in one of the smaller camps that pure water, at 30 cents a barrel, was peddled out.

Seepage water from a large mine, with a distinctively dead-rat-essence flavor, was supplied three camps, because it was cheaper than to tap the main pipe line of one of the best water sources in the State—even though this water main ran directly through one of the camps.

By the payment of $1 per month, deducted from the employee's pay check, he is entitled to free medical service for himself and family at the camp, free hospital treatment for himself, and one-half rate for any member of his family.

The physicians are paid a salary, generally including house rent and coal free. They are to give gratuitous services for all cases, except those of confinement, venereal diseases, and fight bruises. A monthly allowance for drugs of 3 cents per capita is also furnished.

The apportionment for medicine, which they must freely dispense, is entirely inadequate to meet their needs. In one camp the doctor's monthly bill for drugs was $25 or more, and he was receiving about $12 for such expense from the company. That would put him nearly $150 in the hole at the end of the year. This arrearage must either be paid from the doctor's pocket or from the extra money he receives in cases above noted or from neighborhood practice.

By a special order from the head of the medical department at Pueblo, his charges, whether reasonable or extortionate, may be deducted from the employee's pay check.

Presumably for an object lesson for the whole camp a bill for service was collected through the mine office by the company physician when the family had been so bold as to call in a doctor of their own choice, and the father was discharged for being unwilling to pay it. This case was reported to the Denver headquarters and no redress was ever made.

THE COLORADO SUPPLY CO.

A chain of 22 retail and 2 wholesale stores, extending from southern Colorado to northern Wyoming, represents the mercantile side of Rockefeller's work in the Rockies.

The development of the bulk of this business from two or three small stores to its present huge dimensions was largely through the genius of one man. A few weeks ago, after having served the company for more than 25 years, he was asked to resign, having previously been compelled to surrender all his stock holdings. The word had gone out from one who stood second only to Rockefeller himself that retrenchment was necessary; and the head of one who had whitened with many winters of arduous service was not to be spared.

Prior to 1910 all but 19 per cent of the stock of the company stores was held by employees. Men who had reached their salary limit, but whom the company wished to show favor, were given the privilege of profit sharing in a business that paid 20 per cent per annum. Bowers called in every "scrap of paper" that represented stock certificates of the store company. No action that this man performed during his Colorado career was more reprehensible or more impolitic. Only blinded selfishness could reason that store managers and clerks who were drawing good dividends on the work they were advancing draws a salary of $150 per month, the average amount paid for that position, from the Boston Building.

A manager had paid $125 for $100 shares, and borrowed money at 18 per cent to make the purchase.

Here is one of the store manager's plans of not missing the dividends. He draws a salary of $150 per month, the average amount paid for that position. His work really pays him $7 a day, i. e., $60 extra in rake-offs. Chickens are worth 20 cents a pound in the camps; and when his chickens go into the butcher shop 20 cents per pound comes back to him. Cattle can be bought from ranchmen cheaper than dressed beef from Swift or Armour. The ranchman is paid one price and the store company is charged another, etc.

That the business methods of the Colorado Supply Co. in the past few years have been little less arduous than the famous West Virginia mining-camp stores let the following facts attest: One who had served the company for 17 or 18 years, declared if a strike is called the Colorado Supply Co. will be responsible. A man filling one of the highest positions in a local camp received a letter of inquiry, as to why he did not trade at the company store. His reply contained his resignation (not accepted), but that he would trade where he thought best. A local doctor estimated he could only afford to buy 50 per cent of his groceries in camp. Lessees of company hotel buildings did not feel free to buy staple groceries except at the store.

During the strike one store cashier collected over 45 per cent of the mine's pay roll.

The general coal camp boss instructed one superintendent (if not all) to use his influence to have employees trade at the store. A few months ago a young manager asked the wife of a laborer if her husband wished to continue working in that place. If so, their grocery business had better come his way.

A mail-order catalogue from one of the Chicago houses was deposited in an arroyo instead of the hands of the addressee.

Store managers are the postmasters in most places. For years it has been the custom of the Rockefeller stores to give a company draft when a postal order was solicited and charge the United States postal rates. The amount of money the Government has lost by this trickery would take expert accountants many days to foot up.

Since the close of the great strike many "gabfests" have been held, in which the managers have been told a square deal must be given in the future.

Prices in some stores have dropped 10 per cent, and 10 per cent more would still leave a handsome profit for Rockefeller in the mining camp groceries.

THE CAMP SALOON.

Only a few years ago the saloon was run in connection with the company store. Bowers divorced such an unholy alliance. Now some of the most prominent and best structures in the camps are used as saloons. In 1908 there were 82 saloons in 25 camps of the Rockefeller mines. Twelve of these saloons operated under lease from the company. In 1913, within a circle of 4 miles diameter, including four camp villages, there were 28 saloons. One of these was on company property and was bringing $1,500 rent to the credit side of coal production for that camp.

The policy of the company has been to farm out their privilege for these joints to human ghouls, who operate them by the camp marshal's consent, without any regard to the restrictive statutes of the State that would interfere with their business.

At Delagua an officer of the National Guard noticing a saloon open on Sabbath, said to the proprietor, "Do you know of a State law which prohibits keeping saloons open on Sunday?" "Oh, that's all right," replied the liquor vendor. "I am justice of the peace in this town, and we don't pay much attention to such things as State laws."

Sabbath opening is condoned by local officials; selling to minors and drunkards is an offense that is allowed to pass without protest.

A saloon and lodging house, known as the Metropolitan Hotel, in Trinidad, was used as an employment bureau. The manager was an employee of the company, and the stock of liquors on hand was regularly invoiced by their travelling auditor.

The former general office building in Pueblo, afterwards known as the Southern Hotel, was rented as a second-rate lodging house and a tenth-rate barroom annexed.

A lessee of a camp saloon on company property was being credited $300 a month for advancing cash to erect the building. Terms of the lease required the company to pay him any balance due on the building when the partnership ceased. Some years ago, when times were very hard, this saloon proprietor came forward with cash to assist the company to meet its pay roll.

The "chamber of horrors" which a camp saloon presents after pay day is so pathetic and shameful that it must be seen in order to be fully comprehended.

Men earning $25 or $40 a week go home penniless after a gambling and drinking bout in one of these places.

Twice a month the coal production is seriously weakened, while the men squander their hard-earned wages, rob their families of needed clothing and food, and fill the coffers of outlaws, who carry on their traffic with a tacit approval of Rockefeller's officials.

One of the largest saloons on company grounds is run by an Italian, and the sheriff of the county is his silent partner.

That camps can be run better without saloons than with them, experience in the strike zone and more than 10 years' trial in one of their large iron mines has fully proven.

In the face of a vote of over 12,000 majority placing the State ban on the liquor business, several camp saloons were allowed to reopen for one more year's devastation.

The old saw that "Every man is entitled to the fruit of his own labor" is severely dealt with by the camp saloon keeper.

The argument that the company must conduct a high-grade saloon in order to prevent dives from starting up just outside our property line has no weight with those familiar with the conduct of the so-called company protected saloons.

One superintendent justified gambling on the same basis; and all others may be so exculpated.

The one strongest inciting factor that precipitated the bloody struggle of last year was the camp saloon. Here men met and, irrationally inflamed, they planned deeds that no sober or well-balanced mind could entertain.

The saloon leagues of the Colorado collieries are well referred to by Kipling in the nineties:

That bids him flout the law he makes;
That bids him make the law he flouts;
Till dazed by many doubts he wakes
The drumming guns that have no doubts.

WEITZEL'S LETTER TO BOWERS CONCERNING CAMP SALOONS.

THE COLORADO FUEL & IRON CO.,
FUEL DEPARTMENT,
Pueblo, Colo., October 2, 1908.

Mr. L. M. BOWERS,
Vice President, Denver, Colo.

DEAR SIR: Our recent investigation of the saloon business at the various camps disclosed the following: At 3 camps there are no saloons; at 25 camps there are a total of 82 saloons, of which 12 are located on company land. At camps where saloons are on company land there is in no case more than one, and in no case, except at Starkville, are there any other saloons where one exists on company land. There are seven camps where we own all the land within reasonable distance and no saloon could be started. These camps are as follows: Cornell, Tercio, Primero, Morley, Floresta, Coalbasin, and Marion. At these camps there is now one saloon each, except Cornell. At six of our camps where there is now one saloon each on company ground, there is ground owned by other parties sufficiently close to operate a saloon and derive the same benefit from our men as though the saloon were on our ground. These camps are Starkville, Berwind, Rouse, Cameron, Walsen, and Gulch. In the event of our closing all saloons on company land, there are nine camps where we should provide amusements of some sort to take the place of the saloon as an evening loafing place. These camps are as follows: Tercio, Primero, Morley, Rouse, Cameron, Floresta, Coalbasin, Gulch, and Marion. This is especially true of Floresta and Marion, where there are many of our men living in shacks and dugouts almost without light or heat, and where there is no place for them to spend their spare time except at the saloon. At these nine camps I would recommend an amusement hall where soft drinks, sandwiches, cigars, and candy be sold, and pool tables or bowling alleys, or both, be put in. The present saloon building could be used for this purpose. The operation of the amusement halls could either be put in charge of the sociological department, or an amusement company could be organized, allowing employees to hold the stock, and be run by a manager under the general direction of the manager of the fuel department. I am satisfied if properly managed this department would be self-sustaining.

At the 12 camps where saloons are on company land, there are four cases where the buildings are owned by the company, and eight cases where they are owned by the saloon keeper. The camps where the company owns the buildings are Tercio, Primero, Walsen, and Coalbasin. The camps where the saloon keeper owns the buildings are Starkville, Morley, Berwin, Cameron, Floresta, Gulch, Rouse, and Marion.

My files show that in only three cases we have a written contract with the saloon keeper. These are Primero, Morley, and Cameron; but I think there is a lease at Tercio. The lease at Primero provides that three days' notice in writing be given the lessee to quit, and if the lessee so elects the lessor agrees to purchase all the furniture, fixtures, improvements, and stock placed on the premises by the lessee, or such part thereof as the lessee may require.

The lease at Morley provides for three days' notice in writing to the lessee to quit, and binds the lessor to pay the lessee the balance due him on the building which has not been previously paid by accrued rent at $200 per month.

The lease at Cameron provides for 30 days' notice in writing to the lessee to quit, and if such notice is given within two years from date of the lease (Apr. 8, 1908), the lessor agrees to pay for the building, or if the lessee prefers to remove it, the lessor shall pay for the removal. This lease also provides that lessee shall not, without written consent of the lessor, carry on any mercantile business on his land which adjoins the company land. This lease was made for the express purpose of preventing the lessee, Virgil, from starting a store or saloon on his adjoining land, where the company could have no control as to closing hours, etc., and from a purely business standpoint the saloon will do us less harm in its present location than if removed across the line to Virgil's own land.

This also applies to the saloon at Rouse, where the concern operating the saloon have a saloon building idle just outside our land, into which they could move at a day's notice and conduct their business as they see fit. They would no doubt be pleased to receive a notice to quit if they knew no one was to occupy the building on company land, as they could then keep an open house at all times and conduct gambling, which our present restrictions prevent their doing.

It is worthy of note that where the company have been able to control the saloon, there is but one, while at other camps there are from 1 to 11.

Before it is decided to remove the saloons I think it would be well to consider further the cases of Rouse and Cameron, as the circumstances are such that their removal, in my judgment, might work a serious injury to the company.

I inclose herewith a list of camps showing number of saloons at each place and their location.

Yours, very truly,

E. H. WEITZEL.

COMMENTS ON THE FOREGOING LETTER.

By E. S. Gaddis.

1. There is no truth in the assertion that the absence of camp saloons does not reduce the drinking habit so long as outside saloons are allowed to operate near by. At Tercio men would have had to travel about 5 miles before reaching the confines of company property.

2. The company in furnishing camp saloons makes it easy to debauch and wreck their employees. They assume the personal responsibility for the ruin of some of their otherwise best workmen.

3. Saloons closed during the strike increased the daily tonnage from 10 to 15 per cent.

4. Bowers told me after the strike no company saloon would again be opened if Weltzel would agree that it should be so. Weltzel did not concur with this proposition. Avowedly a temperance man, he permitted one of the worst saloons in Colorado to reopen at Rouse; and this in the face of the fact that 1 mile away, off the company property, this same Italian proprietor was operating another saloon.

5. For several days after pay day where there are camp saloons the superintendents are not expected to produce the normal amount of coal. The men are "blowing in" their hard-earned wages.

6. The camp saloons, supposed to be "controlled" by the company, are allowed to violate every statute of the State that interferes with business. Children are made to "rush the can" in camps in violation of the statute which forbids children to enter a saloon, except with parents.

7. Weltzel has justified Sunday opening to me on the ground if not allowed men would go out of camp and get into trouble. Another superintendent excused gambling, which was robbing men of a large percentage of their wages, on the grounds—the same sort of reasoning may have influenced assistant general manager of fuel department, when we told him of the shameful, brazen actions of a harlot at Segundo; he said: "And I don't give a damn."

8. A pit boss at Primero was allowed to drink so hard that, making over $100 a month, he kept his family in dire want; finally ran away and deserted his wife. The camp raised a purse and sent the wife and children back to Virginia. Mr. Payne, the proprietor of the joint, was paying a rent of $1,500 a year on a building that cost the company $3,000, and, of course, his business must not be interrupted.

9. Welborn stated to the Federal Industrial Commission sitting in Denver in December, 1914: "We rent those places to saloon keepers at a monthly rent which, in the course of 8 or 10 years, would not reimburse us for the original cost of the building plus depreciation and repairs."

10. It is estimated that the drinking miner gives the saloon as high as 30 per cent of his wages at some camps.

11. Dr. W. V. Gage, camp physician at Primero during the strike, has thus committed himself in a written report which Mr. Welborn said ought not to be published at the time it was written, i. e., during the strike: "The very fact, however, that both civil and military authorities have considered it advisable to place whisky out of reach is argument enough regarding its policy as a 'hell raiser.' The ban was first placed upon whisky; the delivery of arms was looked upon as a secondary matter. As camp surgeon, I have become satisfied that a debatable portion of mine accidents are due because of recent or remote alcoholic indulgence." Dr. Gage informed me that accidents decreased about 50 per cent at Primero while the saloon was closed. In our report to the officials for May, 1914, we said: "In the name of a long-suffering God and for the good of innocent wives and children, which the saloon robs and ruins, we plead for saloonless camps."

12. Money for saloon purposes in C. F. & I. camps is an easy and large source of income.

E. S. GADDIS ON THE PRESENT STATUS OF THE SALOON SITUATION IN EIGHT CAMPS OF THE TRINIDAD DISTRICT.

SEPTEMBER 22, 1913.

Primero.—Population, 700. Building and grounds owned by C. F. & I. Co. The "only social center for the camp." On Sabbath, September 21, the back door of this place was open and men were passing in and out. The nude pictures of women that decorate the walls of this are said to be making the proprietor a rich man. Some of the pitiful results of the work of this place have come under our personal notice.

Segundo.—Population, 1,000. Nine saloons not situated on C. F. & I. ground. Old town has 15 saloons, making 24 for this territory.

Tercio.—Has one saloon; building and ground owned by C. F. & I. Co. No other rendezvous for social purposes. A Sabbath baseball excursion party at this camp a few weeks ago secured sufficient liquor to add drunkenness to their desecration of the Lord's day.

Valdez.—Population, 400. Has three saloons not on C. F. & I. property. The State statutes on week-day closing hours; the Sabbath law, which requires closing from 12 o'clock Saturday night until 6 o'clock Monday morning, are undoubtedly violated with impunity. The marshals of the C. F. & I. should be compelled to cause a wholesome respect for law.

Sopris.—Population, 1,000, with 85 per cent Italian. Has 18 saloons, or 1 for every 17 of the male population. On general principles we aver the statement that they are violators of the laws made to control them.

Starkville.—Population, 1,400. Has 12 saloons. Selling to minors should be strictly prohibited in all camps, both closed and open. The custom of small children rushing the can for the parents is an open and flagrant violation of the State statute; can only result in harm to the child.

Morley.—Population, 597. One saloon building, one of the best in camp, owned by the C. F. & I. Co. We are quite sure if those operating this place will be made to respect the State laws great good will result to the unfortunate habits.

Bericind.—Population, 650. Two saloons not on company territory. The only comfortable place for men to lounge.

Tabasco.—Has one saloon, with a population of 550. The owner, Mr. Cox, is reputed to receive $250 per month for the building. The operator of this place has been frank enough to say that if the laws were enforced it would put him out of business. The C. F. & I. are responsible.

GADDIS'S REPORT TO BOWERS CONCERNING FORCED SABBATH LABOR, ETC.

[The Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., Minnequa Hospital, Pueblo, Colo. R. W. Corwin, M. D., chief surgeon.]

Mr. L. M. BOWERS,

Chairman Executive Board, Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

DEAR SIR: The charge against large corporations that where their wealth is produced there is the least evidence of it in the way of improvements should be removed. It is an axiom in social work that whatever helps the environment of the man is calculated to raise him in the scale of labor. Permit me to present to you some needed progressive moves from the viewpoint of the chaplain.

Primero.—A social settlement house is very much needed in this camp. The plans and specifications we have presented to you. The hotel should be enlarged and steam heated throughout. The nude pictures in the saloon building should be removed and the proprietor made to observe the laws of the State in the management of his place. If saloons are a camp necessity, it would be infinitely better for the company to hire a man to run them under strict rules than to farm out the privilege to human ghouls, who grow rich on the weakness of their unfortunate brother.

Segundo.—A social settlement house at this camp will meet a long-felt want. The present one is entirely inadequate for the situation. Steam heat for the hotel bedrooms will make it possible for men to enjoy their rooms in severe weather and also help to keep them from the liquor vampires, who will have their places well warmed and lighted for their customers.

Tercio.—More than six months ago a chapel was promised this camp. There is a very general wish that it might soon be completed. The public school hall is hard to reach, impossible to heat properly in very cold weather, and is so much used for other purposes as almost to destroy the good influences which should be cultivated when public worship of God is sought. The people have a fund ready to use in furnishing the chapel. A new hotel building is much needed in this camp. The hotel in Tercio is a paying institution, and if a modern building heated with steam in all the rooms would be erected it would be well patronized. A social settlement house as a substitute for the saloon is in demand. We earnestly recommend that Terrio be made an experiment camp with no saloon. We believe that one such camp at least in each district will prove beyond doubt that it will be one of the best producers, and be filled with families who wish to raise their children under conditions which can not prevail where the saloon is allowed a free hand. Juanita camp, on the western slope, has been without a saloon for about 10 years and is filled with the best workmen of that district.

Frederick.—A social settlement house with large hall is very much desired by those who live here. The Knights of Pythias have agreed to rent such a hall as soon as constructed. Other societies would also like the same accommodation. There is no place in this camp for men to gather except the saloon. All the barber shops are in connection with saloons. The young men are being injured under these bad conditions. A chapel for the exclusive worship of God is the wish of the people of this community.

Sopris.—There are four camps or villages in this neighborhood and no Protestant church building; only one Sunday school at Sopris. A chapel is one of the most urgent needs of this camp. A social settlement house and a new steam-heated hotel will prove paying investments from the very first. An Italian deaconess to work among the people of her own race, teaching them how to live in this world and to prepare for the world to come, would be a boon to these now very degraded families. The chaplain could use such a worker as an interpreter in preaching and otherwise. The most crying need of all foreigners in the mining camps is the grace of God and the salvation of Jesus Christ.

Starkville.—A social settlement house for this village will do more to stop the wreckage of the present undisputed sway of the saloon than almost anything else. A hotel building controlled by the company would meet a needy situation, and also be a paying enterprise.

Morley.—A chapel for this camp will relieve those who wish to attend church from meeting in the hall where dances are regularly given. Steam heat in the hotel bedrooms is very greatly needed, and a social settlement house.

Berwind.—In normal conditions this canyon has a population of about 2,500 people. The only Protestant church building is a shack used by the colored people. A chapel would do much to tone up the low normal type of life, which is in the ascendancy. A social settlement house with a large hall will meet the needs of this place. Steam heat in the hotel bedrooms will afford comfort for the lodgers. The Saturday night dances should not be permitted to continue until 4 o'clock Sabbath morning. This order should be enforced in all the camps.

Walsen.—A chapel and a social settlement house will meet a need which is made evident by the recent strike trouble. Men and their families can then be properly cared for inside the company line.

Cameron.—A chapel and social settlement house for this growing, prosperous camp will give an equipment that will prove to the miner the company has his highest good in mind.

Rouse-Lester.—Chapel and social settlement for this large camp will make those who live there much more contented, as well as more efficient as employees.

GENERAL NOTES.

Many of the miners have told me they did not wish to labor on the Sabbath day. They are forced to do so under threat of discharge or loss of good place in the mines. The foreigners in some of the camps report under such orders on Sunday and lay off on Monday. There is a disregard of the holy Sabbath which is very deplorable. It could be easily remedied. This would give the hard-worked miner a rest of his body and a chance to cultivate the religious nature.

The box-car shacks in many of the camps are unfit for the habitation of human beings and should be taken down.

Coke braze in the camps for both sidewalks and wagon roads would do much to prevent the very muddy passageways now so frequent to contend with. The water at Sopris, especially in the summer season, is so full of sediment as to be unfit for use without a filter or other processes.

LETTER FROM CAMP ROUSE ON SALE OF LIQUOR TO MINORS.

ROUSE, COLO., January 30, 1915.

Mr. E. S. GADDIS,
Trinidad, Colo.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of January 28 regarding exhibit and will have same in your hands by March 1. Also, I will arrange to make some change in the financial end of the Sunday school, as you suggest.

I would like to call your attention to the fact that our State law regarding the sale of tobacco to minors is being violated by the Colorado Supply Co. here. I have seen the clerks sell tobacco to boys under 16 several times without a written order from the parent. The law is found in the Colorado Revised Statutes, 1908, section 601. If you could take this up with the official heads, great good would be done, I am sure.

Another very bad feature is the way Mauro permits young boys under age to frequent his saloon and even to drink, and I have seen several young fellows not more than 16 years drinking liquor in the saloon. This ought to be stopped at once, as it is corrupting the boys a great deal faster than all the other interests can benefit them.

A certain person suggested that I report these conditions to you, instead of protesting to Mr. Wilson or Mr. Mauro, as you could bring some influence to bear from higher up.

Please consider this letter as confidential, as I am so placed that I have to depend upon these people for many favors and conveniences, and they could make it very unpleasant for me if they chose to do so.

NOTE.—We notified Mr. Kellogg, an official of the Colorado Supply Co. at Denver, that Rouse store was illegally selling tobacco to minors. He sent me a copy of his letter to the store manager of that camp, in which he informed him that such transactions should be stopped.—E. S. Gaddis.

GADDIS'S LETTER TO WEITZEL AND WEITZEL'S REPLY CONCERNING SALE OF LIQUOR TO MINORS AT ROUSE.

FEBRUARY 3, 1915.

Mr. E. H. WEITZEL,
Gen. Mgr. Fuel Dept., O. F. & I. Co., Pueblo, Colo.

DEAR SIR: Mauro, the Rouse saloon keeper, not only permits boys at the age of 16 to frequent his damnation shop, but actually sells them intoxicating liquor. From what I observed on a recent visit to that camp, I can not doubt but that he is selling hell in solution on the Sabbath day. "And if it shall appear that a person or persons not employed in and about the business as aforesaid shall be permitted to remain in the said saloon or other place or places aforesaid, such fact shall be prima facie evidence in favor of the guilt of the accused party or parties." This quotation makes the presence of persons in a saloon a violation of the law.

A word from you will stop this outrage upon the boys of the camp; also protect the holy Sabbath.

Cordially, yours,

E. S. GADDIS.

THE COLORADO FUEL & IRON CO., FUEL DEPARTMENT,
Pueblo, Colo., February 4, 1915.

Mr. E. S. GADDIS,
Trinidad, Colo.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of February 3 in regard to matters at the Rouse saloon.

If you can furnish evidence to support your statements, I will be glad to enter complaint in the district attorney's office against this man. Please advise what your evidence is.

Yours, truly,

E. H. WEITZEL.

E. S. GADDIS'S COMMENTS ON WEITZEL'S ANSWER ON SALE OF LIQUOR TO MINORS AT ROUSE.

1. For me to have given names of my informants to Weitzel would have probably effected their discharge.

2. The use of telephone from the office of the general manager of the fuel department would have secured more "evidence to support (our) statements" than he would have known what to do with.

3. Mauro, the proprietor, was taken on an auto trip to Ideal and presented as a "leading man" of that whole community, Weitzel, Matteson, and Griffith (the mediator) being his sponsors. He is the treasurer of the local school board, which puts camp approval upon him and his murder mill.

BOWER'S LETTER TO GADDIS ON EXCLUSIVE RELIGIOUS RIGHTS AT SUNRISE, WYO.

THE COLORADO FUEL & IRON CO.,
Denver, Colo., January 9, 1915.

DEAR MR. GADDIS: Your favor of the 8th is at hand. In regard to other than the Presbyterian denomination using the church at Sunrise, allow me to say that before the church was built the Methodists had an organization and occupied the hall on Sundays. They failed completely at Sunrise and gave it up, although I undertook to arrange with them to hold the location.

The Presbyterians applied for the privilege of reopening the services and starting a Sunday school in the hall, which was granted; and they made a success of the enterprise to the extent that we built the church for them, which is a Presbyterian church, and one-half of the pastor's salary has been paid by the board in New York City, with the understanding that we would not build or permit to be built another church at Sunrise unless the town became very much larger and two denominations were needed.

I believe the elders are right in their refusal to allow any other denomination to occupy the church as long as the home mission board in New York is backing the undertaking.

You see it is different than if the church was self-supporting, in which case it would be a matter for the church officials to pass upon.

The hall which used to be used for church services, and is now, I think, used by the Catholics, could be secured, I presume, by any other denomination wishing to hold services there, but I would not be inclined to encourage such a move.

In regard to a conference with you, I will say that it is impossible, as I am to return to New York at once. Hereafter please address all communications intended for this office to President Welborn.

Yours, very truly,

L. M. BOWERS.

SCHENCK'S QUESTIONNAIRE AND REPLIES BY GADDIS.

THE COLORADO FUEL & IRON CO.,
OFFICE OF CHAPLAIN,
Trinidad, Colo., May 19, 1914.

MR. C. M. SCHENCK,
President Colorado Supply Co., Denver, Colo.

MY DEAR SIR: In answering your list of questions, I beg to submit the following, referring to the following extracts from an article by W. T. Davis in the Outlook of May 9, 1914, on "The conditions in the strike region," which, for convenience in answering, I have numbered and paragraphed:

1. "From Tabasco the nearest railway is 2½ miles from the station. At half-mile intervals up the gorge are Berwind and Tollerburg." Are these distances approximately correct?

Answer. Yes; they are.

2. "It is 25 miles to a flower, a tree (save the scrub pifion high up in the hills), a lawn, a park, a yard, or a running stream. The same distance must be traveled to purchase a newspaper, to attend a play, or to enjoy access to a reading room." What is the distance from Berwind to Trinidad; and how about his other statements?

Answer. From Berwind to Trinidad is about 16 miles. One of the prettiest camp flower yards I have ever seen was in Berwind last summer. There are at least 30 English daily papers taken at Berwind, the same number at Tabasco, besides numerous daily and weekly foreign papers. The Saturday Evening Post is sold by boy carriers in both camps each week. Except in dry season there is a running stream through Tollerburg, Berwind, and Tabasco.

3. "There is only one place of public resort, the saloon. Once a month a travelling evangelist or a Jesuit missionary visits the camp for a day and returns to his headquarters. Occasionally an itinerant moving-picture man gives a show in the schoolhouse." Are these the facts? If not, what are the facts?

Answer. Sabbath school is held every week unless prevented by storms, strikers, etc.; public worship and preaching service is held about once a month. A weekly motion-picture show is well attended at the Berwind schoolhouse. The saloon and the store are the two public lounging places.

4. "The houses provided by the companies are nearly all shabby, ugly, and small. There are some houses with four rooms, even a few with five, but houses of two or three rooms are far more numerous." How many company houses are there in Tabasco of each, five, four, three, and two rooms? And how many of each in Berwind?

Answer. There are 95 houses at Berwind; 35 of these are cement and 60 frame; well-built and neat-looking cottages. The number of rooms in each house is about as follows (these figures were received by phone, and I am not certain of them): Three six-room houses, 8 five-room houses, 2 three-room houses, 1 two-room house, about 80 four-room houses. I was unable to get figures on the house situation at Tabasco. There are some old shacks in Berwind that should be immediately taken down. They are unfit for human habitation and make a very bad impression on visitors.

5. "There is absolutely no sanitation worthy of the name. Refuse from kitchen, sick chamber, laundry room, and stable is dumped promiscuously in and near the camp." To what extent is this true of Tabasco and also Berwind?

Answer. The charge Mr. Davis makes here, I regret to say, is very near the truth, so far as Berwind and Tabasco are concerned. I know of no camp where such generally insanitary conditions prevail. I have reported these conditions somewhat in detail to the surgeon general. Drastic action is needed to relieve this very bad situation.

6. "Company wagons peddle it (water) to the people, selling it at 25 cents per barrel." Is this true of either Tabasco or Berwind?

Answer. It is not true of either of these camps, but water is sold by the barrel at Camp Lester.

7. "Contagious and infectious diseases are unusually prevalent." How about this?

Answer. Typhoid and scarlet fever are common; other contagious diseases are rare.

8. "The State laws for the protection of men's lives are disregarded by both employer and employee. The law provides that men may choose their checkweighman, and that they shall not be forced into purchasing supplies from company stores. These and other laws regulating mining are constantly ignored." Do you know of a single instance where an employee of the C. F. & I. Co. was forced in purchasing supplies from a Colorado Supply Co. store at Tabasco, Berwind, or elsewhere? If so, give full particulars.

Answer. Many miners claim it was equivalent to being "canned" to ask for a checkweighman; I have never tried to prove their charge. Several miners have informed me they were told under threat of discharge to patronize the company store only. I have never tried to verify their statement. I have been credibly informed that miners insist on breaking the State laws which make "safety-first" action imperative.

9. "The land in the villages is all owned by the company. In every village the company owns at least one building which is used as a saloon. The saloons are farmed out to men who prove, in most instances, to be the very worst of characters." Just where in Tabasco and just where in Berwind is is there a saloon on ground owned or controlled by either the C. F. & I. Co. or the Colorado Supply Co.; and in each instance how long has the saloon been running?

Answer. The saloon for Berwind and Tabasco is not on company ground. It is owned by Joe Cox, who is said to receive $250 per month for the rent of the building. In the following camps the building and lands are owned by the C. F. & I. Co.: Primero, Tercio, Valdez, Morley, Walsen, Gulch, Lime. At Rouse the building is owned by the saloon operator, but the ground is the property of the C. F. & I. Co. I know of no greater curse than the average camp saloon; its continuance is unnecessary; its utter annihilation would bring great blessing and relief to the camps.

10. "In nearly all these towns the people are deprived of any participation in the affairs of their own little public." To what extent is this true at Tabasco and to what extent at Berwind?

Answer. Building improvements in closed camps are for good reasons not made a public concern. American citizens can exercise the right of franchise at Berwind and Tabasco and all other camps.

11. "The ordinary educational facilities of civilized communities are either defective or wanting in mining communities. However, of all the schools in the mining villages only one, so far as the writer could learn, does as high as eighth-grade work." Is this true at Tabasco and Berwind? If not, how many pupils completed the eighth-grade work in Tabasco and Berwind schools during the year ended June 30, 1913? Who are the present teachers in this school, and what qualifications has each for the position held?

Answer. All the C. F. & I. camps have furnished eighth-grade graduates; all of the schools do not have such graduates each year. For instance, in 1912 Berwind and Tabasco had three such graduates; in 1913, none; in 1914, six eighth-grade graduates. These figures were kindly furnished me by the county superintendent. For further refutation of Mr. Davis's very inaccurate statement see inclosed letters from the two county superintendents.¹ The teaching force at Berwind and Tabasco schools last year were the two Misses Wiles, Miss MacDougal, and Miss Clarns. They all hold first-grade certificates, which is the highest qualification given to a teacher, except a normal diploma. The first-grade certificate is good for three years and may be renewed for the same length of time without examination.

12. "Facilities for instruction and inspiration in matters pertaining to private and social ethics are very meager indeed." What have you to say to this, in so far as it applies to Tabasco and Berwind?

Answer. See reply to question No. 3. Furthermore, I must agree with Mr. Davis that "matters pertaining to private and social ethics are very meager." I would suggest that a competent man, whose name I can furnish on application, go from camp to camp, forming classes of English for the foreigners, giving them public instruction on sanitary lines, and teaching them the requisite fundamentals of patriotism and good citizenship.

13. What is your full name, age, occupation, and present place of residence?

Answer. Eugene S. Gaddis, minister of the gospel in the Methodist Episcopal Church; present occupation, superintendent of religious and social welfare work for C. F. & I. Co.

14. How long have you lived in Colorado and how long in the Tabasco and Berwind community?

Answer. One year.

15. Have I your permission to use your answers in any such matter as I may see fit to use them?

Answer. You have full permission to use all answers to the questions herein submitted. I do not wish you to make public use of my name, or reference to my office in such a way as to make me appear an open antagonist of the strikers' cause. To take such a course at this time is simply to invite personal violence, and jeopardize possible usefulness among them in the future.

Cordially, yours,

EUGENE S. GADDIS.

EXCERPTS FROM DR. MACLEOD'S ARTICLE IN CHURCH CHIMES, ISSUED AT PUEBLO
OCTOBER, 1913.

[Church Chimes. Official organ and monthly interchurch news-letter of the synod of Colorado. M. H. MacLeod, editor 1024 East Eighth Street. Vol. X, No. 10. Pueblo, Colo. October, 1913.]

COLORADO COAL-CAMPS CAMPAIGN—CONDUCTED UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE PRESBYTERY OF PUEBLO BY THE IMMIGRATION DEPARTMENT OF THE BOARD OF HOME MISSIONS—A MISSION TO THE IMMIGRANTS IN SOME OF THE MINING CAMPS OF THE SOUTHERN COLORADO COAL FIELD.

The movement under review in these paragraphs is referred to in the New York office of the board of home missions as the Colorado expedition. But locally it is more popularly known as the Colorado coal-camps campaign. It shall be so named in this review and survey. An official report, or general bulletin, covering the activities and findings of the campaign will be issued by the immigration department of the board of home missions. In response to insistent inquiries as to present conditions in the coal camps, I advance these preliminary presentations. They are purely personal impressions and unofficial observations.

The scenes of the summer activities here reviewed are at present included in the zone affected by the miners' strike called September 23. This facts lends weight to a desire for immediate light on the results of the inquiry, examination, and investigation recently made. And the further fact that "the immigrant" is a vital topic in a home-mission-week (Nov. 16-23) program justifies the preparation and presentation of any material bearing upon a study of that subject in its local setting.

The Colorado coal-camps campaign had its genesis in appeals made in the fall of 1912 by the presbytery of Pueblo to the immigration department of the board of home missions for a specific mission to the increasing population of alien immigrants within its bounds. These appeals were cordially and speedily granted. Early in the summer of 1913 the campaign was under way on the field. An intensive, not an extensive, policy was committed to it.

The field chosen for its service was the southern Colorado coal camps, the most extensive and most widely operated coal area in the State. This lies in contiguous parts of Las Animas and Huerfano Counties. Forty or fifty individual coal camps, ranging in population from 250 to 1,500 are located and maintained in a scope of country less than 50 miles square. The term "camp" is sometimes a misnomer. An apology for the common, but often erroneous, use of it will be made later. The individual mines in operation outnumber the individual camps. In many camps two or more mines may be found open and in operation. In these mines about 10,000 miners are employed. These camps have an aggregate immigrant population of 25,000. This constituency is distinctly dependent upon the mining and coking activities.

It may be relevant at the outset to note that mining and coking activities in Colorado made recent rapid advances both in the number of men employed and in the amount of coal produced. Accurate available figures prove the truth of this proposition. In the year 1900 there were 7,459 men employed, but by the year 1910 the number of miners had increased to 15,864. The amount of coal produced in the same decade increased from 5,244,364 tons in 1900 to 11,873,730 tons in 1910.

The bulk of this growth has been in the southern Colorado coal field. These figures are not only a history, but also a prophecy. We may confidently expect the ratio of growth to increase. The material supply is inexhaustible. The industrial demands upon it are multiplying. The problem that this situation thrusts upon us to-day is but an earnest of a problem to abide with us for ages. If it were ephemeral, we might be persuaded to ignore it.

Another point germane to our consideration is the fact that the increased army of employees will be recruits from the type of aliens, nationally referred to as the new immigration. The demand for this body of labor will not be supplied by the American. Neither does this occupation, hazardous and mental, longer appeal to the older stock of foreigners. Our observation of the coal camps situated in Colorado has extended over a period long enough to witness the retreat of the remnant of an old type of immigrants before the steady advance of the increasing army of the new immigration. We know its effects upon our industries. We may view with alarm what is to be its effects upon our institutions, upon our morals, and upon our religion.

Pardon me if I now call to mind the days of my first acquaintance with the coal camps within the bounds of the presbytery of Pueblo. In those days we had a number of Presbyterian churches in the mining sections. Our coal-mines constituency was not neglected. But in those days that coal-mines constituency consisted of English, Scotch, Welsh, and Irish—immigrants in a sense, but an immigrant class akin to ourselves in blood and speech. I recall the time when less than one-fifth the coal-camps population was of foreign complexion and strange tongue. Since then the alien immigrant in increasing numbers took the places of our former acquaintances in these industrial centers.

The character of this immigrant constituency of our coal camps is widely diversified as to nationalities. On the pay roll of some individual mines as many as 20 nationalities are represented. It is obvious that in all the camps 40 or 45 different nationalities are to be dealt with. Italians are in the plurality and are strongly in the majority in the coking camps. Slavs (the cognate divisions are many) are next in numerical strength. Austrians and Hungarians follow. Russians and Greeks have their quota. Roumanians and Lithuanians are represented. The minor lists of non-English-speaking peoples are many and may be omitted.

Passing from a recital of what the campaign corps gave to, or left with, these communities, I come to an inquiry as to what it found as a prevailing religious situation. What types of permanent ministry is the evangelical churches giving these immigrant communities? That answer is: None; absolutely none. This may appear as a terrible indictment of our Christian churches. It brings us face to face with a condition which we should count impossible.

I am not including the Roman Catholic church in my enumeration. It has a number of organizations and several edifices. The organizations are weak and the buildings unpretentious. But apart from that a half a hundred coal camps in southern Colorado may be searched in vain for a church organization in which the immigrant is a unit, or for a church building to whose services he is invited. Indeed, with few exceptions, Americans and aliens are alike criminally neglected by the Christian churches.

COLORADO FUEL & IRON CO.'S CAMP PHYSICIANS' REPORT TO THE SURGEON GENERAL DURING THE SUMMER OF 1914.

Circular letter to the camp physicians from the Surgeon General, Dr. R. W. Corwin, at Pueblo, Colo.:

DEAR DOCTOR: I am desirous of learning more about the welfare of the camps.

1. ABOUT THE SALOON.

- a. Have you a saloon or saloons in your camp?
- b. Where located?
- c. Who owns the ground and building?
- d. Has the company control of, or equity in, the ground, building, or management?
- e. Give any additional information regarding the saloon problem.

2. SCHOOL.

- a. What grades are taught?
- b. How many teachers?
- c. What certificates do they hold?
- d. How well are the teachers qualified for their work?
- e. How many rooms, and number of pupils in each?
- f. What do the teachers do indirectly for the pupils; i. e., assistance or amusements outside of required school work?
- g. Any further information regarding school?

3. AMUSEMENTS.

- a. What is done for the amusement or entertainment of the people?
- b. Is there no place but the saloon for the men to congregate?
- c. Any further information?

4. RELIGIOUS WORK.

- a. Have you a church or churches? If so, kind and how many?
- b. Sunday school, how often?
- c. Where do they hold exercises?

5. SANITATION.

- a. General condition.
- b. What disposition of house refuse.
- c. What are the water-closet arrangements?
- d. How well are these cared for?
- e. What is the source and condition of the drinking water?
- f. What is the source of the food supply and how good are the sanitary precautions?

6. HOUSES.

- a. How many two-room buildings? Condition?
 - b. How many three-room buildings? Condition?
 - c. How many four-room buildings? Condition?
 - d. How many five-room buildings? Condition?
 - e. How many buildings unfit for occupancy?
- What improvements are being made?
 What improvements do you recommend?
 I wish a frank, unprejudiced, and conscientious statement that will stand the test or criticism by friend and foe.
 I trust you appreciate why I am asking these questions at this time. I know it is a tax upon your time, but we need the information. I wish it by July 1.

Very sincerely,

R. W. CORWIN.

PRIMEBO CAMP PHYSICIAN'S REPORT.

JUNE 27, 1914.

DR. R. W. CORWIN, CHIEF SURGEON,
Pueblo, Colo.

DEAR DOCTOR: Replying to yours of the 15th, relative to camp conditions generally, would say as to—

1. SALOONS.

- a. Yes.
- b. Three hundred feet from school.
- c. C. F. & I. Co.
- d. Do not know.
- e. Whole camp better off morally, mentally, physically, and financially since saloon closed.

2. SCHOOL.

- a. Eight grades.
- b. Three.
- c. Miss Hughes; New York State and county. Miss Ring and Miss Murphy; county certificates.
- d. Miss Hughes and Miss Ring are well qualified, but I think Miss Murphy's mental condition should be looked into before she is given work next year.
- e. Three rooms and about 85 pupils.
- f. All put in quite an amount of time, besides investing their own money on school entertainment.
- g. Opportunity for work above the eighth grade should be given pupils.

3. AMUSEMENTS.

- a. Nothing except moving pictures.
- b. No.

4. RELIGIOUS.

- a. One church, used by both Protestants and Catholics.
- b. At irregular intervals, from 6 to 40.
- c. Each Sunday.
- d. In the church.

5. SANITATION.

- a. Strictly speaking, there are no sanitary measures. Ashes are hauled away and lime sprinkled in the closets.
- b. Taken with the ashes, if convenient.
- c. Vaults are filled when full, and new ones dug.
- d. As stated.
- e. River. Good when filtered, but process too slow.
- f. No store neat. No knowledge of sanitation.

The mine office has promised me an answer to your sixth question and same will be sent with this.

To further explain some of the answers upon the first sheet, will say as to sanitation: I believe that a clean camp would be more than welcome, but up to now work in a sanitary way has been about as successful as the preparation of a patient for an abdominal operation would be in the hands of the cheapest man the camp could find to do the work.

I wish to call your attention to the fact that, in spite of primitive sanitary measures and a doubtful water supply, there have been but two cases of typhoid in four years, and only one serious epidemic, i. e., scarlet fever.

The store gets a portion of its meat from the ranches north of the camp, and same is purchased without knowledge as to health of the animal killed. I believe that some of the ranchers would consider it a huge joke to sell diseased beef to the Colorado Supply Co., and besides this there is the diseased carcass sold innocently.

As to Miss Murphy, several times while here she showed very peculiar mental symptoms, including loss of memory for events over short periods of time. Her family history shows two or more cases of insanity.

Houses: We have 44 houses vacant at this time, of which 27 need plastering badly; 15 are in good condition, and 2 in fair condition; the houses that are occupied are in good shape. There are two-room houses, none; three-room houses, 43; four-room houses, 105; five-room houses, 1; six-room houses, 19; seven-room houses, 1.

Faithfully, yours,

W. V. GAGE.

SEGUNDO CAMP PHYSICIAN'S REPORT.

JUNE, 1914.

1. ABOUT THE SALOON.

- a. Have you a saloon or saloons in your camp? Yes.

8. Where located? Four in Frederick; three across the track from the store, 200 yards from same; one located in the shacks; four between Segundo and Frederick, on the other side of railroad track; four between Segundo and Frederick, on same side of railroad track as camp; seven in Old Town, on county road, within a radius of 300 yards of the company washers.

c. Who owns the ground and building? 1. Frank Oreka, owner of saloon and building. 2. Putaturo Bros., owner of saloon; Pells Brewing Co., owner of building. 3. B. Sarracino, owner of saloon and building. 4. Phillip Zanon, owner of saloon; C. F. & I. Co., owner of building. 5. Sam Barranco, owner of saloon and building. 6. Angelo Glorioso, owner of saloon and building. 7. Nick Ringo, owner of saloon and building. 8. Frank Malno, owner of saloon and building. 9. Phillip Maura, owner of saloon and building. 10. Jim Gatto, owner of saloon; Tony Dambrosia, owner of building. 11. Lorenzi, owner of saloon; Coccimiglio, owner of building. 12. Frank Alishio, owner of saloon and building. 13. Pinemonti, owner of saloon and building. 14. Slavish man, owner of saloon; R. E. Lee estate, owner of building. 15. Joe Manino, owner of saloon and building. 16. Fred Forte, owner of saloon and building. 17. Joe Pedri, owner of saloon and building. 18. A. Gargaro & Son, owner of saloon and building. 19. Joe Pelligrini, owner of saloon and building.

d. Has the company control of or equity in the ground, building, or management? Yes; in one located in the shacks at Frederick. Since the soldiers have arrived and closed the saloons the license in this one has expired and fixtures removed from building.

e. Give additional information regarding the saloon problem. Too many saloons for the number of people working. Some saloon men resort to irregular methods to get trade and all will sell liquor to habitual drunkards and minors.

2. SCHOOL.

- a. What grades are taught? Segundo, eight; Frederick, five; Old Town, five.
- b. How many teachers? Segundo, three; Frederick, one; Old Town, one.
- c. What certificates do they hold? I don't know; will let you know later.
- d. How well are the teachers qualified for their work? Very well.
- e. How many rooms and number of pupils in each? Segundo, 3 rooms; primary 43, intermediate 30, to eighth grade, 10; Frederick, 1 room, 61 pupils; Old Town, 1 room, 59 pupils.
- f. What do the teachers do indirectly for the pupils—that is, assistance or amusements outside of required school work? Encourage outdoor games, basket ball for girls and baseball for boys, take an active interest in all entertainments, and instruct the pupils in cleanliness of body, dress, and homes.
- g. Any further information regarding schools? The teachers in Old Town and Frederick have too many pupils and too many grades to do justice to all the pupils.

3. AMUSEMENTS.

- a. What is done for the amusement or entertainment of the people? Moving pictures, one show per week; a dance about every two weeks, and a Mexican dance about every two weeks; a clubhouse with two pool tables, a shower bath, and a barber; Christmas entertainment given by pupils.
- b. Is there no place but the saloon for the men to congregate? No other except the clubhouse.
- c. Any further information? A number of Italians play a ball game in the camp, and the losers of the game buy a bucket of beer. Since saloons have been closed they get a case of pop and seem to be as well satisfied. Baseball in Segundo is not much of a game; no desirable grounds to play on, and the saloons interfere with the efficiency of the players.

4. RELIGIOUS WORK.

- a. Have you a church or churches? If so, kind and how many? One Catholic church in Old Town.
- b. Church services how often and number attending? In Catholic church once a month, don't know number attending; twice a month, 20 or 30.
- c. Sunday school how often? Each Sunday; Segundo, 40; Frederick, 25.
- d. Where do they hold exercises? In the schoolhouse.

5. SANITATION.

- a. General conditions? Fairly good.
- b. What disposition of house refuse? Put in garbage boxes and taken up weekly and dumped outside the town.
- c. What is the water-closet arrangement? Wooden buildings over a pit. A new pit made and building moved when necessary. Chloride of lime used freely about once a month; oftener during the warm weather.
- d. How well are those cared for? About one-half of them are kept clean and doors closed; the rest are somewhat neglected.
- e. What is the source and condition of the drinking water? North Lake; excellent.
- f. What is the source of the food supply and what are the sanitary precautions? Meats are bought at the store and some vegetables. Sanitary precautions excellent. A number of vegetables come from ranches on the river. Sanitary precautions O. K.

6. HOUSES IN FREDERICK.

- a. How many two-room buildings? Condition? None.
- b. How many three-room buildings? Condition? None.
- c. How many four-room buildings? Condition? Forty-four; five 4-room terraces. Condition, fairly good.
- d. How many five-room buildings? None. Two 6-room and one 12-room buildings; seventy-three 1-room shacks and two 2-room shacks.
- e. How many buildings unfit for occupancy? The shacks are car roof, 1 by 12 inch timber, stripped; tar paper on the outside; were put up for batchers, but on account of not having enough houses a number of the families occupy shacks. These are not fit for families or children.

HOUSES IN SEGUNDO.

- a. How many buildings unfit for occupancy? None.
- b. How many three-room buildings? Condition? Sixty-five 3-room; average.
- c. How many four-room buildings? Condition? Forty-six 4-room buildings; average.

d. How many five-room buildings? Condition? None. Fifteen 6-room houses in Segundo; condition good.

What improvements are being made? They are contemplating putting in steam heat and a number of shower baths in the hotel.

What improvements do you recommend?

1. Saloons: Cut down number of saloons and no liquor sold to habitual drunkards or minors.

2. School: Another teacher in Frederick and another in Old Town. Monthly meetings for teachers to discuss the camp school and adoption of a system best suited for camp children.

3. Amusements: A larger and better equipped clubhouse. More pool tables, reading room with papers, magazines, and games; perhaps a bowling alley. Ice cream and soft drinks. This would be self-supporting.

4. Church: Services every Sunday regularly in the morning at Segundo. In the evening at Frederick. In one or two years' time a congregation large enough to almost support a minister would be realized.

5. Sanitation: Closed metal garbage cans for scraps from the tables and kitchen and gathered up daily. Somebody could be found who would gather this and keep cans clean for the scraps obtained. The wooden boxes could be used for ashes and anything that would not breed flies. Doors of water-closets positively kept closed, and closets scrubbed once a week.

6. Houses: More houses in Frederick to house employees so that men with families would not have to live in a shack. Better if there were no shacks. The company has been holding out for a dirty house and broken windowpanes enough to have houses scrubbed and windowpanes put in.

Would recommend that enough be held out to calcimine, scrub, and fumigate the houses and clean up the yard before another family moves in, or if income from houses would justify this, let the company do it.

O. F. ADAMS.

SOPRIS CAMP PHYSICIAN'S REPORT.

JUNE 29, 1914.

R. W. CORWIN, M. D., Pueblo, Colo.

DEAR DOCTOR: In accordance with the conditions at Sopris, Colo., and its wants, the following answers to yours of June 25, 1914, all of which I hope will prove satisfactory and enable you to see and fill our needs.

1. ABOUT THE SALOON.

- a. Have you a saloon or saloons in your camp? Yes.
- b. Where located? Close to Sopris, at St. Thomas and Jerryville.
- c. Who owns the ground and buildings? The following is a list of the saloon keepers in above-mentioned places and those who own the buildings, and also a list of those who do not own buildings.¹

4. Has the company control of or equity in the ground, building, or management? The C. F. & I. Co. has no control of, no equity in, the ground, buildings, or management. There is no saloon or saloons on company property nor has it sold any lot or lots on which a saloon can be conducted in a building constructed for that purpose.

e. Give any additional information regarding the saloon problem. The saloons are fairly well conducted, there being but occasionally a few minor brawls and very few fights resulting in serious injury. At a few of the saloons an occasional dance is held Saturday night or on some holiday occasion, and it is at these events that most trouble arises. The dances as at Mrs. Verdaglio's and at the Central Saloon, conducted by Tony Rocco, are openly public, and the men in bidding for the favors of the dance girls very often, by reason of jealousy and rivalry, are liable to have considerable trouble. Very few, if any, husbands take their wives to these places, but occasionally have a dance at some of the saloons where everybody is good natured and on their good behavior, so there is rarely any trouble, and being amongst close personal friends, is soon stopped.

2. SCHOOL.

a. How many grades are taught? There are eight grades.

b. How many teachers? Four.

c. What certificates do they hold? Mr. E. G. Morand, the principal, holds a life certificate, first grade, as a graduate of the State Teachers' College, Greeley, Colo. Miss Catherine Casey, who teaches the first grade; Miss Frances Barnes, who teaches the second and third grades; and Miss Mabel Ring, who teaches the fourth and fifth grades, are all high-school graduates and hold first-grade certificates.

d. How many rooms and pupils in each? There are four rooms, with 60 pupils in first primary, 55 in second primary, 50 in intermediate, and 33 in grammar room.

e. How well are the teachers qualified for their work? Mr. Morand, the principal, can not be excelled anywhere, both by his qualifications as a teacher and in the interest he takes in his work and his pupils. Mr. Morand is one of the instructors at the county institute every year, and all the teachers under him also attend. Miss Catherine Casey, the primary teacher, is now taking a special training in the Montessori system, which in a modified form it is her intention to introduce here next year. All the teachers are thoroughly qualified for their work, in which they are enthusiasts.

f. What do the teachers do indirectly for their pupils? The boys in higher grades have equipped one of the clothes rooms of the school as a bank, where, as in any commercial bank, they deposit their money; the deposits last year amounting to $150, which they draw out by check, and in all other ways do as is done in any ordinary bank. The boys are given some manual training and a thorough course in first-aid work, and for this latter, as well as for other valuable qualifications, the Sopris Boy Scouts have acquired an interstate reputation. The Sopris school has the best equipment in the county, consisting of a large library, charts, and wall maps, a piano, a Victrola, a lantern with slides, a $100 hand press, which, owing to lack of funds last year, was not used, but hopes are entertained that sufficient funds can be secured this year to publish a small weekly paper. The girls are taught domestic science in all the grades from second upward. They are also taught sewing and other requirements suitable to their sex. Societies have been formed of the schoolboys of St. Thomas and Jerryville, and the canyon, their object being to prevent by advice and example, any profane or vulgar language, the reciting of nasty, vulgar stories, and in all ways the advance of moral and social conditions of its members. During the last eight years 40 finished the eighth grade. Of this number 20 have gone to high school, 11 going at the present time, for which the school district of Sopris pays for the tuition the sum of $550 per year. The girls have a Priscilla Club, and this, together with the boys' club or clubs, hold social functions during the year, the parents and friends being invited, and at which the domestic science class prepares all the food. Taken all in all, our school is indeed worthy of high praise, and for the most part it is due to the principal and teachers, together with a good school board, always a necessity in the upholding and advancement of a school.

3. AMUSEMENTS.

a. What is done for the amusement or entertainment of the people? Absolutely nothing, and so far as any effort or desire being apparent, the idea has not yet shown any appearance of germination. Indeed the germ may be sterilized.

b. Is there any place but the saloon for the men to congregate? No. There is one moving-picture show here, third or fourth rate class, which charges 10 cents for adults and 5 cents for children, and the proprietor of which, it is said, soon after the strike made the statement that no "scabs" were wanted at his place of amusement. While on the subject of amusement I desire to make a suggestion which I hope may be of some value and add to the welfare and contentment of the employees here. It may be true, and I presume is, that its success may not be such as would be expected in a community of such a mixed nationality as we have here—Mexicans, Germans, Hungarians, Slavs, Polacks, and others. These nationalities are clannish, each nationality seeking its own countrymen even in their games and amusements, but there are so many who are partly Americanized that after a while it may not be a difficult matter to break down the barriers which separate the different nationalities. I think a good club with a library, reading and writing room, bowling alley, and a billiard and pool room combined would do much to better the conditions here. Cards and other amusements can, of course, be made incidental. There are many young men here who board here and there and during the cold winter nights have no place to sit by a warm fire; indeed half the time they are chilled through and have no place to go except to bed or to the saloon, where they can play cards or talk, but in any event keep warm. The conditions, as they exist here now, force them to the saloon, and if asked to make an apology for so doing, they have none to make; indeed they could ask what one wanted them to do—freeze. And such an answer, because true, would be confounding.

4. RELIGIOUS WORK.

a. Have you a church or churches; if so, kind and how many? There is one Roman Catholic Church at Sopris, no other denomination having any.

b. Church services, how often; number attending? Services are held once a month in the Catholic Church under the direction of Father Valentine, who comes from Trinidad for that purpose. The attendance varies from 300 to 500 or more, the latter on some special holiday or saint's day. Rev. Mr. Gaddis or Rev. Mr. Taylor hold services once a month at the schoolhouse. The attendance is small, however, owing to the mixed population, Mexican, Italian, Hungarian, and Slav, being Catholic, the Poles belonging to the Greek Church attend the Catholic Church, so the attendance at Rev. Mr. Gaddis's or Rev. Mr. Taylor's services is sometimes as low as 10, 25 being considered a good attendance.

c. Sunday school, how often? Sunday school at the Catholic Church is held once a month, the attendance being 100 or more. Rev. Mr. Gaddis's and Rev. Mr. Taylor's services are held at the schoolhouse every Sunday at 2 p. m., Mr. Herring, of Trinidad, being superintendent, assisted by Mrs. Steele, the wife of the dry goods clerk at the Colorado Supply Co. store, she playing the piano; when the attendance, which rarely exceeds 25 Miss May Daw assists.

5. SANITATION.

a. The general sanitary conditions on company properties are good. On all private properties it is in some places vile and would, if it were not owing to climatic conditions, be unbearable and a great danger to the health of the entire community. There are some premises not only adjacent to but adjoining company property which I presume have not been cleaned up for years.

b. What is the source and condition of drinking water? The water supply is pumped from the Purgatorie River into a reservoir close to the mine; piped all over the camp. Anything I may say in condemnation of the water after a rain or a good thaw would be mild in comparison with what it really is. Its utility either for drinking or household purposes is, of course, prohibitive unless the user wanted to get full of mud. Not only is it full of mud and color of mud half the year around, but it is also black with coal and coke dust, as during the heavy rains the stuff is washed into the river by water running through the arroyos. The water is used after the following process: The families fill one or more barrels from the hydrants, the number of barrels depending on their needs. After being filled about half an ounce of pulverized alum is thrown into each barrel to settle the water before exposed to a broiling sun; the water remaining in the barrels a week or sometimes more is not in good condition for domestic use. When the barrels are empty the usual process is repeated, even without washing the barrel, the bottom and sides of which are covered with a thick, slimy, green deposit. In looking over my list of typhoid cases, in all of which I asked particularly about the water supply, I have not so far been able to trace a single case to the water we use in camp. Three years ago there was so much typhoid at Sopris plaza, a small settlement north of the river, that I threatened to have the wells condemned and filled up if they were not cleaned, as I traced all the cases of typhoid fever in that neighborhood to the use of well water. The camps west of here have Trinidad water: Cokedale has excellent water; even Piedmont, adjoining our camp toward the east, has water with all the desirable qualities and from the same source that we get ours, but it is filtered or pumped from a well close to the river. I have been informed that if the saloons do not soon open so that the men working here can get something decent to drink, for they have long ago given up hope of the water supply being bettered, that they would seek employment elsewhere; and this is no joke I am relating.

f. What is the source of the food supply and what are the sanitary precautions? The precautions taken by the Colorado Supply Co. in protecting its food supply are excellent. Their meats are thoroughly wrapped, their fruits under screened frames, all the doors screened, and in all other respects the best care is taken to protect the foodstuffs. "Swat the fly" is their watchword. In smaller stores, which I do not visit very often, I find about the same conditions prevailing; indeed, no merchant nowadays can expose his produce or what he sells to flies and dust or he will have but small trade; the people are learning the necessity of needful cleanliness. Even vegetables raised by truckers and sold here are all covered in their wagons, and of course much more attractive, not being wilted and burned by the sun.

6. HOUSES.

a. How many two-room buildings? Condition? One.

b. How many three-room buildings? Twenty-one.

c. How many four-room buildings? One.

d. How many five-room buildings? None.

All of the above buildings belong to the company and are kept in good repair and in fairly good condition. The houses are all frame structures and built when Sopris was first opened and in a very hurried way and are not as substantial as they might be; they are cold in winter, but otherwise fairly comfortable.

e. How many buildings unfit for occupancy? There are about 54 houses up the canyon, so called, of which 8 are habitable and 46 simply awful; they are disreputably disgraceful—and more. Mr. Chambers and myself made a close inspection of these houses last Sunday, and without entering into lengthy details give the foregoing as the fairest statement we can make. What is known as "the canyon" is one of the oldest settlements in Sopris, built when the camp was first opened by the southern Italian coke pullers, for which they paid a ground rent of a dollar per month. The report taken from the books in the office shows only 41 houses, but rooms have been added from time to time without objection of the company, and the houses have been sold and resold so often and divided and subdivided until the division amounts to 54 instead of 41. These shacks seem to have been built on a prehistoric plan by these descendants of the Caesars and the style of architecture is now unknown. Old dry goods boxes, soap boxes, old pieces of corrugated iron, powder cans, barrel staves, and every available thing that would stop a hole were used in construction. The roofs are of corrugated iron, and with a total disregard or ignorance of the utility of a nail the iron was nailed on the concave instead of the convex part of the covering, allowing the water to trickle through in streams. I have had to remove a mother in labor from one part of the shack to the other to keep dry, and after remove her to another, upon the roof of which a cover of adobe had been thrown. If we had a few houses up the canyon before or at the time of the strike, we would have lost but few men, as there were no places to put them out of intimidation and harm's way. There is in brief the A. F. C. of this canyon colony. Under sanitation I state that when I came to houses I would say something further on water-closets. In the canyon there may be a half dozen which by courtesy would be called such. Many of them are a few boards thrown together with a hole in the ground not 2 feet deep in which some child may fall, for there is no protection from such an accident. Some are constructed of gunny sacks, with a loose flap in front with which the wind can play to expose the occupant. The children, most of them, adopt the primitive plan of squatting beside the house and turning loose; when they get up shake themselves and walk away. This is not an imaginative story, but an actual occurrence which I have seen scores of times. There are few things more repulsive to a child than personal uncleanness, especially the befoulment of excreta, when once they are taught cleanliness of person in such matters, but the poor children have no convenient place to go and nature does not wait on ceremony. Something should be done to get rid of this pest as soon as possible. There is no excuse for its continuance. Any way you look at it it is a disgrace to the camp and an eyesore which to visitors would blot out all the good that exists in Sopris.

What improvements are being made? Improvements are being made every day to facilitate the coal output. "Safety first" is the watchword of the management. The men are taken to their work in the morning and brought out at night. The working conditions are being improved, day by day earnings are increasing, everybody is looking pleasanter and looks happier, until at quitting time, befouled with dust, they go to their miserable shack of a house, there to find an unattractive wife and still more unattractive children because of the smoke and dirt which they can not avoid in a room not large enough in which to turn around.

What improvements do you recommend? With a keen knowledge of the conditions here and the requirements absolutely imperative I would not, if I had the power, recommend, but demand, the construction of some shower and tub baths here for the use of the employees. There are but few coal camps in southern Colorado which are not supplied with these necessities. As you know, the man in the mine is the cleanest workman in any craft. He has to be, as he is forced to take his bath every day or in a short time he would be sprouting vegetation. Why, then, should Sopris, the gem of them all, with its successful management, its faithful employees, its location, and its innumerable advantages be deprived of this great necessity to their comfort and well-being. I think there are two places in Sopris where the luxury of a bath can be enjoyed—one at Mr. Chambers and the other the Colorado Supply Co. manager's residence.

There is not a vacant house in Sopris and men are doubled up here and there anywhere to lay their poor weary bodies at night. The building of more houses, as you can see by the foregoing, has become imperative. Last fall Mr. Weitzel talked about building 20 houses up the canyon, but nothing has been done. It will have to be done some time and may as well be done at once. It will enable the company to get rid of the eyesore shacks in the canyon, for all their occupants will move into the new houses, since the population is not what it was 20 or 30 years ago.

First aid: During the past four years classes in first aid to the injured have been formed at Sopris and meetings held twice a week—Tuesdays and Thursdays—at which there were always present two full working corps, five men to each corps. Very frequently the attendance amounted to as much as 20, and in the work and the exercises much interest was taken by the employees.

There are eight who received certificates of proficiency in the work from the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. signed by Mr. E. H. Weitzel, manager, Charles Chambers, superintendent, and T. J. Forhan, medical instructor.

Since the strike, September 23, 1913, on classes have been held, either from fear of personal violence to themselves or because they desired to remain with their families because of personal violence to them. Since organization of first aid every individual injured in the mine received first-aid care, no matter whether the injury be major or minor in character. It is the intention to keep this work well in hand indefinitely as it is of inestimable value in the care of the injured.

And now, my dear doctor, I earnestly hope what I have said in the foregoing regarding recommendations will be heeded. I have made many reports, but no one as fully as this in giving some details, and all the conditions are exactly as I state. Mr. Chambers has read what I have written and agrees with me, so does Mr. Baker, the chief clerk; indeed, if I followed their advice and dictation my report would not be nearly as moderate as it is.

Wishing you success in what I hope will be a sweeping reformation in the conditions at Sopris, I remain,

Very sincerely,

T. J. FORHAN.

MORLEY CAMP PHYSICIAN'S REPORT.

JUNE 30.

- a. At Morley there is one saloon.
- b. In the camp.
- c. The company.
- d. Yes.

SCHOOLS.

- a. From first to eighth, inclusive.
- b. Two.
- c. First class.
- d. Well qualified.
- e. Two, about 50 pupils in each room.
- f. Give entertainments, gave a home-talent play.

AMUSEMENTS.

a. A moving-picture show is given every week. A dance is given about every two weeks. Picnics are given during the summer.

b. No.

RELIGIOUS WORK.

a. No.

b. Every week, 25.

c. Yes; every Sunday.

d. In schoolhouse.

SANITATION.

a. Good.

b. Hauled away.

c. Each house has a closet.

d. Good.

e. From reservoir which is fed from mountain stream; condition good.

f. Colorado Supply Co. sanitary precautions good. Some vegetable wagons make regular trips.

HOUSES.

There are 85 four-room and 16 six-room houses. There are 19 one-room shacks. The cement houses are in good condition, the shacks poor.

e. None.

No improvements are being made. A clubhouse would help social conditions. The camp is clean, the water is good, the houses have electric lights and are kept in good repair.

More could be done in church work, and would advise another teacher in the school.

Yours, truly,

D. E. FORD.

BERWIND CAMP PHYSICIAN'S REPORT.

JUNE 24, 1914.

The following information covers Berwind-Tabasco as one camp:

1. SALOONS.

a. Four saloons.

b. Three in upper Berwind and one in central Tabasco.

c. John Aiello owns the ground and two saloons in Berwind, G. Toller owns the ground and one saloon in Berwind, and Joe Cox owns the saloon and ground in Tabasco.

d. No.

e. Four saloons are too many for this place. If we had two saloons, that were allowed to stay open certain hours, close as early as 8 o'clock every evening, and we had an antitreat law, we could get along fine.

2. SCHOOL.

a. All grades to the eighth.

b. Four teachers.

c. First grade.

d. We try to get the best.

e. Four rooms, principal's room, September, 1913, 23; May, 1914, 16. Intermediate room, September, 1913, 65; May, 1914, 48. Intermediate room, September, 1913, 69; May, 1914, 29. Primary room, September, 1913, 75; May, 1914, 41.

f. Not much.

g. We have nine months' school each year. Salaries the past year, principal, $90; the other three teachers, each $80. Our school building is equipped with electric lights, steam heat, and sanitary drinking fountains, the fountains are supplied with pure mountain water.

3. AMUSEMENTS.

a. Picture shows, dances, and lodges.

b. No.

c. We need a good big clubhouse.

4. RELIGIOUS WORK.

- a. One Catholic Church.
- b. The company minister conducts services once each month in the schoolhouse, the Catholics conduct services once each month; attendance rather small.
- c. Yes; every Sunday morning.
- d. Schoolhouse.

5. SANITATION.

- a. Very good at present.
- b. It is put in trash boxes and carted away.
- c. Outside closets.
- d. They are moved about every two years, at other times we disinfect with chloride of lime.
- e. We have a few wells, but the greater portion of the water comes from a mountain spring being piped down to the camp; drinking water very good.
- f. Provisions and food supplied by general stores and huckster wagons; sanitation of these sources has always been very good.

6. HOUSES.

- a. Thirty-eight; condition good.
 - b. Three; condition good.
 - c. One hundred and twenty-one; condition good.
 - d. Eight; condition good.
- Eight 6-room houses; condition good. Two 12-room houses; condition good. Eighteen 4-room houses are at present unfit for occupancy. Extra rooms are being added to two houses to accommodate the growing families of the occupants.

LESTER CAMP PHYSICIAN'S REPORT.

1. ABOUT THE SALOON.

The saloon in Lester was closed about two years ago, and permission to reopen was refused by the company. Since that time a new saloon has been built on land adjoining the company property. The company has no equity in this saloon or the land upon which it stands.

2. SCHOOL.

The Lester children attend the Rouse School.

3. AMUSEMENTS.

What was said under this heading concerning Rouse applies to Lester.

4. RELIGIOUS WORK.

Answered under Rouse.

5. SANITATION.

- a. General conditions fair.
- b. House refuse is carted away to dumps. Each house has a trash can or pit.
- c. Each house has a latrine.
- d. These are handled as in Rouse. New vaults are dug when needed. Closets are made light proof, and lime put into the vault every spring. They are inspected during the summer.
- e. The water coming from the mine in Lester is not potable nor used for cooking. It contains a large amount of sulphur. Used for washing and bathing. The drinking water comes from a well situated in a little draw below the camp or is hauled from Rouse, the user paying the cost of haulage only. There is danger of the well water becoming contaminated, and the users have been advised to boil it.
- f. The camps of Rouse and Lester being so close together, their food supply comes from the same sources. There is a company store at Lester and a store belonging to an independent merchant who is not connected with the company.

6. HOUSES.

- a. Two-room buildings, 6; condition poor.
- b. Three-room buildings, 15; condition fair.
- c. Four-room buildings, 27; condition good (8 concrete).
- d. Five-room building, 1; condition good.
- e. Six-room building, 1; condition good.
- f. Eight-room building, 1; condition good.
- g. The two-room houses are very poor, but all other houses in Lester are in good shape and are occupied at this time. There are a number of houses, mostly adobe, not owned by the company, and some of them on company ground. The owners of these houses live in them or rent them to others. No improvements are being made at the present time.

Recommendations, same as for Rouse.

WILLIAM HALLEY.

IDEAL CAMP PHYSICIAN'S REPORT.

1. ABOUT THE SALOON.

The Ideal camp has not and never has had a saloon on the company property. There was a saloon established adjacent to the company property line. The company had no equity in land or voice in the management of this saloon.

2. SCHOOL.

- a. Grades up to and including seventh.
- b. One.
- c. Third class.
- d. One of the officers of the board says, "Fair."
- e. One room; about 25 pupils.
- f. Board member above quoted says, "Nothing."

3. AMUSEMENTS.

- a. Picture show once a week.
- b. There being no saloon, men meet at each other's house or at the school building.
- c. The school building is used for dances and any other entertainment that is given.

4. RELIGIOUS WORK.

- a. There is no church in Ideal.
- b. Services are held at intervals—about once per month by Rev. E. S. Gaddis. The Catholic priest of the parish makes visits at stated intervals.
- c. Sunday school each Sunday.
- d. Exercises are held in the school building.

5. SANITATION.

- a. General condition fair.
- b. House refuse is carted away to dumps.
- c. Latrine to each house.
- d. New vaults dug as needed. Kept light proof.
- e. The drinking water is surface water coming from a well about one-half mile above the camp. The water is of good quality, but the well has not proper protection to prevent contamination from stock.
- f. From the company store, where the sanitary conditions are good, and from peddlers' wagons, which, coming for a number of miles, are exposed to heat and dust to a small extent from near-by ranchmen.

6. HOUSES.

- a. Two-room buildings, 27; condition very poor, and none occupied at this time.
- b. Three-room buildings, none.
- c. Four-room buildings, 25; conditions good (10 concrete).

- d. Five-room houses, none.
- e. Six-room buildings, 6; conditions good.
- f. All homes are in good condition, with the exception of the two-room buildings. These could be used in the summer time, but are unfit for winter occupancy.

Trash cans are being installed.

Recommendations: Ideal is a new camp and could be kept clean and tidy by a little continued effort. The water supply should be safeguarded. The use of screens in summer. An incinerator.

WALSEN CAMP PHYSICIAN'S REPORT.

JUNE 18, 1914.

Dr. R. W. CORWIN,
Pueblo, Colo.

DEAR DOCTOR: Replying to yours of June 15, 1914, regarding conditions at Walsen, comprising the Walsen and Robinson mines, I submit the following:

1. ABOUT THE SALOON.

a. There has been a saloon in the camp until just recently. About a year ago the saloon was closed and the building arranged for a clubroom. This was continued with no saloon in camp until the strike was called last September, when a saloon was again opened in this building and remained such until the arrival of Federal troops. Arrangements have again been made to use this building as a clubroom.

b. There are several saloons close to camp, but not on company property. Ground and buildings owned by individuals and in no way under control of company.

c. It is the general opinion among more intelligent class of people that conditions are much improved since saloons were closed by Federal troops.

2. SCHOOL.

a. First to eighth, inclusive.

b. Four.

c. Mr. A. S. Neely, first grade certificate; number enrolled, 42; average attendance, 32; Mrs. Cooper, State certificate; number enrolled, 59; average attendance, 18; Miss Bertha Riley, State certificate; number enrolled, 42; average attendance, 24.

d. All well qualified.

e. See "c."

f. Occasional entertainment at school evenings.

3. AMUSEMENTS.

a. Moving-picture show every Monday evening.

b. No.

c. Baseball games nearly every Sunday during summer. First-aid team now being organized.

4. RELIGIOUS WORK.

a. No church.

b. Church services one Sunday each month; very few attending. Fifteen present Sunday, June 21.

c. Sunday school every Sunday; average attendance, 25.

d. At school building.

5. SANITATION.

a. Only fair.

b. Collected in cans and hauled off.

c. Small buildings over open vaults, not screened or fly proof.

d. Very seldom cleaned or moved.

e. Source of water is from workings of old mine. Condition—much complaint as to smell, taste, and use for washing and cooking. In cooking potatoes and other vegetables it turns them dark and injures flavor. Boiling does no good so far as improvement for cooking and taste.

f. Source of food supply is from Colorado Supply Co. store mostly. Sanitary precautions good.

6. HOUSES.

a. Two-room houses, none.

b. Three-room house, 1; in good repair.

c. Four-room houses, 47; in poor repair.

d. Four-room houses, 63; in good repair.

Five-room houses, 2; in good repair. Six-room houses, 17; in good repair. Six-room house, 1; in poor repair. Twenty-one-room house, 1; in fair repair (boarding house). Twelve-room house, 1; in poor repair (Japanese boarding house).

e. Partly on account of condition of houses and partly on condition of camp surrounding the houses, the 47 houses in Red camp are not suitable for occupancy. A great many people live in conditions as bad or worse, but that hardly excuses us for the conditions here. These houses are very old, hard to put in repair and keep that way, and, of course, those that occupy them take no pride in keeping them in repair. The surroundings are unsightly and insanitary. Hydrants are leaky. The ground is uneven, so that water collects in ponds, becomes stagnant, and makes mud. In bad weather the entire camp is muddy. There are a few adobe houses here occupied by employees not counted among company houses.

I think conditions here could be remedied to a great extent by leveling up the camp, building walks with cinders, enforcing rules leaving hydrants open, allowing no leaky hydrants, and filling up holes so that water can not be collected in pools.

7. IMPROVEMENTS.

Fifty new houses just completed.

I would recommend that a different and more palatable water supply be furnished. Arrangements might be made with the city of Walsenburg to tap their main, which runs through the camp. If this could not be done, a similar system might be built, taking water from near source and piping it to the camps.

As to water-closets, I would recommend one or two things. First, a water-borne sewerage system. Second, if water-borne system was not found practicable, I would recommend the vault system, digging a fair-sized hole and placing over it a fly-proof building seat, allowing only fecal matter and urine. When the vault is filled close the vault and move building to a new location. These buildings should have a vent. Also be banked around to prevent flood waters running into the vault.

I would also recommend that walks be built with cinders between and around houses and elsewhere about the camp, as would seem needed, and add to the comfort of those living in the camp. I would also recommend that the number occupying a house or room be restricted according to air space.

Very truly, yours,

A. L. TROUT.

CAMERON AND GLOBE CAMPS PHYSICIAN'S REPORT.

WALSBURG, COLO., June 18, 1914.

Dr. W. R. CORWIN,
Pueblo, Colo.

DEAR DOCTOR: Replying to yours of the 15th regarding welfare of camps, I submit the following concerning Cameron and Globe:

1. ABOUT THE SALOON.

a. Yes.

b. Between Cameron and Globe, near company office and store.

c. Mr. Martino Berattino, proprietor of saloon.

d. No.

e. It is generally conceded that the efficiency of workmen has much improved since closing of saloon by Federal troops.

2. SCHOOL.

a. First to eighth, inclusive.

b. One.

c. First grade.

d. Quite well qualified.

e. One room; number enrolled, 55; average attendance, 28.

f. Some home visits and a few little picnics and entertainments.

g. This year one of the camp houses was used for a school building.

3. AMUSEMENTS.

- a. Moving-picture show every Tuesday evening and an occasional dance. Baseball on Sunday during summer.
- b. No.

4. RELIGIOUS.

- a. No church.
- b. Church services one Sunday each month. Only a few attending.
- c. Sunday school every Sunday. Attended by most of the children in camp.
- d. In building used for the public school.

5. SANITATION.

- a. General condition fair.
- b. House refuse collected in cans and hauled away to dumps.
- c. New buildings and vaults being put in all over camp and will probably be made fly proof.
- d. All buildings just now being changed.
- e. Source is from old workings at Walsen, piped over to tank and from this tank distributed to houses through pipes and hydrants near houses. A few houses have connections inside house. There is much complaint about the taste, smell, and general condition of the water. Lots of sediment, and in cooking it is very unsatisfactory, coloring potatoes very dark, destroying the flavor to a great extent, and, in fact, all vegetables, and cooking is injured materially in comparison with pure water. Boiling does no good so far as improvement in taste or use in cooking.
- f. Source mostly from the Colorado Supply Co. store. Sanitary precautions at the store are good.

6. HOUSES.

- a. No two-room houses.
- b. Thirteen 3-room houses; on good repair.
- c. Thirty-two 4-room houses; in good repair.
- d. Five 5-room houses; in good repair.
- e. Five 6-room houses; in good repair.
- f. One 11-room house; in good repair.
- g. None.

Seventeen new houses are nearing completion, part of them already occupied and all included in above. The superintendent's and store manager's houses will be equipped with modern conveniences—light, water, bath, and toilets.

I would recommend that a different and more palatable water supply be furnished. I am not able to say just how this might be accomplished, but probably in conjunction with Walsen and McNally; arrangements could be made with the city of Walsenburg whereby water could be used from their mains and supplied to the camps. If not, a similar system might be built, not so large, but sufficient for all the camps, and taken from near source and piped to camp in the same manner as that for the city of Walsenburg.

I would also recommend in regard to water-closets one of two ways. First, that water-flushing toilets be furnished each house and drained through crevice in old workings of mine. There is sufficient water in Globe that could be pumped into a tank and passed through pipes used for this purpose only. Second, I would recommend for the water-closets the vault system, digging a fair-sized hole and placing over it a fly-proof building and seat, allowing only fecal matter and urine. When vault is full, close the vault and move building to a new location. These buildings should have a vent and be banked around to prevent flood waters from running into vaults.

I would also recommend that walks be built of cinders, which are abundant near at hand. These walks to run between houses and company store and office and other places most needed. This would eliminate to a great extent the unpleasantness of wading through mud in stormy weather.

Mr. C. A. Kaiser, superintendent, has posted in all houses a very commendable set of rules, a copy of which I inclose herewith.¹

I believe that Cameron can be made one of the best, if not the best, camp from a sanitary and sociological standpoint under this company's management.

A crematory system for the disposal of refuse hauled away from houses would add to sanitary conditions.

As there is a tendency, especially among certain classes, to overcrowd—that is, too many occupy a house or room—I would recommend a strict supervision as to the number that might occupy a house or room according to space.

This should apply to all camps.

Yours, truly,

A. L. TROUT.

CALCITE CAMP PHYSICIAN'S REPORT.

JUNE 23, 1914.

R. W. CORWIN, Chief Surgeon,
Pueblo, Colo.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your circular letter of the 15th instant, I beg to submit the following:

1. ABOUT THE SALOON.

There is no saloon in Calcite, not nearer than Salida, which is 16 miles away. The superintendent allows a reasonable amount of beer in bottles or kegs brought into the camp upon request made personally to him by employees. The camp is always orderly, and I know of no cases of drunkenness.

2. SCHOOL.

Calcite is a part of the Howard district, No. 37. The schoolhouse is located at Howard, 4 miles from Calcite. It is a two-room school, with instruction up to the eighth grade. An effort is now being made either to have a subdistrict established at Calcite or to arrange for transportation for the Calcite children to and from school at Howard. This matter has been taken up with Mr. Gaddis, and his recommendation has been sent to the Denver office.

3. AMUSEMENTS.

A clubhouse is furnished by the company. It contains a pool and billiard table, a piano, a phonograph. It is always open for the benefit of the men, and in the wintertime is used quite freely.

There is no saloon at which the men congregate. They have numerous games which they play during the early evening.

4. RELIGIOUS WORK.

There are no churches at Calcite, and no religious services are held in camp. There is a church at Howard, where our people are welcome and several of our English-speaking people attend. The foreign people are almost entirely Catholic, and those who care to do so go to Salida to attend services.

5. SANITATION.

General condition is good. We are situated in a narrow canyon, where space is at a premium, but a constant effort is made to keep the camp clean and in good sanitary condition. House refuse is put into garbage boxes and hauled away by team. Ordinary outhouses treated frequently with chloride of lime, and renewed when necessary, are the water-closet arrangements. A large tank is being arranged for sprinkling the camp with a solution of chloride of lime in an effort to do away as much as possible with sources of contagion.

Nearly all the drinking water is supplied from springs, and has been found to be pure. Some is taken from the creek at a point above any source of contagion.

The food supply is mainly from the store of the Colorado Supply Co., though ranchers furnish some vegetables, butter, milk, etc. The store is as clean and sanitary as possible, and the service is satisfactory.

6. HOUSES.

The houses are all frame construction, and are kept in good condition. There are 30 houses, sized as follows: One two-room house, 27 four-room houses, 2 five-room houses. In addition to above, there is the superintendent's home, and two or three one-room cookhouses.

No improvements are being made at present aside from the regular necessary repairs.

The superintendent and myself cooperate in a constant effort to keep the camp as clean and sanitary as conditions will permit. Our people are contented and well behaved.

Yours, very truly,

D. D. HAMILTON.

FLORESTA CAMP PHYSICIAN'S REPORT.

JUNE 30, 1914.

1. ABOUT THE SALOON.

- a. One saloon in the camp.
- b. Near C. S. Co. store, on company ground.
- c. The C. F. & I. owns it.
- d. The company controls it.
- e. It was considered best just now, on account of the strike, to have the saloon running here so as to keep the men from going to Crested Butte. It is perhaps the lesser of two evils, as liquor was formerly shipped in from Crested Butte.

2. ABOUT THE SCHOOL.

- a. There were last year only 8 or 10 pupils, all in the lower grades.
- b. One teacher.
- c. Third grade.
- d. Perhaps an average as to qualification. Last teacher young and somewhat indifferent.
- e. Answered (one room and one teacher).
- f. I can not answer this.
- g. I am told that school will soon be started this year, and Mr. Cribbs is manifesting an active interest in it. There will be an attendance of 20 to 25, and steps are being taken to secure the services of a good teacher.

3. AMUSEMENTS.

- a. Nothing is being done. Mr. Songer, of this place, formerly, is making an effort to organize an orchestra.
- b. No; except the store of the boarding house, where a large number of them live.
- c. Hunting and fishing afford about the only amusement during summer months.

RELIGIOUS WORK.

- a. No church.
- b. No church service.
- c. Every Sunday school is held by some people who went from here.
- d. In the home of Mr. Joseph Clark. They expect to hold Sunday school in the school room in the near future.

5. SANITATION.

- a. The general condition is not good. Houses are poor and closets are necessarily near to dwelling rooms. The pressure of other works and the scarcity of hands has held back the management from attending to this matter; and it may be started soon; the season is late and the ground is yet too wet to admit cleaning up. In some cases the water-closets are built as part of the dwelling, and in others they are at a little distance away, but space is limited in Floresta, and conditions are far from ideal. Do not get much attention.
- b. House refuse is thrown anywhere outside of the door. When a high bank is convenient, refuse is dumped over into the creek. This matter is being taken up by Mr. Cribbs and myself, and we hope to have things improved.
- e. The drinking water is one good thing in the camp. The source is above the camp and the purest of mountain water is conducted in pipes to the camp and dwellings.

f. The company store supplies all the food, and I believe the meats and fruits, etc., are kept in good condition and all foodstuffs guarded against contamination.

6. HOUSES.

- a. Five; in poor condition.
- b. Eleven; in fairly good condition.
- c. Two; in good condition.
- d. Two; in good condition.
- e. Two; not occupied.

7. GENERAL QUESTIONS.

No improvements being made.

I recommend the building of more houses, and a regulation, as much as may be, of the habits of the people in regard to the disposal of household refuse and personal filth; I recommend a clubhouse in place of the saloon, and, personally, would like to see liquor eliminated. I think Floresta is the worst camp the company owns, and I think the living conditions there should receive more attention than they do.

Respectfully submitted.

ANGUS TAYLOR.

GULCH CAMP PHYSICIAN'S REPORT.

(Summer of 1914.)

1. ABOUT THE SALOON.

- a. Have you a saloon or saloons in your camp? We have one saloon.
- b. Where located? Centrally.
- c. Who owns the ground and building? The company owns the ground. Mr. John Renstrom owns the building.
- d. Has the company control of or equity in the ground, building, or management? The company owns the ground, but has no other connection with the business, I believe.
- e. Give any additional information regarding the saloon problem. Personally I am opposed to the liquor business. I feel that when a man engages in it he thereby admits that he is either unable or unwilling to enter the lists of competition in some legitimate pursuit. However, Mr. Renstrom is far above the average liquor dealer in manhood and good citizenship. He conducts a clean, orderly place; he is a man of integrity, and for several years has been one of the most active and effective workers for a good school that this camp ever had.

2. SCHOOL.

- a. What grades are taught? First to eighth, inclusive.
- b. How many teachers? Two. At present the number of school children is below the former average and only one teacher has been employed for the coming year. This arrangement is tentative, however, and provision has been made for the employment of a second teacher if it seems necessary in the near future. Indications now point to an increase in the number of school children and the second teacher will probably be employed.
- c. What certificates do they hold? The teacher already employed for next year is a graduate of the State university and holds a first-grade certificate.
- d. How well are the teachers qualified for their work? An experienced teacher has been engaged for next year. She was principal of this school two years ago. Her graduating class (eighth grade) passed their final examinations with the highest grades in the county for that year, according to a statement made by the county superintendent of schools, under whose direction the examinations were conducted. This teacher has taught successfully in one of the leading high schools in the State. She has the unqualified indorsement of the county superintendent, and her credentials from the State university are first class. She has unquestioned social standing. She has taught this school successfully, and the position was offered to her voluntarily by the local board.
- e. How many rooms and number of pupils each? Two rooms, and there are about 30 pupils at the present time. A number of families left the camp when the strike was called last September.

f. What do the teachers do indirectly for the pupils, i. e., assistance of amusements outside of required school work? A public entertainment is given by the school at the beginning of the Christmas vacation, and a picnic held at the end of the school year. Outdoor walks for practical nature study when season is appropriate and weather permits. Frequent entertainment of girls' sewing club at the teacher's home. Periodic Friday afternoon entertainments of usual sort. Discussions led by the teachers and the company physician; some of these are conducted at the physician's home. Some of the topics to be considered next year are: Monumental works of great men, i. e., great discoveries, great buildings, including cathedrals, great accomplishments in engineering, great orations, pictures, books, poems, etc.; the story of man's evolution and development, racial types; immigration, emigration, the interracial mind, America and the American, the interracial mind and the international conscience in the making of the future American type; the marvel of modern transportation and the movement of farm, factory, and mine products; the marvel of modern news gathering and dissemination; application of scientific knowledge to modern agriculture, etc. Important current events will be considered as they occur. The more intelligent parents are actively interested in these discussions. The company physician's library contains many authoritative works treating of these kindred topics. It is freely accessible to all responsible persons.

g. Any further information regarding the school? This school will bear exacting comparison with other schools of similar grade in neighboring towns. The equipment is better and more complete than that found in most schools in communities of this size.

3. AMUSEMENTS.

a. What is done for the amusement of entertainment of the people? An up-to-date moving picture show is given once a week under company management. Only sufficient admission price is charged to cover the cost of film service.

b. Is there no place but the saloon for the men to congregate? No.

c. Any further information? The establishment of a reading and lounging room at the bunk house or some other suitable place would be appreciated by the better class of men.

4. RELIGIOUS WORK.

a. Have you a church or churches? No.

b. Church services how often? Number attending? A Catholic priest visits the camp once or twice a year. A recently instituted plan provides for church services about twice a month. Nearly all English-speaking persons attend.

c. Sunday school; how often? A Sunday school is generally conducted during the school year. Most of the children are members of Catholic families, and their parents do not readily lend support to non-Catholic Sunday school. The Catholics have not maintained a Sunday school.

d. Where do they hold exercises? In the schoolhouse.

5. SANITATION.

a. General condition? Fair; improving.

b. What disposal of house refuse? The more intelligent families burn it. Others do not readily heed instructions to burn house refuse of an organic kind. The Greeks are among the worst offenders. They render a house unfit for human occupancy in a short time. I am astonished at the liberties that seem to have been allowed them, and at this immunity and favors that seem to have been conferred upon them in the past.

c. What are the water-closet arrangements? Ordinary outhouses built over pits.

d. How well are these cared for? They have not received sufficient attention in the past. In my own case, when the necessity arose, I built an outhouse myself. A pit was dug without expense to me.

e. What is the source and condition of the drinking water? Our water comes from springs situated in a narrow gulch a few hundred feet above the camp. It is conducted to the camp and distributed through underground pipes. Each case of typhoid fever that has come to my care here has been traced to a source remote from this camp, in some cases to a source outside the State. We have good water.

f. What is the source of the food supply, and how good are the sanitary precautions? Excellent food supplies, in good condition, are available to all persons. In cleanliness, quality of goods, moderate prices, and courteous service, I find the local store of the Colorado Supply Co. equal to any and superior to some similar business houses in neighboring towns. I have learned from personal experience that we obtain the best meats obtainable in any market at a lower average price than that which prevails in neighboring towns.

6. HOUSES.

a. How many two-room buildings? Conditions? Two; occupied by Greeks. Condition fair.

b. How many three-room buildings? Conditions? Six. Condition fair to good in four; two occupied by Greeks.

c. How many four-room buildings? Condition? Thirteen. In six the windows are broken out, some of the doors are down, some window and door casings have been torn away apparently for kindling wood, there are holes in some of the floors, and many of the rooms are littered with cow manure.

d. How many buildings are unfit for occupancy? Eleven.

e. What improvements are being made? Two four-room houses and two five-room houses are now being repaired. The camp is being cleaned.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

In suggesting the following recommendations I am making due allowance for the history of this camp for the past few years. I realize that the loss of our coke market must have necessitated the curtailment of expense. Most of us who are familiar with local conditions feel that, with strike conditions prevailing in our State, with our isolation from other company activities, and with the long list of unusual vicissitudes which have beset us, this camp is fortunate to be in operation at all.

That part of this report which sets forth the present condition of houses should be interpreted very liberally. A process of repair has been started, but its accomplishment must require time, patience, encouragement, and cooperation. Undesirable and filthy, shiftless families to move from house to house should not be allowed. This practice has been one cause of damage to houses in the past. I do not believe Supt. Robinson will tolerate it.

The coal-mining industry, even under the best obtainable conditions, imposes a high percentage of inevitable risk upon those who engage in it, and no coal mine can operate long without sooner or later being in urgent need of the services of a capable physician; in other departments men of different employment can be interchanged to meet an emergency, and operations proceed without interruption. Efficient first-aid service is indispensable, but at best it can be only of temporary use; but when the demand arises for a physician no person in any other trade or calling can take his place. Any person, from the superintendent down to the most humble day laborer, may, on notice, become indebted to the medical department for relief from pain, possibly for the saving of life, and in view of the fact, it would surely be to the advantage of the company and its employees to have the medical service established on a basis in keeping with the dignity and responsibility which generally distinguish the members of our calling. It should not be necessary for a company physician to exercise himself in the arts and devices of genuflection in order to be recognized as a responsible member of a department that has distinguished itself for fairness and unselfishness.

I suggest, therefore, that the superintendent be plainly instructed to acquiesce in any reasonable and courteous request issuing from the physician's office, and pertaining to camp sanitation and welfare. I do not mean to imply dissatisfaction with the present superintendent, but I would provide against future contingency. On some former occasions, when I have made such requests, I have been impressed with the idea that the awful, omnipotent, czarlike authority of the local powers that be, rendered them capable to run this camp without any of my suggestions, I confess that this attitude changed after time, but only after I and my office had suffered many rebuffs and insults, which would not have been inflicted if my office had been clothed with appropriate authority. I feel that I am entitled to a courteous audience with any superintendent or other official when I come to present matters of interest to the company and its employees. I have not always received such audience.

This camp is infested with cows running at large; they find their way into vacant houses on wet days and when the weather is hot. They often sleep at night on the porches of occupied houses; this necessitates a job of cleaning not usually associated with housework. The daily visits of a bull from a neighboring herd of range cattle must be mentioned without further comment.

It is a tiresome, 24-hour journey from here to the Minnequa Hospital, and we have only one train a day out of this camp, so that it is sometimes necessary to provide for the care of a patient for a day before he can be started to the hospital. We are so isolated that I have always treated cases of wound infection (abscess of the scalp and deep abscess or phlegmon in the neck complicating erysipelas, deep abscess of hand, etc., are examples) and pneumonia here in the camp without subjecting the patients to the inconvenience and exhaustion of a tedious railway trip.

Many of these cases would be sent to the hospital if they occurred in camps less remotely situated. On this account the allowance of 3 cents per capita per month for supplies is not sufficient to meet the needs of this particular camp. My office needs the following articles: Linoleum for one room; paint (I will apply it myself), a cot or single bed with mattress, blankets, and pillows; a foot tub, lumber for dressing table (I will build it myself). I have provided beakers, test tubes, necessary solution bowls, and other enamel ware, besides hot-water bags, towels, etc.

NOTE.—The following matter is not included in your list of questions, and is, therefore, omitted from the report. I take the liberty of appending it with a recommendation for your consideration. This camp does not contain a decent washhouse where the men can bathe, change their clothing, and leave their clean garments while at work. A house could be repaired and a room equipped as washroom; another room could be furnished as a reading and lounging room; any remaining rooms could be occupied by men for sleeping quarters, the occupants paying the usual rental.

ARMA, KANS., May 6, 1915.

Mr. C. S. GADDIS, Phoenix, Ariz.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: In answer to your letter received to-day, referring to the short weights which I had complained of, I always thought the blame rested more on the weighman who weighed the coal than the company. For many days he was off sick and some other man in his place weighed the coal, and generally I got better weight. Then he often had me a car short of the number of cars loaded, and would try to make it appear that I was claiming cars that I had not loaded; but when I saw the superintendent, Mr. O'Neil, and took the complaint of lost cars before him and stated to him that I could easily prove by the driver who pulled the cars from me, as well as the men which worked near by, that I was a car short, one day two short, he said that he would see that the lost cars were made up; after this I had little more trouble about lost cars.

Regarding the trading at the company store, I never was asked to trade there, but we could do about as well to trade and did trade there as well as elsewhere in Segundo.

As for other wrongs, we often had to go into old pillars or rooms to get rails and drag them to our own room, whereas the company should have brought them to each man's switch. Sometimes the company men brought them. What I considered a wrong was that the company paid nothing for handling the rock or dirt between the coal. It ran from 4 inches to 12 inches thick; and took considerable time to handle. If a man had a good place he could make fair wages, but in a poor place with bad top or faulty work his wages were poor. But personally I had a good place and earned fair wages.

I am glad to say we are all well. We have a son now, 1 year old. He is a strong, healthy boy. Both he and our little girl are doing well. I hope you and yours are all well.

Yours, respectfully,

S. HASLAM.

Personally I think the strike is no benefit to the workers, and I often thought that some of the smaller officials were more to blame than the stockholders. I will send your letter to a man named Thomas Dennison; he has worked much longer in the Colorado mines than I have. He used to work at Frederick mine and is acquainted with conditions better than I am. I only know about Frederick, and I understand that was about the best mine they operated on account of a good roof, generally speaking.

BOWERS'S ARTICLE IN LESLIE'S WEEKLY AND NOTES BY GADDIS.

"Corporations, however scrupulously they may comply with the laws of the State and Nation, as well as the higher laws that govern the acts of multitudes of business men employing labor, do not escape the assaults of muckraking magazines, socialistic preachers, trust-busting political shysters with their bed-fellows, the agitators and the anarchists. They all lend their voices and their pens to the work of slandering the corporations with a reckless disregard for the truth."

The above is Bowers's introductory sentences to his page-wide article and photographs. In view of the following facts, we aver Bowers's article has as "reckless disregard for truth" as those whom he denounces.

First, the notorious disregard for laws affecting saloon control, and this both with the tacit approval of officials and assistance of the camp marshals.

Second, the high-handed lawless methods used in connection with the camp school affairs.

Third, the constant breach of State law which protects men from working on the Sabbath day.

Fourth, the undue influence of camp officials in civil elections, often acting as officers of the election, which is forbidden by a specific statute.

Fifth, for more than 15 years a State law has granted the miners a check-weighman; only one has been employed of any length of time in a C. F. & I. mine; i. e., Starkville open camp and a union hotbed. To ask for a check-weighman has been equivalent to a request for time.

Sixth, bimonthly pay day was not granted C. F. & I. employees until the law was 12 years old.

Seventh, compulsory trade at "the store" is a violation of individual right granted by State decree. I have had many tell me they did not feel at liberty to buy elsewhere.

Eighth, the "check off" the pay roll for a man's dues to the company without consent of his wife is a violation of constitutional rights. When doctors' bills also are collected (as they are) it becomes a species of robbery from the laborer.

Ninth, the eight-hour law for underground workmen was belated in its effectiveness until 1913.

If this is scrupulous compliance with law, may we be forever preserved from falling into the hands of the unscrupulous.

For general insanitary conditions the camp doctors' reports submitted last summer fully attest.

We found one camp (Calcite) that never had the advantage of a public school; one was started last fall, after camp was 10 years old. There was a girl of 13 who had not the privilege of a public school living there.

"Two ordained ministers are employed by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. They give all their time to the Sunday schools and churches, supplemented by the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions and the American Sunday School Union in some localities. All the camps of the company have Sunday schools and most of them church services, both Protestant and Catholic in some of them."

We found seven different centers where the C. F. & I. have interests where no religious services of any kind were held.

We succeeded in establishing services at most of these points. Even today it can not be said that all the camps even have Sunday schools.

We have just learned in the past few days that the only preacher now employed by the C. F. & I. Co. is working among the colored people.

On religious conditions among coal camps of the State the Federal grand jury which convened at Pueblo, December 22, 1913, and whose findings were so distasteful to the operators, declares: "Menger facilities are offered for religious training in the coal camps. In a district covering 12 miles, with 10,000 inhabitants, there are only two small Sunday schools, 7 miles apart, and one other denominational bimonthly preaching service."

"At our steel works we employ from four to five thousand men; there they have the advantages of good houses, excellent common and high schools, churches of all denominations, and unexcelled hospital and medical attention."

The company have provided little or nothing for them; unless it be houses to be rented, for which they are well paid.

The dispensary which gives first aid to injured men at the steel works is supported by the $1 per month held out of the wages of each employee.

"The advantages of good houses, excellent common schools and churches of all denominations are open to all residents of Pueblo, whether they work at the steel works or not."

The inference from Bowers's way of putting it would seem to suggest the C. F. & I. Co. were furnishing these advantages.

The padded pay roll scandal at the steel works last year was one of the most gigantic defalcations in the history of American industries. For years men had been drawing money on fictitious names. The whole affair was hushed up and covered over as quickly as possible. One or two nominal sentences were imposed and perchance the most guilty allowed to go scot free. The new editor of the Pueblo Chieftain was threatened with expulsion from the Elite Literary Monday Club for intimating in his paper that dismissal of men should not have stopped until the "higher up" heads had been reached.

ON THE C. F. & I. Co.'s TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL REPORT WHICH WAS SIGNED BY WELBORN AS PRESIDENT.

(Remarks by E. S. Gaddis.)

The twenty-second annual report, issued in October, 1914, Welborn affirms (p. 4): "All the conditions covered by the later demands of the labor organization, except those calling for recognition of the union and an increase in 10 per cent in wages, prevailed generally, if not entirely, over the State."

First, eight hours above ground did not prevail. Especially true of coke-oven workers. To-day all power-house men, both steam and electric, work 12 hours a day, 7 days a week. One of these engineers told me the long hours were killing him.

Second, payment for "dead work" was held up when they could so impose on the men.

Page 10: "The relation between ourselves and the State soldiers were the same in every essential particular as those that existed between us and the Federal soldiers."

The prevailing opinion not only among the strikers, but consensus of views of leading citizens was that Gen. Chase and his men were attempting to break the strike.

The constant conferences and phone messages; the free use of operators' autos; the credit allowed militiamen at "the store"; the cashing of warrants to pay State troops by the operators; the organization of local militia companies from employees, including many former guards and gunmen; furnished overwhelming proof that the militia were in cooperation with the coal barons.

Page 10, same report: "It is a significant fact, which bears evidence of the favor in which our mine stores are held by the workmen—retail sales—in the center of the strike trouble, were $47,067.52 greater than they were during the last preceding year."

The brazen shame of the above words are of a pitifully low order.

First, the company hotels and boarding house were packed with guards who were being fed and furnished much new material for lodgings.

Second, at one period during strike all huckster wagons were shut out of camps.

Third, the arrival of hundreds of families as strike breakers made "the store" business boom in furnishing their houses.

Fourth, for months during the strike old employees who would have come to Trinidad or Walsenburg to trade occasionally were afraid to leave the camps; this extra trade went "to the store."

Fifth, the feeding of the State militia was in itself a very large source of income to the operators.

Sixth, the people who were given work and being protected by the operators during the strike felt a new impulsion to buy only at "the store." One store manager in a small camp told his receipts for one month at "the store" equaled nearly 50 per cent of the pay roll at the mine office.

FACTS CONCERNING THE STRUGGLE IN COLORADO.

BULLETIN No. 7.

JULY 22, 1914.

This is a copy of a letter addressed to Secretary of Labor, Hon. W. B. Wilson, and signed by eight prominent citizens of the State, most of whom we doubt not have never seen a coal mine.

One of their closing paragraphs runs thus: "The mines are running and are sending out full product, while little union mines set in ridiculous idleness."

The first affirmation of the above deliverance is more than the operators ever claimed for themselves. Further it is fully contradicted in Bulletin No. 6: "The mines have been in operation since the strike was imposed, the output never dropping below 50 per cent of the normal."

As to the second clause, the union mines, it was generally conceded that the strike gave these small union mines an opportunity to make money, never before presented, and they improved it. One union operator told me he could not afford not to sign up with the union. It was too great a sacrifice to his business outlook.

BULLETIN No. 8.

JULY 25, 1914.

From the Denver Women's Law and Order League: "No machine gun was at any time directed against the colony."

We first read this falsehood in the office of Mr. Schench at Denver (president of the Colorado Supply Co.). We told him then there was nothing to be gained by such a misstatement. He questioned our authority for denying that the machine gun was not used on the tent colony at Ludlow April 20, 1914.

Our reasons for believing that it was used are as follows:

First, the C. F. & I. camp physician at Berwind told us it was in operation against the colony on that day.

Second, a man who lives in Berwind told us he was one of the supporters of the gun during the battle.

Third, we passed through Ludlow on C. & I. train the night of the famous battle. We saw the tent colony in flames. Several persons boarded the train. One man in particular we heard say that that machine-gun engine had been raking the camp.

Fourth, the operator of the gun was pointed out as a hero of Berwind Canyon.

This flagrant prevarication concerning the use of the machine gun has never been contradicted by the operators.

Those who signed the letter which was sent to President Willson knew little or nothing first handed of conditions in southern Colorado.

BULLETIN No. 4, SERIES II.

JANUARY 2, 1915.

The caption of this pamphlet is "The strike ends." In this paper Welborn rejoices over the "loyalty with which its men have stood by the company."

First, a large proportion of the foreigners who remained at work gave not a whoop about the controversy at issue.

Second, not a few who stand at their jobs were in sympathy with the strikers.

Third, we were in Segundo on the night the railroad men and their families left the camp on a special train for Weston. It was thought the Old Town strikers were to attack Segundo. The train was taken out against orders of the superintendent of the road. The fire boxes of the engine in the roundhouse were filled with water before the train pulled out. They telephoned over to Old Town not to shoot as the train passed. They were union men.

Fourth, foreigners being told they would be protected if they remained at work were willing to take chances. It would enable them to make their "stake" and get back to Europe. When the strike was called hundreds of men returned to Europe. The Santa Fe Railroad did a big business for a while in Trinidad.

NOTES ON FORCED SABBATH LABOR.

By E. S. Gaddis.

Colorado is the only mining State in the Union that has habitually compelled colliers to labor on the Sabbath.

All sorts of needless and unnecessary labor is encouraged and enforced in the C. F. & I. camps.

For many months prior to the great strike hundreds and thousands of men did not know what a day of rest was.

Orders were posted on the mine bulletins, signed by the superintendent, threatening loss of good place in the mine or actual discharge for those who failed to report for work.

After reading such orders we reported the fact to Weitzel, who said it was news to him. It is our understanding that all orders for Sabbath labor in the mines originate from Weitzel's office. We also lodged complaint with Bowers, who did nothing to relieve the men.

One young man at Primero, who told he had worked so many consecutive Sabbaths he wanted a day of rest and refused to run the mine motor car, was discharged. We presented his case to Weitzel, and that was the last word we ever heard on the case.

Some of the foreigners who are driven into Sabbath labor through fear of discharge would fail to show up on Monday.

A master mechanic in one camp told me it was not at all necessary for him to work on Sunday to keep abreast of his job, but the superintendent forced him out because the day shift was at it and no exceptions were to be made.

The special trains for Sunday baseball during the summer on the company railroads help to break down respect for the holy Sabbath; neglect of religious opportunities; and sometimes the men returned home in a drunken revelry, liquor being obtained from the "law-respecting" company saloon keepers.

SOCIOLOGICAL ADDENDA.

During our 22 months' term of service the following improvements were introduced:

1. Church and Sabbath schools inaugurated in camps where the work had never been started, or where it had been allowed to die.

2. Employment of a camp missionary for Trinidad and Walsenburg districts, and a colored minister who could swing clear of licentiousness and drunkenness to work among those people.

3. New Boy Scout patrols for the camps.

4. Night schools for foreigners to learn English. A public school started for the children at Calcite and an adult school for foreigners, where for 10 years no such advantage had been offered. We secured the willingness of one of the professors of the State school of mines to introduce an elementary mining extension course for each camp. Furnished houses for school-teachers was an innovation approved in several camps.

5. Public-school reading circles, with literature provided by the school board.

6. A new circulating library for the camps.

7. Raised the standard of the public school-teachers.

8. Fire escapes and sanitary drinking fountains for public-school buildings.

9. Motion-picture show placed in almost every camp of the system.

10. Swings and teeter boards built at the steel works and donated to the fuel-department camps.

11. Lotteries in the company stores stopped on the ground that it was teaching the young people to gamble.

12. Current and popular magazines placed on sale at camp stores.

13. An attempt to curtail sale of tobacco and liquors to minors was only partially successful.

14. A sociological exhibit at the Panama Exposition, to include a live boy from each camp, would have been a great success had it received the financial support needed.

15. We were negotiating for the purchase of a Child's Encyclopedia for the camp schools when our relations with the company ceased.

THE LAND QUESTION IN THE SOUTHWEST.

(For exhibits under this subject, see Volume X, pages 9242 to 9290.)

COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

DALLAS, TEX., Tuesday, March 16, 1915—10 a. m.

Present: Chairman Walsh, Commissioners Lennon and Harriman.

Chairman WALSH. I would like to make a little announcement, please.

The hearings of the Commission on Industrial Relations, the commission consisting as a body of nine members, have been held throughout the United States for the past six months by special committees. The special committee detailed upon the question of agriculture, so far as the public hearings are concerned, consists of Commissioner Lennon, at my right, Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, of New York, and myself. It is understood, however, that wherever possible the entire membership is expected to attend. We hope during the week to have an attendance perhaps as high as five or six. The entire special committee is in the city at the present time, and Mrs. Harriman will join us later in the day, she having just arrived.

I want to say that the only public hearing which will be held on the question of agriculture in the United States is the one that is to be held here this week. In addition to the public hearings we hold here and special and intensive investigations into these various questions, the hearing here is the result of a study by Mr. Charles W. Holman, of our investigation department, of several months, supplementing a wider one of many years which he has made in other activities in which he has been engaged.

It goes without saying that this commission consists of three employers, three employees, and three representing the general public. The commission has not yet gotten together definite conclusions upon any subject. There is no particular line of thought advocated, so far as hearings or investigations are concerned, by this commission or any individual member thereof. It is the desire, if possible, to get at the fundamental truth in all these questions and regardless of the tendency of the testimony of any witness to indicate a trend of thought, I beg of you to understand and of the public to understand that it is our desire to get all viewpoints, after which the result of the hearings will be taken up with the reports of the investigators, and conclusions will be drawn to be presented to the Congress of the United States that will make for a stable industrial condition, particularly in respect to land and agriculture, so many witnesses having borne witness before this commission that land is the fundamental basis of all economics.

Now, we are going to call Mr. Holman as the first witness, because he has the outline, and this explanation has been made to the governor of the State and is made to you as the reason why the governor is not called first. After the outline is given by Mr. Holman, the Governor will be the next witness.

Our hearings will begin at 10 o'clock in the morning and continue until 12.30. We resume at 2 and continue until 4.30. Everyone may depend on those as the hours.

TESTIMONY OF MR. CHARLES W. HOLMAN.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman and Commissioner Lennon, under your direction the investigation staff of this body has been making a study of the land question. A survey has been made of the tendency toward concentration of ownership of the land in this Nation.

A statistical report, which has been completed, shows that this tendency is undeniable. Field studies have also been made of the landlord and tenancy relationships and of agricultural labor problems. General library work has been done and a study of the legal aspects has also been in progress. Some of these studies are not yet in shape for final reports.

I have presumed, therefore, that, as the opening witness in the first public hearing on the American land question ever held by representatives of the Federal Government, it is your purpose to have me, as one of your investigators, briefly outline the points to be considered, and to define what, in the opinion of the investigation staff, are the fundamental issues involved.

At the beginning of this hearing it seems fit to point out that the United States is perhaps the last of the leading nations to recognize that there is need of fixing upon a national land policy, and that the time is at hand for the people, who constitute this Government, to realize that our land inheritance is slipping away and that its ownership tends to become concentrated just as capital to-day is concentrated.

At the same time a remarkable transformation is taking place in the relation of the so-called tenant of the soil and the half of the United States.

In this connection the tenants, who constitute the majority of the farming population, are arriving at the status of wage laborers rather than the popular conception of them being tenants of the land.

Restricting further our survey we find that in the southwestern territory, or within a radius of 400 miles from Dallas, the question of land ownership has become an imminent one, and the landlord and tenant struggle has reached its most acute state with the most open manifestations of discontent. In this territory certain economic forces have tended to bring about a distinct industrial relationship of the two parties.

It is not my purpose here to delve into the causes, for many of them will be stated by the witnesses who are to follow, while others will be incorporated in the final report of your investigator to this commission. But it may be stated that in this territory a very large per cent of the tenant farmers have slipped away from the old feudal conception of being tenants of the soil, and have dropped into the modern condition of being laborers in fact.

To illustrate this further, the vast body of the laws that have accumulated for the governing of landlord and tenant and the protection of their mutual interests and rights, are based upon conceptions growing out of the feudal institutions. But beside these, other laws have developed, and customs of contract have sprung up, wherein the right of the tenant is the right only of a farm hand, and his title is only a title to the crops that he farms. That is the customary landlord contract that is so prevalent in this country. Mr. Chairman, I was told the other day by a prominent landlord of Grayson County that in his opinion fully 90 per cent of the written contracts in Texas were the landlords' contracts rather than the tenant of the soil contract or the land lease, which is known to the lawyers of this State.

He is subject—the tenant—to the supervision of the landlord. He has no rights of unmolesment such as are implied for the tenant in the laws of feudal origin. We may say, therefore, that the tenant-laborer, or the "cropper," as he is known in the older sections of the South, is very closely akin to the casual laborer, whose case you have heard during other hearings. The main difference between the casual laborer and the tenant farmer is that the casual worker drifts by himself from place to place and may shift over the whole of the continent, while the tenant farmer drifts from farm to farm and carries his family with him by means of the covered wagon.

A recent survey of the shifting farm population of the South has been made by the Federal agricultural census, whose returns show that over 50 per cent of the Southern tenants had lived on their farms for less than a year from which they reported. In view of this situation I submit that the relation of the so-called tenant to the landowner is analogous to that of the waged worker to the employer.

Conversely, the landlord has become the farmer by virtue of this new contractual relation, which is less than 50 years in origin. This is in marked contrast to the condition in some parts of America where the tenant is still the farmer and the landlord has a relation somewhat similar to that of the bondholder or the owner of stock in a corporation inasmuch as he has so supervision over the land and only draws an interest from it. But it should be noted that the same forces appear to be at work in those more prosperous sections that if uncurbed will tend to bring about the same evolution we are now studying in the Southwest.

Before attempting to name the actors and to define the issues that constitute the southwestern land struggle it might be well to call attention to the land question as it may affect the value of wages. The primary interest of the hired worker is the purchasing power of his wages, and any factor that weakens or strengthens this power is a vital concern to him. In late years the American people have been profoundly moved by the decreased purchasing power of their wages. In a search for the causes of this declining power the concentrating ownership of land can not be overlooked. The effect of such concentration, the effect of absentee landlordism and speculative holding which, when combined with the pressure of population, undoubtedly do make for increasingly high valuations of land. To this may be added competition by the landless for the rented land. Such valuations when above normal put an overhead charge upon the cost of producing and distributing the product by adding unnecessarily to the capitalization involved. Thus every unnatural increase in land values brings about indirectly a decrease in the purchasing power of wages.

How to deal with the American problem of unemployment has occupied the attention of many minds and provoked much writing of a theoretical nature. Among the proposed solutions of unemployment and measures for the relief of congested masses of wage workers in great population centers and for the distribution of the newly arrived immigrant population has been the colonization of immigrants and the inauguration of home-ownership projects for those afflicted with the "back-to-the-land" fever. Those advocating the moving of surplus labor into the country districts still point to large areas of land in America untouched by the plow. It is therefore of vital interest to know whether such relief may be brought to the industrial centers by an increase of rural population, and it is pertinent to ask, Can the surplus labor of the cities be cared for by the rural population? If so, what proportion of it should go upon the land as home-owning farmers, what as tenants, and what as wage-workers?

If the farming population, through unpreparedness for the distribution and sales or for the financing of this increased agricultural production, is unready to receive the city's surplus and the arriving immigrant, would not the effect of such an increase to the rural population be the same as an irritation of an unhealed wound?

In early years large land grants of a doubtful nature were made to promoters of colonization schemes. This refers to Texas. Later the legislatures attempted to limit the tendency toward land grabbing and to aid home building; but such efforts were unavailing to stem the steady movement toward the concentration of the ownership of land.

Forty years ago practically all of Texas farmers owned their land. To-day over half rent the land, and the trend toward concentration appears to be steady. In 82 counties of the State the percentage will run from 58 to 70 per cent in concentrated ownership.

In Oklahoma large blocks of land originally owned by Indians have been wrested from them by white men following the removal of restrictions. Yet the State also was generous to home seekers and to-day aids persons wishing to become home owners. Notwithstanding that, a larger percentage of tenancy exists in Oklahoma than in Texas, and the tendency toward concentration of land ownership proceeds unchecked.

To-day we have in this area a big change taking place that is akin to a struggle for the land. The active participants in this struggle are tenants and the landlords, small landowners, and large landowners, who have their own struggles as against each other, money lenders, banks, and merchants. Those directly or indirectly affected by this struggle constitute practically all of the population of the small towns in the area.

Aside from landlords who live in the country, the concentration of ownership is aided by farmers who moved to town, by town creditors, land speculators, Indian-lease speculators, etc., and a whole host of others.

The native white tenants are found throughout all of the southwestern area. The negro tenant is found mainly in east Texas, in the bottoms of the Red River, the Brazos and the Trinity Rivers, or what is known as the old plantation of the South, which starts and runs in a southwesterly direction from Texarkana. The Mexicans begin with the Rio Grande and form a large part of the labor supply throughout southern Texas. Foreign whites in small numbers have come into the Southwest in the last few years.

In the 40-year period under investigation the rise of an absentee landlord class has been rapid because of the one-crop system prevailing in the South, which makes it difficult for tenants to rise out of their class into the ranks of home owners; the excessive valuation of lands, which makes it very difficult for tenants to become home owners; indirect use of force by large property holders to force small property holders to sell their holdings; seasonal depression of crop prices, which, in times of distress, force the small owners to sell; downward trend of home-owning farmers, which is accelerating the growth of tenancy and itself results in inferior living conditions, in a greatly handicapped rural educational environment, and into development of caste feeling among those left in the depleted country districts.

More or less friction between landlord and tenant occurs in this area because of (1) oral contracts; (2) differences of opinion in the matter of regulating cropping systems; (3) the movement of the last few years on the part of landlords to raise the rent above the customary one-third and one-fourth; increased capital represented in the soil; competition for desirable farms among the tenants is a contributory cause. Friction also arises with regard (4) to improvements to be made by landlords on farms and other causes the details of which will undoubtedly be explained by the witnesses who appear.

Oppressive tactics of landlords also figure in the causes of friction. These tactics manifest themselves in unwarranted evictions; in the use of force to intimidate renters; in requiring renters to overcrop the land to cotton; in efforts to control elections where land taxes and other matters of policy are involved; and discriminations against tenants because of political or personal reasons.

This transformation of southwestern life has been accompanied by notable reactions, and these hearings should develop to some extent the effect upon the town and country. In this connection the rise of a class-conscious movement among the tenant farmers should be carefully examined.

Any attempts at a solution of the problem reckon with certain complicating factors, among which are the inferiority of the tenant class itself, which is isolated, ill-nourished, poorly instructed, badly housed, and is rapidly assuming the attitude of a dependent class; interracial competition, which is intensified by the competition within the tenant class itself; shifting of rural population; handicaps of the colonization of immigrants, such as land speculation and the laws preventing homeless persons from readily becoming home owners; corporation farming and corporation control of communities, and usury. This last is a very important handicap to any solution of the problem. Later on we may have occasion to have recourse to maps of Oklahoma and Texas, where the commissioners will have an opportunity to see the area wherein land concentration, or rather tenancy, have grown the most rapidly.

Chairman WALSH. How were they prepared?

Mr. HOLMAN. From the last Federal census, from the statistical and mapping division of the commission. I will show that to you in a minute.

By the maps which are here displayed you will see that the problem in this great southwestern area is dominantly a white man's problem. And where the percentage of tenancy is highest we find it is more conclusively a white man's problem. The negro still remains, in major part, where he was originally, before the Civil War. The Mexican has not yet attained sufficient importance as a tenant farmer for him to be a modifying factor.

I have further assumed that the purpose of these hearings is to aid in the establishment of a constructive land policy. The viewpoint therefore should be social rather than individualistic. Not private valuations but social valuations; not private profit but general happiness must determine the point of view. Among the subjects that will come up for consideration in a constructive way are the improvement of the rural school system, cooperative marketing and buying for farmers, cooperative finance, State aid to home builders, the labor and tenant exchange for the clearing of agricultural labor, constructive taxation programs, and citizenship organization.

The evidence so far examined by your investigator points to the necessity of creation of land commissions or courts that will have powers of gathering and determining facts in all matters relating to landlord and tenant contractual relations, and in the promulgating of rules with regard to the disbursement of moneys appropriated by land-purchasing acts of the future.

Such a commission could well be national in character, and part of its duties would be the distribution of that part of foreign immigration that should go to the country districts rather than remain in the city. In fact, such a commission, having in its hands evidence as to the condition of employment in industries, would be the best instrument to deal with the arriving immigrant. Working in cooperation with the State commission or State branches of the general commission it could do much toward settling this present acute problem.

Such a commission should have all the powers of an economic court. In its relation to land problems, if national, it would be similar to the Interstate Commerce Commission. In its relation to State problems it would be similar to, say, the Wisconsin Industrial Commission.

Now, with your permission, I will show this map.

This is a map that was made of the 82 counties in Texas where the percentage of tenancy is at the highest. The effort, therefore, was to find out where the negro was located in order to see whether tenancy is a white man's problem or not. We find the orange section here shows where the negro tenant runs 49 per cent and over. The blue shows where the negro runs from 25 up to 49 per cent, and shows where the white man is located through this area. And, for your information, gentlemen, this area through here is known as the "cut-over timber lands" of east Texas. This area through here [indicating] the cross timber; and this body right through here represents the great "black land" area of this State running possibly down to here, making an area of two-thirds of the size of the State of New York; and it is in this area here where rent concentration or rather tenancy has grown faster. We find by this map that there are 147,000 tenant families in this section in all; and of these 111,000 are white and 35,000 are negroes.

This map which I now show you was made simply to show where cotton is grown, because the tenancy problem in this southwestern country has become almost entirely identified with the problem of cotton, and in per cent the highest per cent goes toward the darkest shading. Perhaps that contrast is not as good as it should be, but we find there are 53 counties where there are under 10,000 bales produced, 35 counties where from 10,000 to 20,000 bales are produced, 34 counties where from 20,000 to 30,000 bales are produced. There are 20 counties where 30,000 to 60,000 bales were produced, and 15 counties producing over 60,000 bales and running up as high as over 120,000 bales. I believe that is Ellis County. Now, wherever you find the highest production of cotton, you find, as a rule, the highest proportion of tenancy in this area.

The same thing is true for Oklahoma. We have taken only the counties in Oklahoma, as we did in Texas, where tenancy runs over 50 per cent, and we have mapped them by color. You will find there that there are, I believe, 47 counties that are maroon, showing where the whites are very few. The blues show that the negroes are concentrated only around the vicinity of Muskogee, which means in the Creek Nation and in McCurtin County, and the negroes only constitute about 8,360 families in this area [indicating] while the white families run 7,925. And if this were compared with the cotton map which we have here you would find that it follows almost identically the progress of the cotton industry, the only difference being that cotton moves just a trifle faster than tenancy has moved in this area.

Here is a map which shows where the foreign-born population of Oklahoma is located. You will see it is practically inconsiderable, only 3,348, and so you see up there it goes from light to dark, showing where there is a high percentage of foreign-born population; therefore in this State they are located almost entirely out of the tenant area.

Chairman WALSH. Did your investigation show that there has been any effort on the part of organizations to locate immigrants, fresh immigrants, or does that only contain statistics as to people that were not born in the United States?

Mr. HOLMAN. This is only the statistics of people not born in the United States at the present time. Of course in south Texas and down in Fayette County there are thousands of people who are really members of or belong to the immigrant class; that is, they have all the feeling of foreign-born people, though they are native-born people, because they have not yet become assimilated and many of them even do not speak English as well as they might.

This map simply shows the proportion of farms owned in Oklahoma, 35,000 there in all. You see it is almost entirely reversed. But that is a map for the whole State, while this former map was only made showing the families represented in a general way of over 50 per cent, which is for the State as a whole, and you see the tenant area running over here; while on the other hand in this section the ranch-land and the school-land lessees and these new people coming in from the Central States going toward a different kind of crop, such as grain, they are located in this section. This is the great grain area where the wheat harvest, the wheat crop last year in the State of Oklahoma pioneered the question of a State employment agency for farm casual laborers.

If you would remember that first map I showed, there is the cotton map of Texas for the year 1913. At first we were a little bit interested to see the tenancy that had made its way out from the black land—this group up here—and it was necessary to map the cotton area to find out if there was not some close relation between that progress, and that proved to be the case. Of course, that is newer country out there, too.

Chairman WALSH. Which is the newer country?

Mr. HOLMAN. This northwestern country from here [indicating].

Chairman WALSH. Is that confined to what you call the black land where tenancy was common?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; that is the western cross timber. The black lands are through this area, and run probably four counties wide. Mr. Ferguson, is that not the area of the black land? That simply shows the location of the negroes and other nonwhites, the total population of Texas so far as they are concerned. That is the total farm population, you will see.

Chairman WALSH. Of what do they consist; of what does that consist in percentages, would you say?

Mr. HOLMAN. The blanks, that is, the white, show under 1 per cent; that is, 131 counties. The orange, that is probably Mexican, show from 1 to 10 per cent; that is 45 counties; the green running through here, through the black-land belt counties, are from 10 to 25 per cent. They constitute 16,000 acres in 28 counties. The blue here, that filling in places like that, Jackson, Red River, and those types of counties, they run 21 counties, or a total of 15,735. The balance of the counties in black are where the negroes are 40 per cent and over. That is a total of 32,609 of the foreign population there, or 70,000 on the farms. United States figures average 69,000. We put them on the automatic machine and they did not figure up according to the way they had been in the census figures.

Now, if you will notice this area right through here, you will find that that corresponds with what is known in the Federal census report as the plantation area. You will also find that these negroes have been in this section ever since before the war. They have not moved out very much. And you will also find in this section what is known as the East Texas sandy lands, the country where it is to-day pointed out as a country where any poor man can own a farm; yet we find in this same section a very high degree of tenancy. The causes of that may be determined. This is a map of the farms owned in Texas. That map falls in its apparent significance. The Federal census classifies ranches and everything else as farms. We can only take the census figures and map it out in accordance with their figures. All of this country through here is arid country; it is pasture land to a great extent, and it is held in large blocks. The result is that this falls as a classification as far as the population and proportion of tenant farmers in Texas is concerned.

The actual figures on landlord and tenant in this State should take the most of the farming area that has been developed and figure out from that point of view, not from the point of view of pasture purposes. But these in the blue or the purple show the area of tenancy again. And you see the maps work together. This long strip through here is what is known as the black land.

I believe that is about all of the maps that will be of interest at this time, Mr. Chairman.

TESTIMONY OF GOV. JAMES E. FERGUSON.

Chairman WALSH. May I ask you, please, to state, for the purpose of this record, what your history has been prior to the time of assuming the office of governor of the State of Texas; your business experience, I might say?

Gov. FERGUSON. Well, I am a native-born Texan. My early training was on the farm. About up to the time I was 13 years of age my experience was on the farm, you might say. After that time I was a railroad man for about seven or eight years. After that time, and for about seven years, I, as they say in Texas, threatened to practice law—for about seven or eight years. After that time for about eight or nine years I was engaged in the country banking business. That brings it up probably to the present date, or to at least the advent of my personality into public life.

Chairman WALSH. Have you held any other public office in the State of Texas prior to your election as governor?

Gov. FERGUSON. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Prior to your—and you assumed this office on what date?

Gov. FERGUSON. The 19th day of January, 1915.

Chairman WALSH. I have a few specific points suggested here by Mr. Holman that I will direct your attention to, and then, of course, you may make any statement that you think will throw any light upon the subject as outlined here.

First, I would like you to give us a short sketch of what might be termed the development of tenancy in Texas, land tenancy, the type of tenants as they come in during the past 44 years, and who they are, their origin, etc.

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes. Well, I may preface that statement by these general facts that are well known:

Texas in 1836 had a population of 52,000. By calculation it developed that we had then approximately 3,200 acres per capita to the population of the State of tillable land, or land that could be susceptible to cultivation.

Coming on down, jumping on down to your statement, we will say, the development of tenancy which took place soon after the reconstruction era of the South, I think the population in Texas (probably I have the memorandum) in 1870 was 819,000, reducing the per capita land area in Texas to 205 acres. The next 10-year period, up to 1880, we find the population a million and a half and the per capita area reduced to 105 acres.

Chairman WALSH. Generally speaking, what was the development of urban population? That was during the period when a very fast and vast growth was being made in the cities.

Gov. FERGUSON. Not through the period I am speaking of. Now, most of the population was in the country, and it is only within the last 20 years, you might say, that city population is beginning to be of moment in Texas.

In 1890 our population had increased to two and one-quarter millions, reducing the per capita acreage to 75 acres. In 1900 our population had increased to 3,000,000, reducing the per capita acreage to 55 acres.

Chairman WALSH. Do we still have in mind the tillable land, Governor?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes, sir; that is the tillable land. Not the improved land, but the land that is susceptible of cultivation.

In 1910 our population was nearly 4,000,000 and down to 42 acres per capita, and, estimated under the same basis of increase, taking our population at an estimated amount of four and one-half millions now, we would have 37 acres per capita of tillable land in Texas.

I make that preliminary statement, and it has at least an indirect bearing upon the cause and development of tenantry in this country.

Getting back to your original proposition, the tenant system started in Texas in about 1870, which was at the end of the reconstruction period in the South, and the people then began to turn attention to the real development of the State. In that day and time—I am speaking now largely from my own early knowledge, because I am an old settler in Texas; I have been here 44 years—about that time. In that day and time the condition of the tenant was not bad. I can remember up in the early—possibly 1890—the tenants had a great many privileges. I can remember especially, back in the early days, that one of the customs in my country—in central Texas, where I was raised—was that when a tenant wanted to rent a farm from a landlord, one of the conditions was—one of the questions—“How many cows are you going to furnish me to milk free of charge?” And “How much pasture are you going to furnish me?” And that condition continued, I might say, up until approximately 1890, when we began to have, as shown by the census record, we began to have the great increase in population, and naturally the acreage per capita began to decrease, and those privileges were gradually eliminated; and as land began to become more valuable the landlords began to exact and eliminated a great many of the advantages that had been allowed the tenant.

I would say that back in the early period, from 1880 to 1890—1870 to 1880—the houses of the tenants as compared with the houses of the landlords were better then than they are now.

The real problems of tenantry began to develop when land became valuable in Texas. The real cause for the need of agitation or interference on the part of the Government to deal with the tenant question had its real inception in the increased value of the land. As long as land was worth from $25 to $30 an acre, based on the earning power of money, the land could easily produce 10 or 12 or 15 per cent on its value on the share system, which was the system inaugurated by the people of the South. But just as soon as land began to get valuable the land holdings began to decrease per capita. The natural desire of a man was to get as much revenue out of the property as possible, and he began to exercise his rights and to consider the question of an increased revenue from his land.

The question of the third and fourth system, as we understand it in the South—after the reconstruction it became so thoroughly ingrafted on the population of the South, and the people had so long recognized its equitable proportion as the real equitable division between landlord and land tenant, or I should say between the landowner and land tenant, that long before any man thought of asking an increase in his land he recognized that question had to be approached with much trepidation. But as the land began to get higher, the people, from this desire, based on the earning power of money, began to advance the argument—and right here I might say as an incident to this increase in rent comes in the question of absentee landlordism.

It is my opinion, and I only give it as my opinion, but based on the observation of a lifetime in Texas, that if it were not for absentee landlordism in Texas we would not have any discussion or agitation of the question of rent. As a practical proposition the absentee landlordism works out this way: You take a man who has 350 acres of fine black land in Texas in the cotton district, as delineated on the map here; that the landlord can live on that 350 acres and absolutely live like a lord and have all the comforts and conveniences that the ordinary man wants who is willing to live economically and frugally. But by and by that man takes a notion that he must move to town, and he goes to town, and he gets acquainted with a railroad president, and he gets acquainted with a merchant who is worth ten times what he is worth, and, in other words, he gets into high society, and pretty soon that 350 acres of land won't support him; he can not keep pace with the people he tries to run with in town; the old division of the rent of one-third of the grain and one-fourth of the cotton does not meet his demands; and consequently in his dilemma he begins to do the best he can and goes back and raises the rent on the poor fellow in the country; and in that way, when he goes to raise the rent, the tenant will say, "I want you to build me a better house if I am going to pay more rent"; and he says, "I can't afford it. My family expenses are such in town that I can't stand it, and therefore you will have to do with the old house you have now." And it is such attempts on the part of people who would make good farmers to make city people that has had as much to do as any other one cause to produce the rise in rent in Texas.

An estate in the country which heretofore would support a man in affluence in the country will not, of course, support him in the city, and he tries to make ends meet when they will not meet, and that is one of the great reasons for the discussion of the land question in Texas.

I noticed in my campaign, if you will pardon the personal allusion, a thing that corroborates the statements I am making about absentee landlordism. The landowner who lives in the country and who is identified with the trials and tribulations a man has to make to live in the country—that man found no objection to the general proposition of the increase in rent—or I mean the proposition to restrict any increase in rent—and the man who really lives in the country and who has always made his estate by working under conditions which we have had in Texas for 30 years realizes that society and the Government must deal with the question of the equitable adjustment of rent. He realizes that no hairbreadth distinctions or finespun theories about the Constitution can be urged to meet the humane side of the question. He realizes, as a practical proposition, that if he claims the right to come in and take too much of the production of the soil by the tenant, by his own contract powers, that sooner or later, as the government rests on the consent of the governed, that that right may be taken away from him and that after all his contract rights are no stronger or more stable than the honor and integrity of the people who support his Government and really give sacredness to his contracts.

Now, one other matter: I do not know whether you called attention to this or not, but we have in Texas under the census of 1900—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Have you the same outline the commission has furnished through Mr. Holman—the memorandum of subjects?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes; I am following that. I may refer to it in a disjointed way as I have not had time to prepare a statement.

Chairman WALSH. Just so you have the subjects before you.

Gov. FERGUSON. The census of 1900 showed we had 219,000 tenants in Texas and the census of 1890 showed we had 190,000, or an increase of 29,000 or about 3,000 a year. By the same proportion of advance or increase, and I think it has even increased in a greater proportion, we will have in Texas now about 245,000 tenants, and I believe it is disclosed even by the map—I have not looked at it but I am glad to see the map corroborates the statement—that four-fifths of that number live in the black lands of the State, approximately that much in the black-land or cotton-growing area of Texas, which is approximately 10,000,000 acres of land. I might say that of the 165,000,000 acres in Texas suitable for cultivation, there is now only about 30,000,000 acres of land that are really improved and being cultivated.

Chairman WALSH. What were the first figures you gave—how much was susceptible of cultivation?

Gov. FERGUSON. The best information available shows approximately 165 or 170 million acres of land susceptible of cultivation, probably not over one-fifth of that being in cultivation or improved land. Now, in this 10,000,000 acres of land, in which reside four-fifths of the population—

Chairman WALSH. At that point, have you any information or any theory as to why there is not a higher development in the potential tillable land—usable land?

Gov. FERGUSON. It is because we are a new country. That is reflected in the population and its growth from, in 1870, 550,000 people to 4,500,000 people; and just as soon as we are as old as probably Kansas, your State, in development, we will have a greater proportion of tillable area in cultivation.

Now, four-fifths of the tenants of Texas, as reflected by the maps, approximately live in the black lands which I estimate at about 10,000,000 acres of land. I further estimate that 3,500,000 of this 10,000,000 is worked by people who own the land, and 6,500,000 acres is worked by 200,000 tenants—about 30 acres to the tenant. The Federal census further gives this information which is worthy of comment in this connection: On the basis of 1910—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). You say that is 30 acres to a family?

Gov. FERGUSON. That is approximate.

Chairman WALSH. Now, do you think, Governor, from your experience, that that could be reduced any, or is it being done as intensively now as it could be?

Gov. FERGUSON. No; it is not, in my opinion. Whilst we are a great farming country and we have some of the smartest people in the world now tilling the soil, I believe we have just now begun to study the question and to learn something about intensive farming in Texas. And I believe that under scientific methods we will increase our production 50 per cent after a few more years of cultivation and study along the lines that the Government seems now in a humor to assist.

The Federal census showed in 1910 that out of 219,575 tenant farmers, 17,500, or less than 10 per cent, paid a cash rent. From my own personal observation, and from the absence of any better authority, I estimate that 60 per cent of the total number of tenant farmers of Texas do not pay a rent in excess of a third of the grain and a fourth of the cotton. The remaining 30 per cent, or, in round numbers, 65,000 tenants, pay more than a third and a fourth. I said a while ago that the increase in rent is of comparatively recent occurrence. I was born and raised in Texas, and I do not recall in my own personal experience, though I have lived a great deal on the farm, and always in the country, of ever having heard of a man charging rent to exceed one-fourth of the cotton and one-third of the grain prior to 1900, as an actual occurrence. I possibly may have heard it discussed, but I never knew personally—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Yes; please describe in detail, Governor—and I assume, of course, you are very familiar with it—but please describe in detail for the record that system of a third and a fourth shares in tenant farming.

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes; I am glad you mentioned that. The third and fourth system, known in Texas and understood by Texans, is this: That the tenant, usually in a verbal contract—only in rare cases is any other kind of contract entered into—agrees to rent a given number of acres of land on condition that the tenant will pay the landlord one-third portion of the grain raised on the premises, such as corn, oats, wheat, barley, rye, and other grain crops, of which probably not so much is cultivated in Texas, and upon the condition that he pay one-fourth of all the cotton raised. The settlements under those contracts are made in various ways, but that that is commonly practiced of late years is to divide the proceeds of crops. The tenant makes the crop, sells the crop, and has the purchaser of the crop make him a written statement signed by him, or by some of his agents, stating how much he has purchased of the tenant and the price paid; and with that statement the tenant goes to the landlord and makes a settlement, and he says, "Here is my evidence of what I have received from my crops, and under the proportion of one-third of the grain, one-third of this amount I owe you." That is usually paid by a check on a local bank, and the same rule is followed almost universally. Now, in reference to cotton—in the early days they had a system of dividing the crop itself. If a man had 4 bales of cotton the landlord got one; and when he went to gather the corn out of the field—and that is the system now, where the crop is not sold—he would divide by the wagonload of corn, and in many instances they even divided the rows in the field; but of late years the common practice is to divide the proceeds of the sale.

Chairman WALSH. Please describe, while you are right there, Governor, what the tenant furnishes under such contracts and what the landlord furnishes in the way of improvements, implements, or anything of that kind.

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes; under the third and fourth system the landlord furnishes the land, furnishes the premises on which the tenant resides, and that is about all he does furnish. The landlord furnishes the teams, tools, seed, and supplies—

Chairman WALSH. You mean, Governor, do you not, the tenant furnishes the team and tools—

Gov. FERGUSON (interrupting). Yes; the tenant furnishes the team, tools, and feed, and agrees to keep the fences in repair in certain areas where it is applicable; he agrees to work the land in a good farmer-like manner and not to let any Johnson grass or cockleburrs, or any growth that is a menace to the fertility of the soil, get hold—keep it from going to seed. We have also in this country a system known as the "half system," referred to by Mr. Holman, which is more prevalent in the districts cultivated by the negroes—the negro population of the State. Under that system the landlord furnishes the land, the premises on which the tenant resides, furnishes the teams, the tools, and the seed. Under that system the tenant receives only half of what he produces, and the landlord, of course, receives the other half. The half system is not practiced to any great extent only in the river bottoms, and largely where the negro population predominates, although you very frequently find tenants farming on halves in the black lands of Texas; but that is not a general custom.

Chairman WALSH. Might we ask you, Governor, to please describe any bonus systems you are aware of, while on that subject?

Gov. FERGUSON. I was only describing the third and fourth system. The bonus system is the new issue in Texas. With the increase of the value of land about which I was just speaking a while ago came the bonus system. Under the old rule, where the land was worth only twenty-five or thirty dollars an acre, of course, getting a third of the grain or a fourth of the cotton, under the average productivity of the soil, it was easy for the landlord to get his rent or return on his investment; but as soon as land went up to a hundred dollars an acre, where the landlord began to reason with his tenant like this: "Now, money is worth 8 per cent. My land is worth a hundred dollars per acre. Therefore I ought to get $8 an acre return upon my land, and a fourth of the cotton will not produce $8 an acre, therefore I am going to ask you to pay an additional rent, which will make a total of $8 an acre, and therefore, in order to bring that about," he says, "they have estimated what would be the value of a fourth of the cotton," and we will say that that was found in a given year, at the prevailing price, to be $5 an acre. The landlord says, "I am entitled to get $8 an acre, therefore I am going to ask you, Mr. Tenant, to pay me $3 an acre additional." And that is what we call the bonus in Texas. The bonus is the additional cash rent or additional amount of rent, I had better say, paid to the landlord in addition to the third and fourth system demanded by the landlord.

At first blush it would seem that the landlord had a good case, that his argument was to an extent well founded, but as against that the tenant says, "Yes; that is true that your land has gone up and it is worth a hundred dollars an acre, but you did not produce the increased value of the land altogether by your own action. It is by virtue of the fact that my wife and family are willing to go into the field and work your land and produce these crops and demonstrate the fertility of the soil, and that this country will support an agricultural population; and by reason of all these influences, in which I have had a part, your land has become valuable, and therefore you have no right to take from me a rent which would be an oppression and a burden to me—that you would have no right to take such an amount of rent as would distinctly impair my ability to raise my children in comfort and have some conveniences and the same privileges, at least, of education which you, the landlord, give to your children." And furthermore the tenant says, "You ought not to charge an increased rent; that, notwithstanding your land has increased in value, its productive powers have not increased proportionately; that the land now does not make any more cotton, does not make any more corn, than possibly it did 80 years ago, when your land was not worth one-third of what it is now."

And those are the two contending arguments around which springs up the discussion of what is known as the bonus system in Texas.

In a great many instances instead of charging any proportion of the crop—and this is a custom largely operated by the absentee landlord, who lives in the city and goes in high society—the landlord says, "I haven't any time to bother with the question of the settlement of rent. Therefore I want a cash rent, and I want that rent to be sufficient to pay me an earning power on my money. Therefore I want $6 or $7 or $8 an acre rent money."

The Federal census shows that in 1910 even that feature had grown to the proportion that 1,700,000 farmers, white tenants, in Texas were paying the cash rent. And that is a distinct hardship to require the tenant to pay cash rent, because we have not reduced in Texas to a science the certainty of making a crop. We have seasons that come and go in Texas, and consequently some years we make good crops and some years we make bad crops. Under the cash-rent system the tenant would have to pay his cash rent even if it took all his part of the crop; and that would even deprive him probably of enough to live on. To illustrate, I can tell you of a case of an actual occurrence in my county—Bell County—in which is situated the town of Temple, the best town in Texas—I want that to be read in the record—an absentee landlord who owned 1,430 acres of as fine waxy black land as could be found in Texas, and who was renting his land for $8 an acre cash rent, and I was speaking about an actual up-to-date occurrence—this year the land had been worked well by the tenant paying $8 an acre, and upon that place of 1,430 acres there were some 25 or 30 families. In August, as had been their custom for years, they went into the town of Rogers and said to the merchant, "We are now beginning to pick cotton, and we have come in to get cotton sacks, which we buy every year to pick this cotton, and we want also a little additional increase"—an additional food supply in the nature of bacon of probably not very high grade, or a quantity of flour which is probably not a very high grade—"and we want to begin to gather the crop with which we want to pay you our store account, which we have contracted during the year." The merchant said, "Oh, no. Conditions have changed. The war has come on, and cotton is worth only 6 cents a pound, and your land, while you have worked it well, will not exceed a third of a bale to the acre, and you are paying $8 an acre money rent, and therefore a bale of cotton worth $30 a bale, or 6 cents a pound, it would take almost all the cotton, the entire crop, to pay the landlord; and therefore you would have no ability, however good your intention might be, to pay us. And therefore we would rather take our loss now than to advance you bread and meat with which to continue work."

There was a peculiar condition which will arise every time we have the money Shylock in this country who wants a cash rent. There was a group of 30 families who have worked hard; their children had gone to the field and helped make a crop; and they had the land in fine shape, and had made the crop ready for harvest. Yet we witness the anomalous condition, the spectacular condition we might say, of families who had done that, who had lived frugally, we might say—frugally does not express the term—they had lived in a niggardly way, just as little as they could get through with to work the land, and yet at the time when it would come time to harvest the crop they were deprived of the right to eat meat and bread because of high rent.

To show you how everybody was interested in this question, as soon as it was known that this landlord was insisting upon the cash rent of $8 an acre the whole neighborhood began to discuss it. The doctor who had practiced for the tenant during hours of sickness began to see that he was interested, for the first time, in this land question; and that what had seemed to him heretofore none of his fight, after all, there was an economic condition in the production of the land, or he would have to go out of business. The merchant had already come to see how it would affect him, and the blacksmith who did work for the tenant began to see things the same way. So a mass meeting was held. No attempt or no expression of violence was made, as better counsel prevailed. The tenants of Texas are yet the most patriotic people that we have. They constitute, perhaps, and are as well informed as the average man in this country on public questions; through the medium of the rural system of mails they are informing themselves. So better counsel prevailed, and they said to the landlord—

Chairman WALSH. Might I ask you whether there had been what you might call sporadic talk of violence before the people got together?

Gov. FERGUSON. Well, no, sir; there had not. That is one of the points I want to emphasize—that notwithstanding the fact that here were 30 families who had been denied the right to eat bread and meat there was no expression or talk of violence. And after the meeting they said: "Well, we want to respect the right of property, and we owe a higher duty to our family—that is, to at least feed our families—and if we can't get the right, if we are denied the right to eat bread and meat, we believe we have a right to go elsewhere." So they said to the landlord: "Here is your land; we give it back to you, with the crop which we have made; you take it as you please." Made him a present of it. Then the doctor, the merchant, the blacksmith, and everybody that had done business began to see then that it was their question and was their fight; that it was for them to take an interest in this land question. And there is one of the great questions, one of the reasons why this land question is a question that must involve the attention of everybody.

Chairman WALSH. You say this landlord owned 14,000 acres?

Gov. FERGUSON. One thousand four hundred and thirty.

Chairman WALSH. One thousand four hundred and thirty acres of land?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. In Bell County?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Who is this landlord?

Gov. FERGUSON. The Seely interests, I understand, of Galveston.

Chairman WALSH. Is it in corporate-form ownership or individual?

Gov. FERGUSON. No, sir; it is private ownership.

Chairman WALSH. Owned by individuals?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes, sir. And when that condition was put up to them they began to see that the absentee landlords did not know the question as being developed on their own territory; they have never lived on the land; never saw it. So they met the situation and realized, and said: "Yes; after this method is explained to us we acknowledge that the tenant has some rights as well as we have." And the very day that that was done and the very hour that that was done every farmer went in and was able to continue to support the family, and everything went along satisfactorily. I only mention that—

Chairman WALSH. I just want to ask you, just following that out, were credits restored to normality?

Gov. FERGUSON. Immediately the merchants, who had heretofore refused to let the men have bread and meat, invited every one of them to come in and take the side of bacon or the sack of flour. But I only mention that as showing one of the evils of the cash system of rent, the inequitable side of a tenant in a country that has seasons which may be good this year and bad next.

You have outlined here the effects of the European war upon the Texas cotton situation and upon farming interests. The European war was responsible for one of the conditions, which is typical of Texas, I have just related. It is an ill wind that blows nobody good. The European war, with all its horrors, has at least had this good effect upon the cotton resources of the South; that is, that they must feed themselves and live at home. The tenant who cultivates largely the farms of this country can't do that by himself. He must have the cooperation of the landlords of the country. And I am glad to see that the landlords of the country are meeting this question, and I believe that they are patriotic enough, that they are yet fair enough to meet this situation, and extend to the tenant such facility and aid as will enable him to live at home and thereby be enabled to either hold his cotton until such time arises that he can sell it at fair prices, or that he can sell it at a low price and not be inconvenienced like he is at present—that is, with his whole income depending upon what he gets for cotton.

The landlords realize that the very value of their land depends upon the price which farm products bring.

And in addition to their patriotic interest in this, the matter of self-interest to maintain their standard of present land values that they are going to have to meet this question, and enable the tenant to raise more hogs, to give him more land, to run one or two dairy cows, and to give him a little more land to plant in corn and other grain crops, food crops, that will sustain animal life. And to that extent the European war has been a blessing to the people of the South. I do not believe that another war in Europe will ever have the depressing effect upon the finances of this country as this one has had. We have had a good example, and this will demonstrate to us the absolute necessity of living at home. We can do it. The South is peculiarly adapted to the raising of such crops as will support life without the aid of the purchases of other countries.

This may not be exactly pertinent to this question now before you, but I am going to throw this right into the record. You can get on the train at Dallas, Tex.—it is pertinent upon the question of the diversity of farming we can practice in Texas—you can get on the train at Dallas, Tex., and you can ride to St. Louis, across over the B. & O. Railroad to Washington, and from there to New York. You can then take the New York Central back by way of Buffalo to Chicago, down through Kansas, and over the Santa Fe and back into Texas, to Dallas, Tex., and you can take with you a notebook and make a note of what the people raise, and every 50 miles of that journey, and you won't find any country but that in Texas the same thing can be raised in any particular line. That may seem like a startling statement, but investigation will demonstrate that that is true. In none of these countries after you leave St. Louis will they have the advantage of the cotton crop that we have in the South.

I only mention that to show that we can meet the question of diversification; that of all the countries under the sun Texas ought to be the greatest diversified farming country in the world; and if the landowners will assist the tenants, who are willing to work their lands, develop intensified farming to a great degree, we can make it the greatest country in the world.

As to the resources of the State, I make this further comparison: The World's Almanac, which is an authority in the East, and an authority the world over, will, I think, bear out this statement: That the farmers and stock raisers of Texas produce and sell approximately $85 per capita in the black-land region where the cotton is raised.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Lennon asks whether that is per annum?

Gov. FERGUSON. Per annum; yes. Produces and sells per annum. In the black land—that is, including all Texas, the arid region of Texas. In the black-land area of Texas—really the farming area of Texas—I dare say the figures will show that it is considerably over a hundred dollars per capita. When you compare that with the New England States, the figures given by the World's Almanac do not disclose much other than that of dairying and some things along that line. But the fact that the World's Almanac does not disclose what it is shows that it is of no great amount or consequence. And I remember several years ago when I was in Albany, N. Y., discussing this very question with some bankers, that they ventured it as their opinion that to take New York City and put it off in one side by itself and not count that great population, that the farming and stock-raising interests of New England, the New England States, did not produce and sell $10 per capita as against $85 in Texas. That, of course, is stated for the purpose of showing the great natural resources of Texas.

Commissioner LENNON. Governor, this $85 would mean in a way the wage per capita; that is, it would be the annual earning per capita of $85?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes; comparatively speaking, you might call it that.

Commissioner LENNON. Well, then, would not, so far as the agricultural interests are concerned, that—would not out of that have to come the teams, the maintenance of their teams, their feed, and seed for the planting of the crop?

Gov. FERGUSON. That would in either instance; sure.

Commissioner LENNON. Yes.

Gov. FERGUSON. But you can see if it came out of the $15 as against the $85 how much advantage we would have.

Now, the question then comes, in line with one of the heads outlined here, about what are the chances of the tenant to secure a home in Texas.

Chairman WALSH. Have there been many foreclosures of chattel mortgages growing out of the changed conditions on account of the war in Europe or lately on account of various reasons?

Gov. FERGUSON. No.

Chairman WALSH. This year?

Gov. FERGUSON. Comparatively few. The people of the South, when we get into trouble, it looks like they lay aside self-interest and get together, and the business interests of the State, including the wholesale people and the bankers of the State, have done more than their duty in this crisis that has confronted the South. They have extended their credit limit, it must be said to their credit, in order to protect the situation, and there has not been, so far as my knowledge and observation goes, a desire to oppress anybody under these conditions.

Getting back to the question I started to answer about the ability of the tenants, as outlined in your heading here: "What are the chances of a tenant to secure a home in Texas?" When you consider the fact that we have approximately only one-fifth of our land improved in Texas—that is, susceptible to cultivation—and that we have at least 75,000,000 of acres of land that are not susceptible to agricultural population, that it ought to be easy for the tenant to secure a home. Probably it is as easy in Texas as in any other country. But there are difficulties in the way that would have to be overcome and met by the business people of the South and financial interests looking to the encouragement and the acquiring of homes by the tenants of the country. The tenant, under present conditions, does not have much chance to lay aside a surplus. Consequently a new régime, a new policy, a new land policy has to be worked out in the South with a view to settling the people upon their own homes. One of the great needs at this particular time, especially at this time when the country is suffering from financial depression as a result of the war—one of the great needs at this time is having a facility and an outlet for farm mortgages in Texas. That question will be a question of much importance to be discussed in Texas soon. The question is up for discussion now.

Chairman WALSH. Might you suggest, Governor, we seem to have omitted it in our outline here, in a general way, the method of lending money in vogue in Texas at the present time as compared with the past?

Gov. FERGUSON. There is no perceptible difference in the mode of lending money now from what there was 30 years ago, only in the volume of money loaned. Thirty years ago, I venture this as an assertion; I have not looked up the record, but the records of any county disclose very few, if any, foreign money loans in Texas on farm land. I would say, though, that about the year 1890 a large quantity of money began to be poured into Texas by foreign loan companies, and loaned to people with which to buy homes and to carry indebtedness already contracted for homes. And that has been a source of great help to the State of Texas to not only increase the value of the land but to aid the settlement of land.

I venture this statement right here, and I believe the business men of the country would bear me out, that if Texas had to pay to-day the foreign money that we have loaned on the farms of Texas that land values would decrease 50 per cent, because it is only by virtue of the fact that the man who goes on the land and stays there, wants to make it his home, that real land values are maintained in this country. If he is called upon to pay his loan and could not pay it, he will sell his land for whatever price he can get, and that naturally would tend to confiscation; the stronger the debtor demands his money and the more general as the demand for payment of debts, of course, the less the land would bring under the hammer, as we call it, to pay the indebtedness against it.

Chairman WALSH. You gave us in passing, Governor, a description of the efforts in one acute case in your own county of tenants to secure credit.

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Is there a general system by which tenants, referring to loans, secure credit in Texas?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes; there is a general system. And without in any way reflecting upon the people who are engaged in the credit business supplying tenants on a credit system, no man can be condemned for going out and using any opportunity that presents itself for profit—but I am only speaking of the system, the effect of the system, without in any way intending to reflect upon the people who are engaged in that class of business. But the credit system for the supply of tenants under the system of chattel mortgages, taking a chattel mortgage on the crops has a very distressful influence, I might say, at least, upon the ability of the tenant to purchase his supplies at an equitable price. The system in vogue is that when a tenant contemplates making a crop to go to what is known as the credit store and he says: "I am working 50 acres of land on Mr. John Jones's place out here, and I hope to plant about 40 acres in cotton. I want to get a hundred dollars' supplies during the year." The merchant, after making such investigation as a prudent man would, says: "All right, I will loan you this much money, advance you this much of supplies"—they do not loan any money—"I will advance you this much of supplies, but as a condition precedent to this relation I will ask you to execute a chattel mortgage on your entire cotton crop and corn crop to be grown on John Jones's place during the year." The tenant then begins to purchase so much on his account.

Chairman WALSH. Is there a regular chattel mortgage given, a filing fee charged, and everything?

Gov. FERGUSON. The regular chattel mortgage is given and filed for record. The merchant then naturally uses his opportunity to at least see that he don't sell anything to the tenant upon which he does not make at least a reasonable profit. I am sorry to say that in certain instances their cupidity seems to have been greatly excited, and they have charged prices that probably are out of the line of equity, which has had and must have a very bad effect upon the earning power of the tenant.

Chairman WALSH. Is there a fixed sum stated in the mortgage and a note given for an estimated sum?

Gov. FERGUSON. Usually a fixed sum. And generally a further condition in the chattel mortgage which covers any further indebtedness which might be contracted. But in any event to cover whatever is contracted for, either by account, note, or otherwise.

Chairman WALSH. Do any banks loan on such chattel mortgages?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes; they do. But that is generally to people who are probably financially situated—

Chairman WALSH. Is there any connection between the bank and the mercantile company, we will say, or the individual engaging in the mercantile enterprise with reference to this? Do they advance him money?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Does the bank have an interest in it to that extent?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes; very many times that is the plan in vogue, that the bank in a certain locality would refuse to make such a loan to that man. Where he is interested in the store he would say, "Well, that is not available at this time, you go down to So-and-so, a credit merchant," and he makes the trade with them under the system which I have just related, and then that paper is brought to the bank and rediscounted. The banks, though, where they use that character of paper are more liberal, and a man rarely ever pays more than the legal rate of interest.

Chairman WALSH. Is this in vogue in what might be termed isolated communities; that is, with reference naturally to where there is a large number, the trade of the tenants would naturally be at one store, so far as a town is concerned?

Gov. FERGUSON. No, sir. The credit system is in vogue all over Texas. It is very general, and I am sorry to say that the plan seems to be growing.

Chairman WALSH. Does the merchant seem to have a very great advantage in dealing contractually with the tenant under those circumstances?

Gov. FERGUSON. Absolutely.

Chairman WALSH. So far as the prices are concerned after the mortgage is made?

Gov. FERGUSON. Absolutely. He controls the situation. If the tenant demurs at the price of some article, the merchant will say, "All right, we will not do any business. That is my price." The tenant then either has to take that or starve. He can not go somewhere else and make another chattel mortgage, because the merchant already has one.

Chairman WALSH. Under the terms of such a mortgage, then, do they have the right of foreclosure in case of a dispute between the tenant and the merchant?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes. Some of the mortgages are very cruelly drawn. They provide for declaring the whole thing due before maturity under certain conditions, largely in the discretion of the merchant. That is one of the problems, one of the great advantages of diversification. If the farmer, whether he be tenant or landowner, if he can begin to feed himself he will not have to buy from the credit merchant, he will not have to buy any more meat or flour. And by living at home that is one of the great advantages that can be gained from diversification. The man sells his products at whatever they ought to bring, without having the prices fixed by the merchant.

Chairman WALSH. At this point we will stand adjourned until 2 o'clock. Kindly resume the stand at 2 o'clock, Governor.

(At 12.30, Tuesday, March 16, 1915, a recess was taken until 2 o'clock in the afternoon of the same day.)

AFTER RECESS—2 P. M.

Chairman WALSH. The house will please be in order, and we will now proceed. Please resume the stand, Governor.

I am going to ask you a few specific questions, if you will permit, but on your outline. Under the existing system, what is the chance of the average tenant becoming a farm owner in your own county?

Gov. FERGUSON. You mean proportionately, how many of them out of the total number?

Chairman WALSH. What is the chance of a tenant becoming the owner of land in your county, considering the price of land, his opportunity to earn as a tenant, and any other economic considerations?

Gov. FERGUSON. You say in my county?

Chairman WALSH. Or in your section?

Gov. FERGUSON. Not one in fifty.

Chairman WALSH. What is the average price of land to-day in your county?

Gov. FERGUSON. Eighty dollars an acre.

Chairman WALSH. What is the legal rate of interest in Texas?

Gov. FERGUSON. Ten per cent on contract; 6 per cent is the legal rate.

Chairman WALSH. What is the actual interest rate paid by tenants on chattels?

Gov. FERGUSON. About 12 per cent.

Chairman WALSH. How much land can a one-team tenant farmer farm?

Gov. FERGUSON. That depends upon how many children he has. Take the average farm tenant with five children, he can work 30 acres of cotton and 10 acres of corn.

Chairman WALSH. What will his income be?

Gov. FERGUSON. That will depend on prices. He will make off the 30 acres of cotton 10 bales, and it would amount, at the average of the present prices, to $500 in round numbers.

Chairman WALSH. For the whole family?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Just briefly—you say five children?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What would the five children have to do? How old would they have to be? What part would they take in the farming operations?

Gov. FERGUSON. They would help on the crop in the hoeing season and in the picking season.

Chairman WALSH. Please tell us, because we think it has a significant bearing on the question, the part the land question took in the late campaign, the extent to which it has been thrust into the political life of Texas.

Gov. FERGUSON. That is a comparative question. To use a vernacular, from the time I announced for governor on one of the main planks, the landlord and tenant plank, there has been something doing in Texas politics ever since. That is largely by reason of the fact that we have in Texas probably a voting population in the Democratic primaries of 400,000 in round numbers, and half that number are tenants, and this affected them directly; and consequently you can readily appreciate that legislation affecting the income of half the voting population of any district must of necessity cause great interest and, without meaning in any way to throw any bouquets at myself, of all the questions introduced into Texas politics in late years, there has been nothing that has caused as much widespread discussion.

Chairman WALSH. What is the land plank, or what was the land plank, in the campaign in which you were candidate for governor?

Gov. FERGUSON. It was to restrict the amount of rentals which the landlord might charge to one-third of the value of the grain crops and one-fourth of the value of the cotton crop, and to make it usually subject to a penalty of double the amount collected in excess to be paid by the landlord to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction, in case anyone attempted to charge more than that.

Chairman WALSH. Has there been any legislation upon the subject, yet?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes; the bill was passed.

Chairman WALSH. Was passed?

Gov. FERGUSON. Overwhelmingly; five to one in both houses.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Lennon asks me to ask you in case of the 1-team tenant on a 40-acre tract such as you have described, what the expenses would be, to be paid for team, seed, etc.—what might be called the fixed charges, overhead charges—for carrying on the operations?

Gov. FERGUSON. Well, take a 1-team tenant, the 2 horses would eat approximately 50 bushels of corn each, which would be 100 bushels of corn for the team, and at the present average prices that would be worth $75. His own living expenses would be at least $25 a month, making $375. That is just for provisions and supplies. The rest of his income would scantily clothe his family.

Chairman WALSH. What supervision, if any, is exercised or attempted to be exercised over the tenant as to the crop he shall raise and the proportion of products?

Gov. FERGUSON. It has been the custom in Texas for 40 years, I should say, for the landlord to require the tenant to plant the greater portion of his crop in cotton.

Chairman WALSH. Does the mortgagee in any instance exercise any supervision or direction over the tenant?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes; it has been the custom, in view of the fact that cotton has been deemed to be king and the money crop of the South, that the merchant has restricted and required the tenant to plant cotton as a condition precedent to furnishing him his supply.

Chairman WALSH. Now, of course, you have observed the question as it comes in here as to the alleged tendency of growth on the part of the tenant into a wage earner—to belong to the wage-earning class—to a greater extent than in the past. So, directing your attention to that, have you noticed any tendency on the part of landlords as to exercising supervision over tenants in any other way than you have mentioned?

Gov. FERGUSON. Well, in later years, especially since the diversification movement started in the South, I am glad to say that there has been a very liberal disposition on the part of the landlords as a class to recognize that there is an obligation resting upon them to help work out the problem and that they must really go a little further to help the tenant than in former times.

Chairman WALSH. But what I was getting at is the direct supervision, if any, upon the part of the landlord as to the crops; that is, whether it takes the direction of advocating diversity or restriction. What we are trying to get at is, is there an actual supervision, as it were, over the tenant farmers as a class with reference to their operations so that they become merely ordinary wage earners governed by other authority or by other minds than their own?

Gov. FERGUSON. I would not say it had reached that condition; no; any more than the tendency on the part of the landlord within the last two years to diversify, whereas, previous to that time, it was to plant lots of cotton. I am not advised that landlords have pursued any other policy toward the direction of the tenant.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you a few questions as to the housing conditions of tenant farmers. Are tenant houses, as a rule, large enough for the average families of the farmers?

Gov. FERGUSON. No, sir; they are not.

Chairman WALSH. Are they kept in proper repair, as a rule?

Gov. FERGUSON. Well, as a rule, I would say yes.

Chairman WALSH. Who does the repair upon the houses?

Gov. FERGUSON. Usually it is done by the tenant on some compensation agreed upon by the landlord.

Chairman WALSH. What has been the tendency, so far as you have observed, socially of such large numbers of people living in houses not large enough for their families? You know, Governor, the tendency in the cities has been to create conditions that do not make for the best morals, hygiene, etc.

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes. Inadequate insanitary tenant houses in the country are bound to have the same effect as the crowded tenement districts have in the cities.

Chairman WALSH. Are they usually erected with regard to proper sanitary arrangements for drainage, water supply, etc.?

Gov. FERGUSON. Oh, yes; in this country we always have plenty of drainage.

Chairman WALSH. Have you observed the effect of living conditions on tenant farmers and on the health of communities?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes; it is ordinarily good.

Chairman WALSH. Has there been much overcrowding with respect to sleeping arrangements in the houses of the tenant farmers?

Gov. FERGUSON. No; not to any great dangerous extent, I think.

Chairman WALSH. Do the landlords improve tenant houses readily and willingly?

Gov. FERGUSON. No, sir; they do not.

Chairman WALSH. Why not?

Gov. FERGUSON. Because it is an item of expense that decreases their revenue.

Chairman WALSH. Do the landlords appear to feel any social responsibility for the sanitary condition of their houses and the moral conditions that may grow out of incomplete sleeping arrangements—crowded sleeping arrangements?

Gov. FERGUSON. I would say, in answer to that question, that they have not given the matter consideration, not that they are against it or not that they are for it, but that the proposition had to some extent been neglected.

Chairman WALSH. What has been your observation in regard to the respect or responsibility that the tenant seems to have for the landlord's property in the way of the conservation and care of it?

Gov. FERGUSON. As a general proposition the tenant—the better class of farmers, which are in the majority, look out so far as possible for the preservation of the property. There have been, though, some violent abuses on the part of the tenants in that respect.

Chairman WALSH. Have there been any what you might call outbreaks in which property has been lost growing out of the contention between landlords and tenants in which property has been destroyed, mutilated, or anything of that sort?

Gov. FERGUSON. No, sir; only in very isolated cases; not enough to mention.

Chairman WALSH. They would have to be individual cases?

Gov. FERGUSON. How is that?

Chairman WALSH. They would have to be individual cases?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes; individual cases.

Chairman WALSH. Do landlords among the river bottoms have closer supervision and control over crops that the tenants grow than in what you might term the prairie region?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes, sir. In the river-bottom district, where the negro population predominates, the landlord, although having the share system, always directs the planting and gathering of the crop.

Chairman WALSH. Governor, there is a long-distance call for you over the telephone, and if you desire we will wait until you can answer it.

Gov. FERGUSON. I would be glad if you would; it is a very special call.

Chairman WALSH. We will take a recess for a few minutes—until you return. We will be at ease until the Governor returns.

At the conclusion of the recess the examination of Gov. Ferguson continued as follows:

Chairman WALSH. I was going to ask you, Governor, whether you observed that this increase in tenant farming, which you have mentioned, any tendency on the part of landlords to exercise a stricter supervision in the prairie country—that is, which would be somewhat similar to that in the lowlands?

Gov. FERGUSON. No, sir; they have not exercised the same supervision as in the river districts.

Chairman WALSH. This morning you spoke of the tendency of reasonably large owners of land to move to the towns and take no physical part in carrying on farming operations, but to farm through renters. As a rule do these men, when they go into the city, engage in other lines of business or do they retire and live on their income?

Gov. FERGUSON. A good many of them engage in other business; about 9 out of 10 of them retire because they can not make good in town and become retired farmers in cities.

Chairman WALSH. I want to direct your attention a little to what might be called the social environment. Describe the condition of the rural schools in the localities in Texas you have mentioned—first the school itself.

Gov. FERGUSON. Well, the condition could be very much improved on in the country schools; that is one of the problems of government now to improve and bring to the reach of the farming class in the country, which means a large majority of the tenant class, the facilities for at least elementary education. At the present time the buildings are inadequate, and as a general class they are insanitary; they have too much ventilation in winter and in summer, and in addition to that we have not the number of teachers in proportion to the number of students that the more fortunate people in the cities have. And the result is that rural education is in a very deplorable condition in Texas. In stating this I do not mean to excite any animosity or prejudice, but, comparatively speaking—comparing them to the people in the cities—they are in a very deplorable state. It is one of the problems that must be met and solved before we can ever establish this policy of "back to the farm."

Chairman WALSH. Have you observed any relation between the rural schools in Texas and what might be called social and economic organizations of the people generally?

Gov. FERGUSON. No; not any relations back there. The country schools have been neglected; no one has paid much attention to them.

Chairman WALSH. Do they have political meetings in the schoolhouses in the State of Texas?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes; they have all kinds of political meetings in the schoolhouses.

Chairman WALSH. They could, by a little direction or development, be made social centers for the people of the communities?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Has any work been done along that line?

Gov. FERGUSON. One of the greatest works along that line is the movement for good roads in this country, making all of the tenants accessible and making it easy for people to get together and discuss social and economic conditions.

(Charles W. Holman at this point testified as follows:)

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the rural-school social-settlement movement was pioneered in the West; the urban social-settlement movement was pioneered in the eastern cities. There is an organizer from the State university looking after that civic social center work.

Chairman WALSH. Is the organizer paid by the State out of the university funds?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; it is a part of their work.

Chairman WALSH. Are there any organizations of tenant farmers that might be compared to the labor organizations to improve their conditions as a class?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes, sir; notably the farmers' union of Texas; it is called the Farmers' Cooperative Union, having for its purposes the education of the farmers and a joining together and cooperating in the marketing of crops and other matters that might bring about a better condition socially and morally.

Chairman WALSH. Is there any connection between that organization and the State in any way?

Gov. FERGUSON. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Or between it and the State university?

Gov. FERGUSON. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Has there been any effort to connect the work of this organization with the rural schools?

Gov. FERGUSON. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Do they hold their meetings in the schools?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes, sir; they hold their meetings largely in the country schools.

Chairman WALSH. Please be kind enough to give me any constructive suggestions that might bring about better conditions under the present system, or, if any is necessary, what change should be made in the present system of your people with respect to the land. This is very broad, I recognize, of course.

Gov. FERGUSON. That gives me a very broad latitude.

Chairman WALSH. Yes; go as far as you like.

Gov. FERGUSON. Well, many things might be said. Many kinds of theories and ideas have been advanced as to what could be done to advance and improve the condition of the farmers of the country, and all of those are important, but I would say that the greatest thing—one of the greatest things—we need in this country is the aid of capital to cooperate with that labor now in abundance in Texas to develop the unimproved lands of the State.

As disclosed by the figures this morning, we have not over one-fourth of our tillable area under the plow. We have an increasing tenant population. We have a great influx of immigration from other countries, and naturally food supply of all kinds would have to be increased if the demand of the growing population is met. Everybody can not be business men in town, or superintendents of railroads, or lawyers, or doctors, or preachers. Consequently that which involves the greatest good to the greatest number is involved in the question of providing homes for the homeless. We have here an area now unoccupied that would support a population—well, I am well within reason when I say eight times what we have now. That is borne out by comparison. A territory of Germany no larger than Texas, no greater in proportion in tillable area than Texas, supports a population now of about 60,000,000 people, and they have no great winter hardship in this country like there is in that country, where it must cost twice as much to sustain life as it does in this country with our area, easily susceptible of supporting 40,000,000 of people. And if the wealth of the world is put in close connection with, and at the disposal of, and on a legitimate, sound business basis, and under sound business policy, we can develop our natural resources here until we can support that many people. The greatest problem we see now, I would say, is the development of our unoccupied area of Texas.

Chairman WALSH. Do you want to outline or comment on the paper of Mr. Holman which was read here, with reference to the Federal Government taking some action upon the land question—the question of tenant farming and agriculture?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes. I was especially interested in that, and I want to say that I think the National Government now is really doing the greatest service that has ever been done by any Government, especially in any administration within the history of the country, in calling attention to these very questions. If such a commission as this tribunal had visited Texas 20 years ago and developed the same information which will be at your disposal, I think Texas would be 20 years advanced.

You will be able to learn and to tell officially to the world just what this State can do, and what it will do, and what people are invited to do here, as soon as the people learn about the resources of Texas through a disinterested tribunal like this one. Great good is going to be the result to the people of Texas. I think this is one of the most patriotic and one of the most far-reaching movements on the part of the Government that it has undertaken in a long time—to come down and find out about these conditions.

Chairman WALSH. Governor, is there anything that you would like to volunteer to this commission that you think would be of use to it? I think you are perfectly familiar with what the Government is trying to do in this respect; and if anything has not been asked that you would care to volunteer, we would be pleased to have you state it.

Gov. FERGUSON. I do not recall anything, Mr. Walsh.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Lennon would like to ask you some questions.

Commissioner LENNON. Governor, what effect, if any, has tenancy seemed to have on the fertility of the soil?

Gov. FERGUSON. Well, it has not had the best effect. Naturally the man who has been put out to work the soil for just what he might produce for the landlord has largely looked at it from his personal standpoint, and he has not paid attention to preserving the fertility of the soil as he ought to have done, or with a view to the mutual benefit of himself and the owner.

Commissioner LENNON. You think that he has not given that attention that the farmer who lives on his own land would give.

Gov. FERGUSON. Naturally, self-interest being there and thrusting itself into a question like that, the soil has suffered from that; and I am glad to say that attention is now being given to that question. The question is being discussed, and I look for the fertility of the soil generally to be increased by a proper management and treatment.

Commissioner LENNON. What is the school term during the year in the country schools?

Gov. FERGUSON. I do not know just exactly what the figures are, but I think it is about four months—four to five months' school in the country.

Commissioner LENNON. Could you tell us what wages are paid to the country school-teachers?

Gov. FERGUSON. Oh, I would say around $50.

Commissioner LENNON. Fifty dollars a month?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes; $50 a month.

Commissioner LENNON. How about your taxes for the support of schools and other purposes? Are they on land and improvements, or is it a personal tax or poll tax that tenants have to pay as well as others?

Gov. FERGUSON. The schools are supported by what is known as the common-school fund, an endowment provided by the early founders of the Republic, and by an ad valorem tax. There has been a great deal of discussion of that question and is now, and it is getting to be quite the custom to issue bonds in districts for the purpose of building schoolhouses. And there are methods on foot to remove the constitutional inhibition of 50 cents a hundred dollars and let it be $1 for the purpose of supporting schools where localities desire to put that much tax on themselves.

Commissioner LENNON. The children of the tenant farmers who assist their parents in the farm work; is it at a time of year when it keeps them out of school, or is it at a time when the schools are open or when they are not open?

Gov. FERGUSON. Well, it is at a time—the school terms are arranged—it has been a custom to have them arranged with a view of gathering the cotton crop and to have the schools close before the hoeing season comes on, in which the children are used largely.

Commissioner LENNON. So, then, they are really not kept out of schools because of their work in the fields?

Gov. FERGUSON. No, sir; that could be arranged all right. It would not interfere with the school interests. The injury we are suffering from right now is not enough proper school facilities.

Commissioner LENNON. Yes; I understood you answered that very fully. That is all.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Governor, you spoke of the large area in Texas now unoccupied. Would you suggest any means to stimulate what you call people coming in there, or from what source would you try to get an increase of population?

Gov. FERGUSON. Well, as I said a while ago, if the financial facilities were offered to that class of people—for instance, if some system like they have in Germany, where a man could buy a farm on 20 years' time, were offered to these people, a great many people in Texas, thousands of them would be glad to avail themselves of that opportunity and move onto this unoccupied territory and begin to improve it and bring it under a system of cultivation. The financial resources of the country have not shown a spirit of liberality to make loans on the unoccupied territory, but rather confine it to the improved districts. And for that reason the settlement in many districts has been retarded, for want of financial advantages and facilities.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Would your idea, then, be to bring people from the outside, from outside the State?

Gov. FERGUSON. It must be, because we are poor. We have to get it from somewhere else.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Just a question or two, Governor.

Have you taken any notice of the proposed State colonization schemes, some of which have been introduced largely in the legislatures of other States—the California one, for instance, Governor?

Gov. FERGUSON. No; I have not. I know of them only in a general way.

Chairman WALSH. The general plan being that the State should set aside land for tenants, advance money, and provide an amortization fund to pay for them, etc., to pay for the land.

Gov. FERGUSON. That question is in its embryonic stage in Texas now. We have no fixed views or policies.

Chairman WALSH. With regard to the school facilities and the opportunities under your cropping system for children going to school, does the moving season, when tenants move from one place to another, naturally interfere with the school children?

Gov. FERGUSON. Yes, sir; and in that connection I want to call attention to the known fact that there are at least 90,000 children of scholastic age in Texas who never go to school at all, largely due to this moving population.

Chairman WALSH. That is all. Thank you.

Gov. FERGUSON. Thank you very much for the consideration shown me.

Chairman WALSH. Col. Kirkpatrick.

TESTIMONY OF COL. E. W. KIRKPATRICK.

Chairman WALSH. What is your full name, please?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. E. W. Kirkpatrick.

Chairman WALSH. Where do you reside, Colonel?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. McKinney, Tex.

Chairman WALSH. And do you hold any official position with the State at the present time?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. No.

Chairman WALSH. Have you any official connection with any industrial organization of the State?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Well, I have a connection like the presidency of the Industrial Congress of Texas.

Chairman WALSH. That is what I had in mind, what I see on the outline. I would like you to state what the general activity of that congress is, Colonel.

Col. KIRKPATRICK. The general activity of the congress, the Industrial Congress of Texas, is for the purpose of securing better homes for the people; and then it has for the further purpose, in order to that point, to teach, especially the boys and girls, the young folks of Texas, how to improve their surroundings, how to become interested in agriculture, and how to make home life on the farm more attractive and more interesting and more remunerative. I might say that is a general statement of the purposes of the congress.

Chairman WALSH. Is it a permanent organization?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Well, now, the permanency of that organization will depend upon the private donations. We have never received any money for the support, for the establishment, or for the maintenance of the congress from any source except private individual donations, and if they keep coming regularly, as they have for the last four years, I suppose the institution will be perpetuated.

Chairman WALSH. Then, I take it that it is four years old, Colonel, or is it older?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. It is now in its fourth year. Yes; it will be four years that we have paid premiums of $10,000 each year to the boys and girls who produced the most and best crops upon a given area of soil, with the expenses apportioned or reckoned. We limit them on the expenses that they use upon any given area.

Chairman WALSH. I note that you are a former president of the Texas Farming Congress. What sort of an organization was that, please, Colonel?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. The Texas Farming Congress was organized by individual enterprise, founded entirely upon individual donations, for the purpose of federating all of the industrial institutions of the State. That is to say, we imagined that by getting the different State organizations all in one combination, and getting them together and holding not only separate sessions of each organization, but combined sessions, so that one could learn from the other, and one could learn from all, that it would be a good thing for Texas agriculture. And we organized it with about 10 of the different State organizations, and I think now we have about 20—maybe more than 20—22, I believe, enlisted in that organization. We meet once a year, as you all know, at College Station, Tex., where we have the benefit of the lectures and of the facilities, the laboratories of the college to use in giving instruction to each one of these respective organizations.

Chairman WALSH. Would you be good enough, Colonel, to concisely sketch for us what your business activities have been—what your business has been—since you have been active in business?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. I was a farmer and am still a farmer. I spent three years in the Confederate Army. I have come back to the farm. I have established a nursery, and followed that in connection with farming about 30 years, then I formed it into a corporation and retired from the active work. Since that retirement I have been engaged in this general welfare work, principally. I have not done much else except to wait upon the public.

Chairman WALSH. How large a nursery company is that? I believe it is called the Texas Nursery Co.?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What is its capital stock?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. It has a capital stock of $250,000.

Chairman WALSH. Is its stock diffused generally, or is it a rather close ownership?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. It is diffused as widely as convenient. We have probably 20 or 30 stockholders.

Chairman WALSH. Well, now, I am going to try to follow the outline that I believe has been submitted to you by Mr. Holman. Of course, you understand that any digression from that will be acceptable to the commission, because I would not want to limit you to that.

To begin with, a period right after the Civil War, we will say in 1870, I would like you to sketch for our record and for the commission the development of the farm tenancy idea of the State of Texas, the type of tenants that came in, their origin, and all about them, in your own way.

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Well, in 1870 we had comparatively few tenants, and we had comparatively few farmers. The stock interests were greater then, I believe, than the farming interests. Large stock companies occupied the principal portion of the land. And as you old Texans know, this was a Garden of Eden when we discovered it, when Mexico was driven back and we came here and drove out the Indians. They had feasted on the wild animals and beauties and riches of the land. Then we brought in cattle and they ate up the grass. Then we found it necessary to go to work and plow. So we cut down the timber and plowed up the grass, and the water and the plow, the rains and storms, they did rest. In other words, we have depleted our soil, we have reduced its fertility, we have upset nature to a large degree, reducing its fertility, and it is now our business to try to rehabilitate and rebuild this country back into another Garden of Eden, a better garden, if possible, than it ever was before.

Now, in 1870, we had, as I said, few renters, but the other States gave us immigration. They emigrated here and settled and some of them bought land and a great many rented. Then our children grew—

Chairman WALSH. Might I interrupt you to ask you to describe the character of those early people, where they came from, their kinship with the balance of America? Were they mountaineers or were they New Englanders, or who were they?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. There was a percentage of them came from the North and the Northeast; some few from the West, but the principal portion came from the eastern States like Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, and in through there. They were among the best people. They were our own relations.

Chairman WALSH. Were they people who were farmers, or planters, or of what sort were they?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. I think the greater portion of them were farmers. Yes; they came from off the farms there. I have heard them say they could make more here by renting the land than they could back there by owning the land.

Chairman WALSH. Had any portion of them been tenants or anything of that sort?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. I think some of them had been tenants. Most of them possibly had owned land in the older States, and had lived on the land and farmed and came here and did not find it convenient to buy. Now, I want it understood that a great many of them did buy, and there were a great many renters. After they stayed here a few years they bought.

Chairman WALSH. What was the price of land in those days?

Colonel KIRKPATRICK. Land then was worth about twenty to thirty dollars. I might say twenty to thirty dollars an acre in 1870. Earlier than that it was still cheaper. In 1865 land was cheaper than it was in 1870; twenty to thirty dollars an acre possibly in 1870 to 1880, along in there. About 1870 to 1880 it was $25 to $30 and some little $40. The renter class then began to increase, but the landholding class increased in proportion. A great many renters made enough in a few years to buy land for themselves, and they did buy. In the meantime, the landlord would say: "Every time I get a good renter he soon becomes a landholder, and I have to get another renter." I have heard them say that. I have heard landholders make that complaint heretofore.

Chairman WALSH. Up to about what period was that?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Up to this period. Right to-day. [Applause.]

Chairman WALSH. You may proceed.

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Sir?

Chairman WALSH. You may proceed now with the development of the tenancy.

Col. KIRKPATRICK. The tenancy—Mr. Chairman, if you would indulge me I would give you some of the fundamental statements of the tenancy question.

Chairman WALSH. Indeed, we will. I wish you would.

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Now, as you all know, the human family is divided into a great many classes. There are some portions of the human family in the landholding class and some in the land-renting class that do not put a very high estimate upon the home or home life or ownership or nonownership. I have heard a renter, a man as good as I am, or you, or probably as good as anybody, say that they would not own the land, they would not own a farm in this black-land country, and be compelled to live on it all their lives if it was given to them; that all they wanted to do was to rent for a year or two years at the most and learn all that there was to be learned in the neighborhood from friends, and then move to another neighborhood where they could get a new chance to learn new tricks. I have heard good men say that; men who had large families and plenty of money and plenty of sense and knew what life was, as well as I know what it is, and they are so situated and constituted in their mind that they don't want to own land and be tied down to the same spot and look at the same fence post every day, and the same door, and all of that; they want to move about, and they do move about, and it would be impossible to take that class of men and make permanent settlers out of them. I think it would be equal to putting them in jail. I actually do. I have talked to them seriously. Now, that being the case, being divided into those peculiar classes, it is hard to approach this question so as to make any law that you could originate to apply to everybody. You find renters to-day; I can show you renters who are paying rent and building up bank accounts, and building up character, who buy land every year at from $75 to $100 an acre adjoining them, and who are glad to get it at that price.

Now, I can show you other men, just as good men as they are, and we reckon them good citizens, that would lose money right by the side of them on similar land under similar circumstances, that would lose money every year and go in debt more and more, and then have to move because they could not pay their merchant and their merchant wouldn't credit them; they could not pay the banks and the banks would not credit them; they could not borrow money from their neighbors, and all they could do was to move and get away to a fresh field and find a new picking. That happens all over this country. I do not know, but I think it would apply to some other countries. The renters ought to be educated. We ought to have more universities and more colleges and more schools [applause]; we ought to have more of these lectures and more of these societies like our industrial congress. We need more of these liberal-hearted bankers and merchants, railroad men, and rich farmers, to come around and to establish a sentiment among the people that they must learn to love their homes, that a home on earth is just as good as a home in heaven; that they ought to make it, and then finally stay there and live on it and remain with it. We need education. We need, Mr. Chairman, more now than we ever have as long as I can remember. It is growing stronger every day. People are teaching the people to love their homes, no matter if it is only 1 acre. One acre rightly cultivated will support a family, a small family. When I make that statement a great many people think I am crazy or that I am extravagant and all that, but I know it can be done; I have seen it done. And it can be done again. They want to learn to till the soil and keep the soil in good condition and put enough food into it and learn how to set the plants, and how to care for them, and how to ripen them, and how to market them, and how to pack them, and how to ship them, and where to ship them. They can get a living on an acre. They had better have an acre than to have nothing. Five acres would be a large farm for a great many men. Ten acres would be a lordly farm, a plantation for a great many men. You don't need many of these acres, but you want to attend to them properly, and put the right things in at the right time, in the right way, and treat them right, and then know how to handle the thing right; what to grow, where to grow it, and how to grow it, and when to grow it and where to grow it and how to ship it. In fact, that is the kind of education we need, and I believe it is coming. That will make this a Garden of Eden again.

I think the renter class could be largely reduced if we had that kind of education.

Now, our people study more about how to have a good time than they do about how to have a good home. They have all the home they want. Some one fills them; some one gets their meals; some one gives them a place to stop. They don't study about home. They are studying about picture shows and ball games and horse races or the visit, or something of that kind, and their minds are full of having a good time; and they don't appreciate the fact that they ought to have a good home—home first and home last and home all the time. I am glad to see our professors in the colleges and universities and our schools and our chief places; they are teaching that doctrine continually, and it ought to be taught all the time, and they ought to appreciate it, and the papers and periodicals ought to print it, and it ought to be on the front page. If they would keep all this baseball foolishness out of the papers and put in a little of this home sense, it would be a good deal better.

Chairman WALSH. What is your county, that McKinney is the county seat of?
Col. KIRKPATRICK. Cullen, the best county in Texas and the best county in the world.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would give in full, if you will, a little sketch of the development of the agricultural conditions in your own county; that is, the observation as a tenant farmer as to the removal into the cities.

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, that is a very serious question; that is a vital question; and that has a great deal to do with the future of this country; the cause of the building up of a city population and a tearing down and breaking down of a country population, taking the best men out of the country and putting them into the city. I have noticed that tendency for a great many years, and it is a fearful thing to contemplate. There are fearful results to flow from that unless we can check it, unless we can make these people know that out in the country is the place to get pure air and have pure thoughts and have place and time to meditate and have leisure there to contemplate and to think and to exercise the mind and the brain and to grow spiritually as well as financially. We are going to the cities to build up material wealth and leaving the country, where we might build up another kind of wealth worth infinitely more than all the material wealth in the world. If we do not stop that tendency to go to the city and get back to the country, there is nothing good coming to us in the future.

Chairman WALSH. Do you think that there is an economic basis of any sort for that, or is it just a sort of human desire, as you say, not normal or healthful?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. It has an economic base as well as a human desire to have a good time and to go to the shows and to enjoy themselves. It has this kind of an economic basis, that the farmer—now, I don't know whether what I am going to say is going to be a reflection on the farmer and whether I will be killed off for making this statement or not.

A VOICE IN THE AUDIENCE. Let it loose! Let it come!

Col. KIRKPATRICK. But the farmer in Texas—and I don't know but the farmers in Kansas—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). I would like to correct that before you go any further. I was born and bred in Missouri.

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Then you would like to be shown?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Col. KIRKPATRICK. I can speak for Texas. I know the farmer in Texas, commencing 60 years ago. I remember of commencing 60 years ago plowing this black land, and have been plowing it almost every day since. The farmer in Texas was not a farmer, but a miner. That is an expression often heard. He did not really farm the land and cultivate it, but he mined it—took out what fertility there was in it with his system. He had a kind of amalgamating system. He planted it, but he did not have his amalgam in the right place, and he did not catch it; but if he had put his plants where they would catch it, it would have been all right. But he simply leached out the fertility, plowed it in a shallow way and let the storms sweep it away, and reduced the fertility to that point where he found it was very difficult to make a living off of it only by renting it to somebody that did not know its poverty. He thought he might get a pretty good rent and go to town; and he had not been making enough to give him the rent, in a great many cases, and he would go to town and let the other fellow wrestle with it; and the other fellow came along and pursued identically the same plan himself, and he has reduced its fertility still further, and he has mined it again. It has been mined, but it has never been farmed. I don't see one farm in a hundred that has been farmed, but it has been mined and washed out. Now, that farmer went to town for social purposes, educational purposes, general entertaining purposes, and resting purposes, and the renter came and took charge of the farm, and he was not interested, I am sorry to say, in that farm. I know some renters are interested, because I know one renter. I remember one renter that started as a renter, and he put out a $30 orchard on the farm and built a new house and fixed the fences and broke up new land and plowed the ground deeply in the summer and hoed the weeds late in the summer, and made money for the landlord and made money for himself and made credit at the bank and made friends among the people. And I know a great many renters that did the same thing, and they are landholders to-day; but those other renters that went there purposely to get what there was in it and to get a place to go to and stop a year or two and paid no attention to the improvements and no attention to the soil, and did not study the soil at all or did not care anything about it, most of them are renters to-day and their children are renters.

Now, there comes your division of the population into two classes. It is like starting right, getting the heart right, and getting the hand right and getting the two to act together and pursue the right course. There is where comes the great division in the classes. If they start with economy and start with integrity and then use industry, and they will take care of things and will study their business and stay with it and they will become landholders and home owners. But if they do not, they will just switch about and swap about and live here or there until they get in debt so they can not stay any longer and then they move and live yonder a while, and so on. Now, that is dressing it up in a very unpopular way, and I don't suppose this will help me in the primary any whatever.

Chairman WALSH. Please describe, if you will—I would like you to describe the development of what might be called very large farms in your county; how it is worked out and worked up.

Col. KIRKPATRICK. The very large farms in our county are not as large as they were some years ago. The good old citizens have died and their farms either have been cut up among their children until they are reduced in acreage, or many of those children have sold out and moved farther West and renters have come in. And they have sold to merchants, and they have sold to bankers, and the tendency is to put the farms in the hands of a few, and many own 10 or 20. In other cases where these old citizens have died, their estates have been wound up and the land secured by these large owners until it looks like, if the tendency is not stopped, that a few of them will own in some cases whole counties.

Chairman WALSH. Do you notice anything peculiar in the economic advantages that they have, as controllers of credit, or as money lenders? Would you say that their position makes it possible to do that if, as you say, a few are coming to own whole counties, and why is it?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Well, that is a fundamental question and an important question, to know how that happens. I believe I will refer you back to the original proposition that our people are not in love with home life sufficiently; they lack a sense of respect for family life and for character and for good citizenship.

Chairman WALSH. Do the owners, Colonel, have any trouble in getting tenants for these farms as they buy them up?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. It is most all trouble; they have more trouble than they have tenants, most of them. The tenants are suffering and the landholders are suffering; it has become almost unendurable in many cases. I know landholders up there that do not get enough out of their land to more than pay the taxes, to say nothing of the interest on the capital. Few of the parties get enough rent to pay the interest on the capital; some do not get over 2 per cent and some get 3 or 4 per cent on the capital invested; and it is growing worse, and unless we can teach the people to handle the soil more economically and more advantageously the business will grow worse all the time. If we could teach them to properly cultivate the soil and properly diversify their crops and raise them in rotation and teach them how to increase fertility, then the renters would be benefited and the landholders would be benefited and we would have more renters becoming landlords. The renters would be able to purchase the land.

Chairman WALSH. Does the question of credits affect the situation in any way, either as to the landholders or tenants; and I will ask you at this point to describe the system of loaning money to the landowners and tenants.

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Well, the men who have the money and have the merchandise that the renter must have, have become much more liberal and more considerate the last few years than they were once. I can remember when a moneylender would foreclose on a mortgage as quick as that [witness snaps fingers], but that does not happen now. A man that would do that now would be in bad standing with his neighbors, and the bankers and moneylenders do not grind down on the tenants like they did, and on their debtors like they did; they are very considerate, indeed. I know a few creditors that practice usury and who lend money to men at 5 per cent a month and then take out a lot more from the face of the note when they handle the money, and such as that, but that is not as extensive as it was once. I remember when I went to a banker for money and paid 5 per cent a month, and he would not make me any discount, and I paid what amounted to 120 per cent for the money; I have done that in McKinney, and I know others that have done that. They do not do that so much now, but some practice usury; they charge some 10 per cent and take out 10 per cent in discounting the note, making it amount to 20 per cent per annum, but that is being done less than ever before. But I want to emphasize this fact, that those tenants and those borrowers who have, from the beginning, upheld their integrity and studied the interests of their friends who have loaned them money, are treated fairly; it is that class who are ready to run away as soon as the crop is raised, and who go out in the night—that is the class that has to pay the exorbitant rates.

Chairman WALSH. Are loans made on chattel mortgages in your country?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Are they made by bankers or merchants, or how?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Not many are made by bankers. There are many merchants in the State who make a business of taking mortgages on personal property and loaning small amounts, and then the merchants open accounts on time with farmers and file a mortgage in the courts, or in the recorder's office, on his crop and very often on his wagon, and his team, if he owns one, and sell him goods on that kind of credit; and then in the fall he will watch that man and watch him pretty close and try to get his money. Now, that ought not to be the case; we ought to build up the character and integrity of our people, and that is what our university people have to do, for a man's sense of honor is worth more than credit, and credit is worth more than land, and morality is worth more than all of the rest together; and we ought to do that.

Chairman WALSH. Do your banks have agents that loan to tenants on chattel mortgages?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. If they do, I am not acquainted with that phase of the business.

Chairman WALSH. What is the average price of land in your county?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Well, I would say from $75 to $150 an acre—I would say about $100 an acre.

Chairman WALSH. How much land can a one-team tenant farmer farm? How much can he farm in your country?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Of course that varies from nothing to 50 acres; some of them would not cultivate 1 acre right.

Chairman WALSH. Could we strike an average, Colonel, based on the experience in your county? That is, take the average land and the average tenant farmer? So that we might make it as definite as we could.

Col. KIRKPATRICK. And with an average crop?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Col. KIRKPATRICK. I would say about 30 acres.

Chairman WALSH. Now, with all those same averages, what would his income be, the tenant farmer's income?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Well, according to his skill as a farmer, and his knowledge of farming, it would probably average about $300 or $500 a year; I think the average would be close to $300, taking one year after another.

Chairman WALSH. Would that involve the labor of any member of the family other than the man himself?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. If he had a family, it would.

Chairman WALSH. They all work at it, do they?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Yes; they about all work at it.

Chairman WALSH. Describe the customary rental contracts in your part of the State.

Col. KIRKPATRICK. The customary rental contract in my part of the State is a verbal contract. I have a man that I have never had a written contract with and he has rented 28 years from me, always on verbal contract. It is understood that he must pay one-third of the corn and one-fourth of the cotton. In 1911 there was neither one, neither corn nor cotton, and some years he makes a moderately good crop and could make twice as much if he understood farming; he could make twice or three times as much if he understood farming, but he is old and we can not teach him, and we are not trying to; we are trying to teach the boys.

Chairman WALSH. Have you observed anything typical with reference to the legal status of that class of tenant farmers that do not have written contracts, when disagreements arise between the landlord and tenant? Is he in a position where he can enforce whatever rights he has at law? I mean economically?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. I have not had much experience of late years. The last time I was in the court trying to get money from a man that had walked off with it, the other fellow sued me first and got a judgment, and I had to pay the costs; and I never have gone back to court any more.

Chairman WALSH. Is there much litigation of that kind in your county?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. I do not think there is much now. It has generally all gone one way; the lawyers generally get all the profit there is, and let the other fellows go without any.

Chairman WALSH. So, as I take it, then, there is no tendency on the part either of the landlord or the tenant to go to court?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. No, no; not with anyone that has any wisdom whatever.

Chairman WALSH. Is there any difference, would you say, in the status of the landlord as compared with the tenant in litigation growing out of these tenant contracts?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. I would rather be the tenant.

Chairman WALSH. Are such matters usually submitted to juries?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Are the juries in part—do they consist of tenant farmers?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Frequently they do, but more often they do not. They often pick up men around town. These fellows who have retired and gone to town.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would give us any observation you might have with regard to housing conditions in your county.

Col. KIRKPATRICK. The housing conditions are not as good as they ought to be and could be. I do not blame anybody particularly for it; it comes back to the general proposition that we must learn to handle and manipulate our soil more profitably. The landlords seem to do as much as seems their part and the tenants seem to do as much as seems to be their part. I do not charge this condition up to either side; I think we are all to blame; I put myself in there; we are all to blame for it. They are not housed as they ought to be. They are not treated as they ought to be. The renters do not treat the landlords as they ought to, and we, on the other hand, do not behave as we ought to, one toward the other; there is not enough of that fraternal regard each for the other; there is not enough of humanity among us; we have not enough of character. We could easily increase the housing facilities if we could only get together and work together and sympathize more with each other than we do: The tenant is not close enough to the landlord, and the landlord is not close enough to the tenant. And it is not only so with regard to the houses, but as to the schoolhouses and the church houses.

Chairman WALSH. I was going to come to that, Colonel. Please be kind enough to give the commission, for our record, the educational and social environment in your county.

Col. KIRKPATRICK. None of them are good enough, and that is chargeable to the same original proposition that we do not study each other's interest enough; we do not levy taxes enough, and yet it looks like a great many are taxed beyond their ability to pay. We do not get enough money to build good roads. We ought to have had roads in our county 50 years ago, and if we could have had them 50 years ago we would perhaps be the richest county in the State to-day. The roads are not good to travel on; they wear the wagons and teams and harness out and they lose their time coming and going, and the children can not go to school, and the people can not go to church and can not go for the doctor, and the doctor can not come when he is wanted, and they can not go to market when the market suits. Our roads are deficient, the schools are deficient, and the homes are deficient. We have not enough furniture, we have not enough paintings on the walls, nor enough instruments, and we have not enough books.

Chairman WALSH. What effect have you observed, Colonel, if any, that the class of men who have moved from the farms to the cities, such as you have described, and the tenants had upon purely public questions, such as the question of taxation? Is there any division among them? Do the men that go to the cities vote for taxes for facilities such as you described, or do they oppose them? Do the tenant farmers vote freely for taxation that might benefit them in the way you describe, or do they vote against them, or is there any influence brought to bear of one side against the other?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. That is a very important and comprehensive question, and I would answer it in this way: A few years ago the renter voted against taxes for good roads and for better schools and combining schools and getting graded schools; they voted against all taxation like that, and I account for it because of the fact that the large landholders told them that if they voted for this or that tax—they were free to vote either way—but to remember if it carried that they would want another renter. That was a common assertion a few years ago. In other words, they said: "If you don't vote like I want you to vote, you get out," and the renter voted very generally as he wanted them to; and we could not build roads or schoolhouses and could not improve at all. But of late years that sentiment has changed, and that is a good omen for the future. The same landlord now wants them to vote for roads; he wants them to vote for bonds; he wants them to vote for levies of taxation for schoolhouses; and they are building those roads and they are building those schoolhouses and they are improving the country where a few years ago they entirely objected to it.

Chairman WALSH. Do you think that comes from what might be called a changed attitude of mind and heart, or from the idea that it is economically better for them to have the country improved through this system?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. I think it comes from both, because they think it is inevitable and they had better yield now gracefully than later; and I think a great many are prompted by their hearts and minds and love of humanity, and all that.

Chairman WALSH. It might be interesting to know what position the country preacher occupies with relation to the tenant farmer. Do they preach economics like they do in some other places? Do they preach the necessity of education and of a man standing upon his own footing, as he ought in a democratic community, or do they take any part in this upward social and economic tendency?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. They are growing rapidly into that sentiment; they are changing. I remember when a preacher dare not touch on it for fear that he would not hold his position; but I believe that if they had spoken out years ago they could have held their positions, but they were afraid to and did not. But of late years I have noticed a tendency to preach from the pulpit industrial education and domestic improvement and betterment and the building of homes and better conditions about the homes. Preachers are laboring more along that line than I ever knew them to do before, and it is a good sign for the future. The teachers are doing the same thing in teaching the children to better their conditions of study and effort.

Chairman WALSH. Have you observed anything with regard to the extent of what might be called the social-center system? You noticed, I suppose, the suggestion made a while ago by Mr. Holman that there was a man from the university making a study of civic and social centers.

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Yes; I have noticed a tendency in later years in that direction, but I do not see numerous examples; not as many as I had hoped to see.

Chairman WALSH. Do you think that that is a way for people to get together and learn democratically to do for themselves?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Yes, sir; I think so; decidedly, Mr. Chairman; they ought to meet on every possible occasion. I believe our church meetings ought to be converted largely into industrial meetings. I believe there ought to be more preached from the pulpit, more talk from the teacher's standpoint, and I think our editors, our public press, ought to elaborate and magnify and emphasize that idea of preaching to the people and teaching them how to improve themselves while here and to make themselves a heaven on earth and not wait for the other heaven above.

Chairman WALSH. Would you, Colonel, suggest any constructive action that might be taken, either by the State or the Nation, toward working up to these ideals you have mentioned, outside, of course, of the hearts and minds of the people and their representatives?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. I think that the general system applicable to all industry, not only to farming, but to manufacturing, and to a great many industries—I think a general system could be adopted wherein we would all cooperate, where the banker would unite with the merchant and the merchant would unite with the producer and the producer would unite with the railroad man and the manufacturer, and organize one general system so that every man would be insured his regular and reasonable reward for his labor and so there would be no overplus, or, if there was an overplus, it would be cared for, and there would be a proper distribution. And if there was a failure in any part of the great economic system then the other divisions would come to the rescue of that part that failed. For instance, in 1911, when we failed here entirely to produce any crop, the merchants and the bankers and the rich men of the country generally came to the rescue of the poor and tided them over and kept them encouraged to go on and plan another crop. I think if some great calamity like this great war should come and destroy the value of our cotton, I think the moneyed people should come to their rescue, and I think the bankers and merchants were shortsighted about that. We never had an experience like that before, and if we had been well organized in sympathy and actually, we could have come to the aid of the people who had that cotton thrown on the market at a ruinous price, and they could have held the cotton until they could get reasonable prices without having to sacrifice it. And we could bring about a system of that kind, if our hearts and minds were right, wherein such extreme cases as that could be cared for, and it ought to be done.

Chairman WALSH. Generally speaking, Colonel, that would draw a line between an economic or industrial system organized simply for profit and one that was organized for the social welfare of mankind, as you might say.

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Yes, it would; and that ought to be done.

Chairman WALSH. And an application of the latter is desirable?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Yes; it certainly is.

Chairman WALSH. It does not work out to the advantage of mankind that the entire point should be addressed toward profit for the individual?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Yes, sir; I think you are right. We ought to take that thing home to our hearts and minds, and we ought to consider the welfare of everybody, the high and the low, the rich and the poor, the white and the black and the red, and every other class of mankind.

Chairman WALSH. Is there anything else, Colonel, that you think of that you think might aid us in what we are doing here, having had the outline about which you have been interrogated? If so, we would be glad to hear any statement or suggestions you have to make.

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to occupy the time of the commission unnecessarily; I have been here a long time and possibly may have occupied more time than I should.

Chairman WALSH. I think not.

Col. KIRKPATRICK. I want to emphasize this thought, that our hopes in the future depend more on the right training of the minds of the young folks, of the young people; it depends more upon the young than upon the older classes of mankind. I notice that, and I am one of the old ones, they think they know all there is to be known, and do not want to learn anything else, but the young people are wiser than that. They know there are things that have never been known or discovered yet, and we are trying to impress their minds and get them started right so they will go more nearly right than we have done.

If you will excuse me, I will say still more—that we have never been acquainted with ourselves, and this war has brought it home to us that we have never known who we were; we do not know who we are to-day. We are savages and barbarians, not civilized people, because they over there are our kind, they are our relatives and our class, and they are acting as savages and barbarians and uncivilized across the water. They are just as good people as we are, and we might come to the point where we would do the same as they are doing, and we want to avoid any such cataclysm as that; we want to avoid any possibility of getting into any such tangle as our friends have gotten into across the water. They have done it because they worshiped things that belonged to this life and not the other things; they have sought avenues of trade and to increase their profit and wealth and riches and such things as relate to this life, and they have not sought in proper volume or in proper degree those things that pertain to our higher welfare than that of gold and silver and material wealth. They have forgotten the principles of the broad law that was given down to us from the Wise One above; they have read the wrong thing out of the Bible; they have not read the Bible right; and we want to teach our children to read the Bible right; we want to teach our children to read history right, the history of the human race, and if we do they will not get into any such tangle as that; and we can do that through such meetings, in getting together and stating the knowledge they have to each other, and in putting their experiences in such form that other people can read it and understand it, and in that way arrive at a knowledge of who they are; we do not know who we are yet.

Chairman WALSH. Mrs. Harriman says she would like to ask you a question.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. I want to ask you what is the difference, if any, in the cash prices and credit prices charged by merchants?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Well, now, the credit price—30 days and cash are very close together. As for these long credits of six months, I am not posted because I have never indulged in them. But this is what I have been told, that it runs from 10 per cent up; I don't know how far up.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. And for 30 days?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. For 30 days about the same as cash. Sometimes they will discount 2 per cent for cash. I have never been able to discount my bills.

Chairman WALSH. Thank you, Col. Kirkpatrick; that is all.

May I make a little announcement? This is coming to the close of quite an excursion, as you ladies and gentleman know, throughout the country, and we are strangers here as in every place. We have been compelled to establish certain rules. I do not know whether they would be so necessary here as elsewhere, but a great deal of our work has been in the realm of very acute controversy, and what would please one portion of the public that is present might greatly displease the other, so we have had to make it a rule to ask the people who attend our meetings to please not to give audible expression to their feelings, no matter how much they may like it—not to laugh out loud or applaud—or however much they may dislike it to give no sign of disapproval. We have been in the most acute controversies, as, for instance, at Paterson, N. J., and in California and other places, and our audiences have always been with us in that position. So I am going to ask you to apply that rule here. Kindly do not give audible expression of your feelings no matter what they may be, and that will assist us very greatly in our work.

A VOICE IN THE AUDIENCE. I wish you would ask Col. Kirkpatrick there what is the customary rent given here and what the landlord has to furnish, so as to get it in the record.

Chairman WALSH. Will you please do that, Col. Kirkpatrick? You have heard the question: What is the customary rental and what does the landlord have to furnish and what does the tenant furnish, as a general thing, in this portion of the country?

Col. KIRKPATRICK. Well, as a general rule, it is hard to say. I know there are special cases, and they are extreme. Now, some landlords will charge a third of the grain and a fourth of the cotton; and it is then reputed that they will also charge what they call a bonus, so much an acre over and above the third and the fourth, especially where the land lies convenient to market or lies convenient to school or to a fine road, or where it is extra rich, or where there is some special value in the land, he will charge a bonus in addition to the land.

And then, again, on the other hand, I have known cases where landlords would furnish a pasture for the tenant. I know some cases where they furnished one-third of the land they rented to the renter for pasturage, and they will furnish a barn and house, a cistern, a well, and good fences, and give them the right to a piece of ground for an orchard and for a garden and permit them to grow animals, horses, cattle, hogs, and domestic fowls, and take no part of the animals nor of the fowls, nor of those things, nor of the garden, either; let them have them free. I know cases where landlords do that. However, I know of cases where landlords have rented to renters just as a renter wanted it, whether for cash or part of the crop, and when it was for cash and the crop did not amount to much the landlords have charged the cash and taken part of the crop; and cases where the crop was very large and the rent amounted to $10 or $15 or $20, I have known the landlords to change it and take the $5 and not charge him the third and the fourth, but make those concessions. I have known cases of that kind. These are special cases, and they do not apply to the average case. Now, the average landlord, in my estimation, does just about as much to help the tenant along as the average tenant does to help the landlord along. That is the way I size it up. It is come and cut and cut and come and go, and it is a hard race between the two. Is that satisfactory?

Chairman WALSH. What does that indicate to your mind? I don't want to delay you, but there is one other question as to whether or not any feeling is growing up more acute now than it has been in the past as to the relations between the two. I did not quite get the meaning. You said it was cut and come on the one side and cut and come on the other side, and to go, etc.

Col. KIRKPATRICK. I regret to say that among a part of the renting population the tendency is not the best with reference to the relationship between the landholder and the tenant, on the one hand, and, on the other hand, of the tenant toward the landholder. It is not the best, like it ought to be; but I think it is improving. I think it is improving every day, and that we are getting over the rough places more and more all the time. There has been a tendency setting in in a very dangerous direction. Where a man is disposed to create trouble he can very easily organize trouble between the two classes, while there ought to be the closest friendship in the world; because I think a man who rents of the other is a good friend to the other, and the man who rents to the other ought to be a good friend to that tenant. I believe that labor ought to be the best friend to the employer, and I believe that the employer ought to be the best friend to the laborer. I think they ought to be the best friends in the world.

Chairman WALSH. Thank you, Col. Kirkpatrick. You will be finally excused. Mr. Le Sueur.

TESTIMONY OF MR. ARTHUR LE SUEUR.

Chairman WALSH. What is your name?

Mr. LE SUEUR. Arthur Le Sueur.

Chairman WALSH. Where do you reside?

Mr. LE SUEUR. At present at Fort Scott, Kans.; recently from North Dakota.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you resided at Fort Scott, Kans.?

Mr. LE SUEUR. Since last July.

Chairman WALSH. What is your business, please, or profession?

Mr. LE SUEUR. I hardly know how to answer that, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. As I asked the former witness, will you kindly sketch your business or public activity since you have been in business life, so that we may get the angle from which you speak and your point of observation?

Mr. LE SUEUR. To make it comprehensive and brief, at 15 years of age I was a farm hand; at 18 in the lumber woods, on the river, working at sawmills, on railroads, and other work of that kind. At 24 I owned a farm.

Chairman WALSH. Whereabouts?

Mr. LE SUEUR. In North Dakota.

Chairman WALSH. How large?

Mr. LE SUEUR. One hundred and sixty acres. I managed to pay the interest on the purchase price during a period of 4 years and reduced the principal some $2,000. I did that through having what might be aptly termed a side-line. I ran a threshing rig for the neighbors. At the end of the 4-year period I quit farming by realizing on the size of the equity I had created in the land and commenced to study law, was admitted to practice, and practiced for 10 years.

Chairman WALSH. Where did you practice?

Mr. LE SUEUR. In North Dakota.

Chairman WALSH. What place in North Dakota?

Mr. LE SUEUR. Minot, N. Dak.

Chairman WALSH. What sort of a country is that? What do they raise there?

Mr. LE SUEUR. Wheat is the staple; flax comes next and stock next.

Chairman WALSH. Proceed, please.

Mr. LE SUEUR. After practicing law a few years I was able to engage in the banking business, and am still engaged in it to-day.

Chairman WALSH. At what point?

Mr. LE SUEUR. Same town.

Chairman WALSH. Minot?

Mr. LE SUEUR. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What is your business at the present time at Fort Scott, Kans.?

Mr. LE SUEUR. At the present time I occupy the position of vice president and dean of the law department of a college established there during the past year.

Chairman WALSH. What is the name of the college?

Mr. LE SUEUR. The Peoples College.

Chairman WALSH. And what, briefly stated, is your proposition of education, if it differs from the other colleges and universities of the country.

Mr. LE SUEUR. The prime difference consists in this: We conceive the fault of education as our system promulgates it to-day in the United States to lie in the viewpoint; that is to say, the psychology of education in the practical line of the schools is to educate the ambitious to acquire; the prime thing in life that is inculcated in the children is to follow the example of those who have been able to amass fortunes; that is to say, those are the ones who are held up as heroes and as worthy examples to follow.

This college that is established at Fort Scott has a different viewpoint. It aims to inculcate the idea that the one most dishonorable thing in life is parasitism—the will to live on the labor of another. That is the fundamental difference. We aim to establish there a vocational training along with cultural training in order to offset the efforts which we believe to be now well advanced in the United States to establish approximately the German training-school system in the United States. We aim to offset that influence. As we understand the problem it is this: With the corporation schools that are in operation in the United States the practice is, in substance, that Tom works in the factory this week while Bill is in school; and Bill goes out of the school next week and goes into the factory, while Tom comes out of the factory and goes into the school. The result of that, if it is permitted to be developed without having proper cultural training, will be that all organized labor in the United States will be placed upon exactly the same plane as unskilled labor is to-day, because organized skilled labor can not survive in places where it is in competition with unorganized skilled labor, and labor unemployed soon loses organization. We aim to prevent that by making a practical demonstration of cultural and vocational training and bringing the student in touch with the workers' viewpoint, showing the desirability of inculcating the viewpoint of the honorableness of service and the dishonorableness of living upon the labor of others without contributing to the welfare of society.

Chairman WALSH. Now, have you made any study of the land question?

Mr. LE SUEUR. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. From what sources have you attempted to derive your information; that is, separating them, if you can, into the practical and the educational or scholarly? Did you derive any of it from the condition of agriculture in the Northern States and in the places where you have lived; and if so, how much of it and what you have derived from your studies?

Mr. LE SUEUR. Out of my actual experience on the land, first, as a farm hand, and second, as a farmer, I did learn one thing that has proved to be of tremendous value, and that is that I did not have the mental caliber necessary to the successful operation of a farm under the present system, and I knew enough to leave it. I did learn that. Now, the prime reason—I think I also know what that is, that so many fail on the farms. There are many reasons, psychological, mental, intellectual, and educational; but the prime reason of these frequent failures is economic.

Chairman WALSH. Could we ask you to present in as concise form as possible, Mr. Le Sueur, what you believe to be the fundamental and underlying question with reference to the land problem, if you might put it that way, that would prevent people deriving a proper living from it?

Mr. LE SUEUR. The fundamental problem that is presented there is not wholly the question of the ownership of land. While normally ownership and control abide together, and that is the rule, yet when a crop is severed from the land the ownership of it, under our system, leaves the producer so rapidly that any essential control over it is wanting. It is a part of the land until it is severed, and when it is severed he loses control immediately along with the ownership.

Chairman WALSH. That is, with the product, you mean—the crops?

Mr. LE SUEUR. The product. There has been more or less misconception about the desirability of the ownership of land. Now, I think it would clear the atmosphere somewhat to put it this way, that no farmer wants to own land simply for the privilege of paying taxes on it, but he wants it for the privilege of controlling the products of the soil. No one would desire more than nice home grounds around his home were it not for the fact that they need more ground than that for the primary purposes of producing usable wealth. That is the purpose.

Now, under our system of marketing and finance farmers are as a class, as a rule, and from what I have heard here it is true both North and South, are unable to control the product of the land. They do not control it. They do not control the price. Nor do they control the price of the things they must have in order to apply their labor to the natural resources—which is the only chemistry that will produce wealth for others.

Now, then, to put the matter very briefly, I conceive the best way to determine where this leak actually exists is to find out to-day who has the product of the land. There are practically untold millions of wealth that have been produced on the farms of the United States; and it seems to me the first thing we should do is to find out who has that and where it has gone. If we can determine that fact it will be much easier to determine how it went there, and we can then plan how to stop the leak. I therefore beg leave to present to this honorable commission a few figures in a very short and brief way, but they appeal to me as going to the point. I quote now from two sources of authority. One is from the 1912 report of the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States and the other is from the Commercial and Financial Chronicle of New York, a financial paper of wide standing; and the members of the commission can readily verify this, if they deem it important, by perhaps more authentic figures, although these are official and semi-official.

A comparison of the average annual increase of the resources of the reporting banks with the total cotton crop of the United States for 1904, taking the figures from the Financial Chronicle for the cotton crop and taking the figures for the increased resources of the banks from the report of the Comptroller of the Currency shows this: The cotton crop for 1914 is there estimated at 14,609,968 bales of cotton. The annual average increase of the resources of the reporting banks in the United States covering the four-year period between 1908 and 1912, inclusive, is $1,850,808,329.50.

Taking the same figures from the report of the Comptroller of the Currency and comparing them with the reports of the Department of Agriculture at Washington, we find that the total wheat crop of the United States for the year 1914, which, by the way, is the largest wheat crop ever reported by that department, to be—and to show you how these figures run, the 1912 report of the Comptroller of the Currency says that the increased resources of the banks which reported for the four years from 1908 to 1912, inclusive, is $5,403,233,318, and dividing this by 4 gives us a total which I have just given you. Now, then, the Department of Agriculture reported the wheat crop of 1914 to be 911,000,000 bushels for the United States. Now, putting the value of that a $1 a bushel, which is much in advance of the average price for a series of years, we get $911,000,000 for the total value of the wheat crop of the United States. That leaves a difference between the increase in the resources of the reporting banks of the United States and the total value of the wheat crop for 1914 of $439,808,329.50 in favor of the banks as against the total amount of the wheat crop at a dollar a bushel.

Making that same comparison now with cotton we find that figuring cotton at much more than the average price during 1914, putting it at $60 per bale, it amounts in round figures to $876,598,980, which, compared with the average amount of the annual increase in the same period of the banks, remembering at the same time that there are approximately 3,000 banks that did not make returns or report to the department of the comptroller and who also increased their resources during that same period, we find, then, comparing the whole matter by and large, wheat and cotton with the average annual increase of bank resources during the four years, that in round figures the annual increase of the resources of the banks of the United States, although something like 3,000 banks did not report, is equal to the total of the 1914 cotton crop and one-half of the total of the 1914 wheat crop. This, as I say, is figuring the high price of $60 a bale for cotton and $1 a bushel for wheat.

Now, then, if the commission will just bear in mind the infinitely small number of people engaged in banking and the comfortable salaries that are drawn by bankers and bank officials and bank employees compared with the niggardly, slavish incomes to millions of farmers from whom the bulk of these resources have been drawn in final analysis, you will be able to come to some understanding of the class spirit that is to-day permeating the entire agricultural world of the United States. There is where it is. Its foundations are there. It comes from the inherent inequality that exists between the two classes. There is an infinitely small number of bankers as compared with the tremendously large number of farmers, and yet those are official figures. Those figures show where the produce goes from the farmers and ought to be the key to us to determine whither we should look to stop the leak. For, believe me, when that leak is stopped there will be the most stupendous immigration of bankers back to the farm that this world has ever witnessed.

The secret of the bankers' satisfaction with the bankers' situation, with things as they are, lies in the following—and I know it for a fact, for I am in the banking business and am there to stay as long as the farmers see fit to uphold the private banking system. I am going to be at that end of it inasmuch as I have learned the force of the kick at the other end of the mortgage and I will not abide there. I do that simply for the reason that the highest duty of any human being in the existing state of human affairs is to his own family, to provide food and clothing and education and entertainment to his own. My oldest boy will graduate in electrical engineering from a good school this year at the age of 23; but I will say that though he is thoroughly equipped, if he did not have a banker dad to assist him that boy would be a tramp in 30 days after he leaves school.

Chairman WALSH. Why do you say that?

Mr. LE SUEUR. He has searched during the last six months for employment. He is skilled. He is at the very top of his class. Yet there is no place for that boy in the community to fit into and earn his living to-day. Therefore, there is nothing but migratory labor of the most unstable character to which he can look toward making a living if he was not able to fall back on ulterior assistance.

I wish, however, that no one, and most of all the commissioners, will believe for a minute that there is anything of class hatred in this position which I outline here. Nothing could be further from the truth. There is no psychological factor that is of more detriment to a clear solution of the problems the people of the United States to-day are facing than class hatred. Class consciousness is an entirely different matter. It develops and denotes knowledge. Class hatred denotes ignorance. There is no need for hatred if we are to peaceably solve these problems as they ought to be solved. It is not class hatred, but class understanding that will solve them.

Another thing that is not generally understood and which is of vital importance to farmers, though it does not make much difference to the bankers whether it be understood or not as long as society allows it to exist; but it is vital to the farmers, and that is the character of the transactions that are carried on in banking. Most people, when they go to a bank and leave their promissory note, go away with the impression that they have borrowed actual money, and that actual bona fide money has been loaned by the bank. In one sense this is correct. A service has been rendered by the bank, but trivial compared with the charge made for the service. I mean this: I go to a bank, as I did many times, for I have had experience on both sides of the bank doors, and I leave my promissory note for a thousand dollars, secured or unsecured, it makes no difference as to collateral, and I do not carry away currency, neither gold nor silver nor legal tender, nor any other kind of money. I carry away a check book and a deposit book showing I have to my credit in the bank $1,000. I use instead of cash the checks. It is much more convenient than cash, and it is almost universally used to-day. I would like to emphasize that point. The total bank clearings in the United States to-day, according to the best authorities that I have been able to discover, clear annually through the regular clearing houses $163,000,000,000, a sum so vast that it staggers even imagination. The total amount of cash in circulation during that same period, if you limit it to legal tender, has never equaled $1,000,000,000. Now, then, the business of the country has not been done with cash, but has been done with the commercialization of credit of the communities in which the banks exist. What did the bank do when I left my note? It made an entry upon the books showing I had $1,000 to my credit. It increased its liabilities $1,000 on the books showing that, and it is entitled to draw interest on the note at 10 or 12 per cent, or whatever the rate was. There never was a dollar of money involved in that transaction. The checks which I issued to pay the bills that I wanted to pay as the reason for making that loan and which I paid by check went through the local clearing house, which is not usually one of the clearing houses I have mentioned at all, but is cleared between the banks themselves, offsetting similar transactions on different sides of the books, no money being involved; or else it went through the clearing house at the Twin Cities from North Dakota, and there was cleared without the payment of money. Now, that is what I mean by commercialized credit of the community by the banks. They do that. The banks do not extend their own credit to anybody else, but they have commercialized other people's credit. This applies to the notes of the merchants, the notes of the landlords, the notes of tenants. Those notes are used by the banks as the basis on which the bank draws interest. The banks are the only institutions in the world that draw interest on their own debts instead of paying interest on them; and the way they do that is through this credit system. And we are squarely and solidly upon a credit system in the United States. We can not do business in any other way. We have no other facilities, no other means for doing business; and we must do it on credit. It is all based on the check and deposit system.

I might add right there that some people have run away with the idea that this new Federal reserve act is going to be of wonderful assistance to the financial system of the country, and I want to call attention to just one thing in connection with that, and that is that the new Federal reserve act strengthens the banks, but it does not lift so much as one ounce of the burden which rests upon the interest-paying members of the community, which number practically the entire people of the United States. It relieves them not one solitary whit. It does protect the banks in their position and strengthens them; and that is all.

If we remember the explanation I have just given of the function which the banks perform of commercializing credit, it will be found to be the key to the entire situation. It is a bookkeeping proposition.

To talk constructively for a moment I might say that a public bank is a step in the right direction toward solving both the problems of the landlord and the problems of the tenant. Looking at these figures it seems to me that they throw some light on the question of why it is they have bad homes to live in and the landlords live in none too good at that. They do not build very good homes for the tenant. It is the same question that is involved in the question of land ownership. The reason why tenantry is growing as it is in North Dakota—for this tenant problem is not a problem local to Texas; it is one that is universal throughout the Northwestern States, to my own personal knowledge—is because of the fact that before the intending home and land owner is able to connect up with the natural resources from which to produce wealth he must first pay tribute to this financial system whose increased resources have, in one year, equaled one of the great staples of the United States and half of the other great staple for the trifling services for which the bankers receive good salaries in addition to all these figures, for these figures are net. So that land ownership does not rest entirely upon the question of title, but it depends also on the question of how the farmer is allowed to connect up with the resources and the produce which his labor brings forth through its application to the soil. The banking system is the most fundamental of all the things that enter into that relationship. Of course we have watered stock in railways and all these other things that many of us holler about in this country, but when we get right back to general principles the institution which walks off with the lion's share is the institution I am talking about—the banking system of the United States. I have told you why I am in the banking business and why I propose to stay there as long as the system is allowed to exist. I would like to see a change and am ready to vote for a change.

Now, then, there are two things which stand in the way of the farmers getting on in the economic field to cooperatively remedy this situation for themselves; and nothing is more certain to my mind than this one fact that when these things are remedied it will be the farmers and the wage workers themselves who apply the remedy. Nobody else will, not even the best intentioned bankers or legislators will ever in the world remedy that situation until the farmers and the workers themselves organize and cooperatively remedy it. They must do it or it will never be done. The economic urge, or interest, is too strong to permit that; it is too strong even on the part of philanthropists who are in the favorable position themselves to compel them to come down after their sleep to remedy these things for the under dog. They can not do it in spite of their best intentions. They can not do it. It must be remedied by the under dog himself developing a backbone.

The things which stand in the way then, primarily, of farmers cooperatively acting to remedy this situation are an unjust credit system, as I have explained, and restrictive laws which prevent the farmers from cooperatively acting together successfully. There are two prime elements which make for the failure of farmers' cooperative organizations; one is that we have seen that there is a want of that broad individual education that will enable the farmers to realize that the only course to pursue is to allow everybody all the rights which they claim for themselves. Another element that results in farmers' cooperative organizations many times blowing up is that there is somebody who is a disturbing factor in them, either a man or a woman, who does not agree with the majority and would rather ruin than to allow things to go forward unless they are allowed to rule.

The prime and fundamental cause of the failure of farm cooperation, whether in the marketing or purchasing, or the bettering of conditions in farm operations, lies not there, however, but in the restrictive laws which prevent successful farm cooperation. I mean by that this: All business, farming and all, must be done on credit; there is no other way to do it to-day because of habit, and we are all creatures of habit; there is no way to do it unless it is done on credit. The farmers of every State in the Union have the strongest credit of any class; it is more stable than that of any corporation or trust, no matter what, and they are to-day, by legal restriction, prohibited from using that credit.

If your honors will permit me, I will illustrate what I mean by two concrete examples from the northern country, but which apply with equal force in Texas, because the problems are the same here as at my home. In North Dakota the hail insurance companies have charged 65 cents per acre premium. The farmers need hail insurance there, and things ran along that way for many years. Several mutual hail insurance companies were organized by the farmers. There is only 1 of the 60 or 70 companies that started that has survived, and they went on a strictly capitalistic basis for making profit for those on the inside of the cooperative concern and charged farmers the same rates as the old-line companies did, and they have survived and are a large concern to-day; but they brought no relief to the farmers because their rates are the same as the old-line companies.

But six or seven years ago in North Dakota they passed a State hail insurance law which compelled farmers to pay cash in advance for that insurance, but cut the rate from 65 cents to 30 cents per acre, which was a substantial cut, but the cash payment of the premium made it almost impossible for the farmer to get his insurance because of the fact that it came at a time when the farmers, as a class, have no money. They are one-crop farmers there, as you are down here, as I understand, and they needed the insurance just when they could not pay for it. You will say that the farmer, if he had good credit, ought to be able to go to his bank and get money for that, but this is how it was done. The farmer would go to the bank, and I have seen it myself, and say, "I want to borrow $75; I want some hail insurance, and I have to have money to get the State hail insurance," and that is less than one-half of the other, and the banker would say, "I will tell you, Sam, how this is, we have our customers to take care of, and we have to keep money here for them, because they are likely to call for it at any time, and we have to pay it when they come for it," and that is true. "If it was some small loan to be paid back in a short time, we might let you have it; but we can not let you have it until fall." And the farmer goes out of the bank and when he is unhitching his team the banker comes to the window and crooks his finger at him and he goes back in. I never saw a farmer yet that didn't go back when the banker did that. And the banker says, "I have been thinking that over, Sam, and I think I have found a way to give you that hail insurance." The farmer says, "I must have it, if I can get it." The banker says, "We will fix you up; we can not give you the money, but we are agents for the St. Paul Fire & Marine Insurance Co., and we will insure you with them and take your note for for the premium, and we will make the company, which is a big, strong company, carry you until fall, and it won't take any money now, and it will protect you in that way." Sam realizes by this time that he must do that or go without the premium, and we will make the company, which is a big, strong company, and takes 12 per cent interest on the note and never invests a dollar. And all he does is to keep the books, and all that consists of is making one entry when he takes out the insurance and another entry in the fall, and that is the way the farmer is treated. So the 30-cent hail insurance in North Dakota has not been an unqualified success, by any means.

I should add that the State hail insurance provides for a maximum damage of $8 an acre, while the old-line company policies provide for $10 an acre. According to the commissioner of insurance of North Dakota, some of the old-line companies paid as little as 17 cents back on the insurance; the State insurance companies have paid back either 43 or 47 cents; nearly 50 per cent of the State insurance was paid back in damages. The State insurance, however, has not paid quite in full, while the old-line companies pay in full, or they are not allowed to operate.

Across the line, in Saskatchewan, where those despicable foreigners live and make their homes, many of them being Yankees, they have the same conditions as in North Dakota. They have the same climatic conditions, the same staple crops, and the same dangers from hail, and they need the same protection. There, three years ago, in January, the legislature of the Provinces passed a general law permitting the counties of their Province to hold a referendum to determine by popular vote whether they would adopt municipal hail insurance or not. The act was to become operative after 25 counties had adopted that. That act has been in operation for two years now, and the general provisions of it are that when 25 counties have adopted the act by referendum vote, those counties which have adopted it have municipal hail insurance. The general law restricted that tax to 4 cents per acre to cover the damages which they suffered from hail, and limited the payment of damages to $4 per acre. The first year, during the operation of this law, they paid the losses in full, at 4 cents per acre premium and $4 per acre. The second year's operation they paid the losses in full, without raising the tax, up to $5 an acre, at 4 cents per acre.

The secret of that lies in this fact that the farmers were by that general law permitted to utilize their collective credit and to turn that to the service of the people instead of the exploiting class that rules over them.

The 4 cents per acre was collected by the same people who collected the other taxes, and it did not cost any more to collect that additional 4 cents per acre. The machinery was there and used for that purpose, and the only added functionary was the insurance commissioner, and his salary did not make much difference distributed among the 25 counties. The result there was that out of every dollar paid in 92 cents was paid back in insurance the first year, and the second year 97½ cents out of each dollar was paid back to the farmers in payment of their losses. Their program for the next year raises the maximum damage without raising the tax and paying in full.

That is an example of the application of common sense and using the power of the State as the servant of the people instead of a bunch of politicians and lawyers who usually compose the legislature.

That distinction is one that can be carried into all of the departments of farm cooperative life. The farmers have the most tremendous credit of any class of people on earth if permitted to use it. I think you will find in every State a law restricting farmers to taxing themselves only for schools and roads, and it is well that they are allowed to tax themselves for schools, but they are limited in that to a certain proportion of the property.

What farmers need is to have those restrictive laws put out of the way so that they may use their collective credit with the power of the law behind them. The American people and all civilized people are law-abiding and believe in law and order and government as a system and anything that has behind it the sanction of the law; they will stand almost interminable abuses before they overthrow it if it comes in the name of the law and has any fairness or justice behind it. Now, if the farmers as a class were able to eliminate those legal restrictions which prevent them from using their taxing power, then they would get on an even footing with the concerns with which they must compete. It is like a man being held up and robbed by a highwayman. Of course, in the other case it is absolutely legal, but nevertheless they take the goods, and the result to the person is the same whether he is robbed in that way or by the highwayman—he is still broke. The farmers should be entitled to have the benefit and advantage of cooperative credit, with the sanction of the State behind it, instead of being restricted from doing things done every day by other classes or divisions of classes in the United States. It is not a question of politics, although politics enter into it; it is purely an economic question, and it is an economic question to those of us who have been on the firing line of the close struggle that exists between the farmers and those exploiting them that absolutely tears at the very heartstrings of humanity, when we see in the communities scattered all through the agricultural territory of the United States the very backbone of the people, those from whom we must recruit the very highest and best type of human citizenship in the United States, we find them living in conditions that would be a disgrace to a hog in many cases, living without opportunity for mental development, living without any chance for enjoyment. What wonder that, as Col. Kirkpatrick says, when they do break loose they get a little crazy. They do that because they do not have enough of entertainment and enjoyment. The only enjoyment they can have is in slavish toil.

I want to call your attention to one thing that I do not think will be presented by any other witness, that under our agricultural system in the United States we do one of the most heathenish things a nation could perpetrate.

Many of us oppose capital punishment for murderers and think that it is brutal, and I agree with them; yet at the same time do you know what we do to the mothers of the United States who live upon farms? We give them the same punishment that we do to the murderer; we condemn them to a life of servitude at hard labor without giving them any recompense, a life servitude at hard labor without a guaranty of enough to eat, which the convicted murderer has. Those are conditions that need a remedy.

We may talk about a revolutionary class struggle in the United States, and the terrible struggle that is going on between employer and employee. The farmers of the United States will stand a hundred times more persecution and injustice than wage earners before they start, but when they do it will take more than all of the lawyers and bankers in the United States to stand between them and their goal, and I hope I will not live to see it, when the farmers try to right the wrongs that exist to-day, and which they will do if they are not corrected by those in authority to-day. If they are denied that right the farmers of the United States when they move will not move with a covered wagon; they will not have their families with them when they move, but they will move so that institutions will go down like tenpins before them. They are suffering under the most damnable conditions from an economic standpoint to-day, and they are exploited by the bankers and trusts and wholesale houses. Perhaps I had better give you an experience that has come to my observation.

In North Dakota it is true that the wholesale houses own a heavy percentage of the retail houses, which are nothing but collecting agents for the wholesale houses, and the wholesale houses are thus able to control to a large degree the prices of their staples. This is the way that is handled.

The farmers do not patronize the banks when they need a loan and pay cash for their stuff. But they put a note up in the hands of the retail merchant, and they make many demands, the same as has been described by other witnesses here in the Texas proposition. Then the merchant goes to the bank and he deposits that note in the bank, and they indorse it to the bank, they extend the credit to the merchant. That carries part of the credit to the extending bank, as they call it, of the little bank. Then the wholesalers carry the rest of the credit until fall. Then that performance is duplicated from year to year and from time to time. The retail merchants do not get wealthy in North Dakota. The wholesalers use them merely as collecting agencies. They hold out a high hope to the little merchant who does business on credit; he is paying the price, but he never arrives. The wholesalers see to that. Then, again, by eliminating competition among the retail merchants, which, in a sense, is not a bad thing, they are able to control the price, and they compel the farming communities to meet their own terms on the staples which they must purchase.

Then there is absolute control of the selling price for the farm products controlled by this institution. That is the terminal elevator companies at Duluth and the Twin Cities and the buying companies scattered throughout North Dakota largely. There are a great many of those agencies of the terminal elevator companies. I would urge the commission, if it has the time, that some competent investigator be sent into the northwest territory to investigate the marketing conditions of grain. There is a gigantic field for investigation there. The bottom of it has never been really touched. The equity movement of North Dakota has failed to relieve this condition. That is, the American Society of Equity, the North Dakota Union, it has largely failed, because it has been unable to finance its propositions. I believe that if the farmers in the cotton countries this year had the money to hold the cotton that they would have been able to realize at least 50 per cent more out of the cotton crop if they had been able to have had the 2-cent money; that is, 2-cent annual interest charged for money to handle their crop. They would have realized at least 50 per cent more out of it. Then the thing that we need, we need the thing that great powerful Government of the United States can do, is to assist in clearing away these artificial restrictions that stand between the ultimate consumer, the farm products that he consumes and the farmer himself. What is needed is to see that the farmer who produces this stuff, who produces it by the actual application of human labor, secures the price which the consumer actually pays for that product less the legitimate charge going in between for actual services rendered. There are too many places where there are additions without actual service.

Just one particular proposition I would like to leave with this commission, and it is this: Our system of to-day is based upon this fact that everyone of us is striving to get much and to give little. That is the universal rule. We are all striving to get hold of all and striving to give very little. Now, what does that bring about? Prices are fixed upon commodities, by demand, we are told, by economists. I think in a degree they are right, but what is "demand"? Is it want? Is it the dire want of human beings for clothes that creates the demand for clothes? Because if that were the case all the clothing houses of the State of Texas, from what I have seen on the train coming up here, would be empty in 24 hours, if that were the case. It takes something else besides human want to create demand in that sense. It does take something else. Prices of commodities are fixed by the demand, but demand as a price fixer is the value of the scarce use. The very moment that you have any great amount of the use of a commodity the scarce use price is shot all to pieces. There is no price left. There is no price on air. We all use it. We all want it. There is a great demand for air, but there is no price attached to it. And the same thing will happen with commodities, if it is not the value of the scarce use then the price will no longer exist. Therefore, what does that mean in its final conclusion? That so long as this system exists on that basis, running all these social functions like banks for the private profit that can be made out of it, just so long as that exists poverty can never be eliminated, because it is based upon the business of buying and selling, and the fixing of prices is based upon the value of the scarce use, and scarce use means poverty, and poverty will always be with us while commodities are handled in that way. And these social functions like banks and all those things that are run for private profit instead of for social service. More than that, we want to get relief from that situation. It is a fact that the same causes produce like effect, not sometimes, but all of the time, and so long as we leave these social forces in private hands to do the work among us, the same result of tenancy and foreclosure and mortgages and oppression and all those things, together with ignorance, which is the source of most of our evils, will be present in the land.

I think that is the substance of the statement that I wish to make to the commission, Mr. Chairman, unless you have some questions you wish to ask.

Chairman WALSH. That is all, thank you, Mr. Le Seuer, very much for your attendance.

The hearing will now stand adjourned until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock. The hearing will meet in this room promptly at 10 o'clock.

(At 4.30 of this Tuesday, March 16, 1915, an adjournment was taken until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 17, 1915, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the same place.)

DALLAS, TEX.,

Wednesday, March 17, 1915—10 a. m.

Present: Chairman Walsh; Commissioners Harriman and Lennon.

Chairman WALSH. The house will please be in order.

Mr. Getzendaner.

TESTIMONY OF MR. R. W. GETZENDANER.

Chairman WALSH. Please state your name.

Mr. GETZENDANER. Getzendaner.

Chairman WALSH. Your full name?

Mr. GETZENDANER. R. W.

Chairman WALSH. What is your business?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Banker.

Chairman WALSH. What is the name of your bank?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Citizens National Bank.

Chairman WALSH. Where is it located?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Waxahachie.

Chairman WALSH. What county is Waxahachie in?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Ellis.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you been in the banking business there?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Well, I have been in it myself about 11 years.

Chairman WALSH. Will you please sketch briefly what your business career has been since you have been in business?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Well, after leaving college—

Chairman WALSH. Are you a graduate of a college?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes; and attended the University of Virginia. After leaving college I went into the bank.

Chairman WALSH. The bank where?

Mr. GETZENDANER. At Waxahachie.

Chairman WALSH. Are you a native Texan?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes, sir; raised in Ellis County.

Chairman WALSH. Raised in Ellis County?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you may proceed.

Mr. GETZENDANER. I worked in my father's office after I left college.

Chairman WALSH. Was your father a banker?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes. Then I went into the bank after that.

Chairman WALSH. You did what?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I went into the banking business 11 years ago.

Chairman WALSH. So that your whole business life has really been that of a banker?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes; and a farmer.

Chairman WALSH. Were you raised on a farm?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Well, you say on a farm. What connection did you have with the farm?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Looking after the farm and attending to things.

Chairman WALSH. For the bank?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No; for myself.

Chairman WALSH. For yourself?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes; and my father.

Chairman WALSH. Were you a landowner yourself to begin with when you got out of school?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No, sir; I was not.

Chairman WALSH. Your father was a landowner?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And where did he own his land?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Well, his principal holdings were about 2,000 acres in south Texas, and some in Ellis County.

Chairman WALSH. To what extent do you have landholdings in Ellis County?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Have I?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GETZENDANER. Now? At this time?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GETZENDANER. In Ellis County I have about 3,500 acres.

Chairman WALSH. And your father?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Well, he had, I guess, in the neighborhood of 6,000.

Chairman WALSH. Is your father still living?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And did he have 6,000 acres at the time of his death?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No; he did not. At my mother's death he divided the estate, and of course that cut his acreage down to some extent.

Chairman WALSH. Did your land come through inheritance, that you have, or did you have a part of it acquired before the death of your father?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Came through inheritance.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I wish you would proceed and as briefly as possible sketch the manifestations of the land question in your county as they came under your observation. That is, when you began life or began to have a touch with the land situation, state what the situation was as to tenantry, the sort of leases the tenants had with the owners, and any change that you may have observed, down to the present time. I believe you were here yesterday when the other witnesses were examined?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes, sir; I was. Well, as far back as I can remember we rented on the third and fourth. At that time the lands in Ellis County were regarded as high; they were worth $40 to $50.

Chairman WALSH. And that goes back as far as you can remember the business details of the matter.

Mr. GETZENDANER. I never heard anything but third and fourth, and money rent for corn land I have heard of that.

Chairman WALSH. That was away back when, in point of time, say?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I could not say, probably 20 or 25 years, maybe 25 or 30 years.

Chairman WALSH. And how old a man are you?

Mr. GETZENDANER. 30.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you may go ahead and answer my question.

Mr. GETZENDANER. At that time I recollect it being a third and fourth of the crop.

Chairman WALSH. And that has been correctly described by the other witnesses?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes; so I understand. If I understand the other witnesses correctly, though they seemed to think there was a desire at this time not to allow the man to have any stock or cows or anything of that sort, or pasture.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would correct any statement you deem needs correction, or give any further explanation.

Mr. GETZENDANER. I find in our section that nearly all farmers have cows and small pastures, while some do not. Some of the farmers are supplied with their fuel free. I have formed my answers with reference to your questions that you sent me.

Chairman WALSH. Well, I think that would be a very good thing for us and for the record, for you to just read them into the record. You were given specific points that we desired you to cover.

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Have you the points in there with the answers?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I have questions and answers.

Chairman WALSH. If you would be kind enough to read that into the record, the entire matter. Read loud enough so Mrs. Harriman can hear from where she is sitting.

Mr. GETZENDANER. Now, the first question—do you want to ask those questions?

Chairman WALSH. No; you may just proceed with the question and your answer.

Mr. GETZENDANER. The beginnings of the cotton industry; its development.

Until after the close of the Civil War there was very little cotton raised in this section. It was thought to be too far north. About 300 bales was a maximum for Ellis County. Just after the war cotton was the only product which commanded cash. Negro slaves who had been run into Texas furnished sufficient labor to greatly increase cotton production, which by 1868 amounted to over 3,000 bales. At that time the expense of marketing cotton in Galveston was $20 per bale. Extension of railways was a great help to the cotton industry. In 1890 Ellis County produced 52,000 bales, valued at $2,250,000, and for years has led in cotton production. In 1912 the crop was 188,000 bales, the value of the cotton and of the by-products being $13,000,000.

Chairman WALSH. You shipped to Galveston?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes; we went part of the way by ox team to the railroad.

Chairman WALSH. It would be interesting to us and valuable if you would describe the mode of transportation at that time, and all about it.

Mr. GETZENDANER. Well, they used to carry that in ox teams, and mules, too, down to the railroad which was gradually building north from Houston.

Chairman WALSH. How far was the haul in the earliest years?

Mr. GETZENDANER. That was before my day.

Chairman WALSH. What does the history show? I see you have a little historical sketch there.

Mr. GETZENDANER. I do not recall, because the railroad gradually built this way as development justified.

Chairman WALSH. And finally came to Waxahachie?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No; it came up through the eastern portion of Ellis County, and a branch line was built to Waxahachie. The extension of the railways did much to help the cotton industry. Now, as to Ellis County, I want to say right here that Ellis County produces more cotton than any other county in the world; always has led the cotton production.

Chairman WALSH. And when in the course of history do you say it was believed to be too far north to raise cotton?

Mr. GETZENDANER. That was along about war time.

Chairman WALSH. You say, "about war time." Was it during the reconstruction period?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes; during that period. They had no labor here but the negroes, and there was nothing to do but to raise cotton with those negroes.

Chairman WALSH. What year do you say it was that Ellis County produced the largest amount of cotton of any county in the world?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Every year, with a few exceptions. In 1912 Ellis County produced 188,000 bales, with a value of cotton and cotton seed of $13,000,000.

I might say in connection with the cotton industry that cotton was formerly picked into baskets and carried to the little houses in the field and there stored, and then a day set for ginning. The gin was run, and the cotton was carried from these houses to the gin. Now it is picked in sacks and put into wagons and goes right directly to the gin. In those days the gin was run by horsepower, and they ginned only certain days in the week.

"Movement to town of home-owning farmers, retired farmers, and those seeking better school facilities and social conditions."

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you was your father ever a farmer?

Mr. GETZENDANER. He lived on the farm until about 1868. He had a bank in Waxahachie at that time.

Chairman WALSH. Oh, he had a bank at that time, had he? Was he an individual banker at that time?

Mr. GETZENDANER. It was a partnership—Ferris & Getzendaner.

Chairman WALSH. Just he and another man?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Started in the bank?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Mr. Royal Ferris lives in Dallas, and his father and my father were partners.

Chairman WALSH. Which was his first business—farmer or banker?

Mr. GETZENDANER. A farmer. He was a lawyer, but he did not practice very much law. He went into the banking business with Judge Ferris, and Mr. Ferris looked after the law and he after the bank.

Chairman WALSH. Now, when he went into that business was he a farmer?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And lived on the farm?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes, sir; lived 10 miles from Waxahachie and went home every Wednesday and Saturday night.

Chairman WALSH. So, he was really a farmer, and he came to town and went into another business aside from farming and succeeded in it, as it were?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And what he acquired as to land was the product of his accumulation; that is, he put a part of it into land as he went along?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes, sir. When he came to Waxahachie he was $40 in debt and he had $5.

Chairman WALSH. Proceed.

Mr. GETZENDANER. As I read these questions if you care to ask me any further questions I would be glad to answer them.

"Movement to town of home-owning farmers, retired farmers, and those seeking better school facilities and social conditions."

Chairman WALSH. That is, the cause of the movement?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Now, after they come to town what would you say as to the average; do they engage in any other business or undertake to live by the earnings they get from the farmers—the rents they get from their tenants?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Of course, the retired farmer when he comes to town is usually too old to engage in any business.

Chairman WALSH. As a rule, you find them too old and they come to the towns and simply live there?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes; and you would not term them "city builders," because the conditions that they find when they get to the cities are so much better than they have had on the farms that they are contented to go along without any improvements, at first at least. Then there is a class that come for school facilities.

Chairman WALSH. Have you observed that the farmers that come to the towns become more and more exacting as to the terms they want from their tenants?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I can not say that they are any more so than other landlords.

Chairman WALSH. You have not observed that?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No. Now, of course, there are social conditions. Say a man has several young ladies in his family; he wants to get to town so that they can have better advantages. Now, the next is: "Growth of large estates." Large estates are gradually being divided, due to the passing away of pioneers, who accumulated these estates when land was cheap. Under present conditions there is no inducement for investment in large tracts of land.

Chairman WALSH. If you would describe briefly—is yours the largest estate that is together in Ellis County?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I don't know; I could not say.

Chairman WALSH. Can you tell us of any other typical large estates, say, three or four of them, that would give us a little study of them?

Mr. GETZENDANER. One of the largest estates in Ellis County has recently been divided; something in the neighborhood of 6,000 acres.

Chairman WALSH. It went to the heirs?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Was it in one ownership to begin with?

Mr. GETZENDANER. It was.

Chairman WALSH. How was it accumulated? Was the man originally a farmer, a business man, or a banker?

Mr. GETZENDANER. He was a farmer.

Chairman WALSH. Did he go into any other business?

Mr. GETZENDANER. He did not.

Chairman WALSH. If you know, did he have an inheritance or did he come from the tenant class?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I think he inherited it. I might say in regard to that estate that while he was a large landowner his equity was not so great.

Chairman WALSH. He was indebted then to quite a large extent?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes; he was indebted to considerable extent.

Chairman WALSH. Have you observed anything of this kind: That there was anything you might call unfair or oppressive in the way large estates generally are acquired? That is, have you observed any misapplication of the law, as it were? These contracts being verbal, when conditions became hopeless for the tenant, that the manner that the landlord carried on their operations, etc., you know the criticism that has been made and I wish you would state if you have observed anything like that.

Mr. GETZENDANER. I do not think so, not as much so as you will find in any other business relation where an opportunity presents itself like that. Of course, in all business, you will find some people ready and willing to oppress the weak, but I do not think that is true any more of the landlord than it is in any other business, not so much so in our county.

Chairman WALSH. You may go ahead; I think that brings you to rental contracts. Describe the customary rental contracts in your section.

Mr. GETZENDANER. There are three customary rental contracts, one-third of the corn and grain and one-fourth of the cotton; one-third of all crops in the last few years has been in vogue; one-half of all crops where the landlord furnishes tools, teams, feed, etc.

Chairman WALSH. What percentage of these contracts are oral?

Mr. GETZENDANER. About 90 per cent.

Chairman WALSH. What effect, in your opinion, has the superior bargaining power of the landlord had in such cases?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Very little effect.

Chairman WALSH. The landlord, however, in your opinion, would have a superior bargaining power, dealing with so many people who are economically weaker?

Mr. GETZENDANER. He might have a little, but it would be very little.

Chairman WALSH. In its practical working, how does he extend it? Does he do it, on the whole, fairly or unfairly?

Mr. GETZENDANER. The landlord?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; the landlord.

Mr. GETZENDANER. I think in a fair way.

Chairman WALSH. It is a matter, however, of the wish or heart of the landlord to be fair?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes; I think so.

Chairman WALSH. Does it enable the landlord to dictate the crop that is to be grown?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes, it does; most all of them.

Chairman WALSH. The typical crop grown in your section is what?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Cotton.

Chairman WALSH. Why does the landlord want cotton grown by these people?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Because it is a money crop. You have asked that question here and I think I cover that down a little further.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would suggest, if you will, please, Mr. Getzendaner, any defects in existing contracts between landlord and tenant that you believe could be improved by law?

Mr. GETZENDANER. You have the question here, "What tendency have you noticed with regard to rental contracts?"

Chairman WALSH. I think you have covered that.

Mr. GETZENDANER. Answering your question as to any suggestions I might have to make with regard to defects in existing contracts between landlord and tenant that I believe could be improved by law I will say that I don't know of any. Of course, there is a law that has recently been passed called the "One-third law." I don't think that will solve the question.

Chairman WALSH. Please give your comment on that?

Mr. GETZENDANER. My idea is that if a man is determined to get more for his land he is going to get it; and if he can not get it in one way, he will in another. For instance, I have heard a landlord say: "It won't do any good; if I have two houses on my place, I will charge what rent I want for one and will turn one over to the tenant." The tenant is charged rent for the other house and the owner will charge for his pasture land and in numerous ways he can get around the one-third.

Chairman WALSH. By the use of stock and employment of help, etc.?

Mr. GETZENDANER. How is that?

Chairman WALSH. I say, that might cut a figure; that is, the use of stock, furnishing stock for tenants?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Make him farm on halves?

Chairman WALSH. I was trying to have you comment, if possible, on the new law; you stated the way the landlord could still bargain with his tenant and in a way avoid the strict terms of the law and I was making a suggestion. You can correct me if you think it necessary. My suggestion was that it might also be avoided by entering into contract about the help on the farm?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I think not. I don't know how that would operate.

Chairman WALSH. For instance, the use of live stock.

Mr. GETZENDANER. He has charge of that. About the only thing I can say is that; I haven't made a study of it, you understand, because it does not affect me one way or the other; I do not believe in raising rent; I have not raised my rent, and I do not expect to raise it; I do not think it will keep any other man from getting a third of the crop if he wants it.

Chairman WALSH. Will you please describe the rental contracts which you use yourself?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I have two, and my contracts are verbal. I use the one-fourth cotton and money rent for the corn (four to five dollars per acre). One-half of all crops produced where I furnish tools, teams, and feed, etc. I will say in that connection that I have with me some data on the production of 1913-14 with reference to what the tenants made and what my portion was.

Chairman WALSH. Have you that with you?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes; I have, and I will be glad to submit it to you now.

Chairman WALSH. Please submit it now, if you have it, and read it into the record.

Mr. GETZENDANER. One thing I want to call your attention to, and that is the cotton being such a varying crop that it is hard to compare on account of the change in the price of the product. I have a tenant here that I have taken as an example, because he has been with me over 20 years, and he estimates his crop at 100 acres in cotton and 20 in corn. The year 1913 the proceeds from his share of the cotton were $2,441.43. My part was $814. He is what we term a third and fourth renter. I figured out that my per cent on that farm, that 100 acres, to say nothing of the corn land, and of land in roads and ditches and ravines, was 5.2 per cent at a reasonable valuation of $150 an acre. That was what I made off of it. That was in 1913.

Chairman WALSH. What was that percentage?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Five and two-tenths per cent.

Chairman WALSH. Based upon what valuation?

Mr. GETZENDANER. One hundred and fifty dollars.

Chairman WALSH. One hundred and fifty dollars an acre?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes. I might say that in 1914 the production was much less per acre, and my per cent was 4.3.

Chairman WALSH. On the same land valuation?

Mr. GETZENDANER. The same valuation. The amount I received was $678, and the amount he received was $2,032. Now, in that connection I want to say that in 1913 he raised 41 bales of cotton. In 1914 he raised 68 bales of cotton; the same land practically and just a difference in conditions.

In 1913 (I have this from memory and it may not be exactly correct) I think cotton sold at from 10 to 12½ cents per pound. In the present year, the year just past, it sold at about 6 to 8 cents per pound. I estimate his expense in making that crop right around $400. That is allowing him $10 a bale for picking half of it. His family picked half and he hired half picked.

Chairman WALSH. How many are in that family?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Five or six, anyway, I think. So his returns, net returns, would be right around $2,000 or $2,100 and mine would be $814. That is, for 1913. Nineteen hundred and fourteen his return would be about $1,600, and my return would be $676. Now, I have not taken into consideration there two items: The item of taxation for myself, nor the difference between the seed and ginning, which would probably offset each other.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would describe the last item a little more particularly; that is, the difference between the seed and the ginning—just what you mean by that.

Mr. GETZENDANER. Well, the farmer takes the cotton to the gin and has it ginned. They charge so much a hundred for ginning.

Chairman WALSH. Who owns the gin?

Mr. GETZENDANER. The gin is generally owned by corporations; sometimes by individuals.

Chairman WALSH. Do you own a gin yourself?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I did; I do not now. I own stock in one.

Chairman WALSH. Is the ginning done on your land by corporations in which you own stock?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How large a corporation is it? What is its capital stock?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I think it is $15,000 or $16,000. It may be $12,000. I do not know exactly. I never gave it any thought.

Chairman WALSH. How is the stock held?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Held by farmers throughout the neighborhood, and a few town people are interested.

Chairman WALSH. What proportion of the stock do you own in it?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Five hundred dollars.

Chairman WALSH. And it is divided among about how many stockholders?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I could not say. At first, of course, like most of those corporations in the country, they are scattered pretty well. But, of course, as a man gets a little hard up for money—the stock does not pay a dividend—he wants a little money, and he sells his stock. I suppose in the neighborhood of 8 or 10 or maybe 15 stockholders, I would say.

Chairman WALSH. Does it declare dividends?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How much did it declare in 1914?

Mr. GETZENDANER. This year it declared 20 per cent.

Chairman WALSH. How much did it declare in 1913?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I would not be positive, but I think about 10 per cent.

Chairman WALSH. Is that considered a very large percentage of dividends on stock in this country—20 per cent?

Mr. GETZENDANER. It would be on some stock, but not on gin stock.

Chairman WALSH. Not on gin stock?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No.

Chairman WALSH. Is there something in gin stock that makes it undesirable and doubtful as to dividend-paying qualities?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Gins usually pay good dividends. But the gin has to be run very fast, and of course for that reason it wears out quickly and needs continuous repair.

Chairman WALSH. How quickly does it wear out?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Well, it depends on whether you keep it in repair. The country gin where they have a good patronage usually pays a good dividend. There are some that don't pay any.

Chairman WALSH. You may go ahead now.

Mr. GETZENDANER. I understood that the witnesses spoke of the half renter as being mostly negroes and the renters who seemed to be more oppressed because they did not have anything. I want to say in that connection that I have more half renters than I have third and fourth. And I figure out that my half renter on his crop nets me 3.4 per cent on the value of the land, with the same valuation practically and the same man.

Chairman WALSH. Have you figured out in the instance with reference to the half any typical case, such as the third and fourth?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes; in a way I have. The half renter for 1913—this one I have reference to—had 70 acres in cotton.

Chairman WALSH. Seventy acres?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes. He got $1,226 for his share. That is what we term a 2-team crop, you might say, about 70 acres, besides his corn. In 1914 he received $992 as his part. Of course all the expenses of that crop I paid, with the exception of picking. But there is nothing else for him to pay, because I furnish all the tools, feed, mules, and the land, and he furnishes the labor to make the crop and deliver it to the gin.

Chairman WALSH. How many children did he have?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Well, I don't know. That is one of the troubles with the tenants. They have so many children it takes all they make to keep the family up. That is one of the drawbacks, I think. I think he has probably eight or nine children. And I will say right here that a man with a large family is a desirable tenant, because he, with his family, can make his crop, but it requires practically all he makes to keep the family, and he is not able to go to town and educate them.

Commissioner LENNON. In this connection, what do you do about the contract stores? Did you guarantee the account or do you furnish the stuff?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I furnish my men.

Commissioner LENNON. You furnish them?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes.

Commissioner LENNON. I would like to ask you one question. Possibly I got a wrong impression yesterday. What is the average size and what is the average number of acres that tenants usually take? I understood yesterday that it ran somewhere about 40 acres. But in a talk last night I was told I was wrong in that. What is your view?

Mr. GETZENDANER. These figures are estimates made by the farmers on my place, the man himself who cultivates the crop. This one man here is what we term a 1-team crop, 55 acres.

Commissioner LENNON. How much in cotton?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Forty-five in cotton and 10 in corn. This man on the third and fourth up here, he has got 100 acres cotton and 20 in corn. This half renter has 70 acres in cotton and 18 in corn. All of them are asking for more land.

Commissioner LENNON. Could you tell us what the average corn crop is on that land—how many bushels to the acre?

Mr. GETZENDANER. We used to raise pretty fair corn, but in the last few years we have not raised very much corn. I suppose 30 to 40 bushels would be a pretty good average in the last few years; 40 bushels would be considered a good crop and 30 bushels a fairly good crop.

Chairman WALSH. How many families have you as tenants?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I have about 13 on this one particular place.

Chairman WALSH. On all your places how many have you, Mr. Getzendaner?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I could not tell.

Chairman WALSH. Could you not approximate them, Mr. Getzendaner?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No; I am interested in 8,000 acres in Kaufman County, and I don't know how many families or don't know anything about that.

Chairman WALSH. Well, then, take these 13; do you think that what you are giving now would be a fair average as to earnings for all of your tenants?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No, sir; it would not.

Chairman WALSH. Then I wish you would give us—I do not want to hurry you—but I wish you would give us now the very worst.

Mr. GETZENDANER. The worst is on the cheaper land. That is, the land that is valued at about $50 an acre.

Chairman WALSH. Well, give us now—I take it that these are the best that you have given us, these two?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No; they are not the best.

Chairman WALSH. Please give us the best and the worst.

Mr. GETZENDANER. I take these of the black land—cotton farmer—and the other men I have are on what you might term lighter or cheaper land and raise more grain. I haven't the data on that because I did not think it was necessary.

Chairman WALSH. Give me the worst and the best on the black land—cotton farming.

Mr. GETZENDANER. These are just about the average of my men.

Chairman WALSH. Then that would be a fair average?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes; I would consider it so.

Chairman WALSH. How many have you on that black land?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I have on this particular farm about 13 renters.

Chairman WALSH. Well, now, you think—

Mr. GETZENDANER. The reason I selected these, if you will pardon me—

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GETZENDANER (continuing). Is because I have some negroes there with from 20 to 30 acres, maybe 2 or 3 of them working 20 to 30 acres, and another man who has not been there but a year, and another fellow who has some broken land; these are the men who have been there longer and have the good land, and you can judge better by their returns than in any other way.

Chairman WALSH. Very good. Go ahead.

Mr. GETZENDANER. Now, the gentleman asked me something about the number of acres. I believe I answered him?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GETZENDANER. About the number of acres per team or per crop. I believe I have answered that satisfactorily?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; I think so.

Mr. GETZENDANER. That was all you cared to know about this?

Chairman WALSH. Have you raised rent from time to time on your land?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Never have raised rent at all. I did raise corn-land rent from $3 to $4 an acre, and some $5.

Chairman WALSH. When was that?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I don't know. Years ago. I don't remember.

Chairman WALSH. What is the bonus system? Is there a bonus system in Ellis County?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes; I think a kind of bonus system.

Chairman WALSH. Describe that.

Mr. GETZENDANER. I do not know much about that.

Chairman WALSH. Have you used it?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No, sir; I don't know anything about it only hearsay. The bonus system was originated principally by the demand for farms, one tenant giving a bonus to another for his rental contract.

Chairman WALSH. One tenant giving it to another?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know of any other instance where the bonus was given to the landlord?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Describe that also.

Mr. GETZENDANER. A man would go to the landlord and say: "If you will give me that place I will give you $100 or $200."

Chairman WALSH. Is that general in Ellis County?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I think not.

Chairman WALSH. How prevalent is it?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Well, I have heard of a number of cases. A man came to me and said, "If you will rent me that place, I will furnish my team, tools, and give you half of the product of the land, if you will just feed my team. That is all I want you to do, and furnish the land. I have the team and tools, but haven't any place."

I think this bonus system was actually due to the fact of a lot of our farmers going west, some of the land the governor referred to as being subject to cultivation. They went there, starved out, and came back, and they overflowed our county with tenants. There was not land sufficient for them, and of course they would offer to pay most anything they could to get a home.

Chairman WALSH. Well, now, just proceed with the question, because I have diverted you from time to time, and I have to finish up. If you will just kindly read the questions and answers, I will be obliged.

Mr. GETZENDANER. "Origin of the raise to one-third cotton." One-third of cotton rent due to small revenues derived from investment and probably in some cases due to increased taxation.

"Origin of custom of charging share rental for cotton and cash rental for corn or grain."

Cotton being the money crop, landlords take part of crop. Same is true of wheat and oats. Corn not being a sure crop most tenants prefer to plant just enough for feed. The landlord realizing that corn land is often neglected, and, having no place to store corn, prefers cotton.

"Was rise in rent modified by competition among tenants for land?"

It was.

"Did tenants on places accept rise, or did they move to other farms?"

Generally speaking, they moved.

"What about claim in Ellis County that it is only the poorest type of farmers who accept rise in rent?"

Not in all cases. In some cases it is true, and some it is not.

"Where landlord's rights are unprotected."

I did not answer that question, because I did not exactly understand what you wanted.

Chairman WALSH. Is the law inadequate to protect the rights of landlords?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I think it is adequate.

Chairman WALSH. In what respect?

Mr. GETZENDANER. It gives him a mortgage on the crop for advances he has made, and if the tenant should move the crop off of the land he has 30 days in which to collect his advances, or rents.

Chairman WALSH. And you have not, or have you, lost money that way by the tenant not paying back the advances?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I have not lost money. I have had tenants not able to pay out, but I have lost very little money on my tenants, because I change very rarely; nearly all of them are out of debt on this place. I do not think there is a man on this place that owes me.

Chairman WALSH. What is the policy with regard to the cultivation of cotton?

Mr. GETZENDANER. My policy has been to grow principally cotton, as my experience has proven that this crop is more profitable, and therefore more beneficial, to myself and to the tenant.

Chairman WALSH. Is that policy in harmony with the general custom of landlords in Ellis County?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would go to the housing question, please. Are tenant houses large enough to house the average tenant families that live upon them?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes, sir; generally speaking.

Chairman WALSH. Are they kept in good repair?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No; they are not.

Chairman WALSH. Who looks after that?

Mr. GETZENDANER. The landlord is supposed to.

Chairman WALSH. Are they erected with regard to sanitary drainage, water supply, good water supply, etc.?

Mr. GETZENDANER. They are mostly erected with regard to water supply.

Chairman WALSH. Any sanitary drainage, or anything of that sort?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No; not to speak of.

Chairman WALSH. Have you observed much sickness in rural communities caused by bad housing?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No.

Chairman WALSH. Is there much overcrowding in sleeping rooms?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I think not.

Chairman WALSH. Do landlords improve tenant houses, and improve them readily and willingly?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No, sir; because they are not generally taken care of.

Chairman WALSH. That is the reason. I wish you would go back to that family of eight or nine that you mentioned there—that on the half—and just describe the house they live in.

Mr. GETZENDANER. They live in a new house that has been built about a year.

Chairman WALSH. How many rooms in it?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Oh, I judge there must be four rooms downstairs and two up.

Chairman WALSH. A six-room house?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I think it is a six-room house.

Chairman WALSH. Have you been in it?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Do you inspect your own houses on your own property?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Do the landlords in Ellis County, with whom you are familiar, appear to feel any social responsibility for the sanitary housing of tenants—of their tenants?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I don't know. Some do and some do not.

Chairman WALSH. Do you?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes; I think I do.

Chairman WALSH. Well, now, what do you do with respect to it?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I try to keep the houses in fairly good shape. I do not spend any great amount on them, because I build new houses, occasionally, on the site of the old ones, when they get old.

Chairman WALSH. You spoke of drainage being good. What do you mean by drainage being good? What is done for drainage?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I said they erected houses with reference to water supply more than for drainage.

Chairman WALSH. It was the water supply. What do you mean by that?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Where they can get water for drinking purposes.

Chairman WALSH. That is, if they can build it near a place where you can sink a well?

Mr. GETZENDANER. We erect our houses with reference to the water, among the principal things, and then pasturage; our land is usually rolling, and there is no trouble about drainage.

Chairman WALSH. What is the usual value of a tenant house, your tenant houses?

Mr. GETZENDANER. They run from $750.

Chairman WALSH. Up to what?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I suppose about $1,500; possibly not quite so much.

Chairman WALSH. Do the tenants appear to have proper consideration for the property of the landlords, the conservation of the proper care of it?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Some do and some do not.

Chairman WALSH. What do you find the average to be among the tenants?

Mr. GETZENDANER. My tenants take very good care of my property.

Chairman WALSH. Now, the educational and social environment. I wish you would describe the schools that they have.

Mr. GETZENDANER. Generally speaking, our schools are good, far above the average of country schools. In Ellis County there are 88 rural schools, 7,900 children, 150 teachers, with an average term of 6 months, and grades up to the seventh and ninth.

Chairman WALSH. You may proceed right through that.

Commissioner LENNON. May I ask one question, right there?

Chairman WALSH. Yes. Commissioner Lennon would like to ask a question.

Commissioner LENNON. I would like to ask how far any of the children have to go to reach the schools?

Mr. GETZENDANER. That varies.

Commissioner LENNON. Yes; but how far would those that are the most remote from the schools have to go?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I would say 2 or 3 miles.

Commissioner LENNON. Not more than 3 miles?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Not more than 3 miles, except maybe in some instances.

Commissioner LENNON. Have you any university extension work, so far as scientific farming is concerned, like, for instance, as we have in Illinois, Iowa, and some other Northern States, where a professor will go to a community and stay for about two or three, four, five, or six weeks and give instruction to all the farmers and tenants?

Mr. GETZENDANER. We have not.

Commissioner LENNON. You have none of that work?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No.

Commissioner LENNON. Have you experimental farms in your district under the University of Texas?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No, sir; we have not.

Commissioner LENNON. Under the agricultural college, if it is a separate institution, have you any of those?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No; we have not.

Commissioner LENNON. Experimental stations?

Mr. GETZENDANER. We have what we term a Government demonstrator.

Commissioner LENNON. In your neighborhood?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes.

Commissioner LENNON. Does he remain there permanently?

Mr. GETZENDANER. He is a local man.

Commissioner LENNON. He understands scientific farming?

Mr. GETZENDANER. He is supposed to, and he is being educated up to teach the other parties.

Commissioner LENNON. Has this kind of education for the farmer seemingly improved the crops any?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I would say it had.

Commissioner LENNON. Are the landlords usually in favor of that kind of work?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I think so. I have answered that right here, if you will allow me to read this.

Chairman WALSH. You may read right through there, because I will have to hurry along just a little.

Mr. GETZENDANER. All right.

Chairman WALSH. Read right through the school proposition, Mr. Getzendaner.

Mr. GETZENDANER. Its relation to social and economic organization.

Very little accomplished.

The school teacher and his possibility as a leader in rural life.

Possibilities are good, but he is not a leader.

The establishment of vocational training in agriculture; also in home economics.

Possibilities here are great. So far, however, there has been very little accomplished, owing to lack of interest. During the past year, under the provision made by Federal Congress for farm-demonstration work, our commissioners' court provided a fund adequate to keep this work going during 1914. Owing to a change in sentiment they refused to provide the necessary fund to carry on the work during 1915, but the interest was so great among the people of the towns and counties that a fund of $800 has been subscribed by private subscriptions to carry on farm-demonstration work.

Chairman WALSH. Now, the question of farm-demonstration work and the source of labor for seasonal demand. What have you to say about that?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Our source of labor is south and east Texas.

Chairman WALSH. And what is the movement of labor, so far as the season is concerned?

Mr. GETZENDANER. The influx of labor during the early fall for cotton picking.

Chairman WALSH. Do you get enough, or an overplus?

Mr. GETZENDANER. We usually get about what we can use.

Chairman WALSH. Have you any methods of regularizing supply and demand—any arrangement with different portions of the State?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No; the farmers just go after the labor, and they pay railroad fare and expenses, and sometimes advance them some money.

Chairman WALSH. Would employment agencies be a proper course?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I don't think they would be practicable with the negro.

Chairman WALSH. And the labor is negro labor?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What is the relation of the vagrancy law to farm labor?

Mr. GETZENDANER. You asked me the question here, Why was the vagrancy law enforced last September to force the negroes of Waxahachie into the fields?

There were many idle negroes around town. Work was offered and was plentiful, but they would not work. The farmers needed labor badly.

Chairman WALSH. Is it not true that the negroes wanted 60 cents for cotton, the farmers could pay only 50 cents, and the business men in town called upon the police officers to break this strike of unorganized labor?

Mr. GETZENDANER. The negroes wanted 60 cents, and the farmers regarded 50 cents as a fair price, considering the low price of cotton. There was no concerted action among the business men, although there was a general feeling that the idle negroes should go to work. The cotton grower of Ellis County pays more for what he receives from labor than any other people. The negro willingly works, generally speaking, for a reasonable compensation nine months in the year, biding his harvest time—"cotton-picking season." When such season arrives he or she quits the regular position for the cotton patch. By a sort of mutual understanding they always ask more than is offered, and usually get the price of picking increased in that way as the season advances.

Chairman WALSH. Now, after the officers arrested these negroes for vagrancy did they generally go to work for 50 cents instead of 60?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I don't think they arrested them.

Chairman WALSH. Well, did they threaten to arrest them, and then did the negroes go to work for 50 cents instead of 60 cents?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I think they just gradually went out to the patch. I don't know what they got.

Chairman WALSH. What was generally the price paid—50 or 60 cents?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I don't remember.

Chairman WALSH. What did you pay?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I don't remember—I never had anything to do with hiring labor.

Chairman WALSH. You did not hire any?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Is it customary for the vagrancy law to be invoked in the State of Texas at the beginning of the cotton season?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I know only what I have seen in the papers and how it is usually discussed among people about getting the negroes out and getting them to go to work, instead of lying around the streets and refusing to do anything. As long as there is no work there, nothing is said about it, but when work is offered they won't accept it without they get a fabulous price for their labor.

Chairman WALSH. Would the effect of that now, if that occurred, be this, that those negroes believed that they ought to have 60 cents, and, in effect, they start a strike, though not organized, but just agree among themselves not to go to work for less than 60 cents, and then they are told by the officers or by the business men that they are looked upon as lazy negroes, and if they don't go to work the vagrancy law will be applied to them, and the negro does go to work then for 50 cents; and isn't the effect of that that the negro does go on the strike and the law is called in, and he is told he will be sent to jail unless he gives up the strike and does go to work—

Mr. GETZENDANER (interrupting). He doesn't have to go to work; he can get out, or he can get other work.

Chairman WALSH. Are they always provided with other means?

Mr. GETZENDANER. They can get work if they will work.

Chairman WALSH. That is, if they will work at a certain price?

Mr. GETZENDANER. He gets more for cotton picking than for any other labor, when he gets 50 cents. He is paid about a third more than he really can get in any other position when he is paid 50 cents.

Chairman WALSH. So far as you are concerned and have observed the working out of this matter the farmers or business men are justified in taking the action described by you?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No; I don't know that they are. Of course, if the negroes are there and the farmer tries to hire them and they won't work when work is offered and they are living off of somebody, if you have a vagrancy law it should be enforced, why, they ought to go to work.

Chairman WALSH. Just describe what this 50 cents means; Commissioner Lennon wants me to ask you what it means.

Mr. GETZENDANER. That is 50 cents per hundred.

Chairman WALSH. How many hundred a day can a picker pick?

Mr. GETZENDANER. It varies all the way up to 500 pounds.

Chairman WALSH. And down to what?

Mr. GETZENDANER. That depends upon the amount of cotton in the field they are picking in, and whether it opens well. Any negro woman would pick from 150 to 200 or 300 pounds.

Chairman WALSH. And how long does the season last?

Mr. GETZENDANER. The season lasts from September, or from some time in August probably, up until it gets cold in December; from then on they can pick only on warm days.

Chairman WALSH. Why did the tenants in Ellis County oppose the good-roads movement?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I don't think they did, generally speaking.

Chairman WALSH. Is it true that some landlords threatened to raise rents so much per acre if the tenants voted for the good-roads proposition?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I don't know of any landlord who did that.

Chairman WALSH. Is there much friction between landlords and tenants over school-district elections, land taxes, and the like?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No; there is not.

Chairman WALSH. Now, as to the credit system: How did your tenants finance themselves?

Mr. GETZENDANER. By advancements.

Chairman WALSH. Who did the advancing?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I—my man did.

Chairman WALSH. That is, with your money?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you take chattel mortgages?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No, sir; I don't have any chattel mortgages on my place at all. If a man gives a chattel mortgage I get rid of him.

Chairman WALSH. When the tenants are advanced money do you take their notes?

Mr. GETZENDANER. No.

Chairman WALSH. What charge was made for the advancement?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Ten per cent.

Chairman WALSH. Ten per cent per annum?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Will the present cotton prices cause many foreclosures on chattel mortgages this year?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I don't think they will. It will cause a few, not very many—because the people that have the mortgages do not want the stuff.

Chairman WALSH. Have you any opinion in regard to constructive action that could be taken to relieve anything that you might consider to be an abuse in relation between landlord and tenant in your neighborhood, either by law or by cooperation of the tenants with each other or between the tenants and the landlords?

Mr. GETZENDANER. I had this in mind and have written it—

Chairman WALSH (Interrupting). Very good.

Mr. GETZENDANER. The basis of permanent betterment in rural economic conditions is through education. Our rural schools and churches should be equipped as social centers and the people encouraged to participate in all plans for the upbuilding of the country. School-teachers should be chosen with a view to this end, and every rural teacher, at least the head of every rural school, should have a practical knowledge of agriculture. As far as practical and by degrees there should be added to the curriculum of rural schools, courses in agriculture, broad enough to meet the present need, and revised from time to time to meet the requirements. Carefully selected textbooks, periodicals, etc., dealing with questions of home economics, and handled as a circulating library, should prove beneficial. Educators in all walks of life should be encouraged to contribute through press and public speech to an educational propaganda, the aim being to bring the people of the country and the town on the common ground of mutual betterment. That is, through schools; you have to reach them through education.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Holman has suggested that I should ask you whether or not you thought the Government, State or National, could assist in the movement of farm laborers by a system of exchanges, for instance, to relieve a situation such as you mentioned there about these laborers simply drifting to a neighborhood because it had been customary to do so, and then the contention arising as to price and so forth?

Mr. GETZENDANER. It might be, but I don't know how it would work for the negro, and that is our only labor, you might say.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Holman would like to ask you some questions.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Getzendaner, I arrived in Waxahachie on the 6th or 7th of last September, and at that time the commercial club was holding meetings to break what appeared to be a strike on the part of the negro cotton pickers, and they used to cluster around the square there, and the papers were full of the idea of using the vagrancy law to force the negroes to go into the field to pick for 50 cents per hundred pounds instead of 60.

Chairman WALSH. He has been over that fairly well while you were out, Mr. Holman, and he said that there were no such conditions at his place, and that it was published at the time that these were idle negroes and ought to go to work.

Mr. GETZENDANER. That it was their fault that the negroes congregated around that way.

Chairman WALSH. Now, is there any suggestion that you would like to make, or any testimony you would be kind enough to volunteer which you think would throw light upon our study here?

Mr. GETZENDANER. Home ownership, to my mind, is the ideal condition of mankind from an economic point of view, though doubtless a large per cent of mankind will continue tenants for obvious reasons. The landowner who lives in the cities no longer finds it profitable to hold large tracts of land to be farmed by tenants, therefore should welcome an opportunity to dispose of his holdings on a reasonable basis and fair terms to the best element of tenants. From my knowledge of conditions I see nothing from the landowners' position that would in any wise prove an obstacle to any deserving man buying a home in Ellis County on a fair and reasonable basis.

I want to say that Ellis County—you have heard a good many speak of their towns and their counties—we have, I think, what is regarded not only with us, but with the State of Texas as a whole, as the best county in Texas. We have a class of citizenship as renters far above the average, and our schools, and for that matter—I want to call your attention to a little data I have here. We are one of the prime counties in the good roads. We spent $1,000,000 for good roads in our county. We have 600,000 acres in our county, the assessed valuation of which is $37,000,000, and our rendition is $32 per acre. Our value is over $100,000,000. Per capita of cash in the county is $66 per capita; the per capita of wealth is about $2,000. The population is, white, 45,000; negro, 10,000. Our vote on the good roads—you asked me about that with reference to the tenants—our vote in District No. 1 was about 5 to 1 for good roads. Our road tax varies from 19 cents to 30 cents, and we have about 325 miles of good roads, which cost us from $2,000 to $3,500 per mile, the total cost in the county being about $1,000,000 for good roads. Our State and county taxes are 65½ cents; school and road tax from 5 to 50. Now, I want to say in that connection in regard to our land tax, I estimate my land tax at about 50 cents an acre—40 or 50 cents an acre. So you can tell something as to revenue bearing. That is what it costs me.

Chairman WALSH. We are very much obliged to you.

Mr. Noble will please take the witness stand.

TESTIMONY OF MR. W. S. NOBLE.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Holman will conduct the examination.

Mr. HOLMAN. Please state your occupation, Mr. Noble?

Mr. NOBLE. I am a farmer. I am or have been actively engaged quite a bit of my life in the work of the Farmers' Alliance and Farmers' Union. At the present time I am national secretary of the Land League.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is that organization?

Mr. NOBLE. It is an organization composed of actual farmers.

Mr. HOLMAN. And renters?

Mr. NOBLE. Farmers and renters. No one allowed to become a member that does not cultivate his land.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the membership of the organization now?

Mr. NOBLE. I could not answer that question definitely. The financial depression has caused so many locals to report so slowly. I would think in Texas we have something like 200 organizations; in Oklahoma we have something over 100 organizations, in Missouri about 7 or 8.

Mr. HOLMAN. Are these organizations on the county unit, or local?

Mr. NOBLE. They are on the local.

Mr. HOLMAN. How old is the organization, Mr. Noble?

Mr. NOBLE. The Land League really absorbed what was known as the Renters' Union, which changed its program somewhat, and dates from last November.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Noble, we will ask you later about the names and objects of the organization and its constitution.

Mr. NOBLE. Very well.

Mr. HOLMAN. Have you had any experience with this drifting type of tenant that has been discussed here by various witnesses?

Mr. NOBLE. Well, sir, I have had quite a bit of experience with them.

Mr. HOLMAN. How extensive has that experience been?

Mr. NOBLE. Well, I have had to do with them in the Farmers' Union and have been able to take considerable notice of the matter as an organizer of the Farmers' Alliance.

Mr. HOLMAN. Have you had occasion to observe the condition they have been in this year as a result of the so-called cotton crisis?

Mr. NOBLE. Yes, sir; I have been in the homes of these people for the last 10 years continuously.

Mr. HOLMAN. How has it been during that time?

Mr. NOBLE. Well, if I understand the question, I have it you are asking me about that second type?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. NOBLE. I will take it up in my own way. I find that the tenantry is divided into what we might say was three different classes. One I would describe as the well-to-do tenant, who is able to finance himself; another is the middle well-to-do tenant who generally by mortgaging his crops, etc., gets by; and the third and last is the fellow whose landlord has to furnish him his property, or it is furnished by anyone who wants to employ him.

Chairman WALSH. What are the proportions of the classes you have mentioned, Mr. Noble?

Mr. NOBLE. Well, it seems that each year there are more people crowded down into what we might call the migratory tenant or the submerged tenant; it seems that the number of them grows greater and greater each year, and their condition is very bad.

Chairman WALSH. I do not want you to hold it right down to the cotton crisis, that being an abnormal condition.

Mr. NOBLE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. But tell us, before the war crisis came on, about what proportion of the tenantry composed the well-to-do class, class No. 1.

Mr. NOBLE. I could not answer that question, but I will say that they were very small.

Chairman WALSH. Now, class No. 2, the middle class, what proportion did they comprise?

Mr. NOBLE. It is larger, and with No. 3 would—I believe I could safely say two-thirds of the tenant class.

Chairman WALSH. Two-thirds of the entire tenant class would be composed in class No. 3?

Mr. NOBLE. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. They are what you would call the economically submerged class?

Mr. NOBLE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Do I understand that they are a growing class?

Mr. NOBLE. Yes; decidedly so.

Chairman WALSH. During the past 10 years?

Mr. NOBLE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How do they go as to race—are they negroes or whites or what?

Mr. NOBLE. Well, I believe that as a class the white race is suffering more than the negro.

Chairman WALSH. This migratory class of tenants—the third class that you spoke of—is made up mostly of what?

Mr. NOBLE. That class is composed mostly of whites.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Noble, we sent you out two or three days ago to find what you considered an average example of this drifting class of tenant farmers?

Mr. NOBLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish you would please tell the chairman and members of the commission something of this class, as a whole, and then describe this family as you found them.

Mr. NOBLE. Yes, sir. Now, when you made the request of me to locate this family—

Chairman WALSH (Interrupting). What request did Mr. Holman make of you?

Mr. NOBLE. He asked me to find a typical family that would represent that class as nearly as possible; a man of intelligence and character. As secretary of the Land League I receive so many letters stating the bad condition of the people that I was very much undecided. I was a delegate from my camp of the Woodmen of the World, the head camp at Fort Worth, and I asked a man who was also a delegate from Savoy, from the black-land belt, to assist me, and gave him instructions that I wanted only a man of good character. I examined a case that was especially a typical case at Grand View, and also one at Anna, in which they were offering to give their children away, and another case at Enlow, in which the conditions were very bad. But my investigation led me to believe that the family I have brought here was a family that would more nearly represent what you want to know. First, the man is an Odd Fellow and well respected by his order; he is a Woodman, and he has made something, I found, over 430 bales of cotton in 12 years—some thing like 450 bales. He is a man who has always had the name of being a hard-working, honest man, and so I went out yesterday and visited him and brought him in.

Chairman WALSH. Where does he live?

Mr. NOBLE. He is living in a house that he secured to live in for two weeks, across from a little station on the M., K. & T. road, 7 miles from Savoy. It is about a mile from a little switch or siding that runs up there.

Chairman WALSH. What is this man's name?

Mr. NOBLE. His name is Stewart.

Chairman WALSH. Did he express a willingness to come in voluntarily, or at your suggestion, and state his own private case as being typical?

Mr. NOBLE. Yes, sir; he said he would come, from the fact that he had walked 250 miles hunting a place and could not find one, and that he had this house he was in for only two weeks, and he thought that if this matter was put before you someone might help him to get a home so that he could make a living for his family.

Mr. WALSH. How many children has he?

Mr. NOBLE. Eight; I brought six.

Chairman WALSH. That is all for the present, Mr. Noble. Will you please ask Mr. Stewart to come in here.

At this point we will take a recess of 5 minutes.

(At the conclusion of the recess the examination of witnesses before the commission was continued, as follows:)

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Stewart, would you please take the stand?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

TESTIMONY OF MR. LEVI THOMAS STEWART.

Chairman WALSH. What is your name, please?

Mr. STEWART. L. T. Stewart.

Chairman WALSH. What does the "L." stand for?

Mr. STEWART. Levi.

Chairman WALSH. How old a man are you?

Mr. STEWART. Forty-five last August.

Chairman WALSH. Where were you born?

Mr. STEWART. In Arkansas.

Chairman WALSH. You are a married man?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Where were you married?

Mr. STEWART. In Arkansas.

Chairman WALSH. Did you go to school in Arkansas?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; I went to school in Arkansas.

Chairman WALSH. You were born in Arkansas?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. In what county?

Mr. STEWART. In White County, at Center Hill.

Chairman WALSH. What business were your folks in?

Mr. STEWART. Farming.

Chairman WALSH. Was your father a farm owner or a renter?

Mr. STEWART. A renter part of the time, and he owned a farm part of the time.

Chairman WALSH. How many children did your father have?

Mr. STEWART. My father had 11 children.

Chairman WALSH. Where were you married?

Mr. STEWART. In Arkansas; in Faulkner County, near Conway.

Chairman WALSH. What business did your brothers and sisters follow?

Mr. STEWART. All farmers.

Chairman WALSH. Were all of them renters—were your brothers renters or were they farm owners?

Mr. STEWART. All but one were renters; I have one that owns a farm.

Chairman WALSH. All but one were renters?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What school did you go to—a country school?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Until you were how old?

Mr. STEWART. I went to school until I was 18.

Chairman WALSH. Did you work on the farm a part of the time?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Have you followed that all your life?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Do you follow any form of religion—did you as you went along?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; I don't belong to any church.

Chairman WALSH. When were you married?

Mr. STEWART. I was married in 1887. In the fall of 1887.

Chairman WALSH. Where were you married?

Mr. STEWART. In Faulkner County, Ark.

Chairman WALSH. Was your wife a resident of that neighborhood, that country?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Was she a daughter of a farmer?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. In your own neighborhood?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. You say you are about 45 years old now?

Mr. STEWART. I am 46 in August.

Chairman WALSH. How many children have you?

Mr. STEWART. Eleven.

Chairman WALSH. Are they all living?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; I have eight living and three dead.

Chairman WALSH. How old is your oldest child?

Mr. STEWART. He is 26, I believe.

Chairman WALSH. What was your wife's name?

Mr. STEWART. Beulah Hooks.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would give me the ages of the living children, if you can.

Mr. STEWART. I don't know as I can.

Chairman WALSH. With the assistance of Mrs. Stewart you may give us the ages of the living children, beginning with the oldest.

Mr. STEWART. He will be 26, I believe.

Mrs. STEWART. He will be 26 the 27th of April.

Chairman WALSH. What is his name?

Mrs. STEWART. John Walter.

Chairman WALSH. What is the next child?

Mrs. STEWART. He is dead, the next one. Henry Egbert is living.

Chairman WALSH. The one that died at that point, how old was that child?

Mrs. STEWART. She was a girl 5 months old.

Chairman WALSH. Now, the next one is Henry Egbert?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Is he living?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. How old is he?

Mrs. STEWART. Twenty-one the 11th of October.

Chairman WALSH. Where is John?

Mrs. STEWART. He is at Mulberry.

Chairman WALSH. What is he doing?

Mrs. STEWART. Working on a farm.

Chairman WALSH. Was he a tenant or a laborer on a farm?

Mrs. STEWART. A laborer.

Chairman WALSH. Where is Henry Egbert—is he here?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes; he is here.

Chairman WALSH. Who is the next one?

Mrs. STEWART. Thomas Roy.

Chairman WALSH. How old is he?

Mrs. STEWART. Nineteen the 8th of November.

Chairman WALSH. Where is he?

Mrs. STEWART. He is at Anthony, working on a farm.

Chairman WALSH. Is he a laborer?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, sir; he is a laborer.

Chairman WALSH. What is the next child?

Mrs. STEWART. He is 14.

Chairman WALSH. What is the name of that child?

Mrs. STEWART. Baxter Vernon. There is one dead in between—two dead in between this one and Thomas Roy.

Chairman WALSH. What are the names of the dead ones?

Mrs. STEWART. Ora Vivian, a girl.

Chairman WALSH. How old was she when she died?

Mrs. STEWART. Three years and ten days old; she died in Faulkner County, Ark.

Chairman WALSH. What did she die of?

Mrs. STEWART. Congestion.

Chairman WALSH. How long was she sick?

Mrs. STEWART. Four days.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have medical attendance?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And the next one to Ora Vivian, who is dead, what was the name of that child?

Mrs. STEWART. Willie Joe.

Chairman WALSH. How old was he when he died?

Mrs. STEWART. Five months old.

Chairman WALSH. Where did he die?

Mrs. STEWART. He died there where Vivian died.

Chairman WALSH. Take Baxter Vernon, how old is he?

Mrs. STEWART. He will be 15 in April; he was born on the 4th of April, 1902.

Chairman WALSH. Where is he?

Mr. STEWART. He is here with us.

Chairman WALSH. Who is the next one?

Mrs. STEWART. Myra M.

Chairman WALSH. How old is Myra?

Mrs. STEWART. She is 10 years old the 11th, I believe, of February.

Chairman WALSH. Myra is here?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And who is the next one?

Mrs. STEWART. Lian Lester.

Chairman WALSH. How old is Lian?

Mrs. STEWART. Six years old.

Chairman WALSH. And Lian is with you?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. The next one is who?

Mrs. STEWART. Henry—he ain't got no name.

Chairman WALSH. How old is he?

Mrs. STEWART. Six years old—5 years old.

Chairman WALSH. You say that he has not been named?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes; William Henry; Luke is his nickname.

Chairman WALSH. How old is he?

Mrs. STEWART. Five years old.

Chairman WALSH. And the next one?

Mrs. STEWART. Levi Bezileal.

Chairman WALSH. How old is Levi?

Mrs. STEWART. Three years old, in October.

Chairman WALSH. Now, those are all?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would start out. Mr. Stewart, if you will, please, and tell us what your history has been; that is, how long did you stay with your parents before you went out for yourself.

Mr. STEWART. I stayed with them until I was 18 years old.

Chairman WALSH. Then what did you do?

Mr. STEWART. I got married.

Chairman WALSH. How old were you when you got married? Oh, you say you were 18?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How old was your wife?

Mr. STEWART. She was 15.

Chairman WALSH. You married a girl in the neighborhood?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Where was the first place you went out for yourself?

Mr. STEWART. I was in Arkansas, at Conway.

Chairman WALSH. What did you do there?

Mr. STEWART. I farmed.

Chairman WALSH. Did you rent a place?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; I rented that year.

Chairman WALSH. How much of a place did you rent?

Mr. STEWART. I rented about 25 acres that year, the first year.

Chairman WALSH. How did you rent? What sort of a contract did you have?

Mr. STEWART. One-third and one-fourth, a verbal contract.

Chairman WALSH. That was the first year when you went out for yourself?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What did you furnish that year and what did your landlord furnish?

Mr. STEWART. I furnished one mule and my plows, and the landlord furnished nothing but the land.

Chairman WALSH. You had that mule on hand? Did you start in your married life with a team?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; I bought one mule on credit.

Chairman WALSH. Had you any savings at all when you got married?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; none at all.

Chairman WALSH. How much did you pay for the mule?

Mr. STEWART. I think it was $105.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you have to pay it in?

Mr. STEWART. Until the next fall.

Chairman WALSH. What interest were you charged on the purchase price of the mule?

Mr. STEWART. Well, I don't know about the interest; they just sold me the mule for $105. I don't think there was any interest; it was worth about $75, that mule was.

Chairman WALSH. Did you give him a mortgage?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What else did you buy, if anything?

Mr. STEWART. I bought some groceries.

Chairman WALSH. Did you go in debt for them?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; to the same man.

Chairman WALSH. You bought them of the same man that sold you the mule?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you buy anything else?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; just groceries.

Chairman WALSH. Who was that man?

Mr. STEWART. W. D. Cole.

Chairman WALSH. Where does he live?

Mr. STEWART. At Conway.

Chairman WALSH. Did he own the land?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did he run a store in Conway?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. You knew him before, did you?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. You just went to him and got this credit and started in?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you stay at that place?

Mr. STEWART. One year.

Chairman WALSH. How did you quit at that time, did you pay for the mule?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; I did by settling the crop and everything in the summer; the fellow took the crop and everything and paid for the mule.

Chairman WALSH. What sort of a crop did you get the first year?

Mr. STEWART. About 5 bales of cotton and about 100 bushels of corn.

Chairman WALSH. Was that considered a good crop in that country?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; a good year.

Chairman WALSH. Why did you leave there at the end of the first year?

Mr. STEWART. That was a sickly place, and I didn't want to stay there.

Chairman WALSH. Had you been sick the first year, or your wife?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; I had been sick.

Chairman WALSH. What sort of a place was it—what did you get? You say the place was sickly. Did you have chills and fever?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; chills and fever.

Chairman WALSH. Where did you go after your first year?

Mr. STEWART. I went on my mother's place then.

Chairman WALSH. Did your mother own a place?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; my mother owned a place.

Chairman WALSH. How many acres did you have to farm then?

Mr. STEWART. Twenty-five acres on her place.

Chairman WALSH. You had this mule, did you?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; I rented a mule the next year from my brother.

Chairman WALSH. What became of the mule you paid $105 for?

Mr. STEWART. I sold it and the crop; I gave it to the fellow to get him to take up the note for the mule and my groceries.

Chairman WALSH. It took the mule and what you had raised to make you square?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you discharge all of your obligations and quit squarely?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; I quit square.

Chairman WALSH. And when you went onto your mother's place you rented a mule?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have anything else when you went on there?

Mr. STEWART. No.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you stay there?

Mr. STEWART. I stayed there one year.

Chairman WALSH. What did you raise there?

Mr. STEWART. Corn and cotton.

Chairman WALSH. How much did you raise, if you remember?

Mr. STEWART. I raised about 5 bales that year, and about 100 bushels of corn.

Chairman WALSH. The same as the year before?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. A fair crop?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. How did you come out that year?

Mr. STEWART. That year I came out, I think, about $15 to the good.

Chairman WALSH. Did you work hard?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. When was your first baby born? I mean with reference to the date of your marriage?

Mr. STEWART. In 1888.

Mrs. STEWART. No, Papa, in 1889.

Chairman WALSH. Now, why did you leave your mother's place?

Mr. STEWART. Well, she rented it out to another man, and it was too rocky and poor, and I thought I could do better.

Chairman WALSH. Where did you go?

Mr. STEWART. I went to another place owned by a fellow by the name of Naylor that year.

Chairman WALSH. You say you were $15 to the good?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. How much land did you farm from Mr. Naylor?

Mr. STEWART. I taken about 30 acres from him.

Chairman WALSH. That is what they call a one-team tenant farm?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How did you do about your live stock then?

Mr. STEWART. I bought me a pony.

Chairman WALSH. Did you buy that pony on credit?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; I bought it on credit.

Chairman WALSH. Did you buy anything else on credit?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; I didn't buy anything on credit but the groceries; I bought them on credit.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would please at this time—you just had yourself and wife that first year, and the baby was born in 1889?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Tell just what you did now in actual work during those first two years; just describe it fully, because we are perfectly innocent about it; what time you did your work, when you got up in the morning, how much of the year you did work, and how much of the year you did not work and, the whole story.

Mr. STEWART. We got up early and stayed with it late.

Chairman WALSH. Did your wife do any work?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; she helped me work.

Chairman WALSH. What did she do?

Mr. STEWART. She hoed cotton and picked cotton.

Chairman WALSH. What did you consider early?

Mr. STEWART. Getting out in the field by sunup.

Chairman WALSH. What time did you leave?

Mr. STEWART. At sundown.

Chairman WALSH. What did you do?

Mr. STEWART. I plowed and hoed.

Chairman WALSH. What did your wife do?

Mr. STEWART. She hoed.

Chairman WALSH. Did it take both of you to do the work?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And you were there alone, were you?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What did you do for amusement? Did you have any amusement of any kind?

Mr. STEWART. No.

Chairman WALSH. No church socials or gatherings in the neighborhood?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir. Sometimes we would have church of a Sunday.

Chairman WALSH. Was there any sort of entertainment or diversion of any kind; any show you could go to?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. No gatherings of any kind?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; not during the crop time.

Chairman WALSH. What is the "crop time"?

Mr. STEWART. That is about from the middle of February until the middle of July.

Chairman WALSH. What did you do after that—between the middle of July and the middle of February again?

Mr. STEWART. We would saw some stove wood, and cut wood, and anything we could get to do.

Chairman WALSH. What is the cotton-picking time?

Mr. STEWART. It commences from about the 15th of September.

Chairman WALSH. Who picked your cotton?

Mr. STEWART. I and her picked it along them times.

Chairman WALSH. You and she when you were alone?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How long did it take you to pick your cotton?

Mr. STEWART. It taken us until about the 1st of December.

Chairman WALSH. Now, after that second year, where did you go; you say you got a pony and went on another place?

Mr. STEWART. Yes. I bought me a little railroad farm; I mean some railroad land and built me a little house; I just built the house on my land and rented some land from my brother for the crop; he bought him some railroad land.

Chairman WALSH. How much railroad land did you buy?

Mr. STEWART. Forty acres.

Chairman WALSH. On what terms did you buy?

Mr. STEWART. I bought it on six years' time.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you have the railroad land and work on it?

Mr. STEWART. I just had it one year.

Chairman WALSH. What sort of a year did you have that year?

Mr. STEWART. I had a pretty good year, a favorable year.

Chairman WALSH. How did you come to leave at the end of the first year? Why didn't you go on the six years?

Mr. STEWART. I could not go on. Cotton went down, and everything got balled up, and I could not pay for it.

Chairman WALSH. What did cotton sell for at that time, that year?

Mr. STEWART. I think it sold about 7 cents that year.

Chairman WALSH. How many bales of cotton did you raise on the 40 acres?

Mr. STEWART. That crop I made—you understand that was on my brother's place.

Chairman WALSH. You did not raise it on your own place?

Mr. STEWART. No.

Chairman WALSH. You just built a house and didn't do anything else on that?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; I cleared 3 acres, but I didn't put anything on it.

Chairman WALSH. What was the 40 acres made up of?

Mr. STEWART. All in the woods.

Chairman WALSH. You built a house for yourself?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. With your own hands?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And cleared 3 acres around your place, you say?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. How many acres did you farm on your brother's place?

Mr. STEWART. I farmed 20 or 25 acres.

Chairman WALSH. What sort of a contract did you have with your brother?

Mr. STEWART. A third and a fourth.

Chairman WALSH. What did you raise that year on your brother's land?

Mr. STEWART. Corn and cotton.

Chairman WALSH. How much did you raise?

Mr. STEWART. Six bales.

Chairman WALSH. You did extra well that year compared with the other years?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And about the same amount of corn?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; just about the same amount of corn.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know about how much you were in debt when you started in?

Mr. STEWART. When I started in with that crop?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. I expect I was in debt about $100.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you say you got balled up. How much were you short of paying out when you got through that year, if anything? You say you got six bales of cotton, and that cotton went down to 7 cents?

Mr. STEWART. I lacked about $40 of paying out that year.

Chairman WALSH. Of paying out everything?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Where did you go then?

Mr. STEWART. I moved about 20 miles north of there.

Chairman WALSH. What became of your own 40 acres where you cleared the 8 acres and built a house?

Mr. STEWART. I traded that to the doctor.

Chairman WALSH. What did you get out of it?

Mr. STEWART. I got a doctor bill and $15.

Chairman WALSH. You had run a doctor bill, had you?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What was the house worth?

Mr. STEWART. It was a log house, and I expect it cost $75 or $100. It was just a one-room log house, and I had a barn built.

Chairman WALSH. How long did it take you to build it?

Mr. STEWART. It took me to build it, I expect, about 10 days—to cut the logs and everything.

Chairman WALSH. The doctor gave you his bill and $15 for your equity in this place?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. That is, your equity in the whole 40 acres of land?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What did you agree to pay the railroad for it?

Mr. STEWART. $5 an acre.

Chairman WALSH. $200 for the whole thing?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What was the amount of the doctor's bill?

Mr. STEWART. I disremember now what it was.

Chairman WALSH. What did it include in a general way? Had you been sick yourself?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; and my wife had been sick.

Chairman WALSH. Was there a baby that year?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. I guess there was. When you went up 20 miles farther what did you have?

Mr. STEWART. We did not have anything but one horse and a cow.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have a wagon?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; I didn't have no wagon.

Chairman WALSH. Just the horse?

Mr. STEWART. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. How did you get up those 20 miles?

Mr. STEWART. I got a team from that fellow I went to work for on his place.

Chairman WALSH. How much land did you undertake to farm up there?

Mr. STEWART. About 80 acres.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you stay there?

Mr. STEWART. I stayed there two years.

Chairman WALSH. You started in with nothing, except this horse?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Where did you get the cow?

Mr. STEWART. My father-in-law gave her to us.

Chairman WALSH. Just for a present?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Before you went on this place?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Did you go in debt?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. For your groceries?

Mr. STEWART. Yes. I bought my groceries on time.

Chairman WALSH. Did you buy anything else on time?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. When you bought your groceries, did you give a chattel mortgage on your crop?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; my brother stood good for them; I was living on his mother-in-law's place.

Chairman WALSH. Your brother-in-law stood good for your groceries?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How did you have the land that year?

Mr. STEWART. On a third and a fourth.

Chairman WALSH. How much cotton did you raise?

Mr. STEWART. I think we made 4 bales that year.

Chairman WALSH. Why did you run short that year? Was it a bad year?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; it was a bad year and poor land.

Chairman WALSH. How much did you raise of corn?

Mr. STEWART. Not over 75 bushels.

Chairman WALSH. Did you run back that year?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; I came out even that year.

Chairman WALSH. Where are you now? Where is the place you stayed on for two years?

Mr. STEWART. In Faulkner County, Ark.

Chairman WALSH. The same county you started in?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. That was the county of your birth place?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; I was born in White County.

Chairman WALSH. Now, how did you do the next year? You say you came out about even the first year?

Mr. STEWART. Well, I came out about even the next year.

Chairman WALSH. And did you get any better crop of cotton?

Mr. STEWART. I got 4 bales the next year.

Chairman WALSH. You got 4 the first?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; 3, I believe it was, 3 or 4.

Chairman WALSH. But you did a little better the first year as far as the amount of cotton was concerned?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; it was a little better price.

Chairman WALSH. How much did you get a bale for the cotton?

Mr. STEWART. The second year there we got 4 cents.

Chairman WALSH. Four cents?

Commissioner LENNON. Four cents for the cotton?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How much would you say—I will go back, because I did not cover that, and Mrs. Harriman asks me to ask the question—was the cotton in the lint or in the seed?

Mr. STEWART. In the lint. It sold for 4 cents.

Chairman WALSH. What was seed worth then?

Mr. STEWART. I think it is worth about five to six dollars a ton, maybe.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would go back and begin right with the first year when you got 5 bales and tell us, as best you can remember, how much you got for your cotton altogether, the total. What did it sell for?

Mr. STEWART. I think it sold, as well as I can remember, I think it sold for about 8 or 9 cents the first year.

Chairman WALSH. And how much a bale, by the bale, would it be?

Mr. STEWART. They averaged about 500, the bales did.

Chairman WALSH. About 500 pounds to the bale?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; about 500 pounds, I reckon, to the bale.

Chairman WALSH. Now, then, at the end of these two years you say your cotton sold down about four?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And you only had 4 bales that year; and how much corn?

Mr. STEWART. We made out 75 bushel.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you say you came out about even?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; that year.

Chairman WALSH. How about when you came out about even; what do you mean; that you did not have anything before, when you got twice as much for your cotton, now; does that mean that you had to live any scantier, in a scantier way?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Then, I wish you would describe just about how you lived during the years when you got 5 bales and got 8 cents a pound or 8½. Describe it in your own way, if you lived in the same condition, just about what you would get, about what your ordinary meal would be, and what would you get from the store, and what your bills would consist of, and what you would buy at the store.

Mr. STEWART. Just buy a little meat and bread.

Chairman WALSH. What kind of meat?

Mr. STEWART. Bulk pork; and coffee.

Chairman WALSH. And coffee?

Mr. STEWART. And a little flour.

Chairman WALSH. How about fresh meat?

Mr. STEWART. I didn't buy any fresh meat.

Chairman WALSH. Did you ever have any fresh meat at all?

Mr. STEWART. No.

Chairman WALSH. You say bread. Did you buy bread already made?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; we bought flour; and I worked up at the mill there to help a fellow on Saturday to get some little meal in them years.

Chairman WALSH. You never had—how about vegetables; did you raise any?

Mr. STEWART. We raised some; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And what kind did you raise; some potatoes?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; raised some potatoes.

Chairman WALSH. Did you usually raise enough potatoes to keep you in potatoes for the year?

Mr. STEWART. No.

Chairman WALSH. Why not?

Mr. STEWART. We just could not raise—the drought or something, you know.

Chairman WALSH. But you tried to raise enough?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; sure.

Chairman WALSH. What other sorts of vegetables did you have?

Mr. STEWART. Cabbage, onions, and tomatoes.

Chairman WALSH. And did you try to raise enough to go around the year?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; we tried to raise all we could.

Chairman WALSH. And you usually would have enough a part of the time so you would have these vegetables?

Mr. STEWART. We would have until up about July, and the drought would come and then the garden would be burned up. It was a droughty country, you know.

Chairman WALSH. Now, what did you have to pay for coffee?

Mr. STEWART. I think along in them times, as well as I remember, we got 5 or 6 pounds at a dollar.

Chairman WALSH. Five or 6 pounds for a dollar?

Mr. STEWART. I think so; as well as I remember.

Chairman WALSH. And sugar, what did you pay for that?

Mr. STEWART. I declare I don't remember just what it was. Maybe we got about 16 pounds of it.

Chairman WALSH. Now, about your clothing at that time. Where did you buy your clothing?

Mr. STEWART. We bought what we did buy there at Conway.

Chairman WALSH. At Conway?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How often did you go to Conway—how far were you from Conway then?

Mr. STEWART. That was 18 miles.

Chairman WALSH. Eighteen miles?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And how often did your wife get in to Conway?

Mr. STEWART. She never went at all.

Chairman WALSH. Who bought her stuff, for instance, her own clothing, and so on?

Mr. STEWART. I would whenever I would go.

Chairman WALSH. During the two years you were at this place did you wife ever go to a store?

Mr. STEWART. I think she went once to a little country store.

Chairman WALSH. Only once?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And her clothing was purchased how?

Mr. STEWART. We bought them on credit, you know.

Chairman WALSH. But who did the actual buying; did you do it?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did the children ever go to town?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; not there. Not when we were there.

Chairman WALSH. Now, when you left—you are still in Faulkner County on a place for two years?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir. I came back then and lived with my wife's father one year.

Chairman WALSH. Did you farm that year?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have a place?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. How many acres did you farm?

Mr. STEWART. About 30 acres.

Chairman WALSH. How did you come out that year?

Mr. STEWART. I came out of debt, but I believe, maybe I lacked $15, I think, I believe it was.

Chairman WALSH. And where did you go to from there?

Mr. STEWART. I went to my mother's place again.

Chairman WALSH. And how long did you work there?

Mr. STEWART. I worked there one year.

Chairman WALSH. Have you been a man of good habits? Do you drink much?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Drink any at all?

Mr. STEWART. I have taken a drink in days gone by.

Chairman WALSH. Was there any time when you kept liquor at your house?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Never did?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Were you ever what might be called a man that was addicted to drink, since you have been where you could get a drink?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you stay on your mother's place at this time?

Mr. STEWART. I stayed there one year.

Chairman WALSH. How much did you farm there?

Mr. STEWART. About 30 acres.

Chairman WALSH. Do you remember what year that was when you got back to your mother's place?

Mr. STEWART. It was in 1899.

Chairman WALSH. 1899?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And that is in what county?

Mr. STEWART. Faulkner.

Chairman WALSH. Arkansas?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And you stayed there one year?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Now, what did you raise that year?

Mr. STEWART. We raised some corn and cotton, raised 5 bales of cotton and about 150 bushels of corn.

Chairman WALSH. How did you come out?

Mr. STEWART. I came out $35 in debt.

Chairman WALSH. How old was this first boy when he went to work on the farm?

Mr. STEWART. Why, he was lacking about—

Mrs. STEWART. He was 7 years.

Chairman WALSH. How old are the children usually before you can utilize them on a farm for anything?

Mr. STEWART. I guess about 7 years old.

Chairman WALSH. And what is the first thing a child does at the age of 7?

Mr. STEWART. Generally picks cotton.

Mrs. STEWART. And drops corn. We were planting by hand then.

Chairman WALSH. Did your boy start to do that, your oldest boy, as soon as he was old enough?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I am going to have you kind of skip through and tell what the school facilities are that the oldest boy had? Did he go to school any?

Mr. STEWART. He went to school some, but not very much.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know what reader he was in when he quit?

Mrs. STEWART. Second grade.

Chairman WALSH. How did he happen to quit?

Mrs. STEWART. We lived on the farm so far from the school that we couldn't get to it. We moved to Texas and lived on a rented place far from the school, and by the time we got to where we could send him to school he was so old he was ashamed to go, and we could never get him to go. He was 14 years old.

Chairman WALSH. How much schooling did that oldest boy have altogether, Mr. Stewart?

Mr. STEWART. I do not suppose he went over one year.

Mrs. STEWART. He never went over parts of three sessions.

Chairman WALSH. Parts of three sessions?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you ever have any ideas about that boy starting in, Mr. Stewart, as to what you would like to have the boy do, what business he should follow? Did you ever have any idea he should follow a profession, or anything of that kind?

Mr. STEWART. No; I would rather have him on a farm.

Chairman WALSH. It was your desire, then, that he should be a farmer?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; I think that is the happiest life if a man can get hooked up right.

Chairman WALSH. What was your ambition with respect to that boy—that he should own a farm of his own some day?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And you figured that if he could get in right—get to own land—it was an intelligent and free way for him to live?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And it was your desire that—that was all you knew; that had been your business and your father's business before you?

Mr. STEWART. Sure; yes.

Chairman WALSH. All your family as far back as you know anything about?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; they were all farmers.

Chairman WALSH. Now, during all these years was there any public direction of any kind? Was there anybody from a university or from the school that came to the farmer to teach him improved methods of farming?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; not in them times.

Chairman WALSH. Did you in all your life ever receive any suggestions or directions from any other place as to how you might improve your condition by raising better crops or more of what you did raise, or anything of that sort?

Mr. STEWART. Not until we got to Texas.

Chairman WALSH. Not until you got to Texas?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, then, after you left—how long were you on your mother's place at that time?

Mr. STEWART. I was there one year.

Chairman WALSH. You quit a little behind?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Where did you go to from there?

Mr. STEWART. I went about 2 miles from there.

Chairman WALSH. In the same county?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And you rented again?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Did you always have a verbal contract with all of these folks?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Never had a written contract?

Mr. STEWART. Never did; no.

Chairman WALSH. There was an established custom, was there, every place you went?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. That is, as to the terms of the contract—what you should do and what the landlord should do?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And also there was a general custom about the crops?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you stay on this place that you went to after you left your mother's?

Mr. STEWART. I stayed there one year.

Chairman WALSH. And what did you raise there?

Mr. STEWART. Corn and cotton

Chairman WALSH. How much—do you remember? What sort of a crop did you have that year?

Mr. STEWART. I had a good crop that year for a one-horse man. I made 8 bales of cotton and about between 200 and 300 bushels of corn.

Chairman WALSH. How was cotton selling that year—do you remember?

Mr. STEWART. It was selling at 10 cents in 1900.

Chairman WALSH. That, comparatively, must have been a good year?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How did you come out that year?

Mr. STEWART. I came out about $200 to the good that year.

Chairman WALSH. About $200 to the good?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, that year, as you made more money, did your expenses increase any?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; they did not.

Chairman WALSH. You kept it right down to buying some things at the store?

Mr. STEWART. Sure.

Chairman WALSH. And you were clothed the same and your children were clothed the same and all?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You came out with $200 in cash?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What did you do next?

Mr. STEWART. Well, I bought here a little place from a fellow. I bought a railroad forty, and then I bought another 40 from an individual.

Chairman WALSH. You bought 80 acres of land that year that you had the $200?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And then that 40 that you bought from the railroad, was it wooded land?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; in the woods.

Chairman WALSH. What was your personal desire about this matter? Did you want to continue to be a renter or did you want to be a farm owner?

Mr. STEWART. I wanted to own my place.

Chairman WALSH. You wanted to own a place?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And you desired to get a place large enough, if you could, so that your children could stay there on it?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; sure.

Chairman WALSH. Now, then, please just give us the result of that. You bought 40 acres from the railroad?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And what did you do about the other 40?

Mr. STEWART. I bought that from an individual.

Chairman WALSH. Was it adjoining?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What did you have to pay down on it?

Mr. STEWART. I paid the individual $50 and I paid the railroad company $35.

Chairman WALSH. And was there any house on it?

Mr. STEWART. There was on that I bought of the individual. It was improved; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What was on that?

Mr. STEWART. A house and barn and well, about 20 acres of land cleared.

Chairman WALSH. About 3 cleared?

Mr. STEWART. About 20.

Chairman WALSH. About 20 acres cleared?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And was any of the railroad land cleared?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. That was original land?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And had the man you bought this from cropped on it?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What sort of land was it?

Mr. STEWART. Why, it was hill land, what you call hill land, you know, in Arkansas, upland.

Chairman WALSH. Was it pretty fair land for cotton?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; it was pretty fair land for that country; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you stay on that place?

Mr. STEWART. I stayed there two years.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would describe your experience on that place. Did you have to go in debt when you started there?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; I did. That is when I lost my children, you know, when that taken my money in that winter, too.

Chairman WALSH. Oh, yes; you paid out $85?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And if you had not had this misfortune you would have had $115 or something like that to start on?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And did you lose two children that same year?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; that same year.

Chairman WALSH. And in a general way what were the expenses of that misfortune—that is, what you had to pay the doctor for attending in their last illness and the funeral, and so on?

Mr. STEWART. Of, course, my wife had erysipelas during the time, and it cost about $100.

Chairman WALSH. It cleaned out what you had on hand?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; cleaned me out.

Chairman WALSH. All this had occurred when you were on this 80?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Both in one year?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Then your wife had erysipelas in that year?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. You mentioned several times about yourself being ill, Mr. Stewart. What was wrong with you, without going into details, if it is not any private matter, or if in any of these questions there is anything that you deem to be particularly private, you do not have to answer, you understand that?

Mr. STEWART. I never had anything except chills and fever.

Chairman WALSH. That is typical of the country, folks there have chills and fever?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Did your wife ever have them?

Mr. STEWART. She had a few.

Chairman WALSH. Didn't it ever occur to you that you could go to a country where there wouldn't be any chills and fever?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Why didn't you go?

Mr. STEWART. Well, I thought when I got to Texas I would be.

Chairman WALSH. You had that in mind all the time then, did you?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; sure.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would just briefly describe your two years on this place. First, how far were you from town?

Mr. STEWART. We were about 15 miles from that Conway town.

Chairman WALSH. From Conway?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Was there any other smaller town close to you?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; there was one store about a mile, a little railroad, a little bit of a railroad town, about a couple of stores about 6 miles.

Chairman WALSH. Where did you do your trading?

Mr. STEWART. Conway.

Chairman WALSH. And did you trade with the same man in Conway all the time through all these years, or did you change?

Mr. STEWART. No; I did not trade all the time with that one. That first one went out of business.

Chairman WALSH. And then you went to another one?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. During all these times did you ever give any chattel mortgage to store keepers?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; I gave—yes; I gave two or three, I reckon, during that time.

Chairman WALSH. When you gave a chattel mortgage, did you pay interest on it?

Mr. STEWART. Sir?

Chairman WALSH. When you gave chattel mortgages, did you pay interest on them?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And did you give notes?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; a note and mortgage.

Chairman WALSH. A note and mortgage?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Did they charge anything for filing them?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Do you remember how much it was?

Mr. STEWART. A dollar, I think, there.

Chairman WALSH. What interest did they charge when you gave the note and the chattel mortgage for supplies?

Mr. STEWART. They claimed they sold at credit price, charged 10 per cent interest.

Chairman WALSH. That is what they charged you?

Mr. STEWART. That is what they claimed.

Mr. NOBLE. He means by 10 cent, they added 10 per cent.

Chairman WALSH. Well, on the debt?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Did you observe there any time when you paid cash during all these years at Conway there was any difference?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; there was some time I paid cash.

Chairman WALSH. When you paid cash, did you notice any difference in the price?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Could you say about what it was? For instance, give us an idea if you bought a side of meat for cash, what did you pay for it?

Mr. STEWART. I don't remember much about the meat, but I remember the corn. You could buy corn for 6 bits a bushel cash and pay a dollar and a dollar and a quarter on time.

Chairman WALSH. Do you remember about other supplies, such as flour?

Mr. STEWART. Well, as I remember there is about $2 higher on the bushel.

Chairman WALSH. About $2 higher on the bushel?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What kind of meat did you buy? You say bulk pork?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Is that what you call dry salt clear sides?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. During the two years that you were on that 80 that you owned yourself, that you yourself bought, how often did your wife go to town to shop, or to Conway?

Mr. STEWART. She never went nary a time. Yes; she went once to the doctor, and did a little trading.

Chairman WALSH. Went where?

Mr. STEWART. Went to the doctor and did a little trading.

Chairman WALSH. When you went to the doctor?

Mr. STEWART. Carried her to the doctor.

Chairman WALSH. Carried your wife to the doctor?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And at the other times you did the trading yourself, did you?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. You bought her clothing?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What was the result of your two years' operations there yourself? Did you clear any of your land of the 40 in the two years?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; I cleared about 10 acres.

Chairman WALSH. What sort of crop did you have the first year?

Mr. STEWART. I had a very good crop the first year. I made about 8 bales of cotton, I think, and about 100 bushels of corn. That was a dry year.

Chairman WALSH. And did you quit that year with anything ahead?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What was cotton selling for that year?

Mr. STEWART. I think 7 to 9 cents.

Chairman WALSH. How did it happen you did not get something ahead? I notice you have a bale more of cotton than you had in your best years.

Mr. STEWART. We just owed a little more.

Mrs. STEWART. That is the year we lost the two children.

Mr. STEWART. That was the bad luck—

Chairman WALSH. That you had the sickness?

Mr. STEWART. I had something cleared up and paid out for them.

Chairman WALSH. How did you come out that year; the first year that you say you come out even or behind?

Mr. STEWART. The first year we came out about even, that year.

Chairman WALSH. What was your experience then, the second year?

Mr. STEWART. We came out about—by selling our team we had $37, I think, left.

Chairman WALSH. You had to sell your team?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What became of the land—your equity in the land?

Mr. STEWART. I let the man have the farm back; the individual that I paid to him the $50; he got the land back and I sold the claim to another—the railroad claim to another man.

Chairman WALSH. What did you sell the railroad claim for, do you remember?

Mr. STEWART. I declare I don't remember. I don't believe I do just remember just what.

Mr. NOBLE. Let it go on the grocery bill.

Chairman WALSH. When you got through there how much did you have, did you say?

Mr. STEWART. I think we had $37 to come to Texas on.

Chairman WALSH. To come to Texas on?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. That is the time that you moved to Texas?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Why did you move to Texas, Mr. Stewart?

Mr. STEWART. I thought we could better our condition.

Chairman WALSH. And where did you go in Texas?

Mr. STEWART. Lamar County.

Chairman WALSH. How did you happen to come to that particular place; had anybody told you about it?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; I had a brother-in-law there and he had been writing to me about that country.

Chairman WALSH. What is the county seat of Lamar?

Mr. STEWART. Paris.

Chairman WALSH. Did you move on the black or sandy land?

Mr. STEWART. Black land the first year.

Chairman WALSH. Who was your landlord?

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Gilbert.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Gilbert?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How much land did you undertake to farm there?

Mr. STEWART. About 50 acres.

Chairman WALSH. About 50 acres?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And what sort of land was it?

Mr. STEWART. Black land.

Chairman WALSH. Is that good land for that purpose?

Mr. STEWART. It was good land.

Chairman WALSH. Good land?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Now, how did you start in there? Did you spend the $37 coming there?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. How many children did you have then, Mr. Stewart? Do you remember, Mrs. Stewart?

Mrs. STEWART. Had four. Had four boys up there—Joha, Egbert, Roy, and Vernon.

Chairman WALSH. Had four?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Now, when you started out, how many children did you have who gave you any assistance on any of the places?

Mr. STEWART. When I came to Texas?

Chairman WALSH. When you came to Texas; yes.

Mrs. STEWART. Two.

Mr. STEWART. The others; he done some cotton picking and hoed some.

Chairman WALSH. You say you took 50 acres?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And what did you do it on, three and four?

Mr. STEWART. Halves; worked that on halves?

Chairman WALSH. Worked that on halves?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you had never had that kind of contract before?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Had you?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would just describe here what sort of a contract you made, if you can do it verbally. I wish you would say what you said to the man you made the contract with and what he said to you. This is an entirely new arrangement so far as you are concerned, is it not?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Just tell us.

Mr. STEWART. He was to furnish the stock and the feed.

Chairman WALSH. Did you go and see him?

Mr. STEWART. And the land; yes.

Chairman WALSH. How did you get to Lamar?

Mr. STEWART. Sir?

Chairman WALSH. How did you come?

Mr. STEWART. I came on the train.

Chairman WALSH. You came on the train?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Paid your fare up and your family's?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Then you went to see this man, did you?

Mr. STEWART. My brother-in-law had it rented, and spoke for it, and then I went to close the deal.

Chairman WALSH. All right. Just tell us what the deal was, what you said to him, and what he said to you.

Mr. STEWART. He was to furnish the stock and the ground and feed them, and I was to work the land and give him half.

Chairman WALSH. How much stock was he to furnish?

Mr. STEWART. One pair of mules.

Chairman WALSH. Anything else?

Mr. STEWART. And tools, you know; and mules and tools and feed and a cultivator.

Chairman WALSH. Anything else?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; he was not to furnish anything else.

Chairman WALSH. I was going to ask you, during that time, now, after you left Conway for Texas, did you usually have a cow?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. During all the time did you have one?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; we had a cow.

Chairman WALSH. And starting in in Texas, you started with a cow?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; I had one to milk from that man, and in the summer we bought it. He let us have one to milk.

Chairman WALSH. Do you usually own a cow, and did you when you were in Arkansas?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have more than one at any time?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; we have two; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What would you say a cow is worth?

Mr. STEWART. In Arkansas?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; in Arkansas.

Mr. STEWART. Well, they were worth about $30—$25 to $30.

Chairman WALSH. And this gentleman furnished you the cow when you came to Lamar?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; he loaned us a cow for a while, and then we bought the cow.

Chairman WALSH. The following summer?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What time did you go on that place, what time of year?

Mr. STEWART. It was in January, about the 5th of January.

Chairman WALSH. And how long did you stay on that place?

Mr. STEWART. We stayed there until the next January.

Chairman WALSH. Now, how much cotton did you raise?

Mr. STEWART. Five bales.

Chairman WALSH. How much corn?

Mr. STEWART. We raised about 100 bushels.

Chairman WALSH. When you went on there did you have any agreement with the landlord as to what you were to raise?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What did he say about that?

Mr. STEWART. He wanted 5 or 6 acres of corn and the balance in cotton.

Chairman WALSH. What did you think about it?

Mr. STEWART. I thought that was pretty tough, but that is the best I could do.

Chairman WALSH. How did you think it ought to be? How would you have done it if the landlord had left it to yourself?

Mr. STEWART. Half in corn.

Chairman WALSH. Why would you have done that?

Mr. STEWART. I would have thought it would have been better, you know. It is not so much work to it to cultivate corn, and a man can have hogs, you know, and have some meat.

Chairman WALSH. You would have divided it up half and half if it had been left to you?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Did you do it exactly the way the landlord directed you to do it or did you have some discussion with him?

Mr. STEWART. I did it just exactly like he said it.

Chairman WALSH. Why didn't you tell him you would rather have half of it in corn, the advantages of it that you might raise meat, and so on?

Mr. STEWART. He was the man, and whenever he told you anything there was no argument to make on it about that place. I had to have the place. We was here—I was here with my family, and if I did not want it the other fellow did, you know.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you say you stayed on that place?

Mr. STEWART. One year.

Chairman WALSH. And you raised 5 bales of cotton?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How far were you from Paris; was that your trading point?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; Paris was the trading place.

Chairman WALSH. Was that your trading point?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How far were you from there?

Mr. STEWART. We were 7 miles.

Chairman WALSH. And did you have to make an agreement or did you make an agreement with the storekeeper to furnish your supply?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; I gave him a mortgage on my half of the crop that year.

Chairman WALSH. What interest did you pay?

Mr. STEWART. He sold the goods and claimed 10 per cent, like I told you.

Chairman WALSH. You paid 10 per cent on the note?

Mr. STEWART. Sure.

Chairman WALSH. Then how did you find the prices there as compared to how they were in Arkansas?

Mr. STEWART. They was pretty high, a little higher.

Chairman WALSH. Were they a little higher?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And did they have a cash price and a credit price?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. At this point we will take a recess until 2 o'clock. I will ask you to come back again, Mr. Stewart, at 2 o'clock promptly. Please be here at that time.

(At 12.30, Wednesday, March 17, 1915, a recess was taken until 2 o'clock of the same day at the same place.)

AFTER RECESS.

Chairman WALSH. If the house will be in order, we will proceed. Please resume the stand, Mr. Stewart.

When we adjourned, Mr. Stewart, I believe I was just about to ask you to describe your first two years of experience in Texas. How did you come out the first year?

Mr. STEWART. Well, I came out just about even the first year.

Chairman WALSH. Now, then, the next year.

Mr. STEWART. Well, I came out just about even the next year; but I moved, you understand.

Chairman WALSH. Why did you move?

Mr. STEWART. Well, I thought I could better my condition. A fellow had a sandy land place about 3 miles from there. He said if I would go over there and cultivate that, and there was fruit there, and there was good sandy land, and I could raise anything I wanted, and he put some stock there, and I could raise it on halves.

Chairman WALSH. Not the same owner?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. A different owner?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What year was it you came to Texas?

Mr. STEWART. 1903.

Chairman WALSH. That brings you to 1905; and in 1905 you went where?

Mr. STEWART. I was there with that man—I stayed with him two years. I went with him in 1904 and stayed with him two years.

Chairman WALSH. That took you to 1906?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What is his name?

Mr. STEWART. Joe Sisson.

Chairman WALSH. What county was that?

Mr. STEWART. Lamar County.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you stay on that place?

Mr. STEWART. Two years.

Chairman WALSH. How many acres were there?

Mr. STEWART. We cultivated about 45 acres.

Chairman WALSH. And when you started in, what did you have, if anything?

Mr. STEWART. I did not have anything but one cow.

Chairman WALSH. And when you started in you didn't have anything but one cow?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you go in debt?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; I went in debt.

Chairman WALSH. How did you secure your indebtedness?

Mr. STEWART. He furnished me what I had to have, and I cut cordwood and stove wood.

Chairman WALSH. You did not give mortgages or notes on anything?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; not any mortgages.

Chairman WALSH. What were your experiences the two years you were with Sisson?

Mr. STEWART. In the two years I made 11 bales of cotton and about 200—no, about 100 bushels of corn—the last year, and raised about 400 bushels the first year.

Chairman WALSH. How did you come out the first year?

Mr. STEWART. I came out about even.

Chairman WALSH. And the second year?

Mr. STEWART. I came out in the hole.

Chairman WALSH. How far behind were you?

Mr. STEWART. I was somewhere near $200 in the hole.

Chairman WALSH. Now, what caused that?

Mr. STEWART. Well, the land was wet. And it did not dry out, you know—we had floods and sickness.

Chairman WALSH. What kind of a house did you have to live in there?

Mr. STEWART. Didn't have much of a house.

Chairman WALSH. Describe it.

Mr. STEWART. It was a two-room house; box house, two 16-foot rooms, and a hall between and to one side a room, and a porch in front.

Chairman WALSH. There were three rooms?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How many children did you have then? That brings you down to 1906—do you remember?

Mrs. STEWART. We had five—we had four when we moved there the first year, and the second year when we left we had five children—one girl and four boys.

Chairman WALSH. When you left there, where did you go?

Mr. STEWART. I went 4 miles southwest of Paris.

Chairman WALSH. Same county?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What did you rent then?

Mr. STEWART. Rented black land.

Chairman WALSH. How much?

Mr. STEWART. I rented about 55 acres.

Chairman WALSH. You say you came out about $200 in the hole?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And you owed the money to Mr. Sisson?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; I owed some doctor bills and some fellows that went my security for things while I was making the crop on his place.

Chairman WALSH. Did you break even with Mr. Sisson?

Mr. STEWART. I broke even with Mr. Sisson.

Chairman WALSH. And your indebtedness of $200 consisted of what?

Mr. STEWART. Doctor bills, and then for a note at the bank for supplies.

Chairman WALSH. Did you spend any of your money for patent medicines during this time?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; I didn't spend any money for patent medicines.

Chairman WALSH. All the medical attention you got was through regular physicians?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; through regular physicians.

Chairman WALSH. And they supplied you with medicines or gave you prescriptions?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How far was Sisson's place from town?

Mr. STEWART. About 12 miles from Paris.

Chairman WALSH. Who did you trade with at that time; did your wife come to town?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir. Hardly ever.

Chairman WALSH. How frequently was she in town during that time?

Mr. STEWART. Once, I think.

Mrs. STEWART. I went to town twice in that two years.

Chairman WALSH. You bought the clothing for the children?

Mr. STEWART. I did; what was bought, except the times she went.

Chairman WALSH. When you left Sisson's place, where did you go?

Mr. STEWART. Four miles southwest of Paris, on Jim Donegan's place.

Chairman WALSH. When was that, in the spring of 1906?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you stay on Jim Donegan's place?

Mr. STEWART. One year.

Chairman WALSH. What did you make there?

Mr. STEWART. Five acres of corn and about 50 acres of cotton.

Chairman WALSH. How did you come out that year?

Mr. STEWART. About $200 to the good.

Chairman WALSH. You made about $200?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Why didn't you stay there?

Mr. STEWART. Well, he wanted me to—the house was not very good. We got our house burned up and the house was not very good; and it was down among the niggers, and no school nor nothing, and no convenience, and he would not fix anything, and I didn't stay.

Chairman WALSH. Where did you go?

Mr. STEWART. I went to High town.

Chairman WALSH. Where is High town?

Mr. STEWART. Thirteen miles this side of Paris, on the T. P.

Chairman WALSH. In what county; in the same county?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What did you do there?

Mr. STEWART. Farmed on M. T. Drummond's place.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you stay on Drummond's place?

Mr. STEWART. Two years.

Chairman WALSH. How much land did you have here on Drummond's place?

Mr. STEWART. One hundred acres.

Chairman WALSH. How many tenants were there on that place?

Mr. STEWART. Just myself.

Chairman WALSH. How much did you have? Did you have the whole hundred acres?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; I had the whole hundred acres.

Chairman WALSH. What did you raise?

Mr. STEWART. Twenty-five acres of corn and 75 acres of cotton.

Chairman WALSH. How many bushels of corn did you get out of it?

Mr. STEWART. I got out of it about 750 bushels.

Chairman WALSH. How much cotton did you raise?

Mr. STEWART. Thirty-four bales.

Chairman WALSH. How much did you get out of it? How did you come out the first year?

Mr. STEWART. We came out just about even.

Chairman WALSH. What was the cause of that?

Mr. STEWART. Well, there was just the high price of everything; and cotton went down low and trade was bad, and the wet fall.

Chairman WALSH. When you started in, did you go in debt again?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What were the terms of your indebtedness? How did you get your provisions?

Mr. STEWART. I got the man at High town; I gave him a little mortgage on my cotton and corn.

Chairman WALSH. Who was this man?

Mr. STEWART. D. A. Coleman.

Chairman WALSH. The storekeeper at High?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Did you pay interest on the mortgage?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How about the price of your provisions?

Mr. STEWART. They came pretty high.

Chairman WALSH. Did they come higher than if you had paid cash for them?

Mr. STEWART. Oh, yes.

Chairman WALSH. What did you do the next year?

Mr. STEWART. Stayed on that same place.

Chairman WALSH. On Drummond's place?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What did you raise the next year?

Mr. STEWART. The same thing.

Chairman WALSH. Twenty-five acres of corn and 75 acres of cotton?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What price did you get for your cotton? Was it any better the next year?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; it was not hardly as good.

Chairman WALSH. How did you come out?

Mr. STEWART. I came out about even that year.

Chairman WALSH. To whom did you sell the cotton?

Mr. STEWART. Sir?

Chairman WALSH. To whom did you sell the cotton when you were on Drummond's place?

Mr. STEWART. To MacBeth, at High, and I think a little to a fellow by the name of Bays.

Mr. HOLMAN. Were they merchant or cotton buyers?

Mr. STEWART. Cotton buyers.

Mr. HOLMAN. What kind of cotton was that—middling?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; I suppose it was middling.

Chairman WALSH. Did they grade it for you?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. HOLMAN. They told you the grade?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. HOLMAN. You do not know much about grading cotton?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; I don't know much about it.

Chairman WALSH. Did you sell your own cotton all the time you were in Texas?

Mr. STEWART. I did, except the time I was an Donegan's place; he sold the cotton.

Chairman WALSH. After you left Drummond's—you went there in 1907, and that would take you up to 1909; you were there two years, were you?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Where did you go from there?

Mr. STEWART. I went to Ed Kimball's place at Brockton, about 3 miles away.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you stay there?

Mr. STEWART. One year.

Chairman WALSH. How many acres did you farm there?

Mr. STEWART. About 25 acres.

Chairman WALSH. Why did you come to leave Drummond's?

Mr. STEWART. This man Kimball had some tools and teams he wanted to sell and move to town, and I bought them and his tools and worked on a third and a fourth.

Chairman WALSH. How much land did you have there?

Mr. STEWART. One hundred and twenty-five acres.

Chairman WALSH. You were on halves with Drummond's?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; on halves with Drummond's.

Chairman WALSH. Then you went with the next man on a third and a fourth?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; I bought his teams and tools.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you stay there?

Mr. STEWART. One year. Then he sold out the place.

Chairman WALSH. How did you do the year you stayed there?

Mr. STEWART. We made 48 bales of cotton and a thousand bushels of corn.

Chairman WALSH. Now, how did you come out in a money way the year you were there?

Mr. STEWART. Well, we broke about even, paying for my teams.

Chairman WALSH. You paid for the teams, did you?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. When you got through he sold out the place?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What did you have in the way of property, then?

Mr. STEWART. I had them mules and plow tools and two wagons I bought from him.

Chairman WALSH. Anything else?

Mr. STEWART. And the corn, you know; I didn't have any money.

Chairman WALSH. About how much corn did you have?

Mr. STEWART. I have—I had about seven or eight hundred bushels when we left there. We figured we raised about a thousand bushels.

Chairman WALSH. What was corn worth then?

Mr. STEWART. Sixty-five cents.

Chairman WALSH. That was the best year you ever had in your farming operations?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What was your team worth—what were your teams worth?

Mr. STEWART. I gave him $750 for the outfit.

Chairman WALSH. Was it worth that, do you think?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; it was not worth that.

Chairman WALSH. What do you think it was worth?

Mr. STEWART. It was worth about $800.

Chairman WALSH. It was worth $800?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Then you had $400 worth of corn, and more, didn't you?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. So that year, why, you made about $1,000?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Now, would you have stayed there if he had not sold out?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; I guess I would; he said I could.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have any quarrels with any of these landlords, say, after you came to Texas? Were your personal relations with them friendly when you left them?

Mr. STEWART. Me and the preacher, Sisson, had a little round. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. He is the only one?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How long were you on Sisson's place?

Mr. STEWART. Two years.

Chairman WALSH. What was your trouble about?

Mr. STEWART. That was about some land clearing. We cleared the land, and it overflowed and didn't get cultivated, and he didn't want to pay us for clearing it, because it didn't make him anything.

Chairman WALSH. How much was the clearing worth, did you claim?

Mr. STEWART. It was worth $8 an acre, but I did it for $4 an acre.

Chairman WALSH. How many acres?

Mr. STEWART. About 8 acres of it.

Chairman WALSH. How did you settle your controversy?

Mr. STEWART. We just let it go.

Chairman WALSH. He allowed you for it, did he?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; he didn't allow us for it. And I just left.

Chairman WALSH. You claim that you were not paid for the acreage you cleared at all?

Mr. STEWART. Sure I was not.

Chairman WALSH. Why didn't you insist upon your right? Why didn't you sue him?

Mr. STEWART. I did insist on my rights, but I was a stranger here then, and I didn't have any money or anybody to go my bond, and no friends, and I couldn't do anything.

Chairman WALSH. Did you talk to a lawyer about it?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; I didn't. I thought I would let it go.

Chairman WALSH. Why didn't you consult a lawyer about it.

Mr. STEWART. Because I didn't have the money.

Chairman WALSH. How long did it take you to do the clearing you claim you were not paid for?

Mr. STEWART. Off and on all winter. We didn't work steady at it all the time, but we put in all the time that we could not plow.

Chairman WALSH. Now, then, after you closed out on this place, where you had the corn, which left you with the corn and teams, where did you go?

Mr. STEWART. I went with Mr. Smiley.

Chairman WALSH. Where is he?

Mr. STEWART. At High.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you stay with Smiley?

Mr. STEWART. We made four crops.

Chairman WALSH. Four years?

Mr. STEWART. Three years on one place, and then we moved on another place, but it was his place, too.

Chairman WALSH. When you began with Smiley, how much land did you take?

Mr. STEWART. One hundred and twenty acres.

Chairman WALSH. You started in with your team?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And the corn that you had, what did you do with it?

Mr. STEWART. Sold some of it.

Chairman WALSH. What did you do with the rest of it?

Mr. STEWART. Sir?

Chairman WALSH. Did you have some of it when you started with Smiley?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. How did you come out the first year at Smiley's?

Mr. STEWART. I didn't come out; I made a good crop. But he had a son-in-law, and the son-in-law had a store, and they had about all of it booked up.

Chairman WALSH. How many bales of cotton did you raise?

Mr. STEWART. We made 52 that year.

Chairman WALSH. And how many bushels of corn?

Mr. STEWART. We made about seven or eight hundred bushels of corn.

Chairman WALSH. How far were you from High?

Mr. STEWART. About a mile.

Chairman WALSH. You were right close to town?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What kind of land did you have?

Mr. STEWART. Black land.

Chairman WALSH. Good farming land?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Was good farming land?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. That is the closest you have been to town, is it not, at any time?

Mr. STEWART. No. When I was on Mr. Drummond's there I was that close.

Chairman WALSH. Only just a mile from town?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How were the school facilities there?

Mr. STEWART. There was not any that amounted to anything. It was a mile and a half through the black mud—what little school there was.

Chairman WALSH. Did any of your children go to school there, when you left there?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Why not?

Mr. STEWART. It was just too muddy to go—to send them.

Chairman WALSH. Well, now, how did you come out the first year at Smiley's—I mean financially?

Mr. STEWART. I came out about even.

Chairman WALSH. What was cotton selling at that year?

Mr. STEWART. It was selling from 12 to 15 cents.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have any sickness or anything of that kind that year?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; not anything to amount to anything.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would explain what you mean by the store charging it up in accounts.

Mr. STEWART. Well, you see, I traded there. There were two stores there—a fellow by the name of Mr. White ran a store, and Mr. Smiley's son-in-law ran a store, you know, and so I commenced to trade with them. He wanted me to, of course; you know it was his.

Chairman WALSH. Did you give a chattel mortgage there?

Mr. STEWART. No; I never give anything there.

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. And traded on, and they claimed that the boys would come up—the reason it was so high—the boys would come and get it.

Chairman WALSH. Your boys did?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Did they?

Mr. STEWART. If they did, we never did know it. We never did know it. They got a few things, but we never did know that they got any of that.

Chairman WALSH. How much was the account at the store, if you remember, that year.

Mr. STEWART. One thousand one hundred dollars.

Chairman WALSH. One thousand one hundred dollars?

Mr. STEWART. For them and at the other store was enough to make up the $1,700.

Chairman WALSH. And you made on the face of your profits a gross profit of $1,700 for this year?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Was there any way you kept track of your account in the store yourself?

Mr. STEWART. No; I never kept no track of it. I just thought it was all right, you know.

Chairman WALSH. When did you ascertain the amount of it?

Mr. STEWART. I never ascertained that until I began to pay it off.

Chairman WALSH. Did it consume all you had earned? Did you have any cash or balance left?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; not but very little.

Chairman WALSH. You started in the year following at the same place?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would give a description of the supplies you bought that year.

Mr. STEWART. Well, we bought some meal and flour and some meat and we bought a few canned goods, but we lived there very well; we didn't live nothing to amount to much.

Chairman WALSH. And what was your clothing that year as compared with other years?

Mr. STEWART. We did not dress any better that year than we did other years.

Chairman WALSH. What does it cost you a year for yourself and family for clothing? Have you ever been able to keep enough track of it to tell?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; I never have.

Chairman WALSH. You could not approximate it?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; I could not. I could this year. We didn't have any.

Chairman WALSH. Please do not give any audible expression of feeling.

In an ordinary year, how much does your own clothing cost you, do you know?

Mr. STEWART. Why, about—I think one year I kept a sort of track of it and it was about $74.

Chairman WALSH. For your own clothes?

Mr. STEWART. For my own clothes? No.

Chairman WALSH. You mean the whole family?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; the whole family.

Chairman WALSH. I mean just for your own. Did you ever keep track of it in an ordinary year what it does cost for your clothing?

Mr. STEWART. Just myself?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; your own?

Mr. STEWART. Why, I never—I haven't bought but one suit in five years.

Chairman WALSH. Was that a whole suit—coat, pants, and vest?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; just this coat and pants.

Chairman WALSH. And what does your other clothing consist of—overalls, shirt, and jumper?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Do you buy those ready made?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How many do you have to buy a year?

Mr. STEWART. Well, three or four pair, maybe.

Chairman WALSH. And what did your suit cost you, that you bought?

Mr. STEWART. Ten dollars.

Chairman WALSH. How much?

Mr. STEWART. Ten dollars.

Chairman WALSH. And how much do these overalls cost you?

Mr. STEWART. They cost a dollar, I think.

Chairman WALSH. A dollar?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Now, the second year at Smiley's, how did you come out?

Mr. STEWART. We made, I think it was 57 bales of cotton, and I don't believe we got quite out that year. But I didn't owe so much.

Chairman WALSH. What happened that year that you got 75 bales of cotton, why didn't you have a surplus?

Mr. STEWART. We didn't get quite as much, we—it didn't bring quite as much, you know, as it did the year before.

Chairman WALSH. What was your store account that year?

Mr. STEWART. It was $500 there at MacBeth, and $750 over at the other place.

Chairman WALSH. What did that consist of? That surely did not consist of meal?

Mr. STEWART. No; it was stuff, the boys got some shoes and a few clothes, everyday clothes, you know, and then they would sell them soda pop, and cheese and crackers, all like that.

Chairman WALSH. Did the boys have an account? Did they buy just as they pleased at the store?

Mr. STEWART. They could get anything they pleased. I told him not to let them have it, but it didn't make any difference. They went ahead and just sold it just the same.

Chairman WALSH. After you started in the first year, what did you say to him about selling to the boys?

Mr. STEWART. I told them not to sell them, and they told me they wouldn't.

Chairman WALSH. Was liquor sold in the store?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Tobacco?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did the boys use tobacco?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; they used tobacco.

Chairman WALSH. And you, too?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. So your store account that year was $1,250?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And what security did the store have for the payment of that indebtedness?

Mr. STEWART. They never had any.

Chairman WALSH. Now, then, the third year.

Mr. STEWART. The third year?

Chairman WALSH. Yes. You were there three full years and some over, I believe?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How did you come out the third year? How much cotton did you make?

Mr. STEWART. We made 87 bales the third year, but had some water the third year.

Chairman WALSH. You say you made 52 bales one year and 57 bales the next year?

Mr. STEWART. And then 87 bales.

Chairman WALSH. How did you come out that year?

Mr. STEWART. Didn't come out as well as I did those other years. Cotton went down in price. Sold some of it as low as 5 cents, and picking went up, and it was a bad, rainy fall, too, and consequently the more we had the worse we were off.

Chairman WALSH. Now, what was your gross profit that year? I mean, your gross sales of cotton that year; how much did you get for your cotton?

Mr. STEWART. Why, we got 10 cents for some and 11 cents for some, and then sold some of it as low as 6.

Chairman WALSH. What was your store account that year?

Mr. STEWART. It was only about $750, I think, that year.

Chairman WALSH. How did you come out on the whole? Did you have anything coming to you?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Nothing at all?

Mr. STEWART. Not much.

Chairman WALSH. That brings you down to what year now?

Mr. STEWART. Until the last year I live with him.

Chairman WALSH. What year was that; do you remember?

Mr. STEWART. Two years ago.

Chairman WALSH. That would be 1912, or 1911 to 1912. Now, after the third year did you start to make another crop?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you gather your crop?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; the fourth year we cultivated 90 acres and made 6 bales of cotton.

Chairman WALSH. How did you come to make so little?

Mr. STEWART. It was flat land and the rain and worms ruined it.

Chairman WALSH. How did you come out?

Mr. STEWART. Came out bad that year—about $700 in the hole.

Chairman WALSH. Who was carrying your indebtedness?

Mr. STEWART. Mr. White, at High.

Chairman WALSH. He was your landlord?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. He was your storekeeper?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir. I did not owe this other outfit anything.

Chairman WALSH. Did Mr. White lose this account?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What became of it?

Mr. STEWART. I secured him with my stock and everything for that amount, and then moved up here to Mulberry bottom.

Chairman WALSH. Then you paid your indebtedness to him?

Mr. STEWART. No; I have not paid him.

Chairman WALSH. What security has he for it now?

Mr. STEWART. He has got the mules and the wagons.

Chairman WALSH. Has he the property or just the lien?

Mr. STEWART. Just a lien.

Chairman WALSH. You still have your wagons, have you?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; and teams.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you say you came to Mulberry bottom then?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And you were $700 in debt in the place you left?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What did you have when you came to Mulberry bottom?

Mr. STEWART. I had them mules and wagons and three cows.

Chairman WALSH. Whom were you dealing with then?

Mr. STEWART. I bought corn from old man Roach that I rented from and then groceries from Mr. Edgar Price.

Chairman WALSH. How much land did you take there?

Mr. STEWART. We taken 100 acres.

Chairman WALSH. Did you put in a year on that?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you get a crop off of it?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. How much cotton did you make?

Mr. STEWART. Made 27 bales.

Chairman WALSH. How did you come out that year?

Mr. STEWART. Came out bad.

Chairman WALSH. Still deeper in debt?

Mr. STEWART. Worse in debt; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. How much?

Mr. STEWART. I just made enough—I bought corn from him to feed me and I just paid for the corn and for what picking I had there; that is all I paid.

Chairman WALSH. How much were you out on that year?

Mr. STEWART. Expenses?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. I was out besides the corn about $600.

Chairman WALSH. Now, how was that indebtedness secured?

Mr. STEWART. The groceries was not secured at all.

Chairman WALSH. You still owe for them?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Has the grocery keeper any security?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Or storekeeper?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; nothing at all.

Chairman WALSH. Has nothing out of which to get that $600 unless you have the ability to pay it and the honesty?

Mr. STEWART. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. Now, down to what date does that bring you?

Mr. STEWART. That brings it down—

Chairman WALSH. To the present time?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Where are you located now?

Mr. STEWART. I am at Spears Switch, in Fannin County.

Chairman WALSH. How far is that from here?

Mr. STEWART. It is 106 miles from here to Denison, and we live 18 miles from Denison.

Chairman WALSH. Now, when did you leave the last place you were tenant on?

Mr. STEWART. We left there Monday.

Chairman WALSH. Last Monday?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Why did you leave there?

Mr. STEWART. Well, I rented—when I left Mulberry bottom I came up and rented a place from old Mr. Spiney, and I found a sand pit on the farm, and I figured I didn't make any corn last year, and I had to pay $5 in money rent, and I didn't make but two loads of corn, and I figured I could come up there with the team and haul sand and make some crop, too, and get by, and I came up and I couldn't get any business—couldn't get any work to do—and a fellow gave me 43 cords of wood to cut, and I did that, and the sand business all blew up and the old man would not help, and so I went over into Oklahoma and struck a man over there, and he said he had the land and the money and the work.

Chairman WALSH. How did you get over to Oklahoma?

Mr. STEWART. I went over on the train and made the trade, and then I came back and carried one load over there and my family, and got there and he backed out and said he wasn't going to have the work done until in the summer, and he wouldn't furnish anything until the crop was growing.

Chairman WALSH. You took your family over there?

Mr. STEWART. Sure.

Chairman WALSH. How did you take them over?

Mr. STEWART. In the wagon.

Chairman WALSH. How far was it, about?

Mr. STEWART. From Platter about 21 miles.

Chairman WALSH. Where did you go then?

Mr. STEWART. I came back to that same place and stayed two weeks and rented a house and then I moved over there.

Chairman WALSH. You are in the house now?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. About how much cotton have you grown altogether? Have you kept track of it—since you were married?

Mr. STEWART. Not since I was married. I figured it up last night that since I have been in Texas I had made a little over 400 bales.

Chairman WALSH. You have not figured up what you have made during the entire time you have been farming for yourself?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Noble suggests that I ask you to give your experiences in looking for another place after your return from Oklahoma.

Mr. STEWART. I walked about 150 miles hunting one, and I never did find it.

Chairman WALSH. Now, do you think, Mr. Stewart, that you are unusually unfortunate, or that you had a roving tendency—a desire to move from place to place—and that that might have cut a figure in your lack of success?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir. I never did have any roving spirit. I was always wanting to do the best I can and could, you know; and if I would think I could do better I would go to better my condition. And then there were a few other things didn't suit—sometimes the houses would not suit and sometimes there was no pasture, and you would have to haul wood and water; that is the reason I left the black land after three years there. During this I hauled water 5 and 6 miles, and I paid 2 bits a tank; and I hauled wood 8 or 10 miles, and I paid 50 cents for it cut or a quarter if I cut it myself. And then I had the cows, and some fellows don't want you to keep any cows or hogs. One fellow did not want any hogs about where I worked on shares.

Chairman WALSH. In all your experiences have you been permitted to farm in the way you thought was best for yourself—in any of those places?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; I did.

Chairman WALSH. In what place was there where the landlord did not attempt to exercise any supervision over you?

Mr. STEWART. Well, they didn't any of them do that, only they told me what I could plant, you know—that I could only plant so much corn or cotton.

Chairman WALSH. So that there wasn't any place where you went on and rented that you could go and do just what you pleased about raising hogs and so on?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; not about what you could plant and your stuff and the like of that. They always told you what you could plant and what you could not.

Mr. NOBLE. Ask him if that practice is universal.

Chairman WALSH. I was going to come down to some other questions first. What has your observation been, Mr. Stewart, as to other men engaged in the same calling as you? Now, you have, I suppose, met many other tenants in these places you have been and in the same neighborhood and how have you found them, generally speaking, as to staying in one place. Do they stay in one place for any length of time usually?

Mr. STEWART. Not long.

Chairman WALSH. There was a gentleman here this morning who rents a place to a number of tenants, and he had a case of one tenant that made something like—cleared something like $1,500 per year and had been a tenant for 20 years; and another one that had been a tenant for 10 years and he had cleared something like $1,000 or $1,200 approximately right along. Do you meet with many tenants of that kind as you go along?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; I sure do not.

Chairman WALSH. Now, what has been your experience? Have you talked with tenants and met other tenants?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; I have.

Chairman WALSH. And what has their experience been, so far as you have observed?

Mr. STEWART. Just about like my experience. If you get to making a little money, you have to move.

Chairman WALSH. Why do you have to move if you get to making a little money? I should think the landlord would want you to stay?

Mr. STEWART. I know; but some of them, if they don't get it all, they want you to go farther.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Noble, what was that question you asked me to ask him?

Mr. NOBLE. You have asked it.

Chairman WALSH. Oh; I have covered it.

Mr. NOBLE. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. Well, then, what I wanted to say—

Chairman WALSH. I was going to say, you know what we are doing here. We are trying to inquire into the conditions at this particular time of tenant farming in your neighborhood and in the neighborhoods in which you have lived; and the Government is trying to ascertain just what the conditions are so that perhaps some laws can be suggested and some line of conduct by which if things are not equitable they may be made as nearly so as possible, if it can be done; but at least it is desirable to have a first-hand knowledge of the conditions. Now, in view of that, if there is anything you would like to say, Mr. Stewart, that you have not stated, or anything that you wish to volunteer, or any statement you would like to make, you may do so.

Mr. STEWART. I would like to tell you about a place; I was a tenant on one place, and a fellow had some Bermuda grass and Johnson grass on the place, and he came to me and he says: "If you will take that place and kill that grass and fix them ditches, you can have it as long as you want to." And I went up there, and I killed that grass, and I took my team and filled up the ditches and got it in nice shape, and then he came around and says: "I want to work this myself, and you can go over to this other place of mine, and I have got some Bermuda grass and Johnson grass on it, and you can clean that up, and you can have that." So I took that,

Chairman WALSH. Why did you do that? Why didn't you recall the contract you had made at first?

Mr. STEWART. That would not have done me any good. He would have put me off, anyhow.

Chairman WALSH. Did you undertake to do it?

Mr. STEWART. No; I did not. I told him I would rather stay there, but he told me he couldn't let me have that.

Chairman WALSH. Was that in Texas or in Arkansas?

Mr. STEWART. In Texas.

Chairman WALSH. What place was that?

Mr. STEWART. That was on Mr. Smiley's place.

Chairman WALSH. I would like, if I can, to ascertain now what social advantages you had. Did you meet your neighbors any place?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Any sort of gathering?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. I notice you have a pin on you, an emblem of an organization or lodge. What lodges do you belong to?

Mr. STEWART. Odd Fellows and Woodmen.

Chairman WALSH. Where did you join the Odd Fellows?

Mr. STEWART. There at High.

Chairman WALSH. Keep your dues paid?

Mr. STEWART. I did until—I am behind a little now.

Chairman WALSH. But you are still a member of the organization?

Mr. STEWART. Sure; yes.

Chairman WALSH. How about the Woodmen?

Mr. STEWART. We are still in that; but the Woodmen lodge where I belonged to blowed up. All the renters—they got to working there with negro labor, and all the renters there were Odd Fellows, nearly, and they had to disband the lodge or take some negroes in, and they just moved it—

Chairman WALSH. You have held on to both organizations, however, have you?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And paid your dues in them?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, have you been a voter as you have gone around to these places?

Mr. STEWART. Never voted but three times in my life.

Chairman WALSH. Have you understood anything about the Government—that it is a democracy, and that it depends upon your consent and the consent of men like you—

Mr. STEWART (interrupting). Sure; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Well, why didn't you exercise your franchise?

Mr. STEWART. Well, it did not look like it done any good. It seemed like it went their way, anyhow.

Chairman WALSH. When were the three times you voted?

Mr. STEWART. Voted once in the primary in Texas and the other two times was in Arkansas.

Chairman WALSH. I believe there is a poll tax in this State.

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you ever pay your poll tax?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; I paid them.

Chairman WALSH. All the time?

Mr. STEWART. I paid them up until this year. I haven't paid them now; didn't have the money.

Chairman WALSH. But during these years you have been in Texas, except this year, you have paid poll tax?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; I paid the poll tax.

Chairman WALSH. What is your idea, Mr. Stewart, about the probability of your obtaining justice? Now, I understand—I may be mistaken, but I understand that the laws are open to poor people. You understood that, didn't you, that if you said you could not give bonds—if a person has no money to give bond and is without means, can't he sue as a poor person?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; he can by taking the pauper's oath.

Chairman WALSH. The pauper's oath, and then sue for nothing. Now, take the one particular case you have mentioned, without going into the merits of it; well, take the two cases you have mentioned, the one where you did the clearing for the gentleman you say did not pay you at all and the other, where you made a contract to burn out the Johnson grass, as you call it——

Mr. STEWART. Bermuda and Johnson; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, why didn't you just go into the courts and take the pauper oath, which just simply means that you did not have the means to pay the costs and had no friend who could go on your bond? Why didn't you just go into court and take that pauper oath and establish your claim and make them pay you?

Mr. STEWART. I did not feel like I would gain it if I did; that I was a poor man and the other fellow had the money.

Chairman WALSH. Was it your idea that you simply could not carry it on because you could not live and stay in a place if you took that course, or that the court would not give you justice on account of your being a poor man?

Mr. STEWART. I did not think they would; and then you couldn't stay on a place, you know.

Chairman WALSH. Had you any reason for believing, for instance, that the judge would not declare the law right, and the jury, if you had a jury, would not give you justice?

Mr. STEWART. It seemed that was the way it was going.

Chairman WALSH. How did you get that idea?

Mr. STEWART. By being in them courts down in Paris.

Chairman WALSH. Was you ever in court as a litigant?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Well, did you get that point of view from what you observed yourself or from talking among others?

Mr. STEWART. What I observed and then talking, too.

Chairman WALSH. You had a notion in the first place, or a belief in the first place, that you could not get justice even if you would go into court?

Mr. STEWART. Sure.

Chairman WALSH. You say "sure." You mean that was your belief or that you are sure——

Mr. STEWART. I believed that; that I could not.

Chairman WALSH. You believed that you could not?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Mr. NOBLE. I would like to make a statement and have you bring the fact out that when I asked this gentleman to come down here, he had fears that if he did come to testify he would not be allowed or could not rent no land in the country, and I would like to have that made plain, that he came at the request of the Government and not voluntarily.

Chairman WALSH. Yes. You were subpoenaed to come. You understand you were subpoenaed to come here by the Government?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. You understand that?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. That you are not voluntarily here; that a subpoena was served upon you and you were required to come here and tell your story and all. You understood that, did you?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I interrupted you. Now, if you have any suggestions that you would like to make here to go into the record, I wish you would make them, Mr. Stewart, as to how you think you ought to be dealt with by the landlords; how you think, from your standpoint—we will say, first, what you think from your standpoint the contract ought to be between yourself and the landlord. You are going right on renting now, we will suppose, and how you think the contract ought to be made.

Mr. STEWART. About renting?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEWART. Why, I think the third and fourth ought to be——

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). And you think if you could ordinarily get land of a fair character, that that would be a just proportion?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; I think it would.

Chairman WALSH. And that you could make a living out of it?

Mr. STEWART. Sure.

Chairman WALSH. Now, have you any other suggestions that the landlord ought to furnish you more or furnish you less or any improvement that you might make yourself?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; they ought to do more to improve and fix up better.

Chairman WALSH. You mean fix up the houses you live in?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; and the barns and things. People that rent don't have any conveniences at all, the majority of them don't have anything; just live out of doors.

Chairman WALSH. Do you think the manner in which you lived had anything to do with the condition of your health and that of your family?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; in them little houses and no screens—

Chairman WALSH. How is that?

Mr. STEWART. I say in them houses without any screens; and some of them we lived in there were no screens over the windows or shutters, and the flies and mosquitoes and everything, it is bound to be a detriment.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you say there was no precaution in the way of screens or anything, and insects would get into the house?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And the flies would accumulate in large numbers?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And get into the food you were eating, and so forth?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What were the toilet arrangements? Where were the water-closets located in connection with these houses that you have been in?

Mr. STEWART. Some of them had toilet arrangements and some of them did not. They were off right smart ways from the house.

Chairman WALSH. Some of them had been built off from the house?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Covered, with an inclosure?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, is there anything else you would like to say yourself, Mr. Stewart? Did you know, for instance, that at the last election there was some law proposed that affected you one way or the other as tenant?

Mr. STEWART. At the last election?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; in Texas? Did you understand there was any proposition for a new law governing tenancy?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; I understood that Ferguson was going to have a law regulating this rent proposition.

Chairman WALSH. Well, did you vote at that election?

Mr. STEWART. No; I did not vote.

Chairman WALSH. Well, were you situated in a place where you had the right to vote?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; I had the right to vote.

Chairman WALSH. Why didn't you go and vote if there was an election?

Mr. STEWART. I was sick that day.

Chairman WALSH. That was on account of your illness, wasn't it?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. If you had not been sick, would you have voted one way or the other?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; I guess I would.

Chairman WALSH. You guess you would? Would you or not?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. NOBLE. Ask him if he knows of intimidation if their politics didn't suit the landlord.

Chairman WALSH. Have you at any time in any place which you have been found that there was any effort to influence you in any way by your landlord, either in general elections or school elections?

Mr. STEWART. No; I do not know. I have heard lots of them say they would not rent to a man if he would vote the Socialist ticket; that he had to do so and so or he couldn't rent the land if he voted the Socialist ticket; they wouldn't let him have it—or something like that.

Chairman WALSH. Without stating your preference, which is none of our business here, have you been a man that has had some fixed opinion as to party affiliations? Do you have a leaning toward some political party?

Mr. STEWART. Me?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. Not particularly.

Chairman WALSH. Have you ever studied what is said to be the principles of either one of the old parties?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; I have studied that some.

Chairman WALSH. And have you studied the principles of the new ones?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; some.

Chairman WALSH. The Socialist Party, or any of the third parties that have come up from time to time?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Where did you secure your information?

Mr. STEWART. Well, I have read in these papers—the Appeal to Reason, I have read that, and the Buzz Saw, and I have read these others, the Fort Worth Record, you know, the Dallas News. I have read them all.

Chairman WALSH. The daily papers?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir. Daily and weekly, too.

Chairman WALSH. Did you ever try to develop yourself as a farmer to undertake to improve your methods, etc.

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. I believe you stated in one part of your testimony that since you came to Texas you were in one neighborhood where some direction was given by the State, or by the university, or what was that?

Mr. STEWART. That was Mr. Guy Bane. He was the agricultural agent down there.

Chairman WALSH. From where was he?

Mr. STEWART. He was from Lamar County. He lives at Paris.

Chairman WALSH. What were his activities?

Mr. STEWART. Sir?

Chairman WALSH. What did he do?

Mr. STEWART. He came around, you know, and sent literature how to plant, how to cultivate, you know, and to diversify, and all those things.

Chairman WALSH. Did you read that literature?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Were you ever in any place where a prize was given for improved methods of farming?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; they give them down there.

Chairman WALSH. Do they? Did you ever enter into it?

Mr. STEWART. I entered into it, but I didn't hold out. They sent me—the Industrial Congress sent me a letter of recommendation, and also an emblem to wear.

Chairman WALSH. For what?

Mr. STEWART. For being a good farmer.

Chairman WALSH. Did you follow their methods?

Mr. STEWART. Yes. Followed them the best that I could, owing to the season, you know. Of course, I did not sometimes, when it would say to plow, and I could not; it had rained and I could not do it.

Chairman WALSH. Have you ever had any litigation with anyone in any court, yourself?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. During all these years?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; never had.

Chairman WALSH. Were you ever in court at all?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. As a defendant or prosecutor in any case?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. As far as the State was concerned, you have not been in the courts one way or the other?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You have never been accused of violating the law in any way?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Never sued, and you never sued anybody?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir. Well, I would say about this other that—

Mr. NOBLE. Tell him about that.

Mr. STEWART. I forgot that. They spoke too quick. I had some; my boy down at Paris, before we left there, he bought a buggy, an old buggy, my oldest son; and so I bought a sulky plow, and I moved off up here, and a fellow he came up then—the collector, you know.

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. So he wanted—he said they did not have any lien or anything either way—and he wanted me to give him a lien on something; so he insisted, said he didn't have it on anything except the old sulky plow. So I turned in and gave—he had always treated me nice, favored me in every way they could—so I turned in and I gave them a lien. I had five hogs and a cultivator and machine and that old sulky plow and a harrow, and I give them a lien on that for that money. And so it went on. This fall the Roach man, the man I lived with, he taken all my cotton for what I owed him, and the corn and everything, and I didn't have it, and my wife sat down and wrote this fellow a letter and told him; she says: "We can't pay any of that this fall at all." She says: "If you will take this stuff and sell it for us, or help us to sell it, I will bring it down in the wagon right to your door." They wrote me a letter back—that was when it was due—they wrote me back a letter that they didn't want the stuff, to get them up $75 and they would carry it over another year. It was $148. So I didn't write them; I couldn't—didn't have a cent; I never had a cent. Roach taken my cotton. I never even sold a bale last year out of that 27. So they waited until we got the hogs fat, fed what corn we had up to the hogs, killed them, cold weather came on, and we killed them about Christmas, and this was due the 1st of October. Well, we moved up there, and on New Year's Day, why, they came up and then attached the cultivator, you know, and the tools and taken them with them.

Chairman WALSH. How much meat was there?

Mr. STEWART. There was about 300 pounds.

Chairman WALSH. Was the meat sold?

Mr. STEWART. Sir?

Chairman WALSH. Was the meat sold?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir. It is advertised for sale now. That was the first; they never did advertise for anything until the other day they came up there and wanted me to turn the stuff over to them, and I told them I would not turn the stuff over to them, that I had offered to turn it once and they didn't want it, and I told them to just go right ahead and sell it for whatever the law directs.

Chairman WALSH. That is offered for sale now?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What did you say the meat is worth at the present time?

Mr. STEWART. It was worth—they sell it down there for about 15 cents. About 300 pounds of it.

Chairman WALSH. Did they leave any meat for the use of your family?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; never left anything.

Mrs. STEWART. They left us three messes.

Chairman WALSH. They left you enough for three meals?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Mrs. STEWART. Three meals, yes, sir; that is what they left.

Mr. STEWART. The other day when they came back they gave us a small neb; when they came back and advertised the stuff, you know. They gave us a small neb.

Chairman WALSH. How much do you owe altogether at this time?

Mr. STEWART. I do not know just exactly how much I owe, but I owe seven or eight hundred dollars.

Chairman WALSH. You may be excused for the present.

Mr. STEWART. Two years we did work for nothing; that it would have been better if we did not do anything.

Chairman WALSH. This last two years?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. You will be excused, Mr. Stewart, for the present. We are very much obliged to you for coming.

Mrs. Stewart, please take the stand.

TESTIMONY OF MRS. BEULAH STEWART.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Please give your name.

Mrs. STEWART. Mrs. Beulah Stewart.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Where were you born?

Mrs. STEWART. I was born in Faulkner County, Ark.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Was your father a farmer?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did you go to school?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What age did you leave school?

Mrs. STEWART. I was 15 years old when I was married, and then is when I left school.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. You left school when you were 15 years old?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did your father own or rent his farm?

Mrs. STEWART. He was a landowner.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. How much land did he own?

Mrs. STEWART. I don't know how much land he owned at the time I was married, but he was accounted the largest farmer there was in Faulkner County when I was married.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Well, when you started to housekeeping, what did you have?

Mrs. STEWART. Why—

Commissioner HARRIMAN (interrupting). Did you start with any money at all?

Mrs. STEWART. No.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did your father give you anything?

Mrs. STEWART. He gave us our bedding and bedclothes, and we had plenty of clothing for myself, and a cow and a calf when we first went to housekeeping.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. And that is all you had to begin with?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did you have any furniture?

Mrs. STEWART. No.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. How did you get your furniture?

Mrs. STEWART. We got it on credit.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. And a stove, too?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. How many houses have you lived in altogether since you have been married? Have you kept count of it?

Mrs. STEWART. No.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Haven't you any idea at all?

Mrs. STEWART. No.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. About 20, do you suppose?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes; I guess so.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Have you ever lived in a one-room house since you have had the children?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What is the largest number of rooms you have had in a house, since you were married?

Mrs. STEWART. Seven rooms.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Well, now, have you helped with the work on the farm?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Can you describe the work you did?

Mrs. STEWART. I made a hand every year while we was in Arkansas, but one. And I was sick all that year, and did not work any.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did you work before the children were born, while you were carrying them?

Mrs. STEWART. Up until how long before they were born? Well, up until three or four months before they were born.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What do you think is the effect on a women's health, dragging cotton sacks?

Mrs. STEWART. I never did that. I could not stand to stoop.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Do you think it is bad for a woman to do that?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What did you do; please describe your work?

Mrs. STEWART. I chopped cotton.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Chopped cotton?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What else?

Mrs. STEWART. And dropped corn and sowed cotton seed with my hand in Arkansas, and that is all the farm work.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. And then you did the housework also?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. How many hours were you at work in the field, and how long did you put in at your housework?

Mrs. STEWART. During the spring of the year, when we was making the cotton by ourselves, we would try to get out as soon as we could see how to go. We would leave everything until noon and straighten up when I came in.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. About your meals, how many meals did you have a day?

Mrs. STEWART. Generally three meals.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What did you eat at your meals, and when did you have them? Did you have your breakfast before you went out?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am; we ate at 4 o'clock.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What did you generally have for breakfast?

Mrs. STEWART. Sometimes sirup and biscuits and meat.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Sorghum?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes; and meat and bread—corn bread—and sometimes potatoes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. You made the corn bread, of course?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What time did you have your dinner?

Mrs. STEWART. We had dinner at 12 o'clock; I would quit at 11 o'clock and go home and cook dinner.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. You would go home to cook dinner, would you?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What did you have for dinner?

Mrs. STEWART. If we had any vegetables I would have them vegetables, if I had time to cook them. I could not cook vegetables every day when I was working in the field, but I did once in a while when I was working in the field.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did you have any chickens?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did you raise chickens?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What other kind of meat did you have—hogs?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What meat did you have, mostly chicken?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am; and what we bought; we generally bought our meat.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What kind of meat did you buy?

Mrs. STEWART. Salt pork—"dry pork" they call it.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did you keep cows most of the time?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. You kept a cow?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Who did the milking of the cow?

Mrs. STEWART. I did.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Then you did what cooking there was done, and you milked the cow, and you worked in the field?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did you do the washing?

Mrs. STEWART. I would take a day out once a week and do the washing.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. You said you did not do any cotton picking?

Mrs. STEWART. No. Well, the last fall we was out there in Arkansas we wanted to get our cotton out with just as little expense as possible, and I picked then; I never averaged over 200 pounds a day, with my housework.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. From your observation, would you think that women ought to drag cotton sacks in the field?

Mrs. STEWART. Certainly not.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Don't a great many people drag cotton sacks in the field?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. They do?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. You have seen them yourself?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. You think it hurts their health, do you?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. That it hurts them physically?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did you have a garden patch? Did you usually have a garden patch at the places you lived?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. And raised your own vegetables?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What vegetables did you raise?

Mrs. STEWART. We generally had onions and beets, and English peas, beans, and Irish potatoes, and cucumbers.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did you usually have a well near your house, or did you have to go far to get water?

Mrs. STEWART. As a general rule we had a well, but I have carried water myself half a mile.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. You have carried water yourself half a mile?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Could you describe a house to us, about the conditions of the house, when you would move into a place? Did you have to take your furniture with you—what furniture you had—or did you find something there, and was the house clean?

Mrs. STEWART. Some of them were tolerably decent and some were not.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Could you describe a house to us? Take the one you moved into, the one before the last. How many rooms did that have?

Mrs. STEWART. Three rooms—the one we are in now.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Were they painted?

Mrs. STEWART. They were painted overhead and the doors; they are comfortable.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What furniture did you have for that house? How did you use those rooms? Did you have a kitchen?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes; and two bedrooms.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Eat in the kitchen?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did you have a range or stove?

Mrs. STEWART. A cook stove.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What furniture did you have in those rooms?

Mrs. STEWART. I have four bedsteads, and a dresser, and a washstand, and a wardrobe, and kitchen cabinet, and a trunk.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. How many of you live in those three rooms—you and your husband and eight children?

Mrs. STEWART. Seven children only; one has left, and lives away from home.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. How did you divide up in the house?

Mrs. STEWART. I had two beds in each room; they were big rooms, and I divided the other furniture just as I could get it in.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did you have any sewing machine?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am; up until it was taken away from me.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did you make the children's clothes?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am, and sew for myself.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. When did you do your sewing, if you were working in the field and doing all that other work?

Mrs. STEWART. When we lived at High I was not able to work in the field, and I could make more with the machine than I could in the field. If I sewed some at night—I have cleared as high as $2 a day sewing.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Do I understand you to say that you did this work—sewing—for outsiders?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am; I sewed for outsiders and made as high as $2 a day.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. How many hours a day did you have to work to make $2?

Mrs. STEWART. I would have to start in early and sew into the night.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. And while you were doing that you were cooking for the family also?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. And looking after the children?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. How about your clothes. Your husband says he bought your clothes for you when you got anything in town at the different places. How did he manage to get something to fit you?

Mrs. STEWART. He would buy the stuff, and I would make them. He never bought me anything ready-made. I never have got a dress ready-made for myself in my life since I have been a married woman.

- Commissioner HARRIMAN. He bought you the stuff, and you made it up?
- Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am.
- Commissioner HARRIMAN. How about the children—did you make their clothes, too?
- Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am.
- Commissioner HARRIMAN. You did?
- Mrs. STEWART. I used to make all the clothes he wore and my own, too, and for the children when we lived in Arkansas.
- Commissioner HARRIMAN. How about the sunbonnets?
- Mrs. STEWART. I make them myself.
- Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did you ever go to a milliner's or buy any trimmed hats, ready-made?
- Mrs. STEWART. I believe I bought three.
- Commissioner HARRIMAN. That is since you have been married.
- Mrs. STEWART. Yes; I ordered one from Montgomery Wards. I sent them a money order for it.
- Commissioner HARRIMAN. Now, tell us something; you went to school until you were 15 years old, and, of course, you are pretty well educated?
- Mrs. STEWART. Yes.
- Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did you have time to do any reading?
- Mrs. STEWART. Not down there.
- Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did you have anything in the house to read if you wanted to?
- Mrs. STEWART. No.
- Commissioner HARRIMAN. You took some papers; your husband spoke about them.
- Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am. He takes newspapers, and I sometimes read novels when I have spare time.
- Commissioner HARRIMAN. You do? How do you get your novels?
- Mrs. STEWART. I subscribe for them or story papers.
- Commissioner HARRIMAN. Where do you subscribe for them?
- Mrs. STEWART. I don't believe I can give that name.
- Commissioner HARRIMAN. Some place in town, near by?
- Mrs. STEWART. I never go to town to buy papers; I order them by mail.
- Commissioner HARRIMAN. The novels are in the papers.
- Mrs. STEWART. Yes.
- Commissioner HARRIMAN. In magazines.
- Mrs. STEWART. Yes.
- Commissioner HARRIMAN. Do you take any farm papers?
- Mrs. STEWART. Yes.
- Commissioner HARRIMAN. What farm papers do you take?
- Mrs. STEWART. He taken the Farm and Ranch.
- Mr. HOLMAN. Do you take any semiweekly papers?
- Mrs. STEWART. He taken the Dallas News.
- Mr. HOLMAN. Any others? Do you take your local county paper?
- Mrs. STEWART. I think he did take the Fort Worth Record.
- Commissioner HARRIMAN. How about shoes—did the children have shoes?
- Mrs. STEWART. Up to this winter and last; yes.
- Commissioner HARRIMAN. How often did you buy new shoes?
- Mrs. STEWART. I hardly ever bought them over a pair through the winter.
- Commissioner HARRIMAN. A pair a piece?
- Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am; through the winter; and I buy them slippers for summer.
- Commissioner HARRIMAN. In summer they wear slippers.
- Mrs. STEWART. Yes.
- Commissioner HARRIMAN. You mean sandals, or regular slippers?
- Mrs. STEWART. No; regular slippers.
- Commissioner HARRIMAN. Have you any shoes at all for the children now?
- Mrs. STEWART. No, ma'am.
- Mr. HOLMAN. Mrs. Stewart, it has been asked if you remember about how long you took the Farm and Ranch; did you take it for a year, or on trial, or what?
- Mrs. STEWART. I just don't remember, but it seems to me he taken it a part of three years.
- Mr. HOLMAN. Was he one of the life-contract people? Do you remember whether he got a certificate or not, so that he could take it on a life contract at $1 a year?

Mrs. STEWART. I forget how it was now, but at that time he didn't have no money to pay for it, and I don't think he taken it.

Mr. STEWART. I didn't continue it on the life contract.

Mr. HOLMAN. Did you take it as much as three years?

Mr. STEWART. I think I did.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Now, Mrs. Stewart, these clothes that the children have on, are those their best clothes?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am; and I have on the best I have.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. And you made them yourself?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am. This dress this little girl has on [indicating] and the other little girl here [indicating] was given to them a short time ago. They had some as good as these, but these were already done up when they were given to them. Their clothes were summer clothes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Now, Mrs. Stewart, is there anything you would like to tell us about the condition, about the life, of a woman on a farm, and how you think things might have been made better; what remedies you think there are that you could suggest to change things?

Mrs. STEWART. Well, a woman, if stout, ought to be able to keep her house and do her sewing; but if she is not stout, and she has a family like I have got, it is more than she can stand. It is more than I can stand. I know it is more than I could stand if I was able to hire it done.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. You have to work so hard and do your washing?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes; I can hardly hold out to do the housework, let alone the washing.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did you have a doctor to look after you when your babies were born?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. With all of them?

Mrs. STEWART. Not every one. I had my grandmother with two of them, and the rest I had a doctor. My husband would not have anyone but a physician. I always had a good physician.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. How long did you rest after the babies were born?

Mrs. STEWART. If I could possibly do it I never was in bed over nine days.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. But you usually did have—stayed in bed nine days?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What about—did you spend much money on patent medicines?

Mrs. STEWART. No, ma'am; not a great deal.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. How about the children? Did you spend anything on soothing sirup or medicines of that kind?

Mrs. STEWART. Not much; I have some, but not a great deal. The most patent medicine I ever bought was this Dr. Miles's nervine; I used to keep that all the time.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did you have a nervous breakdown yourself?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What from—from overwork?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am; and the strain.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. And the worry. Did you worry much?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am; and I had children real young, and that is the cause of it.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Do you worry much about what is going to happen in the future?

Mrs. STEWART. No, ma'am; I don't think it does any good.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. It doesn't do any good. That is good philosophy.

Mrs. STEWART. I do the best I can whatever comes. I was told to not take any more in the head than I could kick out at the heels.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Have you always had plenty to eat?

Mrs. STEWART. No, ma'am. We have had nice things since January, but we didn't have before that, often, bread in the house.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. That is all. Thank you very much.

Do you know of other women in the neighborhood where you live that are in the same condition that you are in? I mean that have had to do as much work?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. That are in about the condition that you are in. Do you say you do know a number?

Mrs. STEWART. Yes, ma'am; I know of several.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. That is all; you will be excused for the present.

Prof. Leonard.

TESTIMONY OF PROF. WILLIAM E. LEONARD.

Chairman WALSH. What is your name?

Prof. LEONARD. William E. Leonard.

Chairman WALSH. What is your business or profession?

Prof. LEONARD. I am an instructor in the University of Texas.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you occupied that position?

Prof. LEONARD. This is my third year.

Chairman WALSH. Are you a graduate of any school, any university, or college, Doctor?

Prof. LEONARD. I am a graduate of Iowa College.

Chairman WALSH. Of what college?

Prof. LEONARD. Iowa College and the University of Wisconsin.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you been a teacher or professor?

Prof. LEONARD. About 15 years, I think.

Chairman WALSH. And what were your engagements before you became connected with the University of Texas?

Prof. LEONARD. I was teaching in a small college in Omaha, Nebr.

Chairman WALSH. You have followed the teaching profession for, you say, 15 years?

Prof. LEONARD. About 15.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would give as concisely as possible, without any further questions, what your activities have been as a teacher?

Prof. LEONARD. I taught in the country schools for about 5 years—from the time I was about 17 years of age until I was something over 20. After that I took my college course, and since then I have been teaching in either academies, colleges, or universities.

Chairman WALSH. What is your position at the State University?

Prof. LEONARD. I am an instructor in economics at the State University.

Chairman WALSH. Have you made a study of Ellis County, Tex., Doctor?

Prof. LEONARD. I spent a part of the last summer in Ellis County studying the tenant question.

Chairman WALSH. Studying the tenant question?

Prof. LEONARD. Studying the tenant question, not in its entirety, but in its economic aspects.

Chairman WALSH. Have you epitomized your views in a paper, Doctor, so that you can give them to us now?

Prof. LEONARD. I have.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would do so, please.

Prof. LEONARD. It was my purpose, Mr. Chairman, in this study of Ellis County to get some measurement of the economic conditions of the tenant farmer particularly. I was interested in Ellis County because that is one of the large cotton-producing counties, and it is typical of all the black-land cotton counties of the State. The principal cash crop is cotton, and the producers of it are very largely tenant farmers. Perhaps you ought to be aware of the fact at once that during the last 10 years—that is, from 1900 to 1910—tenant farming in this county increased from 65.7 to 69 per cent.

Chairman WALSH. In what period of time?

Prof. LEONARD. The 10-year period.

Chairman WALSH. From what to what?

Prof. LEONARD. From 1900 to 1910.

Chairman WALSH. What was the increase?

Prof. LEONARD. Three and three-tenths per cent. That is the absolute increase. The second fact, which is even more significant to me, is this: That while tenantry as a whole increased by 3.3 per cent, the number of white tenant farmers in Ellis County decreased by 235, while the number of negro tenant farmers increased by 814. That is, all the increase in tenantry during the 10-year period was an increase due to negro tenant farmers, the white tenant farmers having declined absolutely.

Now, the points which I wish to make clear, if I can this afternoon, bear upon the following subjects:

First, the property of tenants, their indebtedness, their earnings, their progress, tenants as producers, some types of landlords, and lastly, some causes of unrest among tenants.

In studying the economic resources of tenant farmers, I found much difficulty because, as you know, we have no method of doing so. As a possible means of getting information, I went to the tax rolls, hoping that these might give some clue to the extent of property held by tenants.

Now, we know very well the limitations of the tax rolls, and because those limitations are pretty well known we may make certain deductions, and so arrive at some conception of property in that way.

It is the belief of tax assessors that there is comparatively little evasion on the part of the tenant farmers as a class; that is, these farmers actually turn in about all the property of taxable character which they have.

The question of valuation is a more serious error. But it is a rather constant error. It is believed by the tax assessors that property is rendered at about one-half of its value, never less, and scarcely ever more than 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of its proper value. Hence, by doubling the renditions made, we get an approximation to the real value of property owned. This is important, not because it gives us any absolute statement of property owned, but it does give us the method by which we may grade all into groups from the higher to the lower property classes.

On this chart you may see the gradations of wealth of these tenant classes, all of them rural dwellers. In the first place, I want to call your attention to this fact, that 25 per cent, over 25 per cent in fact, of the rural dwellers living in that county rendered nothing at all in the way of taxable property.

Chairman WALSH. How many?

Prof. LEONARD. Twenty-five per cent; the other 75 per cent who rendered something for taxation is shown in this part of the chart. Notice if you will the gradations from the lower property groups to the higher property groups. From $100 to $400 is shown by this column, 39 per cent of all; from $400 to $800, 29.9 per cent; from $800 up, 30.4 per cent. So that you see there is a pretty sharp decline from the lower property groups down to the higher property groups.

Now, these two columns—those having nothing and those having under $400—constitute something over 50 per cent of all the rural dwellers in that county—I think 54 per cent, to be exact. This is important, it seems to me, for this reason:

These tenants—that is, the 39 per cent having less than $400—are not in a position to have the benefit of any capital, for $400 is not enough to equip even a 1-team farm. I think all agree upon that. So that we may designate this column as being made up of “share croppers”; that is, those who work on the halves, and in round numbers they constitute something like 40 per cent of all the tenants in the county.

Those who possess more than $400 are evidently the one-third and one-fourth farmers. They are able to furnish their own capital and hence have all the advantages which comes from the use of capital.

This part of the column is evidently the 1-team farmers; that is, 29 per cent of all. This group is in a position to equip a 1-team farm, and a 1-team farm ordinarily consists of about 50 acres, or perhaps a little more; the remainder—another 30 per cent—are 2 or more team farmers. Evidently these two groups are in a position to enjoy all the benefits which come from capital, and everything else being equal, if they are not too much in debt are in shape to secure for themselves the best results as tenant farmers.

A little later I will show you from some actual returns made by each group of tenant farmers.

Let me pass now for just a moment to the question of the indebtedness of tenant farmers. I think I will not call your attention to all the details which I have prepared upon this question, but simply show you a chart which shows the seasonal movement of the chattel-mortgage loans in this county, and then if there are any questions you would like to ask I shall be glad to answer them.

These are chattel-mortgage loans placed upon some form of property in Ellis County other than farm loans, from September 1, 1912, to August 31, 1913. If you will follow this red line you will get the seasonal variation as well as the monthly variation of loans made during that year.

The only point I would call your attention to is this: That in the month of September, when chattel-mortgage loans were supposed to be paid off, new chattel-mortgage loans in a small number of cases were being placed upon the following year's crop. Notice that in October the number of chattel-mortgage loans increased to about 50, and in November and December to 400 for each month; that is, during the very period from October to December when mortgages were supposed to be canceled out a thousand new mortgages were contracted.

This calls for a word of explanation, Mr. Chairman. It means this, that the farmers were now remortgaging the property which had already been mortgaged. These were continuation loans coming over from the previous year which, being unpaid, had to be secured by a remortgage.

In January loans rose to about 800, and that meant borrowing to make the new year's crop. Old established farmers were mortgaging their mules and horses to get more mules and horses and equipment, and young farmers were necessarily going into debt for perhaps their full equipment. During all the spring months the number of chattel mortgages declined, reaching their lowest point in June, and the next year they spring up in a like way. This, then, is the monthly variation in loans, and I think it is characteristic from year to year of the chattel-mortgage form of indebtedness.

The number of chattel mortgages recorded were 3,760, or thereabouts, and the aggregate amount of loans made comes to $340,000, which presumably does not measure all the chattel-mortgage indebtedness during this year, since some mortgages were never recorded.

I shall pass over the question of store credit unless you have some special questions to ask.

Commissioner LEXNOM. Did you make any investigation as to the additional 10 per cent for credit? Do you know anything about that—what we have heard about here?

Prof. LEONARD. So far as store credits are concerned there are two practices of which I think you are informed. There is what is called the cash price for goods. Now, in case a farmer wishes the benefit of a cash price he goes to his local merchant and arranges "to be carried" from the 1st of January until October. If he wants $300 worth of goods he gives his note in January for $300, payable in October. This note bears interest at 10 per cent from the 1st of January until the 1st of October. But in January he secures from the store, say, $30 worth of goods, and he has the use of that $30 for the whole period; but for the purchases made in February he has used credit for eight months, and so on until July and August he has had the use of credit a month or two only. And since he pays 10 per cent for the whole period on the whole amount, when you figure out the average time during which he has the use of credit, the interest rate comes to something like 20 per cent.

The other form of indebtedness works exactly the same way, where 10 per cent is added to each monthly purchase from January until October.

Let us pass to the earning power of tenants.

I secured income returns from quite a large number of tenant farmers. These farmers were all living on the same kind of land. They were all living in the same community. They were all working under about the same conditions. I found that one-third of them were "share croppers," and that the income secured by those tenants was about $750 each. There was very little variation above or below this amount. Seven hundred and fifty dollars may be taken as a fair statement of the annual earnings of share croppers. Those who are working on a third and fourth basis received an average annual income of $1,253. Some of them were paying a third of the cotton for their land, and their income was about $1,000. Those were not entirely net incomes; that is, out of the $1,253 there would have to be taken the cost of the seed, expenses so far as picking was concerned, expenses of ginning, and such as that. So that the income of these third and fourth renters would be reduced in the direction of a thousand dollars, possibly a little below.

Chairman WALSH. By being reduced what do you mean? I did not catch that, Professor.

Prof. LEONARD. The net income would be reduced to something like a thousand dollars; that's after all expenses were taken out.

If I may generalize, then, from the earnings of these few from whom I received returns to all "share croppers"—about 40 per cent of all tenants—we find that their earnings approximate $750 a year. This is the income of a family. The third and fourth tenants—60 per cent of all—make $1,253, but to the extent that they pay a bonus or to the extent that they pay one-third of the cotton it is reduced to about $1,000.

Commissioner LENNON. May I ask you one question there? The $750 which you make out from the averages you have secured, do you claim that they all run about alike?

Prof. LEONARD. There is very little variation above or below the $750. What there is is due to the number of acres the farmer cultivates.

Chairman WALSH. I don't understand what you mean by the term "in the direction of a thousand dollars."

Prof. LEONARD. If he did not pay a bonus, or if they did not pay a bonus and all that in the form of house rent or anything of that kind, they would get $1,253 on an average. But if they pay house rent and a bonus and pay a third of the cotton, then that $1,253 is reduced by that amount to those who work on a third of what they could actually get. Is that clear?

This is not intended, Mr. Chairman, as any exact statement of earnings. It is an attempt, however, to analyze and throw into earning groups the whole of the tenant class in this particular county. That was all that was attempted. But if these returns are true, or even approximately true, they show the enormous importance of capital.

It may be interesting, and, I think, important, to compare the earnings of a group of tenant farmers working in the same land over a period of years. The next chart shows the income from cotton received by a group of about 20 or 25 tenant farmers, all of whom were working on the same plantation, and it is for a period of 10 years. These men were all working on the third and fourth basis. They were all living on the same land, and the height of the various rectangles represents the annual variation in gross earnings. You will notice, in the first place, the great yearly fluctuations. The year of lowest average income for these farmers gave $630. The highest average income was something over $2,000. This was in 1906, but you will notice that the very next year after this there was a drop of more than 50 per cent in the income. That is due, of course, to climate and market—conditions over which a tenant farmer has absolutely no control. I think, too, if you will look at this chart, you will see some little tendency for the incomes to rise, but to rise very slowly.

Commissioner LENNON. That would indicate that the length of time on the same land was advantageous, would it?

Prof. LEONARD. It indicates that, for many of these men remained on the land the whole 10-year period. Conditions are such that landlord and tenant both prosper. As between tenant farmers in this group now the average annual yearly earning varies considerably, even among good farmers living as neighbors on the same land. For instance, the earnings of one man was $872; those of another $1,572. The explanation is found in the fact that the first was a one-team farmer and the other a two-team man. This illustrates again the importance of capital to the tenant farmer. One man had an average annual income during the whole 10-year period on this ranch of $1,161; and another man, $1,098; another, $1,328. All these men raised their own feed crop. They kept a cow or two. They received their wood free and had a garden place.

Under these conditions, assuming that they were not too heavily in debt and that they had some considerable labor force of their own, there is no clear reason why they should not, in a moderate way, prosper. In fact, the man who had the lowest average annual income—an income of $850—is now paying for a piece of land in another county, and it is now practically paid for. These men are not discontented. They are hard workers, and, for the most part, they avoid debts. There is scarcely one who if pressed by an exacting landlord could not go out and acquire property of his own.

There are no "share croppers" on this plantation and no bonuses are paid. Moreover, these tenants have been assured by their landlord that the higher rent of one-third of the cotton will not be demanded until this rent shall become the universal rent.

Commissioner LENNON. Would that group indicate that conditions there were advantageous to the owner of the land as well as to the cropper?

Prof. LEONARD. Yes; the land is in an excellent state of cultivation and all improvements are well cared for.

I was interested in trying to determine from the tax roll what progress, if any, had been made by an identical group of men living in the same community over a period of years. Renditions for 89 identical men living in one precinct were as follows: In 1909 their total rendition was $57,240; in 1913 their total rendition was $67,920. This means an average in 1909 of $643; in 1913 of $763; or an average annual increase of $120. This shows again in property holdings of 19 per cent during the five years. These figures include those who succeeded, as well as those who failed, and looking at it in a general way you would say that 19 per cent during the period of five years is not a bad showing. But we must remember that this gain was on relatively small holdings and that it would take a long, long time at this rate of increase to acquire any considerable property. In 1909 there were of this number 18 who rendered nothing at all. In 1913 there were 14 of these who rendered nothing at all, except a poll tax.

Let me call your attention now, if you will, please, to some considerations concerning tenants as producers.

The most serious criticism that can be passed upon the tenant farmer as a producer is this: He is an inefficient business man. He does not carefully organize his time so that his labor may be most economically applied. In planting, in organizing, and in anticipating the needs and demands even of the immediate future he is very weak. In making his capital outlay he too often shows an extravagance that is beyond the needs of his business. For instance, in the case of a one-team farmer, one man is known to have gone in debt $1,200 for mules, machines, tools, and so forth. One-half of this sum, and even less, would have been quite sufficient. Another man, with five children in the working period of life, was a "share cropper." If he could have had the use of capital, he would have more than doubled his income because of his large labor force.

There is, again, the most extravagant use of machinery—expensive machinery. Farmers excuse themselves in this extravagance by saying that the landlord will not provide shelter for it. It is uncertain whether the tenant or the landowner is most to blame for this.

Most tenants, I found, are exceedingly hard workers. They do not spare themselves when it comes to hard work and long hours or great physical strain; neither do they spare their children, nor their wives.

In a group of 25 tenant families there were 148 living children, an average of 6 for each family. The younger families were still incomplete. Three had families of 10 living children, and the smallest family consisted of 2, their father being at that time 87 years old. At 32 one father had 8 children living. This gives some notion of the high birth rate. The relation of the size of the family to the tenant problem is very intimate, for it is quite the universal opinion that landlords prefer large families on their farms. As one tenant said: "The first question the landlord asks of a prospective tenant is this, 'What is your force?'" The idea is that the larger the family the more promptly the crop will be cared for. One landlord modified this statement by saying that he preferred large families "if the family was a well disciplined family." The pecuniary importance of a large family is shown in the following illustration:

Tenant R has 8 children, the oldest 6 years of age. He rents a farm of 120 acres. In 1913 he produced 43 bales of cotton, for which he received 12 cents a pound. After paying his rent and labor bill of $789 he had left, as the result of his year's work, $904. Tenant S has 10 children between the years of 5 and 28. He had 150 acres in cotton and produced 68 bales, which he sold for 12 cents a pound. After paying his rent and a labor bill of $50, and also paying $150 for house rent, he had left at the end of the year $2,500. This illustrates clearly, it strikes me, the pecuniary importance of a large family as labor force for the tenant farmer.

Of these 25 tenant families the average age of the father was 44, the oldest being 68 years, while 3 were in the sixties and 4 were in the fifties, and all the rest below. They had been tenants on an average 18 years. The shortest period was 9 years and the longest 35 years. These men have occupied 113 different farms.

Chairman WALSH. How many of them had occupied the 113 different farms?

Prof. LEONARD. Twenty-five, which gives an average of 4.8 years for each farm. This bears upon the question which has been mentioned a number of times during the progress of this investigation. However, the greatest extremes appear as to frequency in moving. Three men have never moved at all and they have been on their farms 12, 17, and 25 years, respectively. Five had moved twice; one had moved 10 times in 25 years; and one 9 times in 13 years, and expects to move again next year. It is needless to say that the more successful farmers early become adjusted to their farm and remained there, while the poorer farmers move more frequently and make but slight economic progress.

Perhaps you may be interested in some of the reasons given by these men for moving. Among the principal causes were these: "To get a better house"; "To get more land"; "To get better water"; "To avoid an increase in the rent"; "To get nearer the pike"; "To change from a 'share cropper' to a third and fourth renter"; "To get nearer schools"; "Farm sold," and so forth.

Of these 25 tenant farmers one-fourth of them had bought land at some time; much of it had been sold—some at a profit, some at a loss. One man said he owned land because of the labor of his children. Most of them, however, hoped sometime to become landowners. Two had small houses in town. One had interest-bearing notes to the amount of $1,840. Two held stock in cotton gins and two more had lost snug little fortunes by speculations. The oldest men who have not already acquired property have given up hope of ever being able to do so.

It is worth while to call your attention, Mr. Chairman, to just a few types of landlords. On the plantation just referred to tenancy is practically at its best. The present owner of this plantation bought the land when it was cheap. He is interested in building up a permanent, well-ordered estate. He is rightly seeking to retain the fertility of the soil through efficient and permanent tenants, and to secure these he offers a generous lease and provides house rent and standardized improvements. He does not try to restrain his tenants from voting for good roads or better schools. In fact, one of the neatest little country schoolhouses which I have seen in many a day is immediately adjacent to this plantation. Moreover, although he is a nonresident, and, at that, a far-distant nonresident, he makes it a point every year to visit all his tenants, spending a week or two among them, eating at their tables, and sleeping in their homes. Naturally, he has the pick of tenant farmers and his "waiting list" is always large. He is neither paternalistic nor philanthropic. He holds his tenants to a strict accounting. He gives them encouragement and a square deal and expects them to make good. Under these circumstances few fail to make a good showing for themselves. To all external appearances the plantation is comparable to a community of home-owning farmers. He is the type of farseeing, fair-minded landlord.

Within 4 miles of the outer boundaries of this plantation there is another, representing conditions at nearly their worst. The landlord, also a nonresident, but a near-by nonresident, consulting only his immediate interests, drives the hardest bargain within his power. His "waiting list" is made up of the most ignorant and wretched tenants. He rents only on shares. The teams and tools which he provides have long since seen their best days. The two and three room unpainted, unpapered box houses are scarcely habitable, and would not be except in a favorable climate such as Texas affords. The farms are inaccessible in bad weather, the roads and creeks being impassable. With worn-out machinery, poor tools, and poor mules, the land is in a bad state of cultivation. The turn rows are neglected and Johnson grass is threatening the life of the farm. No tenant lives here longer than he can help. He is always on the lookout for a better place. There is a continuous procession of tenants to and from the land, and this hastens the general ruin and decay. And why should they not move—for, as the tenants themselves say, "We are scarcely able to make buckler and chain meet." This landlord, shortsighted, narrow-minded, with no conception of just, human relationships, with no feeling of his responsibility in connection with the ownership of land, follows a policy destructive even of his own permanent interests.

Between these two groups of landlords—extreme examples—there is another group made up of all sorts and conditions of men. They are not without the milk of human kindness. They are interested both in their lands and in their tenants, and if they drive a hard bargain it is rather because they themselves feel the driving force of economic pressure. It is said that at least 50 per cent of the lands of this county are unpaid for. They have in the last few years been changing hands very rapidly, not on their productive valuation, but on a speculative basis. These landlords are heavily in debt. Each year they must meet heavy interest charges and payments, and to do so they must get the utmost out of their lands, and the bonus system, in all its innumerable forms, appeals to them as an easy means of increasing their revenues.

Again, 20 years ago a landlord owning 1,000 acres of land was estimated to be worth $25,000—

Chairman WALSH. Owning how many acres?

Prof. LEONARD. A thousand acres. To-day, with the same thousand acres he is reckoned as a hundred-thousand-dollar man. But during these 20 years his land has perceptibly weakened in productivity, and this is scarcely compensated by the increased price of the products. Thus his income has not grown with his wealth, and he is under the economic necessity to increase his income so that he and his family may live as becomes a man whose wealth is listed at $100,000. To him also the bonus system makes its appeal.

There is still another group who with all sincerity, but with unsound logic, I believe, claim for their investment in land the current rate of interest, and then proceeds to levy a rental which will approximate this rate. There is little justification for this, for it is evident they are not entitled to the current rate of interest on speculative advances in lands. Moreover, the absolute security of land as an investment, together with the social considerations attached to it, should induce a willingness on the part of these people to accept a lower rate of interest than given by more hazardous lines of investments. So in spite of a generous interest in their tenants and in their lands they press for an increase of rental.

Now, Mr. Chairman, for just a moment I wish to call your attention to what I conceive to be some of the causes of discontent among the tenant farmers. What I have stated up to this time rests pretty largely upon facts. It may not be out of place, however, to give some expressions to opinion which I found prevalent in this county. One prominent banker and real estate man said that 85 per cent of all the landowners in the county were once themselves tenants. This opinion was supported by many other men whom I consulted as to that point. Another man, an owner of 1,000 acres of black land, made this statement: "Nine-tenths of the tenants never get out of tenantry"; while another said, "Most renters have been renters years and years and make no effort to become anything else than tenants." Another expression from a prominent landowner runs thus: "Many tenants are coming to think that all they will ever get out of life is a living and a little more." While a tenant, in the prime of life, said: "All I expect out of life is just a living, and it is my opinion that 75 per cent of us just get by." These widely different expressions represent the two extremes, and both are pretty largely true. The real estate dealer was evidently referring to a condition which had prevailed in the past; the others voiced the current opinion as to the present situation. In these very facts is found the basis for the present unrest among tenant farmers. The present generation of tenants look upon their lot as less fortunate than the generation which preceded them, and they naturally raise the question: "Why should this be?" And they proceed to answer it in this way:

(1) They say that the old rent standard of one-third of the grain and one-fourth of the cotton have in part disappeared, and threaten entirely to disappear in the near future. Tenants a generation ago, they say, were able to acquire property because the rent paid was a reasonable rent, fair alike to both parties. They invariably speak of this rent as "customary rent," and sometimes they designate it the "natural rent." But what is taking its place, they ask. More and more one-third of the cotton is being demanded, and this, they assert, makes it impossible to acquire property as in the old days. Where the one-third is not required, the landlords often levy all sorts of bonuses in addition to the one-fourth. Sometimes the tenant is required to pay a certain proportion of the taxes on the land; again, certain cash sums are given or rent for the use of a house is paid, and occasionally the tenant is required to purchase of the landowner tools, horses, and machinery at a price beyond their real value if he wishes to obtain a farm. One tenant said: "Of course, we will go to a one-third basis and by and by to a bonus on top of that."

(2) In the second place it is asserted that even the best soils have deteriorated through continuous cropping in cotton. To get the same yield of cotton per acre as formerly more capital must be used. This means more labor, which is more highly paid than formerly; more machinery, and more work animals. But with all this added expense it is scarcely possible to produce as much cotton per acre as 20 or 30 years ago. The tenant farmer asks, "Who bears this burden of soil deterioration?" And they answer by saying that they do, and assign this as one of the important reasons why they are less prosperous than their predecessors. They feel that since the one-crop system has been forced upon them by the landowner, he and not they should suffer the penalty.

(3) An inevitable result of this harder economic pressure upon the present-day farmers is to force them to remain longer in the lowest grades of tenantry; that is to say, those who can not provide the necessary capital for a two-team farm must content themselves with a one-team farm, and those who can not afford even a one-team farm must remain among the "share croppers." The stages of progress upward through the various grades of tenantry are much slower than formerly, with the consequence that fewer tenants ever reach the grade of highest opportunity. On the other hand, the landowners are more inclined now, especially if they live near their lands, to rent only on the halves, since by so doing they not only retain a more rigid control over their lands, but also secure for themselves all the great advantages arising from the use of capital. These two conditions result in swelling the numbers in that group of tenants, the "share croppers," who have the least chance of ever acquiring property. This serves also to explain why tenants to-day are less prosperous than formerly.

(4) Furthermore, the tenants of the present day not only suffer the severe economic pressure just noted, but also they are made to encounter new competitive groups such as the negro and the Mexican. Many landowners, it is claimed, will lease to these classes since with them they can drive a harder bargain than with the native white man, and this is the cause of no small discontent among tenant farmers.

(5) In the fifth place, as a culmination of all, is the asserted tendency, slight at the present time but nevertheless evident, to discriminate socially between landowner and tenant. Some landowners deny the existence of any such discrimination, saying: "Our sons and daughters will doubtless marry into tenant families, and for this reason we can hardly afford to draw lines of social distinction." Others frankly admit but lament the fact, while others accept it as a matter of course.

Such are the more prominent causes of discontent among these tenants. That there is discontent all agree, even the most ignorant and conservative landowners. It is always deplored, but sometimes justified, even by the landlords themselves. It is found most apparent among the more aggressive, ambitious, and progressive farmers, and it is especially prevalent among the farmers between the years of 30 and 40. This is perfectly natural, and is easily explained. It is the time in the young farmer's life when his brood of little children are so young as to be of little service to him, but their expense is a heavy burden. It is the period when the farmer's load is the heaviest, and to the weight of this burden is being added either the landlord's actual pressure for higher rents or the fear that such an increase will be shortly demanded. These considerations lead the most thoughtful and enterprising men to question their ability ever to rise out of tenancy to ownership, which is the goal of their ambition. The ignorant, thriftless, and unambitious are never troubled with such considerations. To get land they will readily make any kind of a contract with the landowner, and then trust to their luck in skinning both land and landlord, and this they very frequently succeed in doing.

"These conditions," said a careful observer, "have not made Socialists, but they constitute an excellent seed bed for socialism." And yet among the tenant farmers in certain parts of the county it is true that there are Socialists. Their number is not large, nor is their growth spontaneous. They do constitute a source from which a rapid growth in socialist thought may be expected should the present economic pressure continue, and this will develop to a certainty should this pressure be increased. It is true that these men are not Socialists in any real sense of the word. They have no objection to private property in land; they desire only a reasonable opportunity to obtain some of it for themselves. But their chances of success, due to the increased value of lands, and to an increase in the costs of production, including an increase of rents, are narrowing, and they are looking in the direction of socialism, not that they want socialism, but because they want land brought under a system of tenure which shall be both equitable and standardized.

Chairman WALSH. Just one question. It has been suggested that I ask you, does the income of $750 or $1,253 per annum mean that the family expenses, the household expense, and all other kinds must be met by these earnings?

Prof. LEONARD. All the expense in the case of the $1,253 income must be met out of this amount; that is, the farmer, if he has to hire labor to pick his cotton, the labor expense comes out. Again, the cost of the seed comes out, the cost of the fertilizer comes out, the cost of machinery and the wear and tear on the machinery comes out of that gross income.

Chairman WALSH. Do you find it possible, Professor, or did you undertake to ascertain what the net income might be excluding, we will say, household expenses?

Prof. LEONARD. I was not able to get any very accurate data on that point, the data which I think trustworthy. But I should say in the case of a gross income of $1,253, that the necessary expenses connected with the production of the crop would reduce that amount to between nine and ten hundred dollars so that nine or ten hundred dollars would be very nearly the net income from the farm as a business unit.

In the case of the "share cropper," there is simply one expense to come out, and that is the hired labor cost, if it should be necessary to hire labor at all.

Chairman WALSH. Would you please indicate what topics you have treated in your paper, Professor—you have not given them to us in their entirety—so that I may determine whether we should ask you any questions with reference to them, because I am assuming that it would all go in our record?

Prof. LEONARD. The topics I left out bore on the question of credit and indebtedness. I left these out almost entirely, feeling that these subjects had already been covered, and also feeling that at a later period you would have a special discussion relative to them.

(The portions of Prof. Leonard's paper above referred to and not read in full, were as follows:)

INDEBTEDNESS.

(a) Chattel mortgages: In this county the chattel-mortgage form of indebtedness assumes enormous proportions. From September, 1912, to September, 1913, 3,760 different mortgages were placed upon some form of farm property other than land. These mortgages aggregated $840,000. It is not asserted that all of these were made by tenant farmers, but it is evident that the vast bulk of them were; first, because land owning farmers are in the great minority, and, secondly, because such farmers are seldom reduced to the chattel-mortgage plan of making loans. It is believed that such loans, in the vast majority of cases, are for working capital rather than for spendthrift or emergency purposes. Practically all chattel mortgages are for one year, and are made to mature during the four autumn months. In September few such loans were made; in October the number rose to 200; in November and December to 400 for each month; that is, during the very time when loans from the previous year were being canceled, more than 1,000 new loans were contracted. This calls for a word of explanation. It is evident these were not for new capital; for it was not the season when new capital was needed or could have been used, the crop having been made much earlier; nor can they be mere consumption loans; for then, if ever, the tenant farmer should have money in his pocket. These loans are continuation loans coming over from a previous indebtedness, which indebtedness was unpaid, and for which new mortgages were given.

The loans made in January were undoubtedly loans of new capital in view of the next year's crop. Old established farmers were adding more mules, horses, and other equipment, young men embarking in business for the first time were completing their outfit, and most of the latter must of necessity incur some mortgage indebtedness. For a similar reason loans continued high during all the spring months. These were largely for machinery, ordinarily the dealer selling the machine on time and taking a mortgage on the same machine together with a few bales of cotton as security. By June the crop was made; at least all the necessary capital for making it has been secured. Hence the number of loans during June, July, and August steadily decreased. In most cases they were for small sums—$10 to $50. Presumably they were needed to secure the many small necessities for which credit was not available. These are real consumption loans, as distinguished from loans of capital. It may be true, of course, that they were small in number because mortgageable property had already been pledged to the last dollar, but this seems hardly possible. It should be noted that there were a few very large loans, $2,000 to $5,000, made by large-scale farmers, and it is due to these that the average amount to each loan rises from $150 to $350 during these months.

(b) Store credit: Ordinarily the tenant farmer goes to the merchant in January and arranges "to be carried" for his necessities until the following October. There are two forms of practice which differ only in method, not in results. (1) The farmer gives his note for the supposed amount of goods he will require. This note bears interest at 10 per cent from January to maturity. The farmer is then given advantage of a cash price. But it is to be observed that he pays interest for the total sum for nine months, although his purchases, and hence his actual use of credit are for a much shorter average time. In the end he pays on a $300 store bill an interest charge of $22.50. If he had secured the same amount of money at the same interest rate by periodic loans from the bank his interest bill would have been $12.37. Thus he has really paid 19 or 20 per cent instead of 10 per cent. (2) The same results exactly follow the second method where a book account is run with 10 per cent added to the cash price, through each month from January to October.

It is little wonder that the tenant farmer does not prosper as he should. With much of his capital borrowed, and a good portion of that carried from year to year in continuation loans, this together with a store bill averaging not far from $200 a year, piles up an annual interest charge, which too often absorbs, what otherwise would have been his profits. Could one or both of these forms of perpetual encumbrance be abandoned, other conditions remaining as they are, he would immensely improve his condition. One man remarked that he had observed that the farmer whose wife was a butter and chicken woman was the man who ultimately bought a farm. In such case the burden of a big store bill was lifted. Why this abuse of the borrowing power? There are several reasons: (1) The tenant farmer usually has good credit; that is to say, he produces a commodity which confers upon him good credit. His bales of cotton can be placed only on one market and here they are capable of complete identification. The credit men have no difficulty in protecting themselves in this market place. However, were farmers producing corn there would not be the same opportunity for these men to identify a product more capable of reaching the market in different ways. Then, too, credit associations have very nearly eliminated the dishonest tenant. To get credit at all he must have a straight record, and since credit, under present conditions is indispensable, he is honest whether he wants to be or not. (2) The part which custom plays in the credit system of tenant farmers is most serious, for it is difficult to break a long standing custom. Many, perhaps most, have never known the time, either in their own lives or that of their fathers', when the burden of debt did not press. It is looked upon as a natural kind of encumbrance. It has been observed that even following very prosperous years, debts are not fully lifted, as they well might be, but profits are used to launch out more heavily in the production of cotton, and this, with frequent reverses in the market, brings disaster. Thus it is not so much a question of more credit as it is a better use of credit now employed.

Chairman WALSH. I have been asked to ask you this question, by a gentleman in the audience: Do you not believe that the increasing of taxes is a cause for many tenants not trying harder to buy homes?

Prof. LEONARD. I believe that has some influence, but I don't think that is a determining factor by any means. A few may be deterred in that way, but I think very few indeed.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Lennon would like to ask you a few questions.

Commissioner LENNON. Do you consider it good economics in making your calculations as to the income to allow nothing for the work of children exceeding 14 years of age? Supposing a man has three or four children above 14 years of age, and they are employed, would it be good economics to allow nothing for their work?

Prof. LEONARD. It is good economics to make that allowance, to reckon in all labor costs of whatever kind, and any system of accounting which does not take into account everything connected with the production of the crop is a faulty system of economics, as well as a faulty system of bookkeeping. But, of course, tenant farmers keep absolutely no accounts. They make the roughest kind of estimates as to their income and outgo.

Commissioner LENNON. This is really, then, in some cases, an income of $1,250, and in some cases an income for the labor for three or four or five or six people?

Prof. LEONARD. It is an income for the whole family, however large that may be.

To show how closely the bonus system has connected itself up with the increase in land values, I have this chart, which shows the transfers which have taken place in a typical piece of land in this county, starting with 1897 at $40 an acre. Observe how it breaks up into various smaller tracts, and is sold at various prices, always at an advance, the last sale being in 1913 for $159 an acre. This simply illustrates the increased value of lands and the subdivision of this land into small tracts and their sale at higher prices. You will remember the governor said yesterday that the bonus system came in just at this point. During a period of 13 years there were something like 20 different transfers of this tract of land.

Chairman WALSH. Take this $750. Taking that one, it represents, as I understand you, the income of the "share cropper," not the total income of the land owner and the share cropper?

Prof. LEONARD. Yes, sir; it is the income of the tenant farmer. If he had expense in the way of labor cost, that would have to be reduced to perhaps $600, which would be his family income for the year.

Chairman WALSH. How many hands, on the average, are represented in producing that $750?

Prof. LEONARD. I found that the average size of the family was six; that of these children three or four would have labor value in picking the crop.

Chairman WALSH. At what age ordinarily are the children of tenants—do the children of tenants begin to give some aid in the operations of their parents?

Prof. LEONARD. I think as early as 7 or 8.

Chairman WALSH. Is it customary in those families for the women to do work in the fields?

Prof. LEONARD. Very customary.

Chairman WALSH. What character of work do they do?

Prof. LEONARD. They assist in picking the cotton, and sometimes in chopping the cotton in the springtime.

Chairman WALSH. How is that work carried on—the chopping of the cotton?

Prof. LEONARD. With a hoe.

Chairman WALSH. As to the planting, do they take any part in that—the women?

Prof. LEONARD. Not that I know of.

Chairman WALSH. To the extent you have mentioned, they work in the field as hands?

Prof. LEONARD. Yes; they work in the fields to that extent, at those two periods. They work a short period in the springtime when they assist in chopping the cotton, if there is a great necessity for that, and in the fall in picking the cotton. The latter is most prevalent.

Chairman WALSH. As you went along, did you make observation as to the character of the abode of these people—the tenant houses?

Prof. LEONARD. There is absolutely nothing in the way of a standardized house for the tenant farmers.

Chairman WALSH. Could you not give anything that might be typical?

Prof. LEONARD. I know of one tenant farmer, perhaps the worst case I know of, a family which numbers 11, 9 children and the 2 parents, who live in a two-room house. This house is unpapered and unpainted. It is a box house, which, when it was first built, which was 30 or 40 years ago, could not have cost more than $75. It has absolutely no conveniences. There is no standardization, so far as the houses are concerned. The kind of house depends entirely on the landlord and the pressure of the tenant.

A case which I believe to represent a very good condition, so far as tenant houses are concerned, is that of a family of four or five which lives in a six-room house. The house is papered; it is painted also; there is a nice yard in front of the house; there are adequate shade trees; the floors are carpeted, and upon the walls are pictures; there is a piano for the use of the young women of the family. To all external appearances it is not a tenant house at all; it might very properly belong to a landowner. The family man has been in this one house for about 15 years. All the children have been reasonably well educated. Several of them have gone into business. One of them is the postmaster in one of the towns of the county.

Between those two extremes, there are all sorts of conditions so far as the character of the tenant houses are concerned. It would be hard to describe an absolutely typical house. So far as the water supply is concerned there is absolutely no standardization. There is no standardization whatever so far as the garden patch is concerned, nor as to orchards. The cotton patch is slowly encroaching upon the orchard, upon the garden lot, and upon the pasture, so that it is more and more difficult for the tenant farmer to have any assurance as to these important adjuncts of farming.

Chairman WALSH. Does the gross income you have mentioned include the cost of keeping teams?

Prof. LEONARD. No; the cost of keeping teams is not taken into account in this gross amount.

Chairman WALSH. Do tenant farmers ordinarily raise their own feed for their teams, or buy baled hay in town?

Prof. LEONARD. In the past there has been much money expended by farmers in this county for the purchase of feed stuff. On the particular ranch to which I called your attention, the farmers have been able, most of the time, to supply their own feed stuffs.

Chairman WALSH. Including hay?

Prof. LEONARD. Yes; including hay, but I found men who had spent as high as $600 a year for feed stuff for keeping work animals, a cow or two, and a few hogs.

Chairman WALSH. Do farmers with these average net incomes of about $900 buy farms, or what do they do with the money?

Prof. LEONARD. A good many, as I indicated in my discussion, have bought farms, and some of them keep bank accounts. A good many of them have little investments in one way or another; but you must remember that out of this income of $900, which is net income, the whole support of the family must be taken, and, as has already been indicated, many of these farmers simply live out of the store. They buy all of their foodstuffs from the store; there is no orchard so that they can preserve fruit and such as that. They do not lay in a supply of vegetables so that when winter comes they will have supplies. They live out of tin cans altogether too much.

Chairman WALSH. We are very much obliged to you, Professor.

Commissioner LENNON. Just another question or two, please.

In the university where you are a professor are there any children or a large proportion of the children that come from the families of tenant farmers?

Prof. LEONARD. A very few, indeed.

Commissioner LENNON. Have you any information as to where the criminal classes come from in this State—whether the tenantry contributes to it? Does the tenantry contribute to a large proportion of them, or do you know anything about that?

Prof. LEONARD. These people are not criminal. I think that they are, on the whole, exceedingly law-abiding, honest citizens for the most part. They are down at a very low level of development, however. They are not on an equal competitive basis at all in the economic struggle; but they are not criminal. They obey the laws. They are not criminally disposed at all, and I think that a very, very few of them have entered upon a criminal life. They stay pretty well attached to the soil. I do not think that there is this migratory tendency among the whole tenant class that has been spoken of. There is a group of tenants down at the bottom who do move about frequently from time to time, but the upper grades of tenants, those, for instance, who work on the third and fourth basis and who are out of debt, are pretty permanently established on the land.

Commissioner LENNON. What would you say was the average grade in the schools, as to when the children have to quit school entirely?

Prof. LEONARD. So far as I have been able to determine, a boy or girl doesn't go to school very regularly after the age of 10 or 12. They marry very early in life.

Commissioner LENNON. Would that be, say, the fifth or sixth grade up in Illinois?

Prof. LEONARD. It would mean a lower grade, perhaps the third grade. A very few of them go to the high schools.

Chairman WALSH. How many of the tenants that you say are at the bottom—that move so frequently—what proportion of them would there be as compared to the whole number of tenant farmers; what percentage?

Prof. LEONARD. I should say, to make a rough estimate, Mr. Chairman, that it would not be more than one-third of the tenants.

Chairman WALSH. You observed, did you not, Doctor, that the gentleman that was on the stand, a Mr. Noble, testified that in his opinion two-thirds of them moved in a migratory way? Was your attention called to the last bulletin of the Census Bureau in the spring of 1914, wherein the statement was made that 50 per cent of the tenants in the south moved every year?

Prof. LEONARD. I have known of that statement, but I was making my calculation simply on the basis of the conditions in Ellis County.

Chairman WALSH. It has been stated, Professor, that Ellis County is the largest cotton-producing county in the world?

Prof. LEONARD. Yes; it is.

Chairman WALSH. Might it be said that the conditions there, as to the tenant farmer, is high or low, or intermediary, as to that type?

Prof. LEONARD. I believe the type of tenant farmer in Ellis County is better than in any other county with which I am familiar. I believe the farmers are better off in that the character of the landlord is better. Tenants are given a squarer deal in Ellis County than in some of the other counties.

Chairman WALSH. Nevertheless, you would say that 83½ per cent of the tenant farmers in Ellis County are this migratory class?

Prof. LEONARD. They are not a migratory class, except in a narrow compass.

Chairman WALSH. I mean by "migratory" that they move from one farm to another.

Prof. LEONARD. The "share croppers," for instance. The tenant who has reached, say, 50 years of age and is still a "share cropper" is likely to be migratory, but the young fellow just starting in life who is a "share cropper" is a "share cropper" for just a few years. Then he acquires enough property to go on a third and fourth basis, and then he gets out of tenantry. If ambitious, entirely. He is migratory, but often in an upward direction.

Chairman WALSH. Thank you, Professor; you may be finally excused.

The commission will now stand adjourned until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning. (Whereupon an adjournment of the commission was taken until Thursday morning, March 18, 1915, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the same place.)
